

A N
U N I V E R S A L
H I S T O R Y,

F R O M T H E

Earliest Account of Time to the Present.

C O M P I L E D F R O M

O R I G I N A L A U T H O R S ;

A n d I L L U S T R A T E D w i t h

M A P S , C U T S , N O T E S , C h r o n o l o g i c a l ,
A n d o t h e r T A B L E S .

V O L . X I X .

Ἱστορίας ἀρχαίας ἐξέρχεσθαι μὴ καίανόει, ἐν αὐταῖς γὰρ εὐρήσεις ἀκόπως, ἅπερ ἕτεροι συνῆξαν ἐγκόπως. Basil. Imp. ad Leon. f.^o

D U B L I N :

Printed for R. OWEN, S. HYDE, G. RISK, J. LEATHLEY, G.
and A. EWING, W. SMITH, J. SMITH, P. CRAMPTON, G.
FAULKNER, A. BRADLEY, T. MOORE, E. EXSHAW, C.
WYNNE, C. CONNOR, O. NELSON, P. WILSON, W. POWELL,
J. KELLY, T. BUTLER, and W. BRIEN, Booksellers.

M D C C X L V .

1937

C O N T E N T S

O F T H E

Nineteenth VOLUME.

C H A P. XIII.

S E C T. III.

T HE history of Britain from its desertion by the Romans, to the invasion of the Angles and Saxons. Page 3

C H A P. XIV.

The antient state of several northern nations, to their breaking into the Roman empire, and their several expeditions and mutual expulsions, till the settling of the Hunns in Hungary, the Vandals, Visigoths and Sueves in Spain, the Vandals in Afric, the Franks in Gaul, and Ostrogoths in Italy.

S E C T. I.

The history, various wars and settlements of the antient Hunns, &c. 40

S E C T. II.

The antient state and history of the Goths, till the settling of the Visigoths in Spain, and Ostrogoths in Italy. 104

S E C T. III.

The antient state of the Vandals, till their settling in Spain and Afric. 191

S E C T.

C O N T E N T S.

S E C T. IV.

The antient state, &c. of the Sueves, till their settling in Spain. Page 219

S E C T. V.

The antient state, &c. of the Franks till their settling in Gaul. 234

S E C T. VI.

The antient state and history of the Burgundi, Alemans, Gepidæ, Heruli, Marcomans, Quadians, Sarmatians, Dacians, Lombards, and Bulgarians. 305

C H A P. XV.

The history of the Ostrogoths in Italy, the Exarchs of Ravenna, and the Lombards in Italy.

S E C T. I.

The Ostrogoths in Italy to their expulsion by Narfes. 426

S E C T. II.

The history of the Lombards, from the death of Clephis to Desiderius, taken captive by Charlemagne, an exarchate of Ravenna. 509

A N
U N I V E R S A L
H I S T O R Y,

F R O M T H E

Earliest Account of Time to the Present.

C H A P. XIII.

S E C T. III.

The History of Britain, from its desertion by the Romans, to the invasion of the Angles and Saxons.

TH E Romans having abandoned Britain, with an intention to return no more, as we have related in the foregoing section, the Scots and Picts no sooner heard of their departure, than landing in swarms from their leather vessels on the lands of the Britons, they committed greater ravages than ever, destroying all with fire and sword. These two nations, differing somewhat in manners, but equally greedy of spoil and booty, seeing the cowardly Britons tons fly like sheep before them, resolved to attack the wall, which had been lately repaired, not doubting but they should become masters of it without great loss, since it was defended by such a faint-hearted enemy. At their approach, the Britons, instead of preparing for a vigorous defence, stood trembling on the battlements, till the enemy, more bold and active, pulling some of them down with long iron hooks, and driving the rest, with showers of darts and arrows, from their stations, made themselves masters of the wall. The Britons betook themselves to flight, which however could not save them; for the Scots and Picts, pursuing them close, made a dreadful havock of the fugitives, and took possession of the frontier towns, which they found deserted by the inhabitants. As the enemy met with no opposition, they over-ran the whole country, putting all to fire and sword without controul. This general havock and devastation bred a dreadful famine, which occasioned new mischiefs, and a kind of civil war, among the Britons themselves, obliged, for their support, to plunder each other, and take from their friends the little the common enemy had left them. The whole country being thus ruined, the famine became general, and raged to such a degree, that the Britons, who remained, were obliged to betake themselves to the woods, and there live upon what they could get by hunting^a. In this deplorable condition they continued some years. The Britons had already kings of their own; for Gildas, in his usual melancholy strain, finds fault with his countrymen for raising to the throne such only as were remarkable for their cruelty^b. Perhaps they judged them best qualified to redress the disorders, and put a stop to the robberies, that prevailed all over the island. The same author adds, that those, who had raised them to the throne, caused them soon after to be murdered, not because they had found them guilty of any crime, but that they might chuse worse men in their room. If any of their princes proved more mild and humane than the rest, he was abhorred by all as a coward, and persecuted as a public enemy^c. The unhappy Britons, thus at variance among themselves, and at the same time pressed with famine, and pursued by a merciless enemy, had recourse once more to the Romans for assistance, writing to Actius, who was then consul

The Scots and Picts break into the British territories.

The Britons
write mournful letters to Actius.

^a Gild. c. 15, 16, p. 118.
ibid.

^b Idem, c. 19, p. 119.

^c Idem

consul the third time, and governed the western empire almost with an absolute sway. To move him to compassion, they directed the letter thus : “ The groans of the Britons “ to the consul Aetius.” And in the letter ; “ The barbarians, “ said they, drive us to the sea, and the sea forces us back to “ the barbarians, between which we have only the choice of “ two deaths, either to be swallowed up by the waves,
 “ or to be cruelly massacred by the enemy.” What answer they received, is uncertain ; all we know is, that they could not prevail upon Aetius, who was then in Gaul, to lend them the least assistance, the emperor Valentinian III. being then, as Usher thinks, under apprehension of a war with Attila^d, who had not yet broken into the western empire. The Britons, now despairing of any relief from the Romans, and, on the other hand, reduced to the utmost extremity by the famine, which encreased daily, knew not what measures to take to free themselves from their unfortunate circumstances. Great numbers of them fled over to Armorica, where those Britons, who attended Maximus into Gaul, are supposed to have settled^e ; others submitted to the Scots and Picts, purchasing a miserable sustenance with everlasting slavery. Some however, more resolute, placing their confidence in God, says Gildas, since they found themselves abandoned by men, betook themselves to their arms ; and sallying out in parties from their woods and caves, fell upon the enemy, while they were roving up and down the country, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to retire. The Picts withdrew, in all likelihood, to the country about the wall, either abandoned by the Britons, or inhabited by such of them as had submitted to their new masters. The Scots, as Usher conjectures^f, returned to Ireland, whence they originally came ; but Gildas and Bede only tell us, that they returned home^g. And now the Britons, having some respite, began anew to cultivate their lands, which, after having for some time lain fallow, produced all sorts of provisions in such plenty, as in no age had been remembered. This plenty was attended with luxury, wantonness, and all manner of vices incident to human nature ; but what above all contributed to the immorality and irreligion, that prevailed all over the land, was according to Gildas, the hatred of truth, and love of lyes, evil being miscalled good, and good evil,

Their miserable condition.

They drive back their enemies.

They abandon themselves to all manner of vice.

A 3

evil,

^d Uss. p. 1104.

^e Vide hist. univers. vol. xvi. p. 54.

^f Uss. p. 609, 1105.

^g Gild. p. 119. Bed. chron. p. 114.

A dreadful plague.

evil, and every thing transacted directly contrary to the common welfare, and public safety. The clergy, who should have reclaimed the laity with their example, proved the ring-leaders to every vice, being, for the most part, addicted to drunkenness, envy, contention, &c. and incapable of discerning between good and evil^h. In the mean time the Britons were alarmed anew with a report, that the Scots and Picts were returning with a greater force than ever, being determined utterly to extirpate the natives, and plant themselves in their room from one end of the island to the other. This report occasioned a general consternation, which however was not sufficient to reclaim them from their wicked ways, says Gildas; and therefore they were visited with a dreadful plague, which raging with uncommon fury, swept away most of those, whom the sword and famine had spared; insomuch that the living were scarce sufficient to bury the dead. But this calamity likewise proving ineffectual, the contagion no sooner ceased, than the enemy, returning with incredible fury, and putting all to fire and sword, soon reduced the unhappy Britons to the utmost extremity. Vortigern was then the chief, if not the only, king of Britain, a proud, covetous, and debauched tyrant, quite regardless of the public welfare, and no less incapable of promoting it in the field, than in the cabinet. However, being awaked by the clamours of the people, and finding it was absolutely necessary for his own preservation to repulse the enemy, he summoned a council, to deliberate with the chief men of the nation about the proper means to deliver the country from the calamities it then groaned under, and prevent the like misfortunes for the future. In this council, they all agreed, being, in a manner, infatuated, on the most pernicious expedient, that could be imagined, and what, in the end, proved the utter destruction of the nation, which was, to invite the Saxons into the island, a people at that time famous for their piracies and cruelty, and dreaded, even by the Britons, as death itselfⁱ (T). The expedient being approved

^h Gild. c. 19. p. 119.

ⁱ Idem ibid. Bed. hist. c. 16. p. 157.

(T) The first Saxon troops are said, by most historians, to have landed in the year 449; though, by some, this event is placed a few years sooner; by others, a few years later. Tyro Prosper supposes approved of, ambassadors were dispatched in all haste into Germany, to represent to the Saxons the request of the Britons, and offer them advantageous terms, provided they would come over to their assistance (U). The Saxons were highly pleased with the proposal, the more as they were foretold by their sooth-sayers, that they should plunder the country, to which they were called, for the space of an hundred and fifty years, and quietly possess it twice that time^k. Having therefore fitted out three long ships, called in their language chiules, they put to sea, under the conduct of Hengist and Horfa, the sons of Witigifil, great-grandson to the celebrated Woden, from whom all the royal families of the Saxons pretended to derive their pedigree^l. These, arriving at Ebbesfleet in the isle of Thanet, were received there both by the prince and people with the greatest demonstrations of joy. The isle itself was allotted them for their habitation, and a league was immediately concluded with them, in virtue of which the Saxons were to defend the Britons against all foreign enemies; and the Britons, on the other hand, to allow the Saxons, besides their place of abode, pay and maintenance. Historians have not told us, what the number was of these Saxon auxiliaries;

The Britons under Vortigern agree to invite the Saxons over.

The arrival of the Saxons.

^k Gild. c. 23. p. 119, 120.

^l Bed. ibid. c. 15. p. 157.

supposes the Saxons to have been masters of the island in 444, and consequently to have landed many years before. But that writer was therein grossly mistaken, as is manifest from Gildas, Bede, and all the historians, who speak of this event. Bede places the arrival of the Saxons and Angles in the reign of Marcian, before the death of Valentinian III. that is, between the year 450, and 455, and seems to suppose the resolution of the Britons to call them in to have been taken before the reign of Marcian; so that, according to Bede, their arrival may be well placed in 450, and in that year it is accordingly, by the learned Usher, supposed to have happened (13).

(U) Witichind, a Saxon historian, who lived in the ninth century, in his history 'de gestis Saxonum,' introduces the British ambassadors making the following speech before an assembly of the Saxons: "Illustrious Saxons, the fame of your victories having reached our ears, the distressed Britons, ha-

A 4

"rassed

(13) Bed. hist. c. 15. p. 157. Chron. p. 114. Usher. p. 1107.

The seats of the Saxons, Angles, and Jutes.

auxiliaries; but they could not be above fifteen hundred, since they all came over in three ships; and we cannot well suppose any of those ships to have carried above five hundred men. But, before we proceed farther in this history, it will be necessary to give some account of the origin, manners, government, and religion of the people, who, being called in by the Britons to their assistance, made themselves masters of the island, and hold it to this day. The Saxons were, according to the most probable opinion, a colony of the Cimbrians, that is, of the inhabitants of the Cimbrian Chersonesus, now Jutland; who, finding their country overstocked with people, sent out, much about the same time, three numerous bands to seek for new settlements. To one of these bands was afterwards given the name of Suevians, to another that of Franks, and to the third the name of Saxons. The Suevians took their rout towards Italy, the Franks advanced to Belgic Gaul, and the Saxons possessed themselves of the whole country between the Rhine and the Elb; nay, by degrees extending their conquests along the coast of the German ocean, when the Britons sent to implore their assistance, they were masters not only of the present Westphalia, Saxony, East and West Friseland, but likewise of Holland “harassed by the continual inroads of a neighbouring enemy, “send us to implore your assistance. We have a fertile and “spacious country. which we are commanded to submit to “you. We have hitherto lived under the protection of the “Roman empire; but our antient masters having abandoned us, “we know no nation more powerful than you, and better able to “protect us. We therefore recur to your valour. Forsake us not “in our distress, and we shall readily submit to what terms your“selves shall think fit to prescribe to us.” If the Britons made such a frank surrender, and promised such an absolute subjection, as is insinuated in this speech, it is strange, that neither Bede nor Ethelwerd, both Saxons, should take any notice of it; nay, the latter writer tells us, that the Britons promised to live in perpetual friendship and amity with the Saxons; and friendship and amity are inconsistent with absolute subjection. Besides, when the Saxons, designing to make themselves masters of the island, wanted a pretence to quarrel with the natives, they did not urge the promise of the British ambassadors, which they would certainly have done, had any such promise been made, but alledged, for a pretence, their short diet, and bad pay, as Gildas tells us in express terms; which plainly shews, that they came over only as mercenary soldiers.

Holland and Zealand. The first place they settled in, upon their leaving the Chersonesus, was the present dutchy of Holstein ; which is thence called the antient seat of the Saxons. Between this country and the Chersonesus, or Jutland, dwelt a people, known, even in Tacitus's time, by the name of Angles ^l. According to this account, which we have copied from Bede ^m, the Angles inhabited that small province in the kingdom of Denmark, and duchy of Sleswick, which is called at this day Angel, and of which the city of Flensburg is the metropolis. Lindebergius, in his epistles, styles this country Little-England ; and Ethelwerd, who wrote about the year 950, speaking of the antient habitation of the Angles ; Old Anglia, says he, lies between the Saxons and Giots. The metropolis of this country is by the Saxons called Sleswick ; but by the Danes, Haithby. Britain took the name of those, by whom it was conquered, and is therefore now called Anglia. The same writer adds, that Hengist and Horfa came from the country of the Angles into Britain ⁿ. When the Saxons came first out of the Chersonesus, going in quest of new settlements, the Angles joined them, and, in process of time, became one nation with them. Hence they are, by most authors, comprised under the general name of Saxons, tho' some distinguish them by the compound name of Anglo-Saxons ^o. Some time after the Saxons, Franks and Suevians had left the Chersonesus, the Goths having driven out the Cimbrians that were remaining, made themselves masters of the peninsula, which was thenceforth called Gothland or Jutland, from its new inhabitants the Goths or Jutes. These, in the old printed copies of Bede, are styled Vitæ ; but the learned Usher assures us, that all the manuscript copies of that author, which he consulted, read Jutæ, and not Vitæ ^p. Fabius Ethelwerd, whom we have mentioned above, a writer of the Saxon blood royal, and the fourth in descent from king Adulph or Ethelwolf, calls the country Giota, and the people Giotæ. Great numbers of these Giotæ or Jutæ, mixing with the Saxons and Angles, came over with them into Britain, to share in their conquests. This is the most probable account of these people, after their settling in Jutland

^l Tacit. de Ger. mor. c. 40. p. 136. ^m Bed. l. i. c. 15. ⁿ Ethelwerd. chron. l. i. ^o Vide Alford: ad ann. 449. ^p Uss. de Brit. eccles. primord. p. 491.

Jutland and Germany, that we have been able to gather from the several authors, who have studied this subject. Of their origin, which Cluverius and Verstegan derive from the Germans, but Grotius and Sherringham, with more probability, from the antient Getæ or Goths ; of their various migrations before they settled in the Cimbrian Chersonesus, and their conquests under their several kings, especially under the celebrated Woden, we shall speak at length in the histories of Sweden and Denmark. As the Saxons were, by their piracies on the coasts of Gaul and Britain, better known at the time of their settling in this island, the conquest of Britain is, by the antient writers, ascribed to them, and not to the Angles or Jutes ; nay, Britain was for some time, from them called Saxony ; but, in the end, the name of Anglia, from the Angles, prevailed. The Jutes were less known, at least under that name, than the other two nations or tribes. Bede however tells us, that the province of Kent, the isle of Wight, and the country lying over-against it, now Hampshire, were peopled by the Jutes. As to the name of Saxons, is has occasioned a great disagreement among authors. Be-canus and Camden suppose them to have been first called Sacasons, that is, the sons or descendents of the Sacæ, to whom, according to these writers, they owed their origin. But they are by no antient writer styled Sacasons, as Sherringham well observes, but Sacen or Saxons. Besides none of the antients speak of colonies sent by the Sacæ out of Asia, where they dwelt, in the neighbourhood of the Caspian sea ; but Strabo, on the contrary, tells us, that the whole nation of the Sacæ were to a man destroyed by the Persians ¹. Isidore derives their name from the Latin word saxum, a stone, because they were a strong and hardy nation. But they were so called many ages before the Romans had any knowledge of them, or they of the Romans. The opinion of Lipsius, which Verstegan has followed, seems to us the most probable, viz. that the name of Saxons was given them by their neighbours, from their wearing a short sword, called in their tongue saex ; and hence the arms of Saxony, as Pontanus observes ², are to this day two daggers placed across. As to the name of Angles, Saxo Grammaticus derives it from Angulus, son to Humblus king of the Danes. But how the Angles came to borrow

Etymology of the name Saxons.

And of the name Angles.

¹ Vide Sherring. c. 11. ² Pontan. orig. Francic. l. ii. c. 2.

borrow their name from a son of the king of Denmark, he has not thought fit to acquaint us. Widiscind, a Saxon writer, will have the Angles to be so called from a certain island in the corner or angle of the sea, which they subdued. But this, as well as all other etymologies deriving their name from the Latin tongue, seems to us altogether improbable, and foreign to the purpose, when we consider, that the names of other German nations are not Latin, but German, or Gothic. Goropius therefore derives the name of Angles from the Saxon word angel or engel, signifying a fishing-hook, the Angles, who lived on the sea-coast, being, like the other Saxons, greatly addicted to piracy, and, on that account, styled Angles by the neighbouring nations, as if, like hooks, they caught all that was in the sea. Other derivations are brought by Aventinus, and other etymologists. But as we have perhaps already dwelt too long upon conjectures, we shall now give a succinct account of the manners, government, and religion of the ancient Saxons, our forefathers. The Saxons were, as is agreed on all hands, and appears from their conquest, one of the most warlike nations inhabiting Germany. They were not known to the Romans by the name of Saxons, till the fourth century, Ammianus Marcellinus, and the poet Claudian, being the first Roman writers, who make mention of them. The former, speaking of them, says, they were formidable above all other enemies. And Zosimus, The Saxons are enured to the toils of war, and, for their courage and strength, reckoned the most warlike of all the German nations *. As they were a barbarous and uncivilized people, they treated their enemies with great cruelty, especially the prisoners they took in war, sacrificing them to their gods. As to their government, the countries subject to them were, according to Verstegan, divided into twelve provinces, each of which was governed by a chief or head, accountable to the general assembly of the nation. By this assembly a general was chosen in time of war, who commanded with almost a sovereign power; but his authority ceased, as soon as the war was ended. Their religion was the same with that of the other northern nations. Their chief gods, the Sun, the Moon, the celebrated Woden, his son Thor, his wife Frigga or Froea, Tuisto, Theutates, Hesus, Tharamis, &c.

* Zof. apud Camd.

&c. The three last are mentioned by Lucan (W), as is Tuisto by Tacitus ^t. Woden was the god of war; Thor presided over the air, and was thought to have storms, winds, showers, and fair weather, at his disposal; Frigga was the goddess of pleasure. The two first days of the week were consecrated to the Sun and Moon; the third, according to some, to Tuisto or Tuisco, according to others, to Thyfa or Dyfa, the goddess of justice, and wife of Thor ^u; the fourth to Woden; the fifth to Thor; the sixth to Frigga or Froea; and the seventh, as Verstegan supposes, to Crodo, named also Saeter; but the latter name, as Sherringham observes, is to be found in no writer before Verstegan ^w. The Saxons had, besides these, several other deities, to whom they paid great veneration, namely, the goddess Eostre, to whom they sacrificed in the month of April, which was thence by them styled Eostur monath, or the month of Eostre; and thence the word Easter, which the Saxons retained even after their conversion to the christian religion, giving it to the solemn festival, which we celebrate in commemoration of our Saviour's resurrection ^x. Nocca was the same among the Saxons, as Neptune among the Romans. Mara was a frightful spectre, that terrified and oppressed people in their sleep; whence the word night-mare ^y. Tanfana, mentioned by Tacitus ^z, was worshipped by the Saxons as the god of lots ^a. The Elvæ or Elfs, named also Fairies, were honoured by them with a kind of sacrifice called Alf-blot ^b. The Dyfæ were inferior goddesses, the messengers of the great Woden, whose province it was to convey the souls of such as died in battle to his abode, called Valhall, that is, the hall of slaughter, where they were to drink with him and their other gods, cerevisia, a kind of malt liquor, in the sculls

^t Tacit. de mor. German. ^u Wormius, monument. Dan. l. i. c. 4. ^w Sheringh. c. 14. p. 318, ^x Bed. de ratio. temp. c. 13. ^y Sheringh. ibid. p. 331, 332. ^z Tacit. annal. l. i. ^a Sheringh. p. 333. 334. ^b Worm. mon. Dan. l. i. c. 5.

(W) In the following verses :

Et quibus immitis placatur sanguinediro
Teutates, horrensq̃ue feris altaribus Hesus, Et Tharamis Scythiæ non mitior ara Dianæ (14).

sculls of their slaughtered enemies (X). On the contrary, those who died a natural death, were, by the same Dysæ, conveyed to Hela, the goddess of hell, where they were tormented with hunger, thirst and all kinds of evils^c. The Angles worshipped, as we read in Tacitus, the goddess Herthus, that is the earth, as the mother of all things^d. As to the worship the Saxons paid to their gods, and the sacrifices they offered to them, we refer our readers to Wormius, Verstegan, Isaacius Pontanus, and other German and Danish writers, it being now time to resume the thread of our history.

THE

^c Sheringh. p. 322, 323.

^d Tacit. de mor. German.

(X) Of these goddesses mention is made in an antient Danish monument, whereof the following lines were thus translated by Sheringham :

Fert animus finire.
Invitant me Dysæ, Quas ex Othini aula Othinus mihi misit.
Lætus cerevisiam cum Asis
In summa fede bibam.
Vitæ elapsæ sunt Horæ.
Ridens moriar (15).

Cicero writes, that the Cimbrians envied those who fell in battle ; but pitied the condition of such as died a natural death (16). Hence they went joyful to battle ; but bemoaned their misfortune, when seized with any distemper, looking upon that kind of death as mean and inglorious (17). Lucan takes notice of this, as he styles it, philosophy of the northern nations, and calls it an happy error.

Certe populi, quos despicit Arctus,
Felices errore suo, quos ille timorum
Maximus haud urget lethi metus ; inde ruendi
In ferrum mens prona viris, animæque capaces Mortis, & ignavum reducturæ parcere vitæ (18).

(15) Vide Sheringh. c. 14. p. 336.
quæst. l. ii.

(16) Cic. Tuscul.

(17) Val. Max. l. ii. de institut. antiq.

(18) Lucan. Phar. l. i.

THE Saxons being arrived in Britain, under the conduct of Hengist and Horfa, as we have related above, and put in possession of the isle of Thanet, king Vortigern did not suffer them to continue long there without employment, but led them, soon after their arrival, against the Scots and Picts, who had made an irruption, and were advanced as far as Stanford in the province now called Lincolnshire. There a battle was fought, in which the Scots and Picts were utterly routed, and forced to save themselves by a precipitous flight, leaving the Saxons in possession of the spoil and booty they had taken ^e. Vortigern, highly pleased with the conduct of the two Saxon brothers, rewarded them with ample possessions in Lincolnshire ^f. We are told, that Hengist desired here only as much land as an ox-hide could encompass, and that, upon Vortigern's granting him it, he cut the hide into small thongs, and inclosed with them a space large enough to hold a castle, which to this day is from thence called Thong-caster, that is, the castle of thongs ^g. Be that as it will, Hengist, taken with the fruitfulness and wealth of the island, and at the same time observing the inhabitants to be enervated with luxury, and addicted to ease and idleness, began to entertain hopes of procuring a settlement in Britain. Having therefore first obtained Vortigern's consent, he sent home to acquaint his countrymen with the fruitfulness of the country, and the effeminacy of the inhabitants, inviting them to share with him in his good success, of which he had not the least occasion to doubt.

The Saxons glad of the opportunity, readily complied with the invitation ; and arriving in seventeen large ships, made up, with those they found in the island, a considerable army. With this supply came over, if Nennius is to be credited, Rowena, the daughter of Hengist, with whose charms the king was so taken, that, divorcing his lawful wife, he married her, after having obtained the consent of her father, who pretended to be averse to the match, by investing him with the sovereignty of Kent ^h. Thus Nennius, and those who have copied from him. But no mention is made of Rowena in the Saxon annals, which rather seem to insinuate, that the Saxons made themselves masters of Kent by force of arms ; for we are told there that ann. 450.

^e Gild. p. 120. Bed, p. 157.

^g Vide Camden in Coritan.

^f Matt. Westm. ad
^h Nenn. c. 3.

They defeat
the Scots and Picts.

New supplies of Saxons arrive in Britain.

that Hengist defeated the Britons in two pitched battles, and obliged them to abandon Kent, and retire to London. But this did not happen till the arrival of the third body of Saxon troops ; for Hengist, by laying before the king, and exaggerating the dangers that threatened him, not only from the Scots and Picts, but from his discontented subjects, obtained leave to send for a new reinforcement of Saxons, who, coming over in forty ships, under the conduct of Octa and Ebusa, the son and nephew, or, as others will have it, the brother and nephew of Hengist, arrived at the Orcades ; and having ravaged there, and all along the northern coast, the countries of the Scots and Picts, they made themselves masters of several places beyond the friths, and, in the end, obtained leave of the king to settle in Northumberland, under the specious pretence of securing the northern parts, as Hengist did the southern. Hengist, encroaching still on the king's favour, sent by degrees for more men and ships, till the countries from whence they came were almost left without inhabitants. And now their numbers being greatly encreased, they began to quarrel with the natives, demanding larger allowances of corn and other provisions, and threatening, if their demands were not complied with, to break the league, and lay waste the whole country. The Britons, refusing them what they demanded, desired them to return home, since their numbers exceeded what they were able to maintain. This answer, however just and reasonable, provoked the Saxons to such a degree, that, having secretly concluded a peace with the Scots and Picts, they turned their arms against those whom they were come to defend, and over-running, without opposition, the whole island, destroyed all with fire and sword, from the eastern to the western sea. The public, as well as the private buildings were laid level with the ground ; the cities pillaged and burnt ; the priests slain at the altars ; the bishops cruelly massacred, without the least respect to their dignity ; and the people, without distinction of sex, age, or condition, butchered in such multitudes, that the living were scarce sufficient to bury the dead. Some of the unhappy Britons, who escaped the general slaughter, took refuge among the inaccessible rocks and mountains ; but great numbers of them either perished with hunger, or were forced, by the extremity of famine, to abandon their asylum, and, delivering themselves up to their merciless enemies, preserve their lives at the expence Octa and Ebusa settle in Northumberland.

The Saxons begin to quarrel with the Britons.

And lay waste the whole island,

The deplorable condition of the Britons.

expenſe of their liberty. Some, croſſing the ſea, took ſhel-ter among foreign nations, ſettling either in Holland, where the ruins of Brittenburgh, an old caſtle, built, as is ſup-poſed, by them on this occaſion, are ſtill to be ſeen, or among their countrymen in Armorica (Y). But thoſe who remained at home, ſuffered inexpressible calamities, living among the woods, rocks, and mountains in perpetual apprehenſions, and want of neceſſariesⁱ. Nennius tells us, that Vortigern was ſo far from being reclaimed by theſe calamities, that, on the contrary, adding to his other crimes that of inceſt, he married his own daughter, and had by her a ſon named Fauſtus, who led a ſolitary and religious life near the river Rennis in Glamorganſhire. The ſame writer adds, and after him Matthew of Weſtmiſter, that the Britons, highly provoked at the king's wickedneſs, and the partiality he ſhewed to the Saxons, depoſed him, and raiſed to the throne his ſon Vortimer, who, as he was a brave and valiant youth, undertook the defence of his diſtreſſed country; and falling upon the Saxons with what troops he could aſſemble, drove them into the iſland of Thanet, and there kept them cloſe beſieged, till being reinforced with freſh ſupplies from Saxony, they opened themſelves a way through the Britiſh forces. But Vortimer, not yet diſheartened, fought with them four battles; the firſt on the banks of the Derwent in Kent, where he obtained a ſignal victory, and cut in pieces great numbers of the enemy; the ſecond at a place called in the Saxon tongue Episford, and in the Britiſh, Sathengabail, now Aylesford in Kent. In this battle fell Horſa, and likewise Catigern, the brother of Vortigern. Some writers will have the Britons to have won the day^k, and others the Saxons^l; nay, Ethelwerd ſeems to aſcribe to this victory the founding of the kingdom of Kent^m. Horſa is ſuppo-ſed to have been buried at a place, called from him to this day Horſted; and Catigern near Aylesford, where a monument

Vortigern depoſed, and his ſon Vortimer raiſed to the throne in his room.

He fights with ſucceſs againſt the Saxons.

ⁱ Gild. p. 120. Bed. p. 157.
 Weſtm. ad ann. 455.
 ad ann. 445.

^k Huntin. l. ii. Matt.
^l Flor. of Wor. ^m Ethel. l. i.

(Y) Moſt of our hiſtorians ſuppoſe the Britons to have been ſettled in Armorica long before the arrival of the Saxons; but this ſuppoſition, as we ſhall ſhew anon, is not countenanced by the authority of any antient writer.

ment is to be seen somewhat like Stonehenge, called by the country people Kith's Coty-house, that is, Catigern's house ⁿ. The place where the third battle was fought is not mentioned ; but we are told, that Vortimer engaged the Saxons the fourth time at a place called Lapis tituli, which Camden and Usher take to be Stonar, in the isle of Thanet ; but Somner ^o and Stillingfleet ^p, instead of Lapis tituli, read Lapis populi, that is, Folkstone, where, according to them, the battle was fought. In this battle the Saxons were routed with great slaughter, and forced back to their ships, on which they embarked, being no longer able to withstand the valour of Vortimer, and, abandoning the island, returned home, where they continued till the death of Vortimer, that is, for the space of five years, without making any attempt upon Britain. Thus Nennius, and the historians who have copied after him. But of these battles no mention is made either by Gildas or Bede. The former writer only tells us, that the Saxons retired, which most of our historians understand of their returning home, though Gildas perhaps meant no more, than that, after having laid waste the island, they withdrew to the territories, that had been granted them by Vortigern, that is, to Kent and Northumberland : and truly it seems to us altogether incredible, that had the Britons gained so many signal victories, Gildas would have passed them all over in silence. Our historians tell us, that Vortimer died about ^{Vortimer} this time, after a short reign of six years ; and add, that, ^{dies.} upon his death-bed, he desired his servants to bury him near the place where the Saxons used to land, being persuaded, that the secret virtue of his bones would deter them from making any attempts there for the future ; but they, neglecting his commands, buried him at Lincoln ^q, or, as others will have it ^r, at London. Some will have him to have been poisoned by his mother-in-law Rowena ^s ; others write, that he died a natural death ^t. Be that as it will, Hengist was no sooner informed of his death, than he returned with a numerous body of Saxons to Britain ; and, landing in spite of all opposition, fought several battles with
the

ⁿ Vide Camd in Cantio.

^o Somn. forts and ports, p.

94. ^p Stilling. orig. Brit. p. 322. ^q Westm. ad ann. 457.

^r Sigebert. ad ann. 437.

^s Westm. Sigebert. ibid. Rich. vit.

&c. ^t Hunting. l. ii.

the Britons, under the conduct of Vortigern, who, upon the death of his son Vortimer, was restored to the throne. In one of these battles, fought at a place called Crecanford, the Britons were overthrown, with the loss of four thousand men; which obliged them to abandon Kent, and retire to London^u. From this victory, most authors date the beginning of the kingdom of Kent under Hengist, who took his son Esk for his colleague. But Vortigern still maintaining the war against the Saxons, Hengist had recourse to treachery; and pretending a great desire to conclude a peace, and renew the former amity between him and the British king, sent ambassadors to require an interview with him. To this proposal Vortigern, after advising with his nobles, readily consented, and it was agreed, that they should meet at an entertainment without arms. But the treacherous Saxon having secretly ordered those who attended him to take their daggers, and keep them in readiness concealed under their garments, when they met, pursuant to the agreement, and the Britons suspecting no treachery, began to be heated with wine, the Saxons, starting up at a signal given, and drawing their daggers, dispatched each of them his next man, to the number of three hundred, the flower of the British nobility. Vortigern alone was spared; but being taken prisoner, and put in fetters, he was forced, for his ransom, to surrender to the Saxons those provinces, that were afterwards called Essex, Suffex, and Middlesex. By this means the Saxons got such footing in the island, that they could never afterwards be driven out. Thus Nennius^w and William of Malmesbury^x. But of these transactions no mention is made either by Gildas or Bede. Vortigern, being set at liberty, retired, as we are told, to a vast wilderness near the fall of the Wye in Radnorshire, where he was, some time after, consumed by lightning, with the city Kaer Gourtigern, which he had built there for his refuge^y. Upon the retreat of Vortigern, Aurelius Ambrosius, or, as Gildas calls him, Ambrosius Aurelianus, took upon him the command of the British forces. He was a wise and modest man, says Gildas, and perhaps the only Roman that remained in the island, having, in the calamitous times of Britain, lost his parents, who had worn the purple. Thus Gildas^z, without explaining himself farther.

The Britons
overthrown:

The first Saxon kingdom in Kent.
Year after Christ 457.

300 of the British nobility treacherously slain, and Vortigern made prisoner.

Aurelius Ambrosius succeeds Vortigern.
Year after
Christ 458.

^u Nenn. c. 46. ^w Idem. c. 47, 48.
^{l. i. c. 1.} ^y Vide Camd, in Radnor.

^x Malmes. de reg.
^z Gild. c. 25.

ther. He adds, that the offspring of Aurelius continued still in the island in his time ; but had greatly degenerated from the good qualities of their ancestors ^a. Bede writes, that his parents had borne the royal name and ensigns ; but had been slain ^b. Neither Gildas nor Bede name his parents ; which has given room to many conjectures, some maintaining him to have been the son of Constantine, who was chosen emperor by the Romans in Britain about the year 407 ^c. Of him, and his son Constans, who was declared Cæsar in 408, we have spoken at length in our Roman history ^d. Others think he was descended from some of the British kings, who reigned in the island after the departure of the Romans ; for it is manifest from Gildas, that the Britons had several kings at the same time. Matthew of Westminster tells us, that Ambrosius had fled, with his brother Uterpendragus, whom others call Uther, into Armorica, to avoid falling into the hands of Vortigern, who, it seems, had usurped his right ^e ; nay, some writers tell us, that the fear of Ambrosius induced Vortigern to call in the Saxons. Matthew of Westminster adds, that the Britons no longer able to bear Vortigern, sent for Ambrosius and his brother ; who, complying with their invitation, landed with a considerable body of men in the island ; upon which Vortigern retired to the mountains of that part of Britain, which is now called Wales ; and Ambrosius was declared king. But the great disagreement we find among the writers after Gildas and Bede, convinces us, that we cannot depend upon any thing they have related. All we can gather from the best authors is, that the Britons under the conduct of Ambrosius, took courage, and falling upon the Saxons when most of their forces were returned home, routed them with great slaughter ^f. It was perhaps in this battle that Horfa was slain ; for of the other battles mentioned above, no notice is taken either by Gildas or Bede. From this time the war was carried on, says Bede ^g, sometimes favourable to the Britons, and sometimes to the Saxons, till the latter made themselves masters of the whole island. Those who have written several ages after Bede, give us a more particular account

He defeats the Saxons with great slaughter.

B 2

^a Idem ibid. ^b Bed. c. 15. p. 157. ^c Alf. ad ann. 464. ^d Univers. hist, vol. xvi. p. 163, 165, 186, 189. ^e Westmon. ad ann. 464. ^f Gild. c. 25. Bed. c. 15. ^g Bed. de sex ætat. in Zenon.

The Britons
routed by Hengist and his son Esk.

account of the transactions of those dark times ; but we will not take upon us to vouch the truth of what they relate. According to them, Ambrosius, after the above-mentioned victory, assembled the nobility at York ; and having ordered the churches to be rebuilt or repaired throughout the kingdom, which had been destroyed by the Saxons, he marched from York to London, from London to Winchester, and from thence to Salisbury (Z), endeavouring every-where to restore the declining state of the church and kingdom^h. In the mean time Pascentius, Vortigern's third son, aspiring to the crown, raised a rebellion in the north ; but was overcome and put to flight by Ambrosius, who nevertheless bestowed upon him Bualth in Brecknockshire, and Caer-Guortigern in Radnorshire. After this, the Britons enjoyed some respite ; but were, in the eighth year of Ambrosius's reignⁱ, worsted in a pitched battle by Hengist and his son Esk, who took a great booty^k. No mention is made of any other battle fought, till four years after, when other Saxons coming over, under the conduct of Ella and his three sons, Cymen, Wlencing, and Cissa, the Britons fell upon them as they were landing at a place called Cymenshore, that is, Cymen's shore. The Saxons, says Huntington, who were tall, strong and vigorous, gave the Britons a warm reception ; and having put them to flight as they advanced in straggling parties, they pursued them to the forest of Andredeleige, supposed to be the weald of Kent, and the woody parts of Sussex^l. After this victory, the Saxons possessed themselves of all the sea-coast of Sussex, and continued to extend ⁱ Alford, ad hunc ann.

^h Westmonast. ad ann. 465.

^k Ethelwerd l. i.

^l Hunting. l. ii.

(Z) Geoffery of Monmouth tells us, that, on this occasion, Ambrosius erected the famous monument known by the name of Stonehenge, in honour of the British nobles treacherously slain there, as he supposes, by Hengist. It is surprising, that any of our historians should have followed him, and yet Matthew of Westminster copies the main of his account ; and Walter of Coventry sets it down as a thing not to be questioned, adding two circumstances to render it the more probable, viz. that Ambrosius was crowned, and, not long after, buried there. Polydore Virgil supposes it to be the monument of Ambrosius ; and John of Tinnmouth calls it Mons Ambrosii.

extend their dominions more and more till the ninth year after the arrival of Ella, when all the kings and princes of Britain, says Huntington, having united their forces, engaged Ella and his sons at a place called Mercredesburne. The victory, according to Henry of Huntington, remained doubtful, and both armies retired with great loss^m: but others will have the Saxons to have won the day. Ella, being greatly weakened by the loss he had sustained, sent for fresh supplies, says the above mentioned writer, out of his own country. In the mean time Hengist, having raised and garrisoned several forts in Kent, marched with great expedition into the north, and, having joined there the Scots and Picts took and fortified several towns. But Ambrosius, drawing together his forces, marched in quest of the enemy, and, coming up with them, gave them a total overthrowⁿ. The following year 488, died Hengist king of Kent, and was succeeded by his son Esk, called also Oisc and Ofric, who reigned twenty-four years, without attempting to enlarge his dominions^o. Some writers tell us that Hengist was taken prisoner in the above-mentioned battle by Eldol duke of Claudiocestria, and beheaded by him, pursuant to the sentence which had been pronounced against him in a great council, at the instigation of Eldadus, brother to Eldol, and bishop of Claudiocestria, who declared, that, if the rest spared him, he would, with his own hands, cut him in pieces^p. But this account is generally looked upon as an arrant fable (A).

IN the mean time Ella, having received fresh supplies from Germany, laid siege to Andred-chester, supposed by Camden to be Newenden in Kent; by Somner to be Pemsey or Hastings. On the other hand, the Britons, having Ambrosius obtains a signal victory, over the Saxons.

The Saxons, under the conduct of Ella, besiege Andred-chester.

B 3

^m Idem ibid. ⁿ Idem, ad ann. 487. ^o Idem, l. ii.
Ethelw. ad hunc ann. Malmesb. de reg. l. i. c. 1. ^p Florib.
ad ann. 489.

(A) Hengist, as we have observed above, withdrew from Britain, after his first landing there, to recruit his army, which was greatly diminished. Cornelius Kempius, in his history of Frisia, tells us, upon what grounds we know not, that Hengist retired to Holland, and there built, on the banks of the Rhine, the city of Leyden (18).

(18) Corn. Kemp. in Frisia, l. ii.

having raised a great army, advanced to the relief of the place, and with frequent attacks, harrassed the Saxons to such a degree, that they were obliged to abandon the siege. Hereupon the Britons withdrew to the woods, not caring to venture a battle ; but the Saxons were no sooner returned to the siege, than the Britons, falling out upon them anew, forced them to quit it. Thus the Saxons lost great numbers of their men, and made but a small progress in the siege. But Ella having at last divided his army into two bodies, one of which pursued without intermission the siege, while the other observed the enemy's motions, the citizens, quite spent with hunger and fatigue, could no longer withstand the efforts of the aggressors. The town was therefore taken, and by the merciless conquerors levelled with the ground, after they had put to the sword all the inhabitants, without distinction of sex or age. Such is the account Henry of Huntington gives of this siege ¹. Thus in the year 491, three years after the death of Hengist, and thirty-four after the beginning of the kingdom of Kent, began the second kingdom in the island, called the kingdom of South Saxons, which comprised at first only Suffex, but was extended by Ella before his death, for he reigned twenty-four years, to all the provinces lying south of the Humber ². News being carried into Germany of the good success that attended the Saxons in Britain, new adventurers flocked over daily to share with them their good fortune. Among the rest came Cerdick, the tenth in descent from Woden, with his son Cenrick, and as many men as he could transport in five ships. These landing at a place, which, from their leader, was called Cerdick's-shore, now according to Brompton, Yarmouth in Norfolk, were vigorously attacked by the Britons, whom, after a short engagement, they put to flight. Several other battles were fought ; but fortune proving ever favourable to the Saxons, the natives were forced to retire, and leave them in possession of the sea-coasts ³. About six years after, Porta, another Saxon, with his two sons-Bleda and Magla, arrived at Portsmouth, so called, as some imagine, from him ; and having defeated with great slaughter the Britons, who attempted to oppose his landing, and killed a young British prince, who commanded them, he possessed

Which they take, and level with the ground;

The second
Saxon kingdom in Britain.
The South
Saxons.

More Saxons arrive under Cerdick and Porta.

¹ Hunting. l. ii.
l. ii. Chron. Sax. ad ann. 490.

² Bed. l. ii. c. 5.

³ Hunting.

possessed himself of the neighbouring country ^t. But the progress made by Cerdick most of all alarmed the Britons, and therefore, seven years after the arrival of Porta, and sixty after the first coming of the Saxons, Nazaleod, whom Henry of Huntington styles the greatest of the British kings, assembled the whole strength of Britain to put a stop to his conquests. On the other hand, Cerdick, aware of the danger that threatened him, had recourse to Esk king of Kent, to Ella king of the South Saxons, and to Porta and his sons, who all sent him powerful supplies. With these he advanced against the Britons, leading the right wing himself, and his son Cenrick the left. As the two armies drew near each other, Nazaleod, perceiving the enemy's right wing to be by far the stronger of the two, charged it with the flower of his army, and obliged Cerdick, after an obstinate resistance, to save himself by flight; but, as he was pursuing the fugitives with more heat than caution, Cenrick, falling upon his rear, renewed the battle with such vigour, that the British army was utterly defeated, and Nazaleod himself slain, with five thousand of his men ^u. Who this Nazaleod was, is much controverted: some think it may be the British name of Ambrosius, who, as Gildas informs us, fought, about this time, several battles with the Saxons; others will have it to be the name of his brother Uther Pendragon. But the story of Uther Pendragon is now deemed a fable by all the British antiquaries. Matthew of Westminster speaks of Nazaleod, whom he calls Nathanloith, not as a king, but only the general of Uther Pendragon, by whom he was sent against the Saxons, who slew him, and fifteen thousand of his men. But the Saxon annals, Ethelwerd, Florence of Worcester, and Henry of Huntington, agree in distinguishing him with the title of king; nay, the latter writer styles him the greatest of the British kings. Usher conjectures Uther and Nazaleod to be one and the same person, the surname of Uther, signifying in the British tongue terrible, having been given him on account of the great things achieved by him ^w. But as this is the darkest period of the whole British history, our best antiquaries can alledge nothing but mere conjectures to clear it. It is even uncertain who succeeded Nazaleod.

B 4

The

^t Hunting. ibid.
primord. p. 466, 467:

^u Idem, ibid.

^w Vide Uss. in Arthur succeeds Nathaleod.

The Welsh annals leave an inter-regnum of about six years, and place the beginning of Arthur's reign in 514, or 515. The learned Usher conjectures him to have been the son of Nazeleod, called also Uther. Some have doubted whether there were ever such a person (B) ; but the generality of our historians

(B) The history of king Arthur has been so disfigured, and interwoven with so many absurd, ridiculous and romantic stories, that some have doubted, whether there ever was such a person as Arthur in the world. Among these, Milton alledges the following objections against Arthur : 1. That he is not so much as mentioned by Gildas, or any antient British historian, except Nennius, who lived three hundred years after him, and is allowed by all to have been a very credulous and trifling writer, and to have vented a great many fables. 2. Though William of Malmesbury and Henry of Huntington have both related his exploits, and his many victories over the Saxons, yet the latter took all he wrote concerning him from Nennius ; and the former either from the same fabulous author, or from some monkish legends in the abbey of Glasfenbury ; for both these writers flourished several centuries after Arthur, and consequently knew no more of him, than we do at this day. 3. In the pretended history of Geoffery of Monmouth, such contradictions occur concerning this prince's victories, not only in Britain, but in France, Scotland, Ireland, Norway, Italy, and other countries, as are sufficient to make us look upon him as a hero altogether fabulous and romantic. But these objections, however plausible in appearance, are not of weight enough to convince us, that whatever has been written of king Arthur is quite fabulous ; for, in the first place, his not being mentioned by Gildas does not at all seem strange to us, since that author's design was not to write an exact history of his country, but only to give us a short account of the causes of its ruin by the Scots, Picts, and Saxons, of which the chief was, according to him, the great wickedness of the Britons, and the general corruption of manners, that prevailed among them. On this he chiefly dwells, and from this subject no exploits of the princes, who then reigned, were capable of diverting him. Besides, he only mentions those princes, whose notorious wickedness seemed to draw down upon the unhappy Britons divine vengeance, expatiating upon the vices to which they were addicted, without taking the least notice of their good qualities, or of the exploits, that were performed by them, or by others, tho' it is evident even from him, that the Saxons met with a vigorous opposition, and were often defeated by the British kings or commanders, historians not only agree, that there was such a prince, but that he made a powerful resistance against the Saxons. Some will

ers. As for Nennius, who lived about three hundred years after Arthur's time, allowing what is objected against him to be true, yet we cannot persuade ourselves, that the whole story of Arthur, and the battles he fought, were a mere invention of his. We are rather inclined to believe, that he copied, at least part of what he wrote, from other more antient authors, or perhaps from the general tradition of his countrymen at that time. It is true, the Saxon annals make no mention of this king, perhaps because they could not do it, without transmitting to posterity the many overthrows he gave the Saxon nation. But Rudolphus de Diceto, one of our best and most antient English historians, speaking of king Cerdick, mentions his fighting several battles with king Arthur. As for William of Malmesbury, and Henry of Huntington, though neither of them perhaps knew any thing of Arthur, but what they learnt from Nennius, or the antient registers of Glassenbury, yet, in our opinion, they deserve some credit, since we cannot persuade ourselves, that those registers consisted merely of fables. William of Malmesbury himself owns, that the Britons had vented a great many fables concerning this prince ; but adds, that he was a hero more worthy to be celebrated in true history, than in romance. The many stories, feigned and related of his exploits by the Britons or Welsh, encouraged Geoffery of Monmouth to write many incredible fables of his conquests ; but it does not thence follow, that whatever has been related of him must be fabulous ; for a genuine history may be corrupted, and yet the substance of it remain true. If we therefore distinguish truth from falsehood, and reject what favours too much of romance, we shall meet with nothing in the life of this hero unbecoming the character of a great prince. He was buried at Glassenbury in Somersetshire, and his coffin was dug up in the reign of Henry II. with this inscription on it in Gothic characters, Hic jacet sepultus inclytus rex Arturius in insula Avalonia. We are told, that the following account of this discovery was hung up in the monastery of Glassenbury, and was to be seen there till the dissolution of the said monastery : ' In this island, which is called the island of Avalonia, nay, in this burying-place of saints at Glassenbury, rest the renowned king Arthur, the flower of the British kings, and Guenhumara his queen, who departing this life, were honourably interred near the old church, between two stone pyramids, where they lay many years till the time of Henry de Soili, who was abbot of
of

will have him to have been king of all Britain ; while others confine his kingdom to Cornwall. Nennius, who lived about three of the place after the burning of the said church. This abbot, being importuned by many persons, ordered some to dig between the pyramids for the bodies of the above-mentioned king and queen. Having dug very deep, they at length discovered a great wooden coffin close shut, which they opened, and found in it the king's body, with a leaden cross, on which was the following inscription, Here lies buried the renowned king Arthur in the island Avalonia. Then they opened the queen's grave, and found her lying with her hair dishevelled, as if she had been but just buried ; which however, fell to ashes as soon as touched. The abbot and convent, with great joy, took thence their remains, and placed them in the greater church in a tomb, which was cut in a rock, and divided into two parts, the king's body being by itself at the head of the tomb, and the queen's in the eastern part of it. On the tomb were engraved their several epitaphs (19). 'The abbot, by whom these bodies were discovered, was not, as Leland supposes, Henricus Blasensis, nephew to Henry I. but Henricus Soliacensis, or Henry de Soily, or Sully, who was made abbot after the burning of the church of Glassenbury in 1184, was afterwards raised to the bishoprick of Worcester, and died in 1195. The epitaphs, which he caused to be engraved on the monuments of king Arthur and his queen, were as follows :

Hic jacet Arthurus, flos regum, gloria regni, Quem mores, probitas, commendant laude perenni.

*Arthuri jacet hic conjux tumultata secunda,
Quæ meruit cœlos virtutum prole secunda.*

We are told, that, in the king's body were plainly seen the marks of ten wounds, whereof one only seemed mortal. What Giraldus Cambrensis writes of his stature, and the dimensions of his body, is unquestionably fabulous. The leaden cross was preserved in the treasury of the church of Glassenbury till the dissolution of that monastery, and there seen and carefully viewed by Leland (20). His tomb was discovered in the reign of Henry II. about the year 1189, that is, six hundred years after three hundred years after him, tells us, that he overthrew the Saxons in no fewer than twelve battles. The first of these was fought near the mouth of a certain river, called Glein, or Gleni, placed by some in Devonshire; by others in Lincolnshire: the second, third, fourth and fifth, near the river Douglas, in the country of Linvis, or Linnis. This river some suppose to be the Dug or Duc in Lincolnshire; others the Dugles near Wigan in Lancashire. The sixth battle was fought on the banks of a river called Bassas, supposed by some to run by the town of Boston in Lincolnshire; the seventh in the wood of Chelidon, called in the British language Cattoit Celidon. Matthew of Westminster gives a very particular account of this battle; but, in our opinion, so fabulous, that it does not deserve a place in history ^y. The eighth battle was near the castle of Suinnion; the ninth near the city of Lergis or Leogis, called in the British tongue Kaerleon; the tenth in the neighbourhood of the river Ribrot or Arderic; the eleventh on the hill Brenion, supposed to be somewhere in Somersetshire; and the twelfth on the hill of Badon. Gale thinks these battles were fought in the space of forty years, under Vortigern, Ambrosius, and others, though they have been all ascribed to Arthur. Cerdick, having sustained great losses in the many battles that were fought with the Britons, sent over to Germany for new supplies; which arriving in three ships, under the conduct of Stuf and Witgar, his two nephews, landed at Cerdickshore, where they were attacked by the Britons, whom they put to flight. Henry of Huntington, who describes this battle at length, tells us, that the British forces were drawn up on the side of a hill,

(19) Vide Usser. in primord. p. 116, &c. & Gerald. Cambr. in spec. eccles. l. ii, c. 11. (20) Leland. apud. Uss. p. 120. in assert. Arturii.

He is said to have overthrown the Saxons in twelve battles.
New supplies of Saxons arrive under Stuf and Witgar.

^y WESTM. ad ann. 524.

ter his death. So great was the love and esteem of the Britons for this hero, that, for several ages, he was thought by many to be still alive: nay, this notion, as our historians assure us, was not entirely rooted out, till his tomb was discovered. It was this perhaps that gave occasion to the many fables, that have been invented concerning Arthur's travels, and his numberless victories in foreign countries. To conclude, had this renowned hero of the British nation been less celebrated by romantic writers, no one perhaps would have questioned the truth of what has been related concerning his noble deeds by more grave historians.

The third Saxon kingdom.
The West
Saxons.

Cerdick defeats the Bri-tons;

a hill, and likewise in a valley, which at first frightened the new-comers; but recovering themselves from their consternation, they fell with great resolution upon the Britons and put them to flight². In this year 514, died Esk the son of Hengist, and second king of Kent, and was succeeded by his son Otta, who reigned twenty-two years; but performed nothing worthy of notice³. The same year died, as we are told by Henry of Huntington, Ella, the first king of the South Saxons, having reigned twenty-four years. Cissa, his youngest son, succeeded him, the other two, who came over with him, being in all likelihood, dead before him. Cissa is supposed to have built Chichester, called in the Saxon language the city of Cissa. About this time Cerdick, after he had been twenty-four years in the island, and made himself master of a very large territory, took upon him the title of king, and founded the third kingdom in the nation, called the kingdom of the West Saxons, comprehending the counties of Devonshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire, Wiltshire, Hampshire, and Berkshire, to which was afterwards added Cornwall. In subduing these countries, Cerdick, though reinforced with continual supplies from Germany, spent twenty-four years; which shews, that the Britons did not tamely part with their territories, but, being overpowered with numbers, were forced, after a long and vigorous resistance, to quit them. The same year that Cerdick assumed the regal title, he fought a battle with the Britons at a place called Cerdick's-ford, supposed to be Charford, in Hampshire. The account Henry of Huntington gives us of this battle is very advantageous to the Saxons; but upon what grounds he gives it, we know not, since the Saxon annals only tell us, that from this time forward, the royal offspring, meaning the offspring of Cerdick, reigned over the West Saxons; which seems indeed to imply that Cerdick won the day, and, by this victory secured the crown to his posterity. No mention is made of Cerdick till seven years after this battle, when we find him again engaged with the Britons at a place called Cerdick's-lea, or Cerdick's-league, supposed to be Cherdley in Buckinghamshire^b; but whether the Saxons conquered, or the Britons, we are no-where told. All we know

² Hunting. ibid.
ad ann. 527,

³ Ran. Higd. in polychron.

^b Sax. annal.

know from the annals is, that, after this battle, Cerdick reduced the isle of Wight; a convincing proof, that the battle had proved favorable to him. He is said to have granted the isle of Wight to Stuf and Witgar, his two nephews, who put to the sword an incredible number of the inhabitants at a place, called from the latter Witgaraburg, and now, by contraction, Carelbroke. Of these battles Henry of Huntington gives us very particular accounts; but as we are convinced he did not copy from any authentic or credible authors, we forbear descending with him to particulars. But that we may not rely altogether on the Saxon annals, nor those authors, who have written long after the thing they relate had happened, Gildas, a writer of unquestionable authority, who lived in those times, tells us, that a great battle was fought on Badon-hill, supposed to be Bamsdown near Bath, in which the Saxons were utterly routed by the Britons.^c This battle is said by Nennius, and after him by most of our historians, to be the last of the twelve fought by king Arthur. There are not however wanting some, who maintain, that this battle was fought in the reign of Ambrosius; but, at the same time, they ascribe the victory to the valour and conduct of Arthur, who commanded the Britons as general to Ambrosius. In this battle the Saxons received such an overthrow, that, for many years, they forbore molesting the Britons. It was fought, according to the best British manuscripts, in the year 520, though some place it in 493, and others even before the year 491. Be that as it will, the Britons, it seems, still enjoyed the peace and tranquillity, which so signal a victory produced, when Gildas wrote his account of the destruction of Britain, that is. forty-four years after the battle was fought. This seems the most natural sense of the obscure words of Gildas^d, though Bede understood him as if he had meant, that the battle was fought forty-four years after the first coming of the Saxons^e; whence, in his chronicle, he places it in the reign of the emperor Zeno, who died in 491^f. But, notwithstanding the peace which the Britons enjoyed, the Saxons, who were continually flocking over, and making new encroachments, founded, according

And reduces the isle of Wight.

The Saxons receive a total overthrow on Badon-hill.

The Britons enjoy a long peace.

^c Gild. c. 26. p. 120.
16. p. 258.

^d Vide Uss. p. 477.

^e Bed. hist. c.

^f Idem chron. p. 114.

The fourth Saxon kingdom.
The East
Saxons.

Arthur dies.

The fifth Saxon kingdom.
Northumberland.
Year after
Christ 547.

ding to the Saxon annals, in the year 527, a fourth kingdom, called the kingdom of the East Saxons, comprising Essex, Middlesex, and part of Hertfordshire. This kingdom was begun by Erchenwin, descended from one Saxnat. To Erchenwin succeeded, according to Henry of Huntington, his son Sleda, whom William of Malmesbury makes the first of the East Saxon kings, and the tenth from Woden. About fifteen years after the founding of the East Saxon kingdom, that is, near the year 542, the great king Arthur is supposed to have died, and to have been succeeded by his kinsman Constantine; but the most antient British chronicles leave an inter-regnum of near eleven years, without so much as mentioning Constantine. In the year 547, Ida, the tenth by descent from Woden, founded the fifth kingdom in this island, called the kingdom of Northumberland, as it comprised that part of the British provinces, that lies north of the Humber. Otta and Ebusa had, at the request of Hengist as we have related above, been allowed by Vortigern to settle in those parts, under pretence of making war on the Scots and Picts, and securing the northern provinces against their incursions. This they effected; but having at the same time driven out the antient inhabitants, they seized on those countries for themselves, and held them as inferior governors and vassals to the kings of Kent. This moderation, says our historian ^g, descended to their posterity; so that, for the space of an hundred years, the princes of Northumberland continued subject to the kings of Kent. But this year 547, the principality was changed into a kingdom, Ida, a person no less famous for his virtues than for his birth, assuming the title of king of Northumberland. This proved a powerful kingdom; for it comprehended all Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, Cumberland, Westmorland, and Northumberland, with part of Scotland, as far as Edinburgh frith. Ida was not, according to Matthew of Westminster, son to any of those princes, who governed Northumberland before it became a kingdom, but an adventurer come lately out of Germany, and raised to the throne in regard to his extraordinary merit. He reigned about twelve years with great applause, and built a town, which he called, as Bede seems to insinuate^h, Bebanburgh, now Bamborough in Northumberland, ^g Malmesb. l. i. c. 3.

^h Bed. l. iii. c. 6.

berland, from his wife Bebba. Upon his death, the kingdom of the Northumbrians was divided into two, whereof the one lying south of the Tine, was called Deira, and the other, extending from that river to Edinburgh frith, Bernicia.

IN the year 561, Ethelbert began to reign in Kent. Civil wars among the Saxons. As he was young and ambitious when he ascended the throne, he was the first who raised civil wars and disturbances amongst the Saxons themselves, claiming, as king of the most antient Saxon kingdom, a kind of right over the rest. This claim he attempted to support by dint of arms; but being twice defeated, he, who at first was formidable, became in a short time, in a manner, contemptible; for Keaulin, king of the West Saxons, and his son Cutha, having pursued him into his own dominions, slew at Wibbandun, Oslac and Cnebba, two of his chief commanders. By means of these civil contests among the Saxons, but chiefly by the late victory gained on Badon-hill, the Britons lived, at least for the space of forty-four years, unmolested by their common enemy. But the peace they enjoyed proved more destructive to them than any war; for though those who had felt the calamities that had befallen their nation, acknowledged themselves, by their christian and regular lives, indebted to Heaven for their deliverance, yet the next generation, unacquainted with past evils, and only sensible of their present ease, abandoned themselves to all A general corruption of manners prevailed among the Britons. manner of vice and debauchery to such a degree, that the principles of truth and justice being totally subverted, scarce any footsteps of them remained either in the clergy or laity, in the people or their princes; so that they became odious, as Gildas informs us, to all the neighbouring nations. But how far injustice, irreligion, and immorality, prevailed amongst all ranks of men, will better appear from that writer's own words. And to begin with the kings, who then reigned in Britain, he thus reproves them in the epistle, which he wrote while living in Armorica out of their reach. Britain, says he, has kings, but tyrants; judges, but such as prey upon the innocent; the kings have wives, but abandon themselves to harlots; they swear oft, but perjure themselves; they wage war, but an unjust and civil war; they punish thieves, yet have the greatest near them, even at their own tables; they sit in the seat of judgment, but seldom observe the rules of right judgment; they proudly overlook the modest and harmless, The wickedness of their kings. but but countenance the audacious, though guilty of most abominable crimes ; they fill their prisons, but with men whom they have committed rather out of malice, than for any crime. He then proceeds to each king in particular, beginning with Constantine then reigning in Cornwall and Devonshire, whom he calls ‘ the tyrannical whelp of an impure Damonian lioness,’ and charges with the murder of two innocent youths of the blood royal, whom he assassinated in their mother’s arms at the very altar, and under the cope of the holy abbot. He likewise inveighs against this prince, as one that was polluted with many adulteries, and had put away his lawful wife. In the next place, he reproaches Aurelius Conanus with adulteries, with parricide, and greater cruelties than the former was guilty of. He adds, that this prince, hating the peace of his country, had, for the sake of booty and prey, fomented civil wars. Where Aurelius Conanus reigned, is not expressed ; but his condition was not, it seems, very prosperous : for Gildas wishes, that, being now left alone, like a tree withering in the midst of a barren forest, he may call to mind the pride and arrogance of his father and elder brothers, who came all to untimely deaths. In the third place, he applies himself to Vortipore, whom he calls the wicked son of a good father, and the tyrant of Deme-tia or South Wales. He upbraids him, though stricken in years, with adulteries, with falsehood, and cruelty in governing. In his latter days he put away his wife, and, if we mistake not the meaning of Gildas, was guilty of incest with his daughter. In the next place, our author comes to Cuneglasus, supposed by some antiquaries to have reigned in North Wales : him he reproves for raising civil wars, for divorcing his wife, and marrying her cousin, who had vowed perpetual chastity ; he was a great enemy to the clergy, high-minded, and trusting to his riches. Gildas concludes with a sharp reproof of Maglocunus, the greatest, and likewise the most wicked, of all the British princes. He had driven out or slain many other kings or tyrants, and is called by our author ‘ the island dragon.’ He was tall in stature, a great warrior, and profuse in his gifts. While he was yet young, he overthrew his uncle in battle, and drove him from the throne ; then, touched with remorse, he betook himself to a monastic life, which he soon forsook, as he did afterwards his wife, taking the wife of his brother’s son in her room, who, to prevent her marriage being being deemed null or unlawful, found means to dispatch her own husband, and Maglocunus's former wife. This is the substance of Gildas's reproof to the British kings, from which all we can gather is, that there were, at this time, at least five kings in Britain, and all guilty of most enormous crimes; but by what means they came to the crown, what great actions they performed during their reigns, who succeeded each of them in their respective territories, &c. we are not told by any authentic writer. From the kings our author passes to the clergy, whom he sharply reproves as pastors in name, but in reality wolves, intent, And of the clergy. on all occasions, not to feed the flock, but to pamper themselves; not called to the ministry, but seizing it as a trade; teaching the people, not by sound doctrine, but by evil example; haters of truth, broachers of lyes; looking on the poor with an eye of contempt, but fawning on the rich, however wicked; great promoters of other peoples alms, but themselves ever contributing least; seldom officiating at the altar, and scarce ever with pure hearts; slightly touching the reigning vices of the age, but highly aggravating their own injuries, as done to Christ himself; seeking preferments in the church, more than Heaven: ignorant of the doctrines contained in the holy scriptures, but cunning and practised in worldly matters; bearing their heads high, but having their thoughts and affections abject and low. He likewise taxes them as gluttons, drunkards, and, above all, as guilty of the enormous sin of simony; and then addresses the laity thus: What can you expect, unhappy people, from these beasts all belly? Shall they reclaim you, who weary themselves in committing iniquity? Shall you see with their eyes, which are open only to gain? Leave them rather, lest you fall both blindfold into perdition. But are all thus? Perhaps not all, or not so grossly; but what did it avail Eli to be himself blameless, while he connived at the wickedness of his sons? &c. Our author, at the end of his history, gives a further account of the sad state of affairs, and general corruption of manners, in those times; and complains, that the cities and towns were not inhabited as formerly, but lay in a state of ruin and desolation; for foreign wars being ceased, civil wars broke out, which brought all things to a most deplorable condition. Such was the state of the government and religion among the Britons during the peace, which was produced by the victory on Badon-hill, and lasted till the time Gildas wrote, that is, for the space of about forty-four years.

The sixth Saxon kingdom. The East Angles.

NOT long after, that is, about the year 575, began, as is supposed, for the year is not set down in the Saxon annals, or any other history, the kingdom of the East Angles, comprising the countries we now call Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and the isle of Ely. It was founded by Uffa, the eighth from Woden, though there were, it seems, before him, several petty princes, who had settled in Norfolk and Suffolk; but Uffa, more powerful than they, drove them all out, and reigned alone with such reputation, that, from him the succeeding kings were called Uffingæⁱ. William of Malmesbury, disagreeing with all other writers, supposes this kingdom to have begun before that of the West Saxons. And now the Saxons, who had been, ever since the battle on Badon-hill, either inactive, or engaged in civil wars and quarrels among themselves, began afresh to harass the Britons, and, in a few years, drove them out of all the countries they held in that part of the island, which is now known by the name of England; for Cuthwulf, the brother of Ceaulin, king of the West Saxons, having defeated the Britons at Bedanford, now Bedford, the head of the adjacent province, says Henry of Huntington, he took from them four towns, viz. Liganburgh, now Loughborough in Leicestershire, or, as others will have it, Leighton in Bedfordshire; Eglezburg, now Alesbury in Buckinghamshire, with Bennington and Ignesham, now Benson and Evesham in Oxfordshire. Cuthwulf died the same year he obtained this victory. For the space of six years after, we hear of no action, as if Ceanuli had had no commander to place in his brother's room. But, after that time, he renewed the war, and having, with his son Cuthwin, engaged the Britons at a place in Gloucestershire, called Deorham, he slew three of their kings, Comail, Condidan, and Farinmaile, and took three of their chief cities, viz. Glewancester, or Gloucester, Cirencester, and Bathancester, now Bath. Who these kings were, we are no-where told; but some conjecture the first to be Cuniglasus, and the second Aurelius Conanus, both mentioned by Gildas. We read of no other battle between the Saxons and Britons, though, in all likelihood, several skirmishes happened, till seven years after the battle of Deorham, when Ceaulin, and his son Cutha, fought against the Britons at a place called Frethanleag. In this bat-

The Britons overcome in several battles.

tle

ⁱ Hunting. l. ii. Malmesb. l. i.

the Cutha was slain, and the Saxons obliged, according to Henry of Huntington, to retire; but fresh succours seasonably arriving, they returned to the charge, routed the Britons, and took several towns ^k. About this time, that is, about the year 585, according to Henry of Huntington, and Matthew of Westminster, was founded, by Crida, the seventh kingdom in this island, called the kingdom of Mercia. Whence it took that name, is uncertain, some deriving it from the river Merse, which, running between Cheshire and Lancashire, was the north-west boundary of the Mercian kingdom ^l. Others will have it to have been so called from the Saxon word meark, signifying a limit; because most of the other kingdoms bordered upon it ^m. Be that as it will, this kingdom, though the last erected, was one of the largest of the English Saxon kingdoms, and one of the last, that was conquered by the West Saxons. It comprehended seventeen counties, viz. Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, Northamptonshire, Lincolnshire, Huntingdonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Staffordshire, Shropshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire, and part of Hertfordshire. The Britons were now confined within very narrow bounds. However, before they abandoned all on this side the mountains, they once more engaged the Saxons at a place called Woden's Bearth near the ditch in Wiltshire, which, by the neighbouring people, is called Wansdike, and in the Saxon tongue Wodensdic, or the dyke of Woden, and, running through the middle of the country, divides it from east to west. This battle proved very bloody; but who were the generals on either side, we are no-where told. Henry of Huntington only writes, that the Britons having drawn up their army after the Roman manner, the Saxons charged them with their usual boldness. Hereupon a sharp engagement ensued, adds that writer, in which God gave the victory to the Britons; for the Saxons were routed, and almost their whole army cut off ⁿ. In this battle the Britons were assisted, according to William of Malmesbury, by the Angles, jealous of the overgrown power of Ceaulin, king of the West Saxons, whose military genius, and great exploits, had

The seventh Saxon kingdom Mercia.
Year after
Christ 585.

The Britons gain a complete victory over the Saxons.

C 2

had

^k Hunting ibid.
Cornaviis.

^l Lhuyd. fol. 23.

^m Camb. in ⁿ Hunting. ubi supra.

But are, in the end, obliged to retire into Wales, and other parts.

Wales divided into six petty kingdoms.

had struck terror into the Angles, as well as the Britons. But, after the loss of this battle, he was driven out of his dominions, and forced to take refuge in some other kingdom; but whether in this island, or elsewhere, is not recorded in history. From this victory the Britons reaped but little advantage; for being daily more confined, and harassed on one side by the Scots and Picts, and on the other by the Saxons, they were, in the end, obliged to abandon their antient seats, and take shelter among the craggy and mountainous places in the west of the island, whither their cruel enemies could not easily pursue them. There they long continued a warlike nation, defending their liberty, and, though separated from the Saxons by a deep ditch, the work of Uffa king of the Mercians, making frequent inroads into the Saxon, or, as we may now style them, the English territories, where they put all to fire and sword. They had been attended with far better success, had they not been continually quarrelling among themselves; which was chiefly owing to the ambitious and restless humours of the petty princes, or rather tyrants, by whom they were governed. Some of the unhappy Britons took refuge, as we have said just now, in that part of the island, which the Latins called Cambria, and the English, after the German custom, Wales; for the Germans, as the learned antiquary Humphry Lhuyd well observes, calling the strangers that lived near them on one side Gauls or Walls, gave afterwards the same appellation to all strangers; and hence, according to that writer, the Walloons in the Low Countries, and the Wallachians on the Danube, received their denominations. The Britons, upon their retiring into Cambria or Wales, divided that country, as we read in the same author, into six regions, Guynedh, Powys, Dehenbarth, Reynuc, Esyluc or Sylluc, and Morganuc or Morgan. Each of these regions or districts was governed by its own king till the year 843, when Roderic the Great became sole monarch of Cambria or Wales, which, at his death, he divided among his three sons, as we shall relate at length in a more proper place. Some of the Britons were driven into Cornwall; others, according to the learned antiquary, whom we have quoted above, settled in the most southern parts of Scotland, and in the neighbourhood of Carlisle, and continued there till the year 871, when they were driven out by the Scots and English, and forced to take shelter among their countrymen in that part of Cambria or Wales, which by the Latin writers is styled Venedotia, and by us North Wales. The Britons at first possessed all the countries beyond the Dee and the Severn, which two rivers, in antient times, divided Cambria or Wales from England, the towns, which stand on the eastern banks of these two rivers, having been most of them built to restrain the Cambrians or Welsh from breaking into England. But the English, having passed the Severn, by degrees seized on the country lying between that river and the Wye; so that all Herefordshire, and that tract, which was antiently called the Danish-wood, with Gloucestershire, and such parts of Worcestershire and Shropshire, as lye beyond the Severn, are still inhabited by the English; nay, in former times, some parts of Flintshire and Denbighshire were subject to the kings of Mercia; for Uffa, the Uffa's ditch. most powerful king of that country, caused a deep ditch, with a high wall, to be carried on as a barrier between his dominions and the territories of the Cambrians, from the mouth of the Dee, a little above Flint castle, over steep mountains, cross deep valleys, fens and rivers, to the mouth of the Wye. This ditch, called by the Welsh to this day Claudh Uffa, or the ditch of Uffa, is still to be seen in several parts; and all the towns, situated on the east side of it, have names ending in ton, or ham, an evident proof, that they were inhabited by Saxons; nay, the inhabitants of them are by the Welsh still called Guyr y Mers, that is, the men of Mercia. Thus far of the places, into which the distressed Britons were driven within the island. But Gildas tells us, that some of them, committing themselves to the mercy of the waves, sought for shelter beyond the sea; and it is the general opinion, that they fled to their countrymen in Armorica. That some Britons had settled in Armorica, now Bretagne, before this time, is past dispute, though there is a great disagreement among authors as to the precise time of their first settling there. Some of the distressed Britons take shelter in Armorica. The first mention we find of the Britons in Armorica is in the year 461, when Mansuetus, bishop of the Britons, subscribed, among the other prelates of Gaul and Armorica, to the articles established in the first council of Tours^e. It is manifest from Sidonius Apollinaris, that, in 469, they were already settled on the banks of the Loire^p. About the year 470, the Britons in Armorica had a king of their own, named ^e Concil. tom. iv.

C 3

^p Sidon. l. i. ep. 7. p. 16.

About what time they first settled in that country.

They make themselves
masters of it.

ed Riotham, who, at the request of the emperor Anthemius, marched at the head of twelve thousand men against Euric, king of the Visigoths, but was defeated by that prince in the province of Berri^a. Sidonius Apollinarius highly commends the moderation of Riotham; but speaks of his men in such terms, as shew, that they were not at all mended by the calamities they had suffered at home. Sidonius, after he was made bishop, had often occasion to complain of them to their prince^r. An anonymous writer, who was a native of Armorica, and wrote the life of St. Wingalof, not long after the Saxons had made themselves masters of Britain, tells us, that the Britons, embarking on floats, arrived in Armorica, being driven out of their native soil by the Saxons a fierce and barbarous nation. He adds, that the Britons, being worn out with misfortunes and fatigues, continued quiet for a while, without engaging in any wars^s. The Britons are said to have passed over to, and settled in, Armorica at three different times, viz. in the reign of Constantius Chlorus, the father of Constantine the Great, during the usurpation of Maximus, and when the Saxons made themselves masters of the island. No antient historian makes any mention of their settling in that country, either in the reign of Constantius or of Maximus; which gives us room to question the truth of what the moderns have written on that head. All we know for certain is, that the Britons were settled in that part of Gaul, which, from them, was called Britany, before the Saxons and Angles made themselves masters of the whole country now called England. William of Malmesbury writes, that the Britons, who went over with the tyrant Maximus, were, for their faithful services, rewarded with lands in Gaul on the shore of the ocean; but others maintain, that, before the Saxon invasion, no Britons had settled in Gaul; which opinion seems to us by far the most probable, since, by the antient and most credible historians, frequent mention is made of the Britons in Gaul after, and none before, the coming of the Saxons. The Britons, who settled in Armorica, having, by degrees, got the better of the natives, treated them much in the same manner, as their countrymen, whom they had left behind in the island, were treated by the Saxons; for, not to allege other testimonies, Regalis, bishop of Vannes, speaking of the unhappy happy condition of the Armoricans; We live, says he, in captivity under the Britons, and bear a most grievous and heavy yoke. The Armoricans, thus overpowered by the Britons, were blended with them under the common appellation of Britons, their country being called Britannia Armorica, and Britannia Cismarina, in the same manner as the Gauls, in other parts of Gaul, were blended under the common name of Franks, and their country called Francia. The Armorican Britons defended themselves with great bravery against the Franks, first under petty kings, and afterwards under counts and dukes, as we shall relate in a more proper place. But to return to our distressed Britons at home: those who had taken refuge among the mountains beyond the Severn, attempted, from time to time, to recover the countries they had lost; but their efforts proved ineffectual, as did the endeavours of the Anglo-Saxons to extend their conquests beyond the mountains. Such of the Britons as submitted to, and lived among, the Saxons, were treated by them as slaves, and employed in the most servile offices.

^a Jornand. rer. Goth. c. 45. p. 678. Greg. Tur. hist. Fran. l. ii. c. 8. p. 282. ^r Sidon. l. iii. ep. 9. p. 73, 74. ^s Vide Lamb. & Uff. in primord. p. 421.

THUS, omitting such accounts as are generally deemed fabulous, we have related the most remarkable events, that happened in Britain, from the arrival of the Saxons, to the retreat of the Britons into Cambria or Wales. The venerable Bede takes no notice of what was transacted here from the battle on Baden-hill to the conversion of the Saxons in the time of pope Gregory the Great; which does not a little incline us to question the truth of what we read in the writers, who came after him. These had not better records or memoirs than that venerable author, but less discernment, and more credulity; which perhaps may have prompted them to relate, and even believe, such things, as did not appear to that judicious author so well attested, as to deserve a place in his history. With these however we have been forced to take up, for want of better guides, when abandoned by Gildas and Bede; but as we do not ourselves give entire credit to what they relate, we are far from exacting it of our readers. The unfortunate Britons being, in the manner we have related, driven into Cambria, the Saxons, Angles, and Jutes, remained masters of the whole country now called England, where they had already founded seven kingdoms, known by the name of the heptarchy. But of these kingdoms we shall speak at length in a more proper place, the method, which we have proposed to ourselves, obliging

C 4

obliging us to leave them at present, and hasten to the history of other more antient nations.

C H A P. XIV.

The antient state of the several northern nations, to their breaking into the Roman empire, and their several expeditions, and mutual expulsions, till the settling of the Hunns in Hungary, the Vandals, Visigoths and Sueves in Spain, the Vandals in Africa, the Franks in Gaul, the Ostrogoths in Italy.

S E C T. I.

The antient state, &c. of the Hunns, till their settling in Hungary.

The antient seats of the Hunns.

TH E Hunns, a fierce and savage nation, inhabited that part of Asiatic Sarmatia, which bordered on the Palus Mæotis, and the Tanais, the antient boundary between Europe and Asia^a. Their country, as described by Procopius^b, lay north of mount Caucasus, which, extending from the Euxine to the Caspian sea, parts Asiatic Sarmatia from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania, lying on the isthmus between the two above-mentioned seas. In this mountain, or rather ridge of mountains, were two narrow passes leading out of Asiatic Sarmatia into Iberia, one of which was antiently called Porta Caucasica, but in Procopius's time Tzur, and the other Porta Caspia, which however we must distinguish from the

^a Ammian. Marcel. l. xxxi. p. 435. 441. Agath. l. v. p. 154.

^b Procop. bell. Goth. l. iv. c. 5, 4, 5.

the famous Portæ Caspiæ, or the narrow passes in mount Caspius, which, at a great distance to the south of mount Caucasus divided Media from Parthia. The two passes in mount Caucasus let the neighbouring Hunns, says Procopius, into the territories of the Romans and Parthians; whence it is manifest, that, according to Procopius, the antient seats of the Hunns lay north of mount Caucasus, and at a small distance from it. In those seats, called by Procopius the Eulyrian region, dwelt the Hunns, divided into several tribes, but all comprised under the general name of Ugri, changed afterwards into that of Hunni or Unni. In the authors, who wrote after the year of the christian æra 376, when the Hunns first broke into Europe, mention is made of the Uturgurian, Cuturgurian, Onugurian, Vultinzurian, Burugurian, Sabirian or Gabrian, and Nephthalite or Ephthalite Hunns^d. Procopius tells us, that one of their kings had two sons, Uturgur and Cuturgur, who, upon their father's death, divided his territories between them; and that such of the Hunns, as were subject to Uturgur, were called Uturgurian Hunns; and those, who fell to the lot of Cuturgur, Cuturgurian. Of the other denominations no notice is taken by the historians. On the south side of the Palus Mæotis, where it discharges itself into the Euxine sea by a narrow chanel, called the Bosphorus Cimmerius, dwelt the Uturgurian Hunns; and north of them, towards the Tanais, the Cuturgurian^e. The Ephthalite, as Procopius terms them, or Nephthalite Hunns, as they are stiled by Agathias, inhabited a rich country, bordering to the north on Persia, and at a great distance from the Sarmatian or Scythian Hunns, with whom they had no intercourse, nor the least resemblance either in their persons or manners. They were a powerful nation, and often served against the Romans in the Persian armies; but, in the reign of the emperor Zeno, being provoked by Perozes king of Persia laying claim to part of their country, they defeated the Persians in two pitched battles, slew their king, over-ran all Persia, and held it in subjection for the space of two years, obliging Cabades, the son and successor of Perozes, to pay them a yearly tribute. These Hunns, commonly called by the writers of those times the White Hunns, did not wander, like the others, from place to place, but, contented with their own country, which supplied them with all necessities,

Different tribes of Hunns.

The Ephthalite or Nephthalite
Hunns.

^c Idem ibid.

^d Agath. l. ix. p. 154. Procop. ibid. Paul. Warnefrid. miscell. l. xii.

miscel. l. xii. p. 383.

^e Procop. ibid. Paul. Warnefrid.

cessaries, they lived under a regular government, subject to one prince, and seldom made inroads, unless provoked, either into the Persian or Roman territories. They lived according to their own laws, and dealt uprightly with one another, as well as with the neighbouring people. Each of their great men used to chuse twenty or more companions, to enjoy with him his wealth, and partake of all his diversions ; but, upon his decease, they were all buried with him in the same grave^f. This custom favours of barbarity ; but, in every other respect, the Nephthalite were a far more civilized nation, than the Scythian Hunns, who, breaking into the empire, filled most of the provinces of Europe with blood and slaughter. The latter were, according to Ammianus Marcellinus^g, a savage people, exceeding in cruelty the most barbarous nations. They begin to practise their cruelty, says Jornandes, upon their own children the very first day they come into the world, cutting and mangling the cheeks of their males, to prevent the growth of hair, which they must have looked upon, contrary to the sentiments of other nations, as unbecoming and unmanly. They had perhaps in this practice another view, which Jornandes seems to insinuate elsewhere, viz. to strike terror into the enemy with their countenances thus deformed, and covered with scars^h. They had no other food but roots and raw meat, being quite unacquainted with the use of fire, and no houses at all, not even huts, but lived constantly exposed to the air in the woods, and on the mountains, where, from their infancy, they were inured to hunger, thirst, and all manner of hardships ; nay, they had such an aversion to houses, which they called the sepulchres of the living, that, when they went into other countries, they could hardly be prevailed upon to come within the walls of any house, not thinking themselves safe when shut up and covered. They used even to eat and sleep on horseback, scarce ever dismounting ; which, in all likelihood, induced Zosimus to write, that the Hunns could not walkⁱ. They covered their nakedness with goats skins, or the skins of a sort of mice sewed together. Day and night was indifferent to them as to buying, selling, eating, and drinking. They had no law, nor any kind of religion ; but complied with their incli-

The Sarmatian or Scythian Hunns. Their customs and manners.

^f Procop. bell. Pers. l. i.

^g Ammian. l. xxxi. c. 11.

^h Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 24. p. 643.

ⁱ Zos. l. iv. p. 747.

inclinations, whatever they prompted them to, without the least restraint, or distinction between good and evil^k. St. Ambrose writes, that they were greatly addicted to gaming; which occasioned frequent murders among them^l. But this vice, as well as that of lewdness, with which he charges them, seems quite foreign to the manners of a warlike nation, inured to all sorts of hardships. In war they began the battle with great fury, and a hideous noise; but, if they met with a vigorous opposition, their fury began to abate after the first onset, and, when once put in disorder, they never rallied, but fled in the utmost confusion. They were quite unacquainted with the art of besieging towns; and authors observe, that they never attacked the enemy's camp. They were a faithless nation, and thought themselves no longer bound by the most solemn treaties, than they found their advantage in observing them. Hence we often find them, upon the least prospect of obtaining more advantageous conditions, breaking into the Roman empire, in defiance of the most solemn oaths and engagements. Several corps of Hunns, after their coming into Europe, served in the Roman armies against the Goths, and other barbarous nations; nay, they were ready, for hire, to fight against one another, being blind to every other regard and consideration^m. Of this the emperor Justinian was apprised, and, by promising a large sum to the Uturgurian Hunns, prevailed upon them to fall upon the Cuturgurians, and drive them quite out of the empireⁿ. The form of government that prevailed among them, was not, according to Ammianus Marcellinus, properly speaking, monarchical; for that author, speaking of the Scythian Hunns, tells us, that they had never learnt to submit to the authority of a king, but that they were headed and conducted by some of their chief men^o. These, by some historians, are honoured with the title of kings, but by others styled only generals or leaders. Jornandes calls them constantly kings; and truly in war they seem to have been invested with the supreme command. The same author of government.

Their form

Their kings or chiefs.

^k Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 435—437—615—618. Zos. l. iv. p. 747. Isidor. car. ii. p. 297. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 24. p. 643, 644. Salvian. l. iv. p. 89.

^l Ambros. de Tob. c. 1, 2. tom. ii. p. 590.

^m Ammian. ibid. p. 439, 440. Prisc. de legat. p. 65.

ⁿ Procop. bell. Goth. l. iv. c. 18, 19. Agath. l. v. p. 155.

^o Ammian. ibid. p. 436.

thor writes ^p, that Balamir, whom elsewhere he calls Balamber ^q, was king of the Hunns, when they first passed the Palus Mæotis, and subdued the Goths, that is, about the year 376. The name of Uldin, king or general of the Hunns, is famous in the history of the reign of Arcadius ^r. Olympiodorus mentions one Caraton, whom he calls the first king of the Hunns ^s. Several of the ancestors of the famous Attila, had, according to Priscus the rhetorician ^t, been honoured with the command of the Hunns. Mundiuchus, or, as others call him, Mundzuchus, father to that prince, maintained, to use the expression of Jornandes, the antient splendor of his family ^u. He had three brothers, Oëtar, Roas, who were both kings or leaders of the Hunns, but not of the whole nation, and Oebarfus, who outlived the other two, but served under Attila ^w. Oëtar and Uptar, who made war upon the Burgundians in 436, as we shall relate anon, seem to have been one and the same person; but we must not confound, as some have done, Roas, whom Priscus calls Roua ^x, and Tiro Prosper, Rugula ^y, with Rougas, general of the Hunns, who was killed with a flash of lightning in 426, while he was making war upon Theodosius II ^z. Roas was the immediate predecessor of Attila. As Their origin. to the origin of the Hunns, Procopius seems to insinuate, that they were descended from the Albanians, and that they removed from Albania, lying on the Caspian sea, into Asiatic Sarmatia, where they settled. Jornandes, an irreconcilable enemy to the Hunns, who had driven his countrymen the Goths from their antient habitations, gives us the following account of their original, an account, entirely owing to the hatred he bore them. Filimer, the son of Gandaric the Great, and the fifth king of the Goths after their going out of the peninsula Scanzia or Scandinavia, having entered the Scythian territories, discovered among his people a great number of witches, called in the language of his country aliorumnæ. These he drove into the wilderness far from his army, where the unclean spirits, who haunted haunted those wild and solitary places, being taken with their charms, kept them company, and from their conversation sprung the nation of the Hunns^a. We are almost ashamed to allow a place in our history to such a ridiculous fable, though very gravely related by Jornandes^b, and with no less gravity confuted by a modern writer^c. As for the Their names. name of Hunns, some authors will have them to have been so called from one of their leaders named Hunnor; but of this Hunnor no mention is made by any antient writer. They are frequently styled Ugri by Procopius, and other writers; and the word Ugre, in the Slavonic language, signifies aquatic, that is, living in or near the water, a name well adapted to a nation living in wet or marshy places, and such were the antient seats of the Hunns bordering on the Palus Mæotis and the Tanais^d. Ptolemy, in his Sarmatia Europæa, mentions a people, whom he calls Chuni, dwelling in his time on the banks of the Borysthenes. These the Hunns subdued, and settled in their country; whence, from their name Chuni, some derive that of Hunni. But, to dwell no longer on conjectures, we shall now give a succinct account of the several migrations and expeditions of the Hunns, from their first coming into Europe, to their settling in Pannonia, called afterwards from them Hungary, following therein Ammianus Marcellinus, the most antient author that speaks of them, at least among such as have reached our times, and other credible writers, who lived in or near those times.

^p Jornand. rer. Goth. c. 24. p. 64. ^q Idem ibid. c. 48. p. 681. ^r Vide univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 161—173. ^s Vales. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 154. Phot. c. 80. ^t Prisc. de legat p. 48. ^u Jorn. ibid. c. 3. p. 66. ^w Idem ibid. Prisc. p. 69. ^x Idem, p. 47. ^y Vide Socrat. l. vii. c. 43. p. 387. & Bucher. hist. Belgic. p. 588. ^z Prisc. p. 47.

THE Hunns, as we have observed above, dwelt on They pass the east side of the Palus Mæotis. the east side of the Palus Mæotis, now the sea of Zabache, quite unacquainted with the people and countries Year of lying on the opposite side, till a hind, pursued by some Christ 376. hunters, or, as we read in other authors, an ox stung by a gad-fly, having passed the marsh, some Hunns followed their guide to the opposite side, where they discovered a country far more agreeable than their own. Hereupon, returning to their own country, they acquainted their countrymen with what they had seen, and at the same time informed them, that what they had till then looked upon as a deep sea, was only a marsh, and might be passed without the least danger^e. Encouraged with this

^a Jorn. ibid. c. 24. p. 643. ^b Idem ibid. ^c P. Callimach. edit. cum Bonfinio, p. 854. ^d Vide Ludewig. in vit. Justinian. & Theodoræ, p. 529. not. 704. ^e Jorn. ibid. c. 24. p. 644.

And subdue
the Alans.

They fall upon the Ostrogoths.

And drive them out of their country.

Defeat the Visigoths, and oblige them to abandon their country.

this account, and desiring to settle in a more kind soil, they passed the marsh ; and entering the country of the Alans, who dwelt on the banks of the Tanais, and were thence called Tanaites, they laid it waste far and near, made a dreadful havock of the inhabitants, and obliged such of them as were left alive, and able to bear arms, to join them. Thus reinforced, they fell upon the Goths, by Ammianus called Greuthongi, and by Jornandes, Ostrogoths, and spread every where such terror among them, that Ermenric their king, though a warlike prince, and conqueror of many nations, laid violent hands on himself, to avoid seeing the calamities, that threatened his people, and to him seemed unavoidable ^f. Jornandes tells us, that Ermenric, whom he calls Ermanaric, having punished with death a woman named Saniolk, of the nation of the Roxolani, for the murder of her husband, her two brother,, Sarus and Ammius, conspiring against him, gave him a dangerous wound in the side, which, with the concern he was under in seeing his country over-run by the Hunns, occasioned his death, in the hundred and tenth year of his age ^g. He was succeeded by Vithimir, who, having hired a body of Hunns, with them and his own troops, made, for some time, a vigorous resistance ; but was in the end, after many losses, slain in battle. He left behind him a son named Vitheric or Videric, whom, as he was under age, he committed to the care of Alatheus and Saphrax ; but these, though men of known valour and experience in war, foreseeing all their efforts would prove unsuccessful against the numerous and formidable forces of the enemy, thought it adviseable to abandon the country they then held, and retire, with all their people, to the plains between the Borysthenes and the Danube ; which country is now known by the name of Podolia. Athanaric, king or chief of the Thervingi or Visigoths, being informed of what had happened to the Ostrogoths, resolved to stand upon his guard, and prepared for a vigorous defence on the banks of the Danaestus, now the Nieper, which parted the Greuthingi from the Thervingi. But the Hunns falling upon him before he had the least notice of their approach, he was put to flight after having lost great numbers of his men, and obliged to take shelter among the neighbouring mountains. As ^f Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 439, 440.

Goth. p. 645.

^g Jorn. rer.

As the enemy, overloaded with booty, pursued him but slowly, he built a wall with incredible expedition for his own defence, extending from the Gerasus or the Pruth to the Danube, in the country now known by the name of Moldavia ^h. All the Gothic nations being alarmed at this sudden and unexpected irruption of the Hunns, such of them as had the good luck to escape the dreadful havock, which those barbarians made of their people, resolved to abandon their country to an enemy, they were no longer able to withstand, and to save themselves within the Roman dominions, separated by the Danube from the countries over-run by the Hunns. Accordingly, they retired from their antient seats, and, approaching the banks of the Danube, dispatched embassadors to the emperor Valens, begging in a most submissive manner, to be admitted into Thrace. The Romans were struck with terror and amazement, in hearing, that such multitudes of barbarians were hovering about the banks of the Danube, driven out of their seats by greater barbarians than themselves. Valens however, complied with their request, allowing them to pass the Danube, and enter Thrace in such numbers, that Ammianus compares them to sparks, which, at that very time, issued out of mount Æt- na, and to the sands of the Libyan shore ⁱ. Those were, for the most part, Thervingi or Visigoths, the subjects of king Athanaric. As for the Greuthongi or Ostrogoths, they being likewise driven out of their country by the Hunns, flocked in swarms to the banks of the Danube, and, encouraged by the reception their countrymen had met with from Valens, begged to be admitted within the Roman dominions ; but the emperor not thinking it advisable to comply with their request, after they had continued some time on the banks of the Danube, they passed it in spite of the Romans. Athanaric, king of the Thervingi, not thinking it safe to take refuge in the territories of the Romans, on account of his having assisted the usurper Procopius, retired, with part of his people, to a place defended by inaccessible rocks, named Caucalanda, having driven from thence the Sarmatians and the Taifali, whose country lay west of the Gerasus or the Pruth ^k. Thus the Hunns, in this year 376, not only settled in Europe, but made themselves masters of that vast country, which extends
The Goths are admitted into Thrace.
The Hunns masters of the whole country between the Tanais and the Danube.

^h Ammian. p. 440, 441.
 bid. Jorn. c. 25. p. 646.

ⁱ Idem, ibid.

^k Idem

tends from the Tanais to the Danube, and was, before their arrival, possessed by the Alans, the Goths, and several other barbarous nations, whom they either drove out, or forced to submit to their victorious arms.

OF the Hunns, who settled in Europe, we find no further mention made in history till the year 388, when great numbers of them are said to have lifted themselves in the Roman armies, Theodosius I. who was then emperor, encouraging them with large sums to serve under his banner, both on account of their warlike temper, and to divert them from raising disturbances on the frontiers of the empire ^l. But the Nephthalite Hunns, who had continued in

The Nephthalite Hunns over-ran Mesopotamia.

Asia, and were neighbours to the Persians, as we have observed above, breaking into the Roman dominions, over-ran Mesopotamia in 383, and even laid siege to Edessa; but were repulsed by the Roman garrison, and obliged by a body of troops, consisting chiefly of Goths, sent to the relief of the place, to abandon the enterprize, and retire ^m.

The Scythian Hunns invade Thrace, but are defeated by Stilicho. Year of Christ, 391.

The European Hunns first passed the Danube in 391, and being joined by the Goths, and other barbarians, committed dreadful ravages in Moesia and Thrace. But Stilicho marching against them, gave them a total overthrow, and pursuing them close, shut them up in a narrow valley, where they must have perished with hunger, or surrendered at discretion, had not Theodosius chosen to conclude a peace with them, following therein, says the poet Claudian, the pernicious counsel of the traitor Rufinus ⁿ.

They ravage the eastern provinces. Year of Christ, 395.

About four years after, that is, in 395, the Hunns, breaking unexpectedly into the eastern provinces, penetrated as far as Antioch, destroying all with fire and sword, and committing every where unheard-of cruelties ^o. St. Jerom, speaking of this irruption of the Hunns, All the east, says he, trembled, when the dismal news was brought, that swarms of Hunns coming from the far-distant Mæotis, and dwelling between the frozen Tanais and the country of the savage Massagetes, flew up and down, and filled all places with blood and slaughter. While the Roman armies, continues that writer, were employed in civil wars,

^l Ambros. ep. xvii. p. 214. Pacat. panegy. ad Theodos. p. 270. ^m Socrat. l. v. c. 11. p. 270. sur 15 Novemb. p. 342.

ⁿ Claud. de laud. Stil. l. i. p. 125, 126.

^o Socrat. l. vi. c. 1. p. 300. Soz. l. viii. c. 1. p. 753. Chrys. psal. xcv. p. 897.

wars, that is, against the usurper Eugenius, the cruel enemy roved, without controul, where they pleased, preventing, by their speed, the report of their coming. They had no regard either to religion or dignity ; no age they spared, nor were they softened by the tears of the crying infant ; but put those to death, who had scarce begun to live, and who, not apprised of their danger, smiled, when in the enemy's hands, at those very weapons, that were immediately to destroy them. He adds, that the general terror and consternation spread as far as Palestine, upon a report, that they proposed to advance to Jerusalem, and plunder the holy city ^p. The same author speaks of this irruption of the Hunns in several other places ^q (A), and likewise

^p Hier. epitaph. Fabiol. ^q Idem, epist. iii. xxx. &c. p. 26, 200, &c. & in vit S. Chrysoft.

(A) Socrates, Sozomen, Zosimus, and the poet Claudian, agree in this, that the Hunns invaded the eastern provinces at the instigation of Rufinus. On the other hand, it is manifest from the same authors, as well as from the code, and the Alexandrian chronicle, that Rufinus was put to death in the month of November 395. In the code are several laws enacted the following year, and addressed to Cæsarius, who succeeded Rufinus in the office of præfectus prætorio. Socrates writes, that Rufinus was put to death on the twenty-seventh of November 395 (1) ; which is confirmed both by the Alexandrian chronicle, placing his death after the last offices paid to the body of Theodosius on the ninth of the same month (2), and by the code, where the laws were addressed to Rufinus till the eleventh of October, and from the thirtieth of November, to his successor Cæsarius (3). However, St. Jerom, in his third epistle (4), which we cannot suppose to have been written before the year 397 says, that this irruption had happened the year before, Ecce tibi anno præterito, &c. But St. Jerom was either mistaken, or speaks in that epistle only of the ravages and devastations, which began in 395, but were continued, as appears from Claudian (5), in 396.

(1) Socrat. l. vi. c. 1. p. 300. (2) Chron. Alex. p. 710.
 (3) Cod. Theodos. 2. tit. 9. l. viii. p. 133.
 10. tit. 6. l. i. p. 410. 16. tit. 5. l. xxvii. p. 144. (4) Hier. epist. iii. p. 26.
 (5) Claud. in Eutrop. l. i. p. 99.

likewise St. Chrysoſtom ^r, Philoſtorgius ^s, Socrates ^t, and Sozomen ^u. St. Chryſtoſtom tells us in one of his homilies ^w, that ſeveral chriſtians, on that occaſion, ſuffered martyrdom ; and that others were brought to Antioch, to be ſold there or ranſomed. Philoſtorgius places this irruption of the Hunns after the death of Rufinus, and even after that of the eunuch Eutropius, who ſucceeded him in his power and employments. But he was therein certainly miſtaken, ſince not only Claudian ^x, but Socrates ^y, Sozomen ^z, and Zoſimus ^a, tell us in expreſs terms, that Rufinus privately ſtirred up by his emiſſaries, the Hunns to break into the empire, and likewise the Goths, under the conduct of the famous Alaric. What he aimed at in thus encouraging the barbarians to invade the empire, we have related elſewhere ^b, from the authors we have juſt now quoted. The Hunns, having over-run and plundered ſeveral provinces, returned home of their own accord, loaded with booty, and carrying with them an incredible number of captives. They met with no oppoſition, the armies, that had been ſent into the weſt, to ſuppreſs the uſurper Eugenius, not being yet returned ; and this is what St. Jerom meant, or ought to have meant, in ſaying, that the Hunns broke into the empire, while the Roman armies were engaged in a civil war, the diſturbances raiſed in the weſt by Eugenius, being happily appeaſed, and the author of them diſpatched, before the irruption of thoſe barbarians.

They break
into Thrace.
Year of Chriſt 404.

AFTER this irruption, the Hunns ſeem to have continued quiet for the ſpace of nine years, that is, till the year 404, when paſſing in great multitudes the Danube, they entered Thrace ; and having over-run that province, they penetrated into Eaſt-Illyricum, committing every-where dreadful ravages, and deſtroying with fire and ſword what they could not carry with them ^c. A modern writer quotes a letter written this year by Honorius, emperor of the weſt, to his brother Arcadius, who reigned in the eaſt, to expreſs his concern for the ravages committed by the Hunns in Thrace, and for the ruin and loſs of Illyricum. Theſe calamities Ho-

norius

^r Chryſ. ubi ſupra.

^s Philoſtorg. l. xi. c. 8. p. 154.

^t Socrat. ubi ſup.

^u Soz. ibid.

^w Chryſ. in pſal.

xcv. p. 893.

^x Claud. in Ruf. l. ii. p. 20.

^y Socrat. l. vi. c. 1. p. 300.

^z Soz. l. viii. c. 1. p. 753.

^a Zof. l. v. p. 782.

^b Vide univerſ. hiſt. vol. xvi. p. 121.

^c Soz. l. viii. c. 25. p. 793. Philoſtorg. l. xi. c. 8. p. 530.

norius ascribes to the wrath of Heaven, justly provoked at the iniquitous proceedings of the court against the holy bishop Chrysoſtom ^d. By the loss of Illyricum is only meant in the above-mentioned letter the ruin of that province; for the Hunns, upon advice, that the imperial troops were assembling with a design to cut off their retreat, repassed the Danube with all the haste the immense booty they carried with them allowed ^e. The following year 405, we find great numbers of Hunns serving in Stilicho's army against Radagaisus, who had invaded Italy, as we have related at length elsewhere ^f. These Hunns were led by Uldin, one of their chiefs or kings, and to him was chiefly owing the signal victory gained by Stilicho in Hetruria; for having, with his Hunns, surrounded one of the three bodies, into which Radagaisus had divided his army, he cut them all in pieces, to the number of an hundred thousand men ^g. Orosius ascribes this victory not to the Hunns, but to a panic, which spreading all on a sudden throughout the camp, obliged Radagaisus to withdraw from before Florence, which he had invested, to the neighbouring mountains of Fiesoli, where most of his men perished with famine, and the rest submitted to the Romans. Thus the victory, says the same writer, was owing to the Lord of hosts, and not to his enemies the Hunns ^h. But to them it is ascribed by St. Austin, Zosimus, and Prosper, whose authority is of far greater weight with us, than that of Orosius. Uldin was well known to the Romans before this time, from the vigorous opposition he had made in the year 400, against the famous Gainas, commander of the Goths in the Roman service, of whom we have spoken at length in our Roman history ⁱ. Gainas was commander in chief, not only of his countrymen the Goths, but of all the troops of Arcadius. However, turning his arms against the prince who had thus raised him, he formed a design of surprising and plundering the city of Constantinople; but, failing in that attempt, he ravaged all Thrace in an hostile manner. Hereupon Fravitus, another Goth in the Roman service, and greatly attached to the Roman interest, falling upon him, cut great numbers of his men in pieces. With the rest Gainas marched through Thrace to

The Hunns distinguish themselves in the Roman service.

Uldin king of the Hunns.

D 2

the

^d Vide Baron. annal. ad ann. 404. ^e Soz. Philostorg. ibid. ^f Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 160, 161. ^g Zos. p. 803. ^h Oros. p. 222. ⁱ Prosper. chron. Aug. civ. p. 63. ^j Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 101—149.

the banks of the Danube, which he passed, being desirous to end his days in the antient country of the Goths. But Uldin, king of the Hunns, who had driven out the Goths, and had been now in the quiet possession of those countries for the space of twenty-four years, alarmed at the arrival of so renowned a commander, with an army of his own nation, met him on the frontiers, and, after several conflicts, defeated and killed him in a pitched battle ^k. His body being found on the field of battle, Uldin caused his head to be cut off, and sent it to Arcadius ^l, who received it at Constantinople on the third of January of the ensuing year 401 ^m.

Defeats and kills Gainas the Goth.

Uldin ravages Thrace. Year of Christ 408.

No prince had hitherto deserved better of the empire than Uldin. But two years after the signal victory obtained chiefly by his means over Radagaisus, he became, on what provocation we know not, an irreconcilable enemy to the Romans; and passing the Danube, entered Thrace at the head of a numerous army, consisting of Hunns and Squiri, or Scyri, a northern nation, subject, in all likelihood, to the Hunns. As this irruption happened during the minority of Theodosius II. Anthemius, who had taken upon him the administration, did all that lay in his power to appease Uldin; but he confiding too much in his own strength, and insisting upon conditions, that could not be honourably granted, Anthemius ordered a body of Roman troops to march against him, at whose approach several of his officers, offended at his haughty and imperious behaviour, laid hold of that opportunity to abandon him, and side with the Romans. This alarmed Uldin, who thereupon retired with great precipitation, and repassed the Danube, after having lost, on his hasty march, many of his men. As for the Squiri, the emperor's troops coming up with them before they reached the Danube, they were all to a man either killed or taken. The prisoners were sold, and dispersed all over Asia, to prevent their ever returning to their own country ⁿ. By this overthrow, and one they had received in 381, from Theodosius the Great, grandfather to the reigning emperor Theodosius the younger, that nation, once very numerous, was almost utterly extirpated ^o. From this time the Hunns seem to have continued quiet till the year 425, when the emperor Honorius ibid. Zof. l. v. p. 798, 799.

But is forced to retire.

^k Socrat. p. 309. Chron. Alex. p. 712.

Socrat. Chron. Alex. ibid.

807.

^o Idem ibid. Soz. l. iv. p. 759. Zof. l. iv. p. 759.

^l Socrat.

^m Pasc. p. 307. So-

ⁿ Socrat. l. ix. c. 6. p. 806,

Honorius dying, and John his chief secretary assuming the purple, they were prevailed upon by the celebrated Aetius, who had sided with the usurper, to espouse his cause. As Aetius had been formerly given to them, on what occasion we know not, as an hostage, and was, by that means, become acquainted with their chiefs, the usurper sent him, as the most proper person, with large sums, to engage them in this cause. Accordingly, a few months after his departure, he returned at the head of sixty thousand Hunns. Upon his entering Italy, he was met by Aspar, one of the generals of Theodosius, who, upon the death of his uncle Honorius, had caused himself to be proclaimed emperor of the west. Hereupon a bloody battle ensued, without any considerable advantage on either side. But in the mean time Aetius, being informed of the death of the usurper, who had been taken and beheaded in Ravenna three days before the battle, submitted to Theodosius, and persuaded the Hunns, not without distributing considerable sums among them, to return home ^{p.} However, Thrace was this very year pillaged and laid waste by some of that nation, whom Theodoret styles Scythian Nomades, that is, Scythian wanderers. They were led by one Rougas or Roilas, who, in a boasting manner, threatened to over-run the whole empire, and to lay siege to Constantinople itself, which, he bragged, he would take at the first assault, and, having plundered it, lay it in ashes ^{q.} But Theodosius, not in the least frightened at the menaces of the barbarian, committed the event, according to his custom, says Socrates, to Providence, and soon obtained what he desired; for Rougas was killed with lightning, a plague broke out in his army, and swept off the greatest part of his men, and fire from heaven consumed most of those whom the plague had spared. This complication of misfortunes, as we may call it, struck the barbarians with such terror, that they retired of their own accord, dreading, not the arms of the Romans, says Socrates, but the power of Heaven, which had evidently espoused the cause of Theodosius ^{r.} Socrates adds, that St. Proculus, who preached then at Constantinople, and was afterwards raised to the see of that city, made a sermon to the people on the dispersion of the Hunns,

The Hunns, to the number of 60,000, march to the assistance of the usurper John.

They return home.

Rougas ravages Thrace.

He is killed with lightning, and his army dispersed. Year of Christ 423.

D 3

Hunns,

^p Philostorg. l. xii. c. 14. p. 538. Prosp. chron. Cassiodor. chron. ^q Socrat. l. vii. c. 43. p. 387. Theodoret. l. v. c. 36. p. 749. ^r Socrat. ibid.

Hunns, applying to them what we read in the prophet Ezekiel concerning Gog and Magog^s (B).

The Hunns settle in Pan-nonia.

SIX years after this irruption, that is, in 432, we find the Hunns in possession of Pannonia; for Aetius, being that year disgraced by Valentinian III. or rather by his mother Placidia, who governed during the minority of her son, is said to have retired to the court of Roas, king of the Hunns in Pannonia^t. Priscus tells us, that they settled in Pannonia in virtue of a treaty concluded with Aetius; but when, or upon what occasion, this treaty was made, we are no-where informed. They were not in possession of that country in 427, for in that year Theodosius is said to have transplanted the Goths from Pannonia, which they had held ever since the year 377, when they first entered it, into Thrace, and to have reunited that province to the empire^u. On the other hand, they were masters of Pannonia, or at least held part of that province, in 432, for in that year Aetius, as we have hinted above, not thinking himself safe in the Roman dominions, is said to have taken refuge among the Hunns in Pannonia. In 437, Valentinian III. yielded, as we read in Cassiodorus^x, East Illyricum, which comprised Pannonia, to Theodosius.

^s Idem ibid. ^t Prosp. chron. Prisc. p. 37. ^u Theoph. p. 81. Marcellin. chron. ^w Prosp. Prisc. ubi supra.
^x Cassiod. l. xi. epist. i. p. 17.

(B) Valesius is of opinion, that Rougas, leader of the Hunns in this irruption, and Rouas, the immediate predecessor of Attila, and his uncle, according to Jornandes (6), on the father's side, are one and the same person (7). But this opinion is no-ways agreeable to what we read in Socrates, Theodoret, and Priscus the rhetorician; for the two former writers tell us, that Rougas lost his life in this incursion, in the manner we have related (8). On the other hand, it is manifest from Priscus (9), that there was no war between the Romans and Hunns, when Rouas died. Besides, it is certain, that Rouas did not die in 425, the year in which the Hunns, under the conduct of Rougas, broke into Thrace; for Priscus tells us (10), that Plintha and Dionysius, who were sent with the character of ambassadors to Rouas, had been consuls; and Dionysius was not consul till the year 429.

(6) Jornand. rer. Goth. c. 35. (7) Val. rer. Fran. l. iv. p. 154. (8) Socrat. Theodoret ubi supra. (9) Prisc. p. 47, 48. (10) Idem ibid.

dofius II. which must be understood of the towns and fortified places, for these the Romans seem to have kept ; and hence it is, that we find Attila, several years after the Hunns had been in possession of Pannonia, obliged to lay siege to Sirmium, the metropolis of that province y. As the Hunns were chiefly indebted to Aetius for the lands they held in Pannonia, soas their king not only received that able commander with the greatest demonstrations of kindness and friendship upon his being disgraced at the court of Placidia, and obliged to quit the Roman territories, but sent him back at the head of a powerful army of Hunns ; which so terrified Placidia, that she restored Aetius to all his employments, and raised him to the rank of a patrician z. In the year 435, a strong body of Hunns, ^{They join Aetius against the} marching through Germany into Gaul, joined Aetius ^{Burgundians.} against the Burgundians, who, having been allowed, in 413, to settle in that part of Gaul, which bordered on the Rhine, had revolted from the Romans, and ravaged Belgic Gaul. Aetius, having gained a complete victory over them, obliged Gondicarius their king to sue for peace, which he granted, but neither Gondicarius nor his people long enjoyed ; for, in the beginning of the following year, he was cut off, with twenty thousand of his men, by the Hunns a, at the instigation of Aetius, provoked, as some ^{Of whom} authors write b, at their revolting anew ; while others ^{they cut off} charge Aetius on this occasion with breach of faith, and the ^{20,000.} blackest treachery. Socrates writes, that the unhappy Burgundians, harassed with continual inroads by the Hunns, and no longer in a condition to make head against so powerful an enemy, only three thousand of them being left alive, had recourse to Heaven ; and repairing to a city in Gaul, there declared their desire of embracing the christian religion. The bishop of the place enjoined them a seven days fast, during which time he instructed them in the mysteries of our holy religion, and, having afterwards administered to them the sacrament of baptism, he sent them home full of courage and confidence. In this condition they marched against the Hunns ; and finding them destitute of a leader, Uptar their king dying the night before, and gored

D 4

y Prosp. p. 57.
Franc. l. v. p. 140.
Prosp. chron.
l. iii. p. 136, 131.

z Prosp. chron. Idat. p. 20. Val. rer.
a Idat. p. 21. Sidon. car. vii. p. 338.
b Buch. Belg. p. 486.

c Val. rer. Franc.

Ten thousand Hunns cut off by the Burgundians.

The Hunns oblige the Goths to raise the siege of Narbonne.

But are in the end defeated by the Goths.

ged with immoderate eating and drinking, they fell upon them, cut ten thousand of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to save themselves by a precipitous flight. Thenceforth the Burgundians, adds Socrates, continued stedfast in the christian religion ^d. Notwithstanding this overthrow, the Hunns, either this year 436, or the following, as Idatius will have it ^e, marched with a considerable body to the assistance of the Romans against the Goths, who had been allowed to settle in Aquitain, but, not satisfied with the countries allotted them, had made themselves masters of several neighbouring cities belonging to the Romans, and even laid siege to Narbonne. Against them the Romans called the Hunns to their assistance; who, being led by count Litorius, fell upon the Goths, busied in the siege, put them to flight, and entered the city, each horseman carrying with him two bushels of corn; which proved a very seasonable supply, the inhabitants being reduced to the utmost extremity ^f. Idatius ascribes the raising of the siege to Aetius ^g, probably because Litorius acted by his orders, he being commander in chief of all the armies of the western empire. The Hunns, who thus signalized themselves against the Goths, had, the year before, been employed by the Romans against the rebellious Armorici, whom they reduced. From Armorica they marched against the Goths of Aquitain; but, on their march, they plundered the province of Auvergne, though belonging to the Romans, whom they served as auxiliaries ^h. Litorius, after having gained great advantages over the Goths, laid siege to Toulouse, their capital; but was in the end overcome in a pitched battle by Theodoric their king, and taken prisoner, most of his Hunns being cut to pieces, as we have related at length elsewhere. It was probably during this war between the Romans and Goths in Gaul, which lasted four years, that Genseric, king of the Hunns, besieged the city of Bazas belonging to the Goths; but was obliged, by a miraculous apparition, to drop the enterprize, and retire, as the reader will find related at length by Gregory of Tours ^k. About this time two chiefs of the Hunns, Basic and Curfic, having numerous

^d Socrat. l. vii. c. 30. p. 371, 372.

^e Idat. p. 21.

^f Prosp. chron. Val. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 140.

^g Idat. ibid.

^h Sidon. car. vii. p. 331, 338.

ⁱ Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p.

224.

^k Greg. Tour. de glor. martyr. l. i. c. 13. p. 31—

34. Val. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 140.

rous bodies of their nation under their command, which they had, for some time, employed against the Persians, came to Rome, and entered into the service of Valentinian III. emperor of the west ¹.

ROUGAS, king of the Hunns, of whom we have spoken above, had been succeeded, in 425, by Rouas or Roas, who concluded a peace with Theodosius II. whereof one of Theodosius the conditions was, that the emperor should pay him a ^{II. pays a} yearly pension of three hundred and fifty pounds weight ^{yearly pen- sion to the} of gold ^m. But Rouas, resolving a few years after the Hunns. conclusion of this peace, to subdue the Boischi, and other nations dwelling on the banks of the Danube, whom Theodosius had taken under his protection, dispatched one Elias to the court of Constantinople, threatening to make war upon Theodosius, if he lent them the least assistance. Hereupon Plintha and Dionysius, two generals of no small renown, were appointed to treat with the king of the Hunns, and divert him, if possible, from the resolution he had taken ⁿ. In the mean time Rouas died, and was succeeded Bleda and by his two nephews Bleda and Attila ^o. Bleda alone is ^{Attila suc- ceed Rouas.} named by Tyro Prosper ^p, and the first by count Marcellinus ^q; whence authors conclude, that he was the elder brother. Jornandes thinks, that to his share fell the provinces bordering on the western empire, and to Attila's the more eastern ^r. But we cannot help thinking Jornandes therein mistaken, since not to Bleda, but to Attila, the princess Honoria applied, as we shall relate anon, stirring him up to make war upon her brother Valentinian emperor of the west. News of the death of Rouas reaching Constantinople before the departure of the ambassadors, they were ordered to treat with the two princes his successors, and impowered to conclude with them a lasting peace; but in the room of Dionysius was sent the quæstor Epigenes, a man of great experience in negotiations. This change was made at the request of Plintha, who could not agree with Dionysius ^s. The ambassadors had an interview with the two princes in the neighbourhood of Margum, a city on the Danube in Upper Mœsia, at a place the Margus falls into that river, and, according to Sanfon, stands the present

¹ Prisc. legat. p. 64.

^m Prisc. p. 45.

ⁿ Idem, p. 47.

^o Idem ibid.

^p Prosp. chron.

^q Marcell. chron.

ad ann. 442.

^r Jorn. c. 43. p. 661.

^s Prisc. legat.

p. 47.

Theodosius concludes with them a shameful treaty. Year of Christ 441.

sent city of Galombea in Servia. The ambassadors were obliged to confer with them on horseback, the Hunns refusing to dismount ^t. The peace formerly concluded with Rouas was confirmed, but upon such conditions as evidently betrayed the deplorable situation of the empire, and an unaccountable pusillanimity in the Romans; for they agreed to deliver up to Attila and Bleda such Hunns as had taken, or should take for the future, refuge in the Roman dominions, and likewise to send back all the Roman captives, who had made their escape, or to pay eight pieces of gold for each of them. It was likewise stipulated, that instead of three hundred and fifty pounds weight of gold, the Romans should pay annually seven hundred; and that they should not lend the least assistance to any barbarous nation, when attacked by, or at war with, the Hunns ^u. In compliance with this shameful treaty, some princes of the royal blood of the Hunns, who had taken refuge among the Romans, were delivered up to Attila and Bleda, who caused them immediately to be crucified in a castle called Carfus, on the Danube, in Thrace ^w. Hence it is plain, that the Hunns had at this time some footing in Thrace. Attila

They subdue many northern nations.

Among the rest the Acatziri.

and Bleda, being, in virtue of this treaty, at liberty to make what conquests they pleased, reduced several northern countries; insomuch that their authority was acknowledged by all the barbarous nations from the Danube to the most distant coasts of the Euxine sea ^x. Among the rest he subdued the Acatziri, who dwelt on the north coast of the Euxine sea, and were divided into several nations, each of them having a king of their own. But the most antient among those princes had, it seems, some pre-eminence above the rest; for Priscus, who lived in those times, tells us, that the jealousy, which Couridachus, the eldest of the kings, conceived of the rest, gave Attila an opportunity of subduing them all. Theodosius II. in order to unite them, and induce them to renounce the friendship of Attila, and enter into an alliance with the empire, sent rich presents to each of them; but the person, whom the emperor employed on this occasion, not applying in the first place to Couridachus, that prince, thinking himself thereby highly injured, acquainted Attila with what had passed, inviting him at the same time to come and revenge the ^t Idem ibid. p. 48.

^u Idem ibid.

^w Idem ibid.

^x Idem ibid. p. 84. Jorn. rer. Goth, c. 35. p. 661.

the affront, that had been offered him. Attila laid hold of the opportunity ; and having, without loss of time, sent a powerful army against the Acatziri, he soon reduced the other princes, but suffered Couridachus to enjoy his dominions undisturbed ^y. Some time after, Attila invited him to his court ; but Couridachus, alledging he could not bear the presence of so great a god, prudently declined complying with his invitation. The Hunn, pleased with this plea, never offered him the least violence ; but gave the countries belonging to the other Acatzirian princes to his eldest son, Attila appointed his son Ellac king over all the nations bordering on the Euxine sea. The young prince, in going to take possession of his new kingdom, had the misfortune to break his right arm by a fall from his horse ^z. Attila, having, with the assistance of his brother Bleda, brought under subjection all the northern nations, began, as his ambition knew no bounds, and his arms had been hitherto attended with wonderful success, to entertain thoughts of reducing, not only the Goths settled in Thrace, but the Romans themselves, and making himself master of the whole empire. With this view, having drawn together a very numerous and formidable army, without any regard to the above-mentioned treaty, he passed the Danube, and, entering Thrace, put all to fire and sword, without distinction of sex, age, or condition. At this time perhaps happened what we read in Priscus, viz. that, during a fair, the Hunns fell upon the Romans, killed a great many of them, and made themselves masters of a castle. The Romans complained of these hostilities ; but the Hunns pretended, that the Romans had been the aggressors, the bishop of Margum having plundered, they said, their treasure ; on which account they insisted upon his being delivered up to them, with all those of their nation, who had taken refuge in the Roman dominions. The bishop denied the charge ; but the Hunns, who wanted only a pretence to quarrel with Theodosius, engaged at this time in two troublesome and expensive wars with the Persians and Vandals, without offering to prove it, entered the empire in an hostile manner ^a. Vorburgus supposes Attila and Bleda to have been stirred up by Genferic, king of the Vandals, powerfully attacked at this time by Theodosius ^b. Be that as it will, Attila, and his brother Bleda, took several towns

^y Prisc. p. 54—63. ^z Idem, p. 63—69. ^a Idem. p. 33. ^b Vorb. hist. Rom. German. p. 117.

And make themselves masters of several cities and strongholds.

towns and castles, which the Romans had built on the banks of the Danube, to awe the barbarians, and restrain them from entering the empire ^c. Among the other towns, they made themselves masters of Viminacium, a place of great importance on the Danube in Upper Mœsia. The Romans, alarmed at this sudden inundation of the Hunns, advised the emperor to comply with their request, and deliver up to them the bishop of Margum; which he no sooner understood, than he repaired to the enemy's camp, and found means to put them in possession of the city ^d. Attila, elated with this success, dispatched a messenger to Theodosius, requiring him to deliver up forthwith all the Hunns, who had taken refuge in the Roman territories, to pay him the arrears of his yearly pension, which had been stopt ever since he took up arms, and to send proper persons to settle what sums should be paid him for the future. He added, that there was no time to lose, since he could no longer restrain or moderate the ardour of his troops, thirsting after blood and spoil. Theodosius, though not a little terrified at these menaces, chose rather to try the chance of war, than abandon those, whom he had taken under his protection. He therefore only promised to send proper persons to Attila, with full powers to conclude a lasting peace ^e. Attila, not satisfied with this answer, pursued his ravages with more cruelty than ever, reducing several cities and strong-holds, viz. Retiarium, Singidunum, Naissus, and Sirmium, formerly the capital of all Illyricum ^f (C). While Sirmium was besieged by

^c Procop. ædif. l. iv. c. 5. p. 79.

^d Prisc. p. 33, 59.

^e Idem, p. 34.

^f Idem, p. 34—49. Theoph. p. 88. Marcell. chron.

(C) Retiarium, a great and populous city, stood on the Danube in Upper Mœsia, in the same place, according to Sanfon, where Zangona stands, a city in the present Servia. Singidunum and Naissus were both cities of Upper Mœsia. The former stood on the Danube, and the latter about five days journey distant from it. Baudrand thinks Singidunum stood where stands the present city of Zenderin, once the capital of Servia (11); but Sanfon places it somewhat higher on the Danube, and nearer Taurunum or Belgrade. Naissus gave birth to Constantine the Great, as was shewn elsewhere (12). It was entirely ruined by the

(11) Baudr. p. 198.

(12) Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 335.

by the Hunns, the bishop of the place delivered to one Constantius, by nation a Gaul, whom Aetius had formerly sent to Attila and Bleda, to serve them in quality of secretary, some sacred vessels, to be employed in redeeming him, if he outlived the siege, or others, if he perished in it. These vessels Constantius kept for himself, and pawned them with one Sylvanus, who sold them to the church. Some time after, Attila and Bleda having caused Constantius to be crucified, upon a suspicion that he betrayed them, Attila, pretending, that Sylvanus had stolen the vessels from Constantius, insisted upon his being delivered up to him, though Sylvanus offered to pay him the full value of them ^g. The emperor was to such a degree alarmed at the progress the two brothers made in Mœsia, Thrace, and Illyricum, that, not thinking himself safe at Constantinople, he withdrew into Asia, and continued there till the return of the troops he had sent against Genferic, king of the Vandals, to whom he was forced to grant an advantageous peace ^h. As to the issue of this war, we are left in the dark. All we know is, that a peace was concluded between Attila and Theodosius; but upon what terms, we are no-where told. During this peace, Attila, no longer able to bear a partner in the kingdom, caused his brother Bleda to be assassinated, and, upon his death, obliged the whole nation of the Hunns to acknowledge him for their sovereign. He was obeyed by several other nations besides the Hunns. ^{Attila causes his brother Bleda to be assassinated} Jornandes names among the rest the Goths, meaning, without all doubt, those who chose to remain in their antient seats, the Gepidæ, the Sue-

^g Prisc. p. 57.

^h Prosp. chron. Theoph. p. 87.

Marcel. chron. Chron. Alex. p. 730.

the Hunns; insomuch that in 449, it was still destitute of inhabitants, there being only some sick people in the churches and hospitals. The neighbouring plains were even then covered with the bones of those, who had been killed in war (13). Some think Naissus stood where Nissa, a city of no small note in Servia, stands; but Sanfon places it at some distance from the present Nissa. Sirmium, now Sirmish, stood in Lower Pannonia, and is famous in history, on account of the many laws enacted by the emperors while residing there, which have been collected by Jacobus Gothofredus in his typography of the cities mentioned in the Theodosian code. It is at present a city of Sclavonia.

(13) Prisc. p. 49.

His great power.

Suevians, the Alans, the Heruli, the Sarmatians, the Semandrians, the Squiri, the Sattagares, the Rugians, and the Agatziriansⁱ. He was sole master of all Scythia and Germany, which no one had ever held before him^k. Priscus observes, that no prince ever subdued so many countries in so short a time, his authority being acknowledged by all the states and princes from the Rhine to the most northern borders of the Persian empire, which he had once some thoughts of invading, and might, according to Priscus, have easily reduced, and, with that addition of strength, made himself master of the whole Roman empire^l. Priscus says, that the Romans declined giving him the title of king, and only styled him general of their armies, disguising the annual tribute they paid him with the specious name of salary; so great was their vanity, when their power was at the lowest ebb! They treated in the same manner the kings of the Goths and Burgundians, who, as they were less powerful, thought themselves honoured with the title of general; but Attila rejected it with contempt, saying, That the emperors had slaves for their generals; whereas his generals were upon a level with the emperors themselves^m. Jornandes writes, that when he entered Gaul in 451, he was attended by a troop of kings and princes, who stood trembling before him, without daring to utter a word; but always ready, at the least sign, to execute his commands with the utmost care and submissionⁿ. They referred all their differences to Attila, looked upon his decisions as oracles, and in every thing submitted to him as to the king of kings. Among these kings were two, to whom Attila paid a particular regard, viz. Valamir or Balamir, king of the Ostrogoths, who had remained among the Hunns, a man of a frank and open temper, and an enemy to all art and dissimulation; and Arderic, king of the Gepidæ, a prince of great penetration, and inviolably attached to Attila^o. As to the personal qualities of Attila, Jornandes has left us the following portrait of him: he was black, low in stature, had a broad breast, a large head, a flat nose, and small eyes^p. He was fond of war; but depended more upon his counsel, than his sword, employing not only force and menaces, but often craft and artifice, and sometimes low wiles, and

His personal qualities.

ⁱ Jorn. p. 685—688.

^k Idem, c. 49. p. 684

^l Prisc. p. 64.

^m Idem, p. 65.

ⁿ Jorn. c. 38

p. 667.

^o Idem ibid.

^p Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 35. p. 661.

and even lyes to obtain his end ^q. He was constantly forming new projects, and vast designs, aspiring at nothing less than the monarchy of the universe. He was so elated with his great power and success, as not to hearken to reason, however plain and evident ^r. The pride and haughtiness of his mind appeared in all his actions and motions, in his gait, eyes, and looks; insomuch that no one could behold him, without concluding, that he was sent into the world to disturb it ^s. His presence, joined to the reputation he had acquired, struck all who beheld him with such awe and terror, that very few ventured to approach him, or speak to him ^t. However, we are told, that an embassador sent to him by Valentinian III. appeared quite unconcerned before a man, who made the world tremble. As the embassador had justice on his side, he was not afraid of his wild and menacing looks; but, in spite of the rage to which he abandoned himself, answered all his complaints, without betraying the least fear, leaving him at his departure calm, and capable of reason, though he had found him quite outrageous and untractable ^u. In his time was found a sword, thought to be the sword of Mars, and, on that account, held in great veneration by the antient kings of Scythia. It had been lost for some ages, and was said to have been found in the following manner: a cow-herd, observing one of his cows wounded in the foot, followed her bloody traces to the place where she had received the wound. There he discovered the edge of a sword appearing above ground, which the cow had trod upon. The sword he immediately dug up, and carried it to the king, who knowing it to be the famous sword of the god of war, received it with inexpressible joy, as portending, that he was to extend his conquests to the most distant limits of the world ^w. Priscus, from whom Jornandes copied this account, writes, that nothing gained Attila so much respect and veneration among the superstitious vulgar, as the discovery of this sword in his time ^x. The same author adds, that he was so blinded with pride, as to forget he was a man, and to suffer divine honours to be paid to him ^y. He was not however without some good qualities; ^{His good qualities;}

^q Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 43. p. 674. & c. 36. p. 660, 663.
^r Prisc. p. 64. ^s Jorn. c. 35. p. 661. ^t Prisc. p. 54.
^u Cassiodor. l. i. epist. 4. p. 512. ^w Jornan. c. 35. p. 662. ^x Prisc. p. 54. ^y Idem p. 75.

An enemy to pomp and shew.

His wives.

for to those who referred their controversies to him he administered justice, according to the strictest rules of equity. He treated his subjects with great mildness, suffering them quietly to enjoy their estates, and levying only such sums, as they could easily pay ^z. In his dominions, says Sylvianus, no poor were seen oppressed with tributes and taxes ^a. He was ever ready to forgive those who submitted to him ; and was never known to have abandoned such as he had once taken under his protection ^b. He was so far from placing his grandeur in pomp and shew, which serve only to dazzle the eyes of the senseless multitude, that, on the contrary, he affected an air of simplicity, and contempt for state and all kind of outward magnificence. His dress was proper, but plain. He could not abide any gold, precious stones, or the least ornament on his sword, or the trappings of his horse, though in great request among the princes that attended him, and those of his court ^c. Priscus, who attended Maximinus, sent by the emperor Theodosius in 449, to the court of Attila with the character of ambassador, tells us, that they found him sitting in his tent on a wooden chair ^d. The same writer followed him several days journey beyond the Danube, till he reached one of his most magnificent palaces, which was all of wood, and stood in a large village, and in a country where no wood or stones were to be found ^e. Attila, soon after his arrival, invited Maximus and Priscus to a grand entertainment, at which the guests were all served in silver and gold ; but, before the king was set a dish of plain meat, of which he ate but very sparingly, and on a trencher. He drank very little, and out of a wooden cup, while the rest were regaled with great variety of liquors in cups of gold, enriched with precious stones. During the banquet, something happened, which made all the company laugh ; but Attila, as Priscus observed, maintained his usual gravity amidst their mirth, without the least smile, or change of countenance ^f. He had, according to the custom of his nation, many wives ^g, or, as Jornandes expresses it, troops of wives ^h, by whom he had almost a numberless issue. His favourite wife was one Creecha, or Recha, who resided in his 112.

^z Idem p. 60

p. 50.

p. 68.

^b Jorn. c. 35. p. 601

^c Idem p. 53. Jorn. c. 34. p. 600.

^z Idem p. 53.

^a Sylvian. Mass. de gubern. l. v. p.

^c Prisc. p. 67

^d Idem

^e Prisc.

^f Jorn. c. 49. p. 684.

his capital, and by whom he had his eldest son Ellac, with two others. Priscus, who carried her some presents, found her sitting on a bed amidst the women who attended her sitting on the ground, and working ⁱ. The same writer mentions two other wives of Attila ^k. Among his children are mentioned Ellac his eldest son, Dengizic, who perished in making war upon the Romans, and Hernac or Hernas, the youngest of them all ^l. Attila had an extraordinary esteem and affection for Ellac, whom he raised above all his brothers, made him in his life-time king of the Acatzirians, and appointed him his successor after his death; but the son did not long outlive the father, being killed in a battle soon after his accession to the crown ^m. Next to Ellac, Hernas was the father's favourite, the soothsayers having foretold, that he was to outlive all his brothers, and maintain the splendor and glory of his family. The first part of this supposed prediction proved true; but as to the other, Hernas was so far from maintaining the glory of his family, that, declining to engage in the war, which his brother Dengizic undertook against the empire, he contented himself with some lands given him by the emperor Marcian in Little Scythia ⁿ. This is all we find in the antient writers concerning the celebrated Attila, and his numerous issue. The modern authors add many things, and among the rest, that, while Attila was in Gaul, a holy hermit told him, that he was the scourge of God, who had put the sword of justice into his hand, to punish the vices of the christians; but would snatch it from him as soon as they were reclaimed. They add, that Attila, after the famous defeat he received in Champagne, mindful of the saying of the hermit, added to his other titles that of flagellum Dei, or the scourge of God ^o. But what we read in the modern histories of Hungary concerning those early times, is, for the most part, either quite groundless, highly improbable, or evidently fabulous.

BUT to resume the thread of our history: Attila being, by the death of his brother Bleda, become sole master of so many nations, all ready to follow his banners, and execute his commands, he looked upon the Roman emperors with such contempt, that he is said to have sent, out of mere wantonness, ^{He despises and insults the Roman emperors.}

ⁱ Prisc. p. 63.

^k Idem p. 35.

^l Idem p. 68.

Jornand. c. 50. p. 688.

^m Idem ibid. p. 686, 687.

ⁿ Prisc. p. 68. Jorn. c. 50. p. 688.

^o Olah. in Attil. p.

859. Bonfin. rer. Ungar. p. 18, &c.

wantonness, two Goths, with the character of ambassadors, the one to Theodosius, and the other to Valentinian, with this haughty and insulting message ; Attila, my master and yours, commands you to get ready a palace for his reception ^p. What answer they returned, we are no-where told. However, we do not find, that Attila openly broke the peace he had concluded with Theodosius, as we have related above, till the year 447. It is true, he often threatened him with war, but only in order to draw from him money, corn, provisions, and whatever else he stood in need of, the Romans, who trembled at the very name of Attila, complying, like so many slaves, with all his demands, that he might have no pretence to take arms against them. The ambassadors he sent to Constantinople returned always loaded with presents ; insomuch that when he thought any of his subjects worthy of an extraordinary reward, he used to send them under some pretence or other, with the character of ambassadors to Theodosius ^q. Attila continued thus trampling under foot the majesty of the empire, and insulting the weakness of Theodosius, till the year 447, when, no longer satisfied with the annual pension paid him by the emperor, and the rich presents yearly sent him, he declared war against the empire, upon what provocation we know not, probably without any ; for Theodosius complied with all his demands, however unjust and arrogant. Thrace felt the calamities of this war the first ; for Attila, entering it at the head of a formidable army, laid it waste, says Theophanes ^r, from the Euxine sea to the streights of Gallipoli and Sestos. They ravaged, says count Marcellinus, almost all Europe, laying every-where the towns and castles in ashes ^s. They advanced as far as the castle of Anthric ^t, placed by Baudrand ^u between Selymbria and Constantinople. Jornandes writes, that Attila, with an army of Hunns, Gepidæ, Goths, Alans, &c. commanded by their respective kings, ravaged all Illyricum, Thrace, both Dacia's, Mœsia and Scythia ^w. They took and plundered Philippopolis in Thrace properly so called, Arcadiopolis in the province of Europe, Constantia, a city mentioned only by Theophanes, Marcianopolis, the metropolis of Lower Mœsia, and extended their ravages to the streights of Thermopylæ,

He declares war against Theodosius
II.
Year of Christ 447.
And overruns several provinces.

^p Chron. Alex. p. 734. ^q Prisc. p. 36, 37. ^r Theoph. p. 88.
^s Marc. chron. ^t Theoph. ibid. ^u Baud.
p. 83. ^w Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 44. p. 553.

pylæ, leading from Theſſaly into Achaia^x; ſo that they muſt have croſſed Macedon and Theſſaly. That they over-ran Macedon and Greece, is affirmed by a modern writer, who quotes Procopius^y; but we have not been able to find that paſſage. Seventy towns and upwards, belonging to the eaſtern empire, were taken and ranſacked in this irruption of the Hunns and other barbarous nations ſubject to Attila^z. The generals Theodoſius employed againſt them were, Aſpar, Arcobindus, and Arnegiſceles, whom Theophanes names Argaliſcles^a, the chronicle of Alexandria, Anargiſcles^b, and Jornandes, Arnegiſtles^c. What the other two did, we are no where told; but Arnegiſceles, who was ma-giſter militiæ in Mœſia and Thrace, engaged Attila in Lower Dacia, or rather Mœſia, on the banks of the Utis, which falls into the Danube, at a ſmall diſtance from a city of the ſame name^d. The battle proved very bloody, Arnegiſceles having, on this occaſion, diſtinguiſhed himſelf in a moſt eminent manner, and killed many of the enemy with his own hand; but, falling unluckily from his horſe in the heat of the engagement, he was himſelf killed, and his army put to the rout^e. Jornandes ſuppoſes, that this battle was fought in the neighbourhood of Mar-cianopolis. Another battle was fought in the Cherſoneſus, not far from Gallipoli, in which no better ſucceſs attended the Romans than in the other^f; ſo that Theodoſius, finding he could no longer withſtand the power of the barbarians, diſpatched the patrician Anatolius to Attila, and with him Vigilus, who was well acquainted with the language of the Hunns, charging them to conclude a peace upon any terms^g. A peace was accordingly agreed to on the following conditions: That the Romans ſhould pay immediately to Attila fix thouſand pounds weight in gold, and every year two thouſand; that they ſhould ſend back to him all his deferters, and receive none for the future; that they ſhould deliver up the Romans, who, being taken in war, had made their eſcape without paying their ranſom,

He defeats the generals ſent againſt him.

The Romans conclude a ſhameful peace with him.

E 2

^x Theoph. p. 88. Chron. Alex. p. 734.

v. p. 119.

p. 88.

44. p. 653.

p. 353. Chron. Alex.

& p. 51, 53.

^z Tir. Proſp. chron.

^b Chron. Alex. p. 734.

^d Baud. p. 341.

^f Priſc. p. 34.

^y Vorb. tom.

^a Theoph.

^c Jorn. reg. c.

Jorn. reg. c. 54.

^g Idem ibid.

son, or pay for each of them twelve pounds weight of gold ; and finally, that the Romans should send no embassadors to Attila, till all the deserters and fugitives were delivered up. These conditions were highly opprobrious to the Roman name ; but the despirited Romans chose rather to submit to any terms, than pursue the war with an enemy, whom they despaired of ever being able to conquer. One Scotta was sent by Attila to Constantinople, to hasten the execution of the treaty ^h. Count Marcellinus writes, that, in 448, embassadors came from Attila to Constantinople, to demand the money, which they had refused before ⁱ, insinuating thereby, that Attila had rejected the conditions, which he afterwards agreed to. Pursuant to the articles of this treaty, six thousand pounds weight of gold were immediately sent to Attila, with the Hunns, who had taken refuge in the Roman dominions, among whom were some princes, who had never submitted to Attila, and now chose rather to be killed by the Romans, than fall into his hands ^k. The inhabitants and garrison of Asemontium, a castle of great strength in Thrace, had refused to open their gates to Attila, and repulsed him with great loss, when he attempted to storm the place ; so that he was obliged to withdraw from before it. The barbarian, highly provoked at their gallant behaviour, which a generous enemy would have commended, after the conclusion of the peace, insisted upon their delivering up to him all the Roman captives, with the Hunns, who had taken refuge in the fortress, refusing to withdraw his troops, till such times as his demands were complied with. The inhabitants answered, That there were no Romans at all in the place, and only two Hunns ; and this answer they confirmed with a solemn oath, not thinking perjury a crime, says our historian, when they could, by no other means, rescue many unhappy Romans from death or slavery ^l. In virtue of this peace, Attila claimed the quiet possession of the countries he had conquered, that is, of the tract extending along the Danube from Pannonia to the city of Noves, placed by Sanson in Lower Mœsia ; but he afterwards relinquished this claim ^m.

SOON after the conclusion of the peace, that is, in the beginning of the year 449, Attila sent one Edecon to Constantinople, ^h Theoph. p. 88. Prisc. p. 44.—53.

chron.

^k Prisc. p. 35.

ⁱ Marc.

^l Idem, p. 35, 36.

^m Idem, p. 37.

stantinople, with the character of embassador, attended by his chief secretary Orestes (D). As Edecon seemed to be greatly taken with the splendor and magnificence of the court, and desirous to continue among the Romans, the eunuch Chrysaphus, the emperor's chief chamberlain, thinking him thereupon capable of committing, without remorse, the blackest crimes, proposed to him the assassinating of his prince ; which he undertook to do, tempted by the promises of the eunuch. To this wicked attempt the emperor not only consented, but, in order to the more effectual execution of so scandalous an undertaking, dispatched a solemn embassy to Attila, strictly enjoining those who attended the embassadors, especially their interpreter Vigilius, a bold enterprising man, to be assisting to Edecon in murdering Attila. Maximinus, who, in 422, had persuaded the Persians to conclude a peace with the Romans, was at the head of this embassy ; but, as he was a man of unblemished character, the emperor did not think fit to trust him with the secret. The embassadors no sooner arrived at the court of Attila, than Edecon, either apprehensive of Theodosius attempts to get Attila murdered.

The plot is discovered.

E 3

the

(D) Orestes was by birth a Roman, that is, he was born a subject to the empire. As he lived in Pannonia, perhaps his native country, when that province was yielded to the Hunns in 430, he listed himself among the troops of Attila, who, discovering him to be a man of parts, made him his secretary. His father, named Tatula, bore likewise some considerable employment at the court of Attila. Orestes married the daughter of Romulus, sent by Valentinian III. on an embassy to Attila in 449, and had by her a son, by Males called Romulus Augustus, but by all other historians, Romulus Augustulus. Orestes, leaving the Hunns, served in the Roman armies with great reputation, and was raised to the rank of a patrician, and appointed by the emperor Nepos general of the troops in Gaul ; when turning his arms against the prince, who had entrusted him with them, he drove him from the throne, and caused his son Augustulus, in whom ended the western empire, to be proclaimed emperor in his room (14). Orestes was in the end taken prisoner in Pavia, and brought to Odoacer, who caused him to be put to death at Placentia (15).

(14) Jorn. c. 45. p. 673: Sidon. l. iii. epist. 7. p. 72. Prisc. p. 37. & 57. Onuph. p. 67. Evagr. l. ii. c. 16. p. 308. (15) Evagr. l. vii. c. 1. p. 333. Procop. p. 308.

Attila spares
the conspirators.

the dangers attending such a desperate attempt, or deceiving the whole time the traitors with more refined treachery, discovered the whole to his prince ; who immediately caused Vigilius to be seized, and sent back his secretary Orestes to Constantinople, with the purse in which the money had been brought, that was to have been paid to Edecon after the assassination, charging him to ask Theodosius and Chrysaphus, whether they knew it ; to reproach the emperor in the severest terms with such a black piece of treachery, and to insist upon his instantly delivering up to him Chrysaphus, the author and contriver of the plot ⁿ. But the emperor, unwilling to sacrifice the eunuch his chief favourite, instead of complying with Attila's demand, dispatched the patrician Anatolius and Nomus to the king of the Hunns, charging them to do all that lay in their power to appease him. Anatolius, at that time Comes domesticorum, that is, captain of the guards, had negotiated a peace with Attila the year before. As for Nomus, he was one of Chrysaphus's particular friends, and generous to such a degree, that no one doubted, but with his rich presents, he would soften Attila. It happened accordingly ; for Attila not only promised to live in peace and amity with Theodosius, but relinquished his claim to the countries on the Roman side of the Danube, pardoned Chrysaphus, set Vigilius at liberty, sent back many Roman captives without ransom, and dismissed the ambassadors loaded with presents. Thus Priscus, who was an eye-witness of what he relates, having attended Maximinus to the court of Attila ^o. The same author writes that Constantius, secretary to Attila, being sent ambassador to the court of Constantinople, promised to befriend the Romans, and do all that lay in his power to divert his master from breaking anew into the empire, provided Theodosius procured him some rich heiress in marriage. Hereupon the emperor promised him the daughter of Saturninus, whom Eudoxia had caused to be put to death in 444, after he had been for some years Comes domesticorum, or captain of the guards. But Zenno, commander in chief of all the emperor's forces, without any regard to the word and honour of his prince, took her by force out of the castle, where she was kept, and gave her in marriage to a friend of his, named Rufus. Of this Constantius complained to Attila, and Attila to Maximinus, who was then at his court, telling him, ⁿ Prisc. p. 39—48.

^o Idem, p. 70—72.

him, that Constantius must either have the daughter of Saturninus, or another of equal wealth ; and that it was a shameful thing in a prince to fail of his word, charging him at the same time to tell his master from him, that he was amazed to find he had thus gone back from his word, and forfeited his honour ; that, from his not punishing Zeno, he concluded that general to have been countenanced by him in what he had done ; but if he was therein mistaken, if Theodosius durst not resent such insults from his own subjects, he was ready to teach them the respect, submission and obedience they owed their sovereign. Theodosius, piqued with this reproach, caused the estate, not of Zeno, whom he was afraid to provoke, but of Saturninus, to be confiscated, thinking to cover his weakness with this piece of injustice ^p.

He reproaches Theodosius as a weak prince.

THE following year 450, Theodosius II. died, and was succeeded by Marcian ; which Attila no sooner understood, than he dispatched ambassadors to the new emperor, demanding the annual pension paid him by the deceased prince. Marcian, not thinking himself bound by the shameful treaty, which his predecessor had concluded with the barbarians, dismissed the ambassadors with this answer, That Theodosius was no more ; and as for himself, he had gold for his friends, and steel for his enemies. Attila, provoked at this answer, began to draw together his troops, in order to break into the empire. Hereupon Marcian, who had found the affairs of the empire in a most deplorable condition, to gain time, sent a solemn embassy to Attila, at the head of which was Apollonius, a general of no small renown, perhaps the same person to whom Theodoret wrote his seventy-third and three hundred and third letter ^q. But the king of the Hunns, understanding he had not brought with him the usual pension, would neither speak to him, nor see him. However, he commanded him, on pain of death, to convey to him the presents, which the emperor had sent him. To this message Apollonius answered, That the king needed not demand, with menaces, things which he might have when he pleased, either as presents, if he was determined to live in amity with the Romans, or as spoils, if, forgetful of the right of nations, he thought fit to use violence with an ambassador. Hereupon Attila, chusing rather to lose the presents, than declare himself a friend

The emperor Marcian refuses to pay him the usual pension.

E 4

^p Idem, p. 69. Marc. chron p. 26. ep. 73. p. 942.

^q Theodoret.

Attila resolves to make war upon Valentinian III.

He is stirred up by Honoria.

Her incontinence.

friend to the Romans, or offer the least violence to an ambassador, ordered him to quit his dominions, and return home^r. However, not thinking it adviseable at that juncture to engage in a war with Marcian, and, on the other hand, impatient of peace, he resolved to turn his arms against the western empire, then governed by Valentinian III. a weak and unwarlike prince. Roua, uncle to Attila, had concluded a peace with Valentinian a little before his death, that is, about the year 433, as we have related above. Attila, who succeeded him, had no sooner taken possession of the crown, than he was, with repeated letters and messages, pressed by Justa Grata Honoria, Valentinian's own sister, to break the peace, and invade the western empire. Honoria had been honoured with the title of Augusta to divert her from marrying, there being, at that time, no man in the whole empire, whose rank answered her high station; for it was thought proper, that she should continue unmarried, as the sisters of Theodosius II. had done. But celibacy had been their choice; whereas Honoria had no inclination to lead a single life, but was forced to it, and closely watched by Valentinian's orders, or rather by her mother Placidia's^s. The young princess therefore, no longer able to bear this restraint, dispatched privately one of her eunuchs to Attila, pressing him to enter Italy at the head of a powerful army, and marry her^t; nay, she sent him, either at this time or afterwards, a ring, as a pledge of her fidelity^u. She was then about sixteen or seventeen, being born before her brother Valentinian in 417, or 418. Attila, who had then just begun to reign, not caring to engage in this enterprize, Honoria suffered herself to be debauched by one of her own domestics, named Eugenius. Placidia no sooner perceived her with child, than she caused her to be shut up in a private house, and soon after sent her to Theodosius at Constantinople^w. This happened in 434, three years before Valentinian married the daughter of Theodosius^x. Valesius writes, that Valentinian caused Eugenius to be put to death, which is highly probable, but, we may venture to say, not affirmed by any of the antients. The same author maintains, that Honoria was ^r Prisc. p. 72, 73.

Byzant. fam. p. 67, 73.
p. 40.
chron.

^s Jorn. reg. c. 44. p. 673. Cange.
^t Jorn. ibid. p. 653.

^w Jorn. rer. Goth. p. 653.

^u Prisc.
^x Marcel.

was not sent to Constantinople, and, what is surprising, quotes Jornandes, who says in express terms she was^y. Honoria continued pressing Attila to make war upon her brother ; but he, it seems, not giving ear to her solicitations, prayers, and entreaties, lived in peace with Valentinian till the year 449. We have several proofs of a good A good understanding between Attila and Aetius. understanding and friendly correspondence between him and Aetius, commander in chief of Valentinian's armies; for that general sent to Attila and Bleda a Gaul, by name Constantius, to serve them in quality of secretary ; but he being suspected of treachery, and thereupon put to death, Aetius sent them for the same office another of the same name, but by birth an Italian^z. After the year 444, Attila sent as a present to Aetius a famous mimic and buffoon, named Zercon, who was a native of Mauritania, and strangely deformed^a. About the year 448, some misunderstanding arose between Attila and Valentinian, on account of the sacred vessels, of which we have spoken above. To convince Attila of the injustice of his claim, were sent to his court count Romulus, Promotus governor of Noricum, and Romanus, who had a command in the army. Romulus was a native of Petavium in Noricum, a man of great address, and experience in negotiations, and father-in-law to Orestes, at that time Attila's chief secretary^b. An anonymous writer, published by Valesius with the works of Ammianus Marcellinus, tells us, that Orestes attended Attila into Italy^c. If what that author writes be true, Attila must have made an irruption into Italy, which no other historian has taken notice of, it being certain Orestes had left the service of Attila before that, which we shall speak of anon, and which is the only one known to the writers, who have reached our times (E). The ambassadors Attila seeks from a pretence to make war on Valentinian.

^y Jorn. ubi sup.

P. 53. Suid. p. 1122.

P. 477.

^z Prisc. p. 50, 57, 69.

^b Idem p. 37, 57, 68.

^a Idem

^c Anonym.

(E) Some authors think, that Jornandes mentions this irruption among the other transactions of the year 434, in the following words : Cumque veniente Attila votum suum nequiret explere (16). But these words may equally import, that Honoria, of whom from Valentinian met, at the court of Attila, Maximinus, sent thither by Theodosius; but, tho' they had evidently justice on their side, the only answer they could get from Attila was, that he must have the vessels, or Sylvanus must be delivered up to him, otherwise he was resolved to declare war. However, he paid the ambassadors great respect and entertained them at his table with those of Theodosius^d. He was, without all doubt, himself well apprised of the injustice of his demand; but, being determined to make war, wanted a pretence to begin it. He had received in 448, and entertained at his court, one Eudoxus, by profession a physician, a man of great address, but of a restless temper, who, being accused of stirring up the Bagaudæ to take arms against the empire, had made his escape, and found a sanctuary amongst the Hunns^e. But as the emperor, dreading above all things a war with Attila, took no notice of his thus protecting a traitor and fugitive, recourse was had to a new claim, which the king of the Hunns was very sure would produce a war. We have observed above, that Honoria, the emperor's sister, had maintained a private correspondence with Attila, and even sent him a ring. Attila therefore dispatched a solemn embassy to Valentinian, demanding his sister Honoria, whom he pretended to be his wife, and, with her, half the western empire, as belonging of right to her. The ambassadors brought with them the ring, which she had sent him, to convince the emperor of their marriage^f; and at the same time complained, in their master's name, of the ill usage she met with; adding, that he was both able and resolved to revenge it. Valentinian answered, that his sister was already married; and that, among the Romans, women had no right to the crown, nor to any part of the empire^g. Of this marriage no mention is made by any other writer, nor indeed of Honoria, since the year 434, when she was sent to Constantinople. She was probably, upon the death of Theodosius, sent back to her brother Valentinian, and received from him some harsh treatment; perhaps he obliged

^d Prisc. p. 56, 57, 63, 64, 66.^e Tiro Prosp. chron.^f Prisc. p. 40.^g Idem ibid.

whom Jornandes speaks in that passage, could not prevail upon Attila to come and marry her; and that she could not marry him, though he was come.

ed her to marry a person she disliked. Be that as it will, Valentinian, having dismissed the ambassadors with the answer related above, thought it adviseable to send a solemn embassy to Attila, in order to convince him, if possible, of the injustice of his claim. The persons chosen for this purpose were Cassiodorus, father to the writer of that name, the emperor's chief secretary, and Carpilio, the son of Actius. Cassiodorus, who was a man of great eloquence, address, and experience in negotiations, confuted so evidently and fully all the frivolous pretences alledged by Attila to justify his breaking with Valentinian, that, in the end, he seemed inclined to renew the peace, which it was no-ways his interest to grant, says Cassiodorus^h, to so rich an empire, ready to become his prey. A peace was accordingly concluded, to the great surprize of Valentinian, and the ambassadors themselves, by whom it was negotiated. It was however but a sham peace, the better to deceive the unwary Romans, and fall upon them unawares. It was likewise with this view, that he sent soon after ambassadors to Valentinian, with a very friendly, in appearance, and obliging letter, assuring him, that he had no reason to be alarmed at his warlike preparations, since they were designed against Theodoric, king of the Visigoths in Languedoc (F) ; that as to the Romans, he should ever look upon them as his friends, provided they did not espouse the cause of his enemyⁱ. At the same time he wrote to Theodoric, putting him in mind of the cruel war the Romans had made upon him about ten years, and pressing him to renounce their alliance^k. Thus, joining craft to force, he endeavoured to set the Goths and Romans at variance, the more easily to crush them both^l.

DURING these negotiations, he assembled one of the most powerful and formidable armies we find mentioned in history. He had, as we have observed above, people of many different nations among his troops, and a great number of kings at his devotion. Among the kings the most ^h Cassiodor. l. i. epist. 4. p. 5, 6.

c. 36. p. 662, 663.
ibid.

ⁱ Jorn. rer. Goth.
^k Idem ibid. p. 661.

^l Idem

(F) Genferic, king of the Vandals, having sent for the daughter of Theodoric, and married her to Hemeric his eldest son, treated her soon after with his usual cruelty, causing her nose to be cut off, upon

He enters Gaul at the head of a numerous and formidable army.
Year of
Christ 451.

most powerful were, Ardaric king of the Gepidæ, and Valamir king of the Ostrogoths, ^m. His army consisted of the following nations, viz. Hunns, Gepidæ, Ostrogoths, Rugians, Gelonians, Squiri, Burgundians, Bellonotes, Neurians, Basteriæ, Turingians, Bructerians, Franks dwelling on the Neckar, Marcomans, Suevians, Quadians, Heruli, Turcilingians, and, in short, of all the northern barbarians, to the number of five, or, as others write, seven hundred thousand men ⁿ. With this formidable host he set out from Scythia in the depth of winter, and, bending his march through Germany, never halted till he reached the banks of the Rhine. There the Franks, who still dwelt on great numbers on the other side of that river, attempted to stop him; but they were, at that time, un- luckily divided among themselves, the whole nation being rent into two factions or parties, by the two sons of Clodion, quarrelling about the succession to their father's dominions. The elder brother had implored the assistance of the Hunns; and the younger, probably Merouée, was supported by Aetius, who had, in a manner, adopted him for his son ^o. Being thus disunited, they were easily overcome; and on this occasion probably happened what we read in Fredigaire, viz. that Childeric, the son of Merouée, was taken prisoner by the Hunns, with his mother;

^m Prisc. p. 40. Jorn. c. 38. p. 666, 667.
ibid. Sidon, car. vii. p. 54. Hist. miscel. p. 444.
p. 40. Vales. rer. Franc. l. iv. p. 158.

ⁿ Jorn.
^o Prisc.

upon a groundless suspicion, that she designed to poison him, and sending her back thus disfigured to her father. As he did not doubt but Theodoric would resent this affront, he resolved to be before-hand with him; and therefore sent ambassadors, with rich presents, to court the friendship of Attila, and persuade him to fall upon Theodoric. Hence Attila, to deceive the Romans, gave out that the warlike preparations, which were carrying on throughout his dominions, were designed against Theodoric (17). This storm, it seems, began to be apprehended in 449, for, in that year, St. Leo desired to be excused from assisting at the council of Ephesus, alledging the uncertain and wavering state of affairs (18).

(17) Idem, ibid. c. 36. p. 662.
xxvii. c. 433. p. 491, 498.

(18) Leo, epist.

ther, and carried into captivity, but rescued out of their hands by the courage and fidelity of a Frank, named Wiomaud ^p. We are no-where told what Attila did, after his victory over the Franks, in favour of Clodion's eldest son, whose cause he had espoused. The king of the Hunns, having now no enemy to oppose him (for the Romans giving credit to his deceitful protestations, looked upon him as a friend) caused whole forests to be cut down, in order to build boats, with which the Rhine in a short time was covered ^q. He passed that river without opposition in the beginning, as is supposed, of the year 451 ^r, giving out that his design was to make war on the Visigoths; that he was determined to live in friendship with the Romans; and that he only wanted to cross Gaul, and pass the Loire at Orleans, in order to fall upon his enemies the Goths in Guyenne and Languedoc ^s. Being therefore looked upon as a friend by the credulous and unwary Romans, several cities opened their gates to him; but his men behaving in the cities, that had received them, more like enemies than friends, the other towns refused to admit them ^t. Hereupon Attila, pulling off the mask, besieged, took by storm, and plundered many places in Gaul ^u. The cities that suffered most on this occasion, were Tongres ^w (G), Treves, formerly the metropolis of Gaul. He takes and destroys several cities.

^p Du Chesne hist. Franc. script. tom. ii. p. 726. ^q Sid. car. vii. p. 541. ^r Buch. Belg. p. 511. ^s Prosp. Du Chesne tom. ii. p. 521. ^t Prosp. Idat. p. 28. ^u Idat. ibid. ^w Cointii annal. eccles. Franc ad ann. 451. Allissiodor. chron. p. 62.

(G) Gregory of Tours writes, that, when it was first heard in Gaul, that Attila's design was to pass through that country, the holy bishop of Tongres, named Aravacus or Arvacus, went to visit the holy places at Rome, where, with fervent prayers, and many tears, he begged Heaven to avert the calamities, that threatened his flock, and all Gaul. But St. Peter, appearing to him, told him, that the Almighty had, in his justice, immutably decreed, that the Hunns should come into Gaul, and ravage the whole country; but as for him, he should not live to see the miseries of his distressed flock. With this answer he returned to Tongres, and thence repaired to Mastricht, where he died soon after (19). The credulity of this excellent writer is the effect of

(19) Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 56. p. 275, 276.

He lays siege to Orleans.

Gaul, which had been four times pillaged before the year 440, and was now laid in ashes by the Hunns ^x, Strasbourg, Spire, Worms, Mentz, Andernach, and most of the towns in that neighbourhood ^y. Attila, advancing thence into the country, and dividing his numerous army into several bodies, took, pillaged, and laid in ashes, many other cities, and among the rest Aarras ^z, Befancon, Toul, and Langres ^a. The barbarians attacked the town of Laon; but were repulsed with great slaughter ^b. At Mentz they arrived the night preceding the solemnity of Easter, which, in 451, fell on the eighth of April; and having soon forced the gates, and entered the city sword in hand, they made a dreadful havock of the inhabitants, massacred the priests at the altars, and set fire to the place, which soon reduced all the private and public buildings to ashes ^c, sparing only the chapel of St. Stephen, if Gregory of Tours is to be credited, where some reliques of that saint were lodged ^d. Attila, thus putting all to fire and sword, arrived at length before Orleans, which he immediately invested, the inhabitants refusing to admit him into the city. In the mean time, Aetius, arriving from Italy at Arles, took care to encourage, by frequent messengers, the inhabitants and garrison of Orleans to make a vigorous defence, assuring them, that, in a short time, he would march to their assistance. He had brought with him but a small number of troops, not doubting but the Visigoths would join the Romans in opposing the furious torrent, which threatened both nations alike; but finding the Visigoths resolved to wait for the enemy in their country, he used all kinds of arguments, in order to persuade them to change that resolution sending to them for that purpose Avitus, who was raised to the imperial dignity a few years after ^e. The epitomizer of Idatius, supposed to have lived in the time of Charlemagne ^f, tells us, that, on this occasion, the holy bishop of apud. Bolland. p. 797.

^x Du Chesne, p. 694.

^y Buch. p. 512.

^z Alcuin.

^a Allis. chron. p. 67.

^b Ruin-

ert. hist. Vand. persecut. p. 408.

^c Idat. Du Chesne,

tom. i. p. 694.

^d Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c.

6. p. 276.

^e Sid. car. vii. p. 341. Prosp. chron.

^f Canis.

tom. ii. p. 640.

of his great piety, which often gets the better of his good sense and understanding.

of Orleans, St. Agnan, was likewise sent by Aetius to Theodoric king of the Visigoths ^g. Be that as it will, Aetius is Theodoric yielded at length to the reasons alledged by the ^{joined by the} deputies of Aetius, which the reader will find in Jornan- ^{Visigoths,} des ^{and several o-} ^{ther nations.} ^h, promising to join the Romans with all his forces against the common enemy. This change of measures in the king was highly acceptable both to the nobility and his people, who received the news of it with loud acclamations of joy, occasioned by the eager desire they had to try their strength with the Hunns ⁱ (H). In the mean time, Aetius assembled what troops he could in Gaul, which were reinforced by the powerful succours brought him by Theodoric, who commanded them in person, attended by his eldest and second sons, Thorismond and Theodoric ^k. Besides the Visigoths, the following nations are mentioned among the troops, that composed the army of Aetius, viz. the Franks, under the conduct of their king Merouée, the Sarmatians, Burgundians, Saxons, Armoricans, the Lisians, dwelling on the banks of the Lis in Flanders ^l, the Reverins or Ripuarians, inhabiting the banks of the Rhine towards Cologne, the Ibrions, by Valesius called Brions and Breons, and placed by him in Vindelicia, now Suabia, and Bavaria ^m, and several other nations of Celtic Gaul and Germany, whom the Romans had formerly commanded as their subjects, but were now glad to reckon among their auxiliaries and allies ⁿ. Thus Aetius assembled an army not much inferior in number, according to Prosper, to that of Attila ^o.

WHILE

^g Idem, p. 645. ^h Jornand. rer. Goth. c, 26. p. 663. ⁱ Sid. p. 341. Prosp. chron. Jorn. ibid. p. 636. ^k Jorn. p. 664. ^l Vales. p. 161. ^m Idem, rer. Franc. p. 171. & 162. & notit. Gal. p. 259, 260. ⁿ Jorn. ibid. p. 664. Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 7. p. 277. ^o Prosp. chron.

(H) The epitomizer of Idatius, who often adds to his author something of his own, tells us, that Aetius offered half Gaul to Theodoric, on condition he joined him against the Hunns; and that, having by this means engaged him to side with the Romans, he made the same offer to Attila, provided he made war upon Theodoric (20). But this seems to us altogether incredible.

Attila takes Orleans,

But is driven out with great slaughter by Aetius and Theodoric.

WHILE Aetius was thus busied in assembling his troops Attila pursued the siege of Orleans with great fury, battering the walls night and day with an incredible number of warlike engines, till at length he became master of the place. Valesius is of opinion, that the holy bishop Agnan caused the gates to be opened, lest the city should be taken by assault, and plundered^p. And Gregory of Tours seems to insinuate, that it was not taken by storm; for he writes, that the enemy entered the place, when the walls were shaken with the battering-rams, and ready to fall^q, no breach being then made, according to that writer. On the other hand, the word Irruptio, used by Apollinaris Sidonius, and signifying a violent breaking or rushing in, imports, that the town was taken by storm^r. Be that as it will, the Huns were scarce entered, when Aetius and Theodoric, arriving with all their forces, fell unexpectedly upon them, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged them to retire with much precipitation out of the town. Many of them threw themselves into the Loire, and perished there^s; a plain proof, that they had passed that river, and invested the town on the south side; which has been denied by some modern writers. Theophanes mentions this defeat of Attila near the Loire and the city of Orleans^t. As for the epitomizer of Idatius, he evidently confounds this encounter with the great battle of Chalons^u. For this success, Aetius is by Apollinaris Sidonius styled the deliverer of the Loire^w. He is supposed to have gained it on the fourteenth of June, that day being marked in an antient martyrology of Orleans as a day of general thanksgiving, for the happy deliverance of the city out of the hands of its cruel enemies^x. Attila, being obliged to abandon Orleans, retired with his army towards the Rhine; and having passed Troyes, he halted in the plains of Chalons (I), chusing that place as most ^p Vales. rer. Franc. l. vi. p. 160.

^q p. 476.

^r Chesne ubi supra.

^s ii. p. 645.

^t Le Maire, antiq. d'Orleans, p. 178.

^u Sid. l. viii. ep. 11. p. 246

^w Theoph. p. 90.

^x Sid. l. vii. ep. 12. p. 199.

^y Vide Du Chesne,

^z Vide Du

^{aa} Canis. tom.

^{bb} Vide Franc.

(I) This memorable battle was fought in the plains of Mauriac, say some, in the plains of Catalaunum or Chalons, say others most advantageous for his Hunns, who were all horse, to engage in; for he was well apprised, that Aetius, who followed him close, would come up with him before he could repass the Rhine. The Roman general, being informed by his scouts, that Attila was waiting for him in those vast plains, resolved, notwithstanding the enemy's advantageous situation, to advance, and put the whole to the issue of a battle. As he arrived late at night in the plains where Attila was encamped, the Gepidæ, who served under Attila, and the Franks, who followed Aetius, meeting in the dark, engaged with such fury, that, on both sides, above fifteen thousand men were left dead upon the spot. We are told, that Attila, desirous to know before-hand the issue of the approaching battle,

A bloody encounter between the Franks and Gepidæ.

y Jörn. c. 41. p. 671.

thers (21); but, to reconcile them, we are only to suppose the same plain to have been known by these two different names; a very natural supposition, and founded on the authority of Jornandes, who tells us in express terms, that the Catalaunic were also called the Mauriac fields; Convenitur in campos Catalaunicos, says he, qui & Mauriaci nominantur (22). However, Valesius distinguishes these two plains; and, to reconcile the authors, supposes two battles to have been fought the one, not decisive, in the plains of Mauriac, that is, near Meri on the Seine, in the diocese of Troyes, and the other, which proved decisive, in the neighbourhood of Catalaunum or Chalons (23). But those who speak of the battle fought in the plains of Mauriac, suppose it to have been decisive, and to have put an end to the war, in the same manner as those do, who describe the battle of Chalons. As for the name of Mauriac, Valesius supposes Meri upon the Seine, in the diocese of Troyes, to have been antiently so called, and quotes Fredegairè in favour of this supposition (24). But Blundell takes the small village of Heiz le Mauru on the river Delir, in the diocese of Chalons, to be the antient Mauriac. Papirius Masson places the Mauriac fields about three leagues from Chalons, near a place called Notre Dame de l'Epine, or Our lady of the Thorn (25).

(21) Du Chefne, tom. i. p. 276. Canif. antiquæ lect. tom. ii. p. 625. (22) Jörn. rer. Goth. c. 46. p. 664. (23) Val. notit. Gall. p. 324. (24) Idem ibid.

battle, consulted his aruspices, who, after having narrowly examined the entrails of the beasts offered in sacrifice, and, according to their custom, scraped their bones, returned the following answer: That the event would not prove favourable to him; but, on the enemy's side, their chief man would fall in the engagement. This answer greatly encouraged Attila, who did not in the least doubt, but by the chief man was meant Aetius, whose death he was glad to purchase at any rate, since he looked upon that great commander as the only person in the whole empire capable of defeating his vast designs^z. He therefore resolved

^z Idem, c. 37. p. 665. Buch. Belg. p. 515. Val. p. 162.

(25). He is therein followed by Cointius (26), and by Sanfon, in his maps of the dioceses of Chalons and Rheims. As for those, who will have this battle to have been fought beyond Orleans at Auriac in Auvergne, or in the neighbourhood of Toulouse, in a district held at that time, as they suppose, by the Catalaunians or Catalans of Spain, though they agree perhaps therein with Olaus, a modern writer, of no authority in himself, they disagree with Gregory of Tours, and all those who write, that Aetius delivered Orleans, namely, with Apollinaris Sidonius, whom we may call an unquestionable and eye-witness. That author tells us in express terms, that Attila took Orleans by storm; but was driven out by Aetius, before he had time to plunder it, and obliged to return back, directing his march towards the Rhine. He did not therefore, according to that writer, penetrate so far into Gaul as Auvergne or Languedoc; and consequently the battle could not be fought at Auriac in Auvergne, or near Toulouse in Languedoc. Jornandes writes, that Thorismund, upon the death of his father, who was killed in the Catalaunic fields, entered Toulouse vested with royal majesty; Thorismundus ergo, patre mortuo in campis Catalaunicis, ubi & pugnaverant, regia majestate subvectus Tolosam ingreditur (27). From these words some conclude the battle to have been fought in the neighbourhood of Toulouse. But Jornandes does not say, that Thorismund made his entry into Toulouse the same day his father was killed, or the day following; nay, he confines it to no certain time, but evidently supposes it not to have happened immediately

(25) Du Chesne, p. 105.

(26) Coint. tom. i. p. 75.

(27) Jorn. c. 41. p. 670.

resolved to give battle, but not to engage till the day was far spent, that night, coming on, might prevent the Romans from pursuing the victory^a. He placed himself in the centre, with the flower of his army around him, as if his chief care had been, says Jornandes^b, to preserve himself, and not to conquer. In the wings were posted the Ostrogoths, the Gepidæ, and the other nations, that followed his banner^c. On the other hand, Aetius placed the Romans, whom he commanded himself, in the left wing, the Visigoths, under the command of Theodoric and his son Thorismund, in the right, and the Alans, with their king Sangiban (K), and probably the Franks, and other auxiliaries, immediately after the battle ; for he tells us, that, after the battle, Aetius advised Thorismund to return home, ut at sedes proprias remearet. The battle therefore was not fought in the territories of the Goths, but at a considerable distance from Toulouse. The young prince, following the advice of Aetius, returned to Gaul ; rediit ad Gallias, says Jornandes, who, by Gaul, could only mean Celtic Gaul, called also Gallia Lugdunensis ; so that Thorismund, in marching to the field of battle, had crossed Celtic, and entered Belgic Gaul, to the latter of which belongs the diocese of Chalons. Hence Scaliger thinks those writers, who will have Attila to have been defeated near Toulouse, to be guilty of a mistake altogether childish, how able soever they may be in other respects. The plains of Chalons, where the two armies engaged, were, according to Jornandes (28), one hundred leagues in length, and seventy in breadth ; but that author allows only fifteen hundred paces to each league. His allowing that extent to the plains of Chalons, gives us room to believe, that he comprised, under that name, all the champain country, whence the province was afterwards called Champagne, a name by which it was well known so early as the sixth century (29). On the same plain of Chalons was fought, in 273, a great battle between the emperor Aurelian and the usurper Tetricus.

^a Jorn: ibid.

^b Idem, p. 666.

^c Idem, p. 667.

(K) Valesius takes Sangiban to be the same person with Sambida, chief of the Alans, on whom Aetius bestowed, about the year 440, as Tiro Prosper informs us, some lands, that lay uncultivated in the Valentinois (30). Others will have him to be

F 2

the

(28) Idem ibid. p. 664.

(29) Du Chesne, p. 105.

(30) Val. rer. Franc. l. iv. p. 272.

The battle of Chalons.

ries, with their respective leaders, in the centre. Thus were those spacious plains quite covered with infinite numbers of combatants, the flower of innumerable nations, ready, says Jornandes, to destroy each other, without any private pique or quarrel, but merely in compliance with the ambition of one man, which, in them, supplied the room of the most mortal hatred, and irreconcilable enmity. What pity, continues our historian, that, by the passion and folly of one man, should perish, in a few hours, what nature has produced in many years^d! Between the two armies was an eminence of an easy ascent, which both parties strove to seize; but Aetius and Thorismund, having possessed themselves of it the first, repulsed without much ado the Hunns, who attempted to dislodge them. This advantage, gained by the Romans in the very beginning of the engagement, raised their courage, and greatly damped the ardour of the enemy; which Attila observing, strove to re-animate his men by a speech, which the reader will find in Jornandes^e, who made it for him. The battle began about four in the afternoon, and is by all writers reckoned one of the most bloody and obstinate engagements mentioned in history. A small brook that crossed the plain, swelled, says Jornandes^f, to a torrent, by the great quantity of blood that was shed. Aetius pressed the Hunns on his side; and ^d Idem, p. 664.

c. 40. p. 668.

^e Idem, c. 39. p. 667, 668.

^f Idem,

the successor of Eacaric, chief of another body of Alans, whom Aetius placed on the banks of the Loire in 447, at a small distance from Armorica, in order to awe the Armoricans, and put a stop to their incursions (31). Sangiban was in Orleans when Attila entered Gaul, having obtained leave to reside there, but, as the barbarians drew near that city, he was ordered to quit it, upon a report, that he designed to deliver it up to them (32). All these Alans had entered Gaul in 406. In the battle Aetius, distrusting Sangiban, placed him in the centre, that, being surrounded by the Romans and Visigoths, he might have no opportunity, says Jornandes (33), of putting in execution the design of which he was suspected.

(31) Buch. Belg. p. 512.
p. 665. Val. rer. Franc. p. 272.

(32) Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 37.
(33) Jorn. c. 36. p. 664.

and Thorismund never ceased harassing them from the eminence he had seized. The Goths, leaving the Alans behind, charged the enemy with no less vigour than the Romans had done. Theodoric, notwithstanding his great age, flew from rank to rank, encouraging his men; but falling unluckily from his horse, he was, according to some, trod to death by his own men. Others write, that he was killed with a dart by a Goth, named Andagus, who fought under Attila, and was descended from the Amali, that is, from the royal family of the Goths^s. The Goths, though no longer animated by the presence of their king, pressed the Hunns so warmly, that Attila, no longer able to withstand them, retired in the end, with those who surrounded him, to his camp, which he barricaded with all the carts and waggons of his army. It being night before the battle was ended, Thorismund, coming down from his eminence to rejoin his own people, found himself entangled among the carts and waggons of the enemy, who fell upon him with great fury. On this occasion he received a wound on the head, and was thrown from his horse; but other Goths flying to his assistance, he was rescued from the danger, and brought back to his camp. As for Aetius, he continued the engagement, till night coming on, the enemy withdrew to their camp, when he likewise retired, not daring to pursue them, as not knowing whether the Goths were conquerors, or conquered. The new day discovered a dreadful sight, those vast plains almost quite covered with dead bodies; but Attila, who, they expected, would renew the engagement at break of day, kept close in his camp, and was resolved, as the Romans were afterwards informed, to burn himself alive, if they had forced it, rather than suffer himself to be taken prisoner. He caused a great noise to be made in his camp, and the trumpets every-where to sound, as if he were upon the point of sallying out, and falling upon the Romans; but did not however stir from his entrenchments. Hence the Romans concluded, that he was conquered, and that his loss was great. However, not thinking it adviseable to attack him in his camp, as he had but a small quantity of provisions, they resolved to keep him closely blocked up^h.

Theodoric,
king of the Visigoths, killed.

He declines a second engagement.

F 3

IN

^s Idem ibid. & c. 50. p. 688.

^h Idem, p. 670.

IN the mean time the Goths, missing their king, fought him on all sides, and at last found him among the dead. His body was carried, in the sight of the Hunns, with the greatest solemnity, and all possible marks of honour, from the field of battle to the camp, where the last duties were paid him, in the midst of which his son Thorismond was proclaimed king, and, in that quality, he ended the ceremony ⁱ. Such is the account the anti-
 The number of the slain. ents give us of this famous action, in which near three hundred thousand men were killed, according to Idatius, on both sides, and two hundred and fifty-two thousand, according to the Amsterdam edition of Jornandes in 1655, including those who fell the night before the battle in the encounter between the Franks and the Gepidæ. Both armies suffered extremely, and the Romans challenged the victory for no other reason, but because Attila kept in his camp the next day, and withdrew afterwards to his own country, without daring to venture a second engagement ^k. Cassiodorus, and Theodoric king of Italy, own, that, in this action, Aetius had the chief command; but ascribe the victory to the courage and bravery of the Goths ^l. Victor Tunniensis extols the courage of the Goths, without so much as mentioning Aetius; and Gregory of Tours will have the success of that day to be owing to the prayers of St. Agnan bishop of Orleans ^m. As to the account of this battle given by the continuator of Idatius ⁿ, Valscius looks upon it as altogether fabulous. Thorismond, greatly affected with the death of his father, resolved to revenge it on the Hunns, and, at the head of his Goths, attack them in their camp; but having first consulted Aetius, whose known wisdom, and long experience, gave great weight to his counsels, that general advised him to return home without delay, and take possession of his father's dominions, lest his brothers, seizing on the deceased king's treasures, should raise disturbances in his absence, and give rise to a civil war. This advice Aetius gave with a political view, fearing, that if the Hunns were utterly extirpated, the Goths, no longer awed by so formidable a power, might prove a no less troublesome enemy to the empire, than those barbarians. However, Thorismond, not suspecting in the least the ⁱ Idem, c. 41. p. 672. ^k Prosp. chron. Buch. Belg. p. 515. ^l Cassiod. chron. & l. iii. epist. 1. p. 40. ^m Du Chesne, p. 277. ⁿ Canis. tom. ii. p. 645.

Aetius persuades Thorismond to turn home with his Goths.

the zeal and sincerity of Aetius, readily embraced his advice, and returned home°. Thus, giving way to groundless suspicions, we often let slip the most favourable opportunities, being wholly taken up in guarding against imaginary evils. The continuator of Idatius tells us, that Aetius, going in the night to the enemy's camp, assured Attila, that the Roman army had been reinforced with a very considerable number of Visigoths, in order to oblige him to retire with more haste, and even to purchase with money a safe retreat. By a like artifice he persuaded Thorismond, according to the same writer, to retire, and pay him a considerable sum. He adds, that Thorismond, finding afterwards he had been imposed upon by Aetius, sent to challenge the promise he had made him, which was to yield to him half Gaul, if he drove out Attila; but Aetius, in lieu of the promised dominions, only sent him a golden dish, weighing five hundred pounds, and enriched with precious stones^p. But to such accounts we can give no credit, upon the bare testimony of a writer, whose authority is of no great weight with us. Thorismond was no sooner gone, than Aetius, by the same artifice, persuaded Merouée, king of the Franks, whose brother aspired at the crown, to withdraw his troops, and return home. Thus he got for himself the spoils that were left in the field of battle^q.

And likewise Merouée with his Franks.

WHEN Attila was first told, that the Visigoths were retired, he imagined it to be only a feint, in order to surprise him, and therefore kept for some time close in his camp; but being afterwards informed of the truth, he resumed courage, says Jornandes^r, and began to hope for victory. However, he made no attempt, but retired quietly to the Rhine, with a small number of troops, says Gregory of Tours^s; and truly his army must have been greatly weakened, since he did not offer to attack Aetius even after the departure of the Goths and Franks. Valesius concludes from hence, that the army he led into Gaul, did not consist, as Jornandes seems to insinuate^t, of five hundred thousand men^u. Jornandes perhaps only meant, that his troops amounted to that number, and not that he marched them all into ° Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 41. p. 671. Du Chesne, tom. i. p. 177.

F 4

^p Canis. p. 645, 646. ^q Du Chesne, p. 277. ^r Jorn.
c. 41. p. 671, 672. ^s Du Chesne, p. 277. ^t Jorn.
c. 36. p. 665. ^u Val. rer. Franc. p. 165.

into Gaul. He had, no doubt, left a considerable number of his forces in the countries he had conquered, to awe the people, and garrison his forts and strong-holds. Besides, it is certain, that this very year 451, a body of Hunns broke into Illyricum, and ravaged that province; but were in the end driven out by Ardaburius, who was thereupon appointed by Marcian emperor of the east, commander in chief of all his forces ^w. The anonymous author of the Altissiodorensian chronology tells us, that Aetius after the engagement, returned to Italy, leaving Attila to commit what ravages he pleased in Gaul^x. This seems highly improbable, the more as that writer supposes the city of Mentz to have been destroyed on this occasion; whereas all other authors speak of the ruin of that city as happening before the siege of Orleans. Such was the issue of Attila's expedition into Gaul, so much spoken of by the writers of those times. The ravages he committed there were, no doubt, very great; but posterity has not a little encreased them, charging Attila and his Hunns with all the devastations, that were afterwards committed by the Franks, the Alemans, and other barbarous nations ^y. It was a long time before the towns he had ruined were rebuilt, or repeopled; nay, so great was the consternation of the inhabitants, that Lupus, the famous bishop of Troyes, returning to his see, after he had attended Attila to the banks of the Rhine, found the city quite abandoned, though Attila, out of regard to him, had spared it; insomuch that he was obliged to retire to a mountain, named Latisco, about fifteen leagues from Troyes, where he endeavoured to persuade his people, who had taken refuge there, to return to their antient habitations; but, not being able to remove their fears, after he had continued two years among them, he left them, and retired to Mascon ^z. Aetius pursued Attila as far as the Rhine; but never offered to attack him, thinking it, as most authors conjecture, impolitic to weaken him too much, lest he should no longer be in a condition to awe the Franks and Goths, and divert them from raising disturbances in the empire.

ATTILA, rather enraged than disheartened at the disappointment he had met with, and the loss he had sustained in ^w Concil. tom. iv. p. 76.

^x Altiss. chronol. p. 60.

^y Vide Nic. Serar. res Mogunt. l. i. c. 7. p. 27.

^z Surius,

p. 347.

in Gaul, resolved to make an irruption into Italy, where he hoped to find more booty, and less opposition, there being no Goths, Franks, Alans, or Burgundians there to oppose him. Pursuant to this resolution, having reinforced his army with powerful supplies sent him out of Scythia, he left Pannonia; and finding the passes of the Alps unguarded, as no hostilities were expected on that side, he entered Italy in the latter end of the year 451, as Jornandes and Idatius seem to insinuate^a, or, what is more probable, in the beginning of the following year 452. It is impossible to express the terror and consternation, which so sudden and unexpected an irruption occasioned, even in the most distant provinces. Aetius, who had opposed the barbarians so vigorously in Gaul, betrayed, on this occasion, no less fear than the rest; nay, he was at first for retiring with the emperor out of Italy, and taking refuge in Gaul; but shame getting the better of his fear, he continued in Italy, and began to assemble the forces, that were dispersed up and down the provinces. In the mean time frequent councils were held at court, in the senate, and in the assemblies of the Roman people; but the only expedient that occurred, was to send ambassadors to Attila, and try whether they could, by offering him most advantageous terms, induce him to conclude a peace, and retire. In the mean time he ravaged, without restraint or controul, the Italian provinces, and took by storm several cities^b. He met with no opposition till he came to Aquileia, the metropolis of the province called Venetia. As that city was well fortified, and defended by the flower of the Roman troops, all his efforts against it proved, for a long time, unsuccessful; insomuch that his men began to mutiny, and declare, they would abandon the siege^c. But Attila, having one day observed some storks carrying their young ones out of the city into the fields, as he was then deliberating with himself, whether he should raise or pursue the siege, took this for a lucky omen; and turning to his men, "Behold, he said, those birds abandoning a city, which they know, by a natural instinct, is near ruin." The soldiers, believing their king well skilled in auspices, were so animated with this observation, that, doubling their efforts,

^a Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 42. p. 672.
ibid.

^b Idem ibid.

^c Idem

Aquileia, and several other cities, taken, and destroyed.

Venice
founded.

Milan taken and plundered.

efforts, they made an incredible number of warlike engines, with which they continued battering the city night and day, and at length took it by storm, plundered it for several days, and laid it in ashes, not one house being left standing, nor one person alive, that fell into their hands^d. Encouraged with this success, without much-ado, they made themselves masters of the other cities of that province, viz. Treviso, Verona, Mantua, Cremona, Brescia, and Bergamo, which they plundered with the utmost cruelty, putting all to fire and sword, without distinction of sex, age, or condition. It is commonly said and believed, that, on this occasion, the inhabitants of the province of Venetia, to avoid the cruelty of the Hunns, retired to the islands on their coast, and there laid the foundation of a city, which, borrowing its name from the province, was called Venetiæ, and is known to us by the name of Venice • (L). From the province of Venetia, Attila advanced into Liguria, where he took and plundered Milan, the metropolis of that province, and the usual seat of the emperors of the west. He laid in ashes the city of Pavia, and several other places in that neighbourhood, raging every-where with such cruelty, as can hardly be expressed or conceived^f (M). He was prompted by ^d Idem ibid. Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 4. p. 188. Theoph. p. 92. Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. p. 277. ^e Por. de imp. c. 28. p. 69, 72. ^f Jorn. ibid. p. 673.

(L) Cassiodorus speaking of the Venetians, as he styles them, about fifty years after, says, that they inhabited the islands of the Adriatic; that they had no other fence against the waves but hurdles, no other food but fish, no wealth besides their boats, and no merchandize but salt, which they exchanged for other provisions. They were employed in the time of Cassiodorus, in carrying from Istria to Ravenna the corn and oil, which that province was obliged to furnish (34); so that they were then subject to the Goths.

(M) We are told, that Attila, seeing at Milan some pictures, representing the Roman emperors sitting on thrones of gold, and the Scythians, that is, the Goths or Hunns, prostrate at their feet, caused himself to be painted sitting on a throne, and the Roman emperors carrying on their shoulders sacks filled with gold, which they emptied at his feet (35).

(34) Cassiodor. l. xii. ep. 24. p. 199. Val. rer. Franc. l. iv. p. 169. (35) Jorn. ibid. p. 673.

by his thirst of booty, to march to Rome, and plunder that metropolis of the western empire ; and the Romans expected daily to see him at the gates of their city, which, it seems, they were not in a condition to defend against so powerful an enemy ; for Leo the Great writes, that Heaven, by granting them peace, had saved Rome, and delivered the Roman people from slaughter and bondage ^g. However, Attila, though he had publicly declared his resolution of marching to Rome, was afterwards diverted from putting it in execution by his own men, says Jornandes, mindful of the untimely end of Alaric, who died soon after he had plundered that metropolis, and dreading the same fate might overtake their leader ^h. But this motive surely could be of no great weight with Attila. His army was greatly weakened for want of provisions ; a contagious distemper raged amongst his troops to such a degree, that Heaven seemed to fight against him ; Marcian, emperor of the east, had sent a chosen body of troops to the assistance of Valentinian, which, under the conduct of Aetius, had gained some advantages over the Hunns ; such of that nation as had remained at home, were at the same time greatly harassed by the forces, which Marcian had sent against them.

Attila designs to march to Rome.

What diverted him from putting his design in execution.

WHILE Attila, thus embarrassed, was in suspense whether or no he should pursue his march to Rome, ambassadors arrived from Valentinian, with proposals for an agreement. The sending of ambassadors was the only expedient, as we have hinted above, that occurred to the prince, and his council, to deliver Italy from the cruel ravages of the barbarians. At the head of this embassy was the celebrated Leo, bishop of Rome, a person famed for his eminent piety and learning. His colleagues were Albienus or Avienus, who had been consul in 450, and Trigecius, formerly prefect ⁱ. They found Attila on the banks of the Menzo, not far from Mantua, and were received by him with uncommon demonstrations of kindness and esteem. He concluded with them, soon after their arrival, a kind of treaty, which, it seems, was but a truce ; for he threatened to return to Italy, and commit there greater ravages than ever, unless the princess Honoria was sent him, with the share of the imperial treasures that was due to her ^k. One of the articles of this treaty was,

Attila concludes a truce with Valentinian.

^g Leo, serm. lxxxix. c. 1. p. 3400.
ⁱ Idem ibid. Leo, tom. ii. p. 309.
Prosp. chron.

^h Jorn. ubi sup.
^k Jorn. p. 673.

He retires out of Italy.

was, that an annual pension should be paid to Attila, the emperor being glad to redeem the empire at any rate from the calamities it suffered ^l. The treaty was no sooner signed, than Attila commanded his men to forbear all hostilities; and soon after leaving Italy, he retired, with all his troops, beyond the Danube ^m. This peace, or rather truce, was probably concluded in the beginning of July; for Leo was still at Rome on the tenth of June, as appears from one of his letters to Theodorus of Frejus bearing that date ⁿ.

He returns
into Gaul.

As Attila was incapable of living himself, or suffering others to live, in peace, he was no sooner returned to his own country, than he began to threaten the eastern empire with an invasion, if Marcian did not send him, without delay, the tribute, which his predecessor Theodosius the younger had agreed to pay him yearly ^o. But this was only a feint, says Jornandes, to conceal his real design, which was to return into Gaul, and there make war upon the Visigoths. Pursuant to this design, having left Pannonia, and crossed Rhoetia, he followed the course of the Rhone, entered the country now known by the name of Dauphiny, and there fell unexpectedly upon the Alans, who had been allowed by Aetius, as we have hinted above, to settle in the Valentinois. But Thorismond, king of the Visigoths, whose dominions were parted from those of the Alans only by the Rhone, being well apprised, that Attila, in reducing the Alans, had no other view but to open himself a way into his territories, joined his neighbours with all his forces, and, meeting Attila, gave him a total overthrow; which obliged him to return with shame and disgrace into his own country ^p. Jornandes and Sigebert are the only writers, who mention this second irruption of the Hunns into Gaul; and Valesius, not without reason, questions the truth of what they write ^q. Perhaps Thorismond made war upon the Alans, who, finding themselves attacked by so powerful an enemy, called in a body of Hunns to their assistance; but were defeated, together with their allies, by the king of the Visigoths; for Gregory of Tours tells us, that Thorismond subdued the Alans ^r.

Where he is defeated by the Visi-goths.

As

^l Jorn. c. 49. p. 685.

ferm. lxxxii. p. 340. et epist. lxxxiii. p. 606.

40. Jorn. c. 43. p. 674.

rer. Franc. l. iv. p. 171.

7. p. 272.

^m Idem, p. 673.

^p Idem, p. 674, 675.

^r Greg. Tur. rer. Franc. l. ii. c.

ⁿ Leo,

^o Prisc. p.

^q Val.

As for Jornandes, we have shewn, in several places of the Roman history, that he was far from being well acquainted with the affairs of the Visigoths. We find no farther mention of Attila in the antient historians, till the time of his death, which happened, according to Idatius, immediately after he was returned from Italy^s. Count Marcellinus places it in 454, but Prosper, Cassiodorus, and Victor Tunniensis, in 453, or 452. Jornandes gives us the following account of his death, which he copied from Priscus: Attila, not satisfied with the many wives he had already, married a young woman of extraordinary beauty, named Ildico. On the day of the nuptials, which were celebrated with the utmost magnificence, the king, transported with joy, drank to excess, contrary to his custom; and being overcome with sleep, retired with his bride, and slept with his face upwards. In that posture he was seized with an hæmorrhagia, or flux of blood, to which he was subject. As the blood had not a free course through the usual passages, it fell into his throat, and stifled him^t. The next day, his officers, not seeing him appear, began to apprehend, that some misfortune had happened to him. Having therefore long waited for him in vain, they called him with great noise, and, not hearing him stir nor answer, they at length forced the doors of his apartment, when they found him dead, without any marks of violence, and his bride sitting by him bathed in tears, and covering her face with her veil. At this sight they cut part of their hair, according to the custom of their nation, and tore their faces, to bewail so great a warrior, not with tears, like women, but like men, with blood^u. To this account Priscus adds a very remarkable circumstance, which he will not allow us to call into question, viz. that the very night Attila died, the emperor Marcian being very uneasy and restless in reflecting on the menaces and great power of that warlike prince, his bow was shewn him broken in many pieces; which was revealing to him the death of an enemy, whom he so much dreaded, and at the same time informing him, that the vast empire he had founded in the north would be soon divided, and, as it were, broken in pieces. Count Marcellinus writes, that the tyrant of Europe underwent the fate of Holophernes, being killed, as he was, by a woman^x. But Cassiodorus^y and Theopha-

^s Idat. p. 29.
^{ibid.}

^t Jorn. c. 49. p. 683, 684.
^u Cassiodor. chron.

^x Idem

phanes ^z agree in their account of his death with Jornandes. Thus, he was justly punished, says Jornandes ^a, with a dishonourable and ignominious death, for the cruel and unnatural murder of his brother, and the streams of blood, which his unbounded ambition had prompted him to shed.

His funeral. His body was conveyed with great solemnity from the place where he died to the fields, and there laid under a silk tent, which some horsemen, chosen out of the whole nation of the Hunns, often riding round, sung, in a doleful strain, the noble achievements of their king. This mournful ceremony was succeeded by a joyful one, a great banquet on the deceased prince's tomb, which lasted till the night was far spent, when his body was secretly interred, being inclosed in three coffins, the first of gold, the second of silver, and the third of iron. The latter was to signify, that he had subdued many nations with his sword; and the two former, that he had obliged the Roman emperors to share their treasures with him. In the same grave with him were buried the arms and rich spoils, which he had taken in war from other princes, and great commanders. In the end, all those were put to death, who had been employed about his grave, lest their avarice should, some time or other, prompt them to plunder it ^b. This is all we find in the antients concerning Attila the renowned king of the Hunns. We might have added many things from the chronicles of Hungary, from Callimachus, and Olahus, who had written the life of that prince, and filled whole books with his exploits; but as their accounts are not vouched by the antients, and their authority is of no weight in itself, we have not thought any thing they relate worthy of notice. With Attila ended the empire, which he had, with so much blood and treasure, founded in the north; for a civil war being kindled upon his death among his numerous issue, the several nations he had subdued laid hold of that opportunity to shake off the yoke, and recover their antient liberty. Thus the Hunns ceased to be the terror of both empires, and, for several ages, performed nothing, which historians have thought worthy of mention.

He is succeeded by Ellac. Year after Christ 453.

ATTILA had by his last will, as we read in Jornandes ^c, appointed Ellac, his eldest son, to succeed him, and to rule

^z Theoph. chronograph. p. 92. 93.
661. ^b Idem ibid. p. 684.
686.

^a Jorn. c. 35. p.
^c Idem ibid. p.

rule over his other children, as well as over the many nations he had conquered. Ellac was, it seems, a man of great boldness, intrepidity, and experience in war, and consequently capable of maintaining, and even extending, the conquests of his father; but as he had an incredible number of brothers, and they all jointly insisted upon an equal division of their father's dominions, a bloody war was kindled, which involved in the utmost confusion, not only the northern provinces, but both Pannonias, and the other countries on the Danube, where the Romans had allowed them to settle. But while they all strove to be sovereigns; they all lost the sovereignty for which they strove; for Ardaric, king of the Gepidæ, hearing that they proposed to divide among them by lot the nations, which their father had conquered, and not able to bear, that powerful kings, and warlike people, should be thus treated like the meanest slaves, openly declared, that he would not obey the sons of Attila, but rescue himself and his people from the yoke they so shamefully groaned under. His example was followed by several other nations, that hastened to join him. Ellac, leaving for the present his brothers, marched against him at the head of all his forces. Hereupon a battle ensued on the banks of the Netad in Pannonia, in which the Hunns were utterly routed, and thirty thousand of them killed on the spot, with their king Ellac, who is said on that occasion to have performed wonders, and to have behaved like a true son of the great Attila^d. The Hunns were so disheartened with this overthrow, and the general revolt of the nations they had conquered, that, being pressed by the Gepidæ, they retired to the country, which they had taken from the Goths in 376, towards the Euxine sea and the mouths of the Danube, and the Gepidæ remained masters of all antient Dacia, lying north of that river, which the Hunns had possessed ever since their first irruption into Europe. The Gepidæ begged the friendship of the Romans, and a small annual pension to support them; which was readily granted, and continued to be paid even in the time of the emperor Justinian^e. Several other nations, thus delivered from the yoke of the Hunns, begged and obtained leave of Marcian, or his successor Leo, to settle in the Roman territories. Among these mention is made of the Squiri, Satagairæ, and Alans, who, under the conduct of Candax, their king or leader, settled in Lesser Scythia

Civil wars between him and his brothers.

Ellac and his army cut off by the Gepidæ.

^d Idem ibid.

^e Idem ibid. & p. 637.

Scythia and Lower Moesia. To the Rugians, Sarmatians, and Cemandrians, lands were granted in Illyricum, near a place called the castle of Mars. To the Ostrogoths Marci-an granted all Pannonia, from Sirmium, now Sirmish in Slavonia, to Vindobona, at present Vienna in Austria. Even Ernac, Attila's youngest son, and with him several Hunns, submitted to the Romans, who granted them lands on the most distant borders of Lesser Scythia, in Dacia, and amongst the Sarmatians in Illyricum^h. The other sons of Attila, uniting their forces, attempted to drive the Goths out of Pannonia, and recover that province; but Valemir, king of the Goths, meeting them with only a handful of men, says Jornandes, put them to flight, and pursued them with such slaughter, that few of them escapedⁱ. About eight years after, while the Goths were engaged in a war with the Satagæ, Dinzio, one of Attila's sons, and styled by Jornandes king of the Hunns, having assembled what forces he could, entered the territories of the Goths, putting all to fire and sword, and laid siege to Basiana, thought to be the present city of Posega, the metropolis of a country bearing the same name, and lying between the Save and the Draw^k. This the Goths no sooner understood, than leaving the Satagæ, they marched against the Hunns, and drove them out with such slaughter, that they never after offered to molest them^l.

They are utterly routed by the Goths.

And by the Romans.

THE Hunns, thus weakened by their intestine wars, and the great losses they had sustained in the two above-mentioned irruptions, continued quiet till the year 466, when passing the Danube in the depth of winter on the ice, they broke into Dacia, under the conduct of one Hormidac, and committed dreadful ravages in that province, putting all to fire and sword. But Anthemius, who was afterwards emperor, marching against them with another general, whom our author does not name, gained several advantages over them, and at last defeated them in a pitched battle, during which the other general went over to the enemy; but his men, probably the cavalry, for Anthemius was general of the foot, not following him, Anthemius, without betraying the least fear or surprize, continued the engagement, and in the end gained a complete victory. However, he suffered the Hunns to retire unmolested, upon ^h Idem p. 688.

p. 106.

ⁱ Idem c. 52, 53. p. 690.
^l Jorn. p. 691.

^k Baudr.

on their putting to death the general who had gone over to them^m. The Hunns were no sooner returned to their own country, than the children of Attila sent deputies to Leo, then emperor of the east, to propose a peace, and beg he would appoint a market to be held on the Danube, to which the Hunns might freely resort, and trade with the Romans. To this Leo would by no means consent; which Dengizic, one of the sons of Attila, by Jornandesⁿ called Dinizio, and by others Dinziric^o, resented to such a degree, that he was for continuing the war. But his brother Hernac, who, as we said above, had been allowed by the emperor Marcian to settle in Lesser Scythia, and was then engaged in other wars, declared he would by no means enter into this^p. Dengizic however, persist-^{They break into Dacia. Year after Christ 466,} ing in his first resolution, drew together a considerable army, and encamped on the banks of the Danube. Arnagastus, who, at that time, guarded the banks of that river on the side of Thrace, sent immediately an officer to the Hunns, to enquire upon what provocation they had taken arms. Dengizic answered, That he had taken arms with a design to make war upon Leo, unless he granted to him and his men lands and money. To this Arnagastus replied by the emperor's orders, That Leo would readily grant both to such as were willing to submit to him, and serve him in his wars. But Dengizic, not satisfied with this answer, began^{Dengizic, one of Attila's sons, killed.} hostilities, and continued the war, of which we know no particulars, till he was killed by Arnagastus, styled, on that occasion, general of Thrace^q. His head was sent to Constantinople in 468, or 469, and carried into the city with great pomp, while the people were beholding the sports of the circus, which they left for a sight to them far more agreeable. It was borne through the chief streets of the city on the point of a spear, and left for some days exposed to public view^r.

THE Hunns, disheartened with the losses they sustained in this war, and the death of their leader, continued, it seems, quiet for the space of near sixty years, without molesting either the Romans, or their neighbours; for we find

^m Sid. p. 110. & car. ii. p. 296—298. ⁿ Jorn. c. 55. p. 691. ^o Chron. Alex. p. 688. ^p Prisc. p. 44. Jorn. p. 688. ^q Prisc. ibid. Chron. Alex. p. 744. ^r Marc. chron. Chron. Alex. ibid.

Boarex, queen of the Hunns, fights for the Romans.
Year after
Christ 526.

Gordas, king
of the Hunns, embraces the christian religion, and is put to death by his subjects.

find no mention made of them from this time to the year 526, the first of the emperor Justinian's reign, when two of their kings, Styra and Glones, stirred up by Cabades king of Persia, then at war with the Romans, broke into the empire at the head of two powerful armies; but Boarex, the widow of Balach king of the Sabirite Hunns, a woman of a warlike genius, and manly temper, espousing the cause of the Romans against the Persians, led to the assistance of the emperor an army an hundred thousand strong; and, meeting the two kings, gave them battle, cut most of their men in pieces, and took Styra himself prisoner, and sent him in chains to Constantinople^s. It is a great pity, that neither Theophanes, nor the author of the miscellaneous history, have named this brave Amazon, this warlike heroine, who deserved so well of the empire. The same year Gordas, king of the Hunns dwelling near the Bosphorus Cimmerius, came in person to Constantinople, to court the friendship of Justinian, and conclude an alliance with that prince; which he did accordingly. As he had an opportunity, during his stay at Constantinople, of seeing the ceremonies of the christian religion, he was so taken with them, that he desired to be instructed in the mysteries of our holy faith, and, in the end, with great solemnity, received the sacrament of baptism in the presence of the emperor, who was his sponsor. Upon his departure, Justinian loaded him with rich presents, committing to him the defence of the borders of the empire on that side, especially of the city of Bosphorus. Gordas, returning home, ordered the idols to be broken, and their temples demolished, throughout his dominions; which enraged the superstitious populace to such a degree, that, revolting from their prince, they seized him, put him to death, and raised his brother, named Mugaris, to the throne in his room. Mugaris was no sooner proclaimed king, than he marched, with all his forces, against the city of Bosphorus, and, having surprised it, put the Romans he found there to the sword. The emperor, being acquainted with what had happened, and greatly grieved for his friend and ally, dispatched one John, who had been consul, at the head of a numerous army of Scythians, to recover the place, and take vengeance of the rebels; but, at his approach, they abandoned the city, city, and fled with such precipitation, that the Roman general could never come up with them [†]. We should more readily give credit to these remarkable events, were they vouched either by Procopius or Agathias ; but the silence of these two writers makes us question the truth of what the others relate. But the irruption, which happened in ^{The Hunns} 539, the thirteenth of the emperor Justinian's reign, is ^{break into} attested by Procopius. The Hunns, according to that ^{the empire.} writer, passing the Danube that year in great multitudes, ^{Year after} laid waste Thrace, Greece, Illyricum, and all the provinces from the Ionian sea to the very suburbs of Constantinople ; nay, having crossed the Hellespont, they extended their ravages to Asia, where they committed unheard-of cruelties ; thence crossing again into the Chersonesus, they returned home loaded with an immense booty. In this irruption they took thirty two castles in Illyricum, destroyed Cassandria, and carried with them unmolested an hundred and twenty thousand captives ^⁹. Being thus become anew formidable to the empire, Justinian, to keep them quiet, allowed them some lands in Thrace, ^{Some lands} and agreed to pay them an annual pension, upon their pro- ^{allowed them} mising to serve, when wanted, in the Roman armies. ^{in Thrace,} These were the Cuturgurian Hunns. As for the Uturgurians, who had joined them in this irruption, they retired, with their booty, to their own country bordering on the Euxine sea ; but, finding that too narrow for them, they drove out the Goths, by Procopius called Detraxitæ, who had settled in the neighbourhood of the Palus Mæotis, and possessed themselves of their country. As they were at a great distance from the empire, they turned their arms against their neighbours the Sarmatians, endeavouring to enlarge their bounds on that side, without giving any further molestation to the Romans. But the Cuturgurians, notwithstanding the pension paid them yearly by the emperor, made several inroads into the neighbouring provinces, behaving like declared enemies, says Procopius, while they pretended to be friends and allies. Hereup- ^{Justinian stirs} on the emperor wrote to the Uturgurians, complaining to ^{up the Utur-} them of their countrymen, and offering to pay to them ^{gurian against} the pension, which he allowed the Cuturgurians, provided ^{the Cuturgu-} ^{rian Hunns,} they [†] Theoph. ibid. Miscel. ibid. p. 407.

^s Theoph. p. 249. Auctor miscel. l. xvi. p. 461.

G 2

Pers. c. 4.

^⁹ Procop. bell.

they put a stop to the ravages of the latter; and engaged to make war upon them as often as they broke into the empire. The Uturgurians, encouraged with this offer, passing the Tanais, beyond which many of them dwelt, hastened with long marches into the Roman territories, and, falling unexpectedly upon the Cuturgurians while busied in plundering the provinces lying on the Danube, defeated them with great slaughter, obliged them to quit their booty, and drove them quite out of the empire ^w.

The Cuturgurians break anew into Thrace; but are put to flight by Belisarius.

However, a few years after, that is, in 558, the Cuturgurian Hunns, taking the advantage of the frost, passed the Danube, and, after having laid waste great part of Mysia and Thrace, divided their numerous forces into two bodies, one of them taking their rout towards Greece, and the other marching for the Thracian Chersonesus. The latter, under the conduct of one of their chiefs, named Zamerga, having passed the long wall, came, without meeting with the least opposition, within an hundred and fifty furlongs of Constantinople, and laid waste the whole country round it. But Belisarius, though weakened with old age to such a degree, that he was scarce able to hold a shield, or brandish a sword, marching out against them with an handful of men, fell upon them unawares, put them to flight, and delivered both the emperor and the city from the dangers that threatened them; but that brave commander being disgraced upon his return to Constantinople, as we have related elsewhere ^x, the barbarians, who were hastening back to their own country, no sooner heard, that he was no more to be employed against them, than they returned before the royal city, committing dreadful ravages in all the countries through which they passed. But one Germanus, a youth of great expectation, putting himself at the head of the imperial troops, fell unexpectedly upon them, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to save themselves by a precipitous flight. The victory had proved complete, had not young Germanus, by exposing his person more than a prudent general would have done, received a dangerous wound, which prevented him from pursuing the fugitives. Soon after, that party, which had taken their rout towards

And by Germanus.

^w Idem bell. Goth. l. iv. c. 4. Joan. Antioch. apud Ale-man. p. 52. Agath. l. v. p. 155. ^x Hist. univers.
vol. xvi. p. 316.

wards Greece, finding the streights of Thermophylæ guarded by the natives, returned to Thrace, and there joined Zamerga, who, being thus reinforced, threatened to renew his ravages, and to put to death all the prisoners he had taken, unless a sufficient sum was sent forthwith to redeem them. Justinian, not caring to provoke the barbarians, and at the same time pitying the condition of the unhappy captives, sent a considerable sum to Zamerga; who no sooner received it, than he set the prisoners at liberty, and, putting a stop to all hostilities and depredations, returned beyond the Danube. In the mean time, the emperor privately dispatched ambassadors to Sandilichus, king of the Uturgurian Hunns, to whom he paid an annual pension, acquainting him with the late inroads of the Cuturgurians, to whom, he said, he had paid the sum that was due to him, and was resolved to do so for the future, unless he shewed himself, by a speedy revenge, worthy of his friendship. Upon this message, Sandilichus, highly incensed against the Cuturgurians, broke into their territories at the head of a powerful army, and, falling upon Zamerga as he was returning from Thrace, cut great numbers of his men in pieces, and obliged him to quit the rich booty, with which his army was loaded. This gave rise to a bloody war between the two nations, which lasted many years, says Agathias y, from whom we have borrowed this whole account, and ended at last in the ruin of both; for, being greatly weakened by their civil wars, they became a prey, says that writer, to other nations, insomuch that they lost their very name, and were blended with the nations they served. But the utter destruction of that people, continues our historian, happened afterwards, as shall be related by us, according to the order of time. With these words he closes the fifth book of his history, the last of those that have reached us; so that for a further account of the affairs of the Hunns, we must have recourse to more modern writers. Among these, Venantius Fortunatus tells us, that in 560, a great body of Hunns, probably driven out of their own country by the neighbouring nations, took their rout through Germany, with a design to pass the Rhine, as Attila had formerly done, and settle in Gaul. In that country then reigned the four sons of Clotharius, viz. Cherebert at Pa-

The emperor or stirs up the Uturgu-rian Hunns against them.

ris ; Chilperic at Soissons ; Guntram at Orleans ; and Sigebert at Mentz. The latter was no sooner informed of the motions of the Hunns, than, passing the Rhine at the head of a powerful army, he resolved to meet them in Thuringia, which then belonged to him, and there give them battle. Accordingly the two armies met, and engaged on the banks of the Elbe with incredible fury. The victory was long doubtful ; but in the end Sigebert, who was a warlike prince, gained a complete victory over the barbarians, of whom he killed many thousands, and obliged the rest to return through by-ways into Pannonia ^z.

They are defeated by Sigebert,
king of the Franks.

Year after Christ 560.
The Hunns
masters of Dacia, Mœsia, and both Pannonia's.

No farther mention is made of the Hunns by any credible historian, till the reign of Charles the Great, in whose time they were masters of Dacia, now Transylvania and Valachia ; of Upper Mœsia, now Servia ; and of the two Pannonia's, viz. the Upper, containing the present provinces of Carniola, Carinthia, and the greater part of Austria, and the Lower, comprising Bosnia, Slavonia, and that part of Hungary that lies beyond the Danube. In the year 776, while Charles was in Saxony, two princes of the Hunns, Caganus and Jugunus, sent ambassadors to him, desiring his friendship and alliance. Charles received them with extraordinary marks of honour, and readily complied with their request. However, they entered, not long after, into an alliance with Tassilo duke of Bavaria, who, revolting from Charles, raised great disturbances in Germany. This Charles wisely dissembled, till he had utterly reduced Bavaria, when a misunderstanding arising between him and them about the borders of their respective territories, he resolved to lay hold of that opportunity to be revenged on them for their sending under-hand succours to Tassilo. Accordingly he ordered levies to be made throughout his dominions, and having by that means assembled a very numerous army, he divided it into two bodies, whereof one he committed to the conduct of count Theodoric, and Magnifrid his chamberlain, with orders to break into Dacia, while he himself, with the other, entered Pannonia by the way of Bavaria. The two armies laid waste the territories of the Hunns far and near, burnt their villages, and took several of their strong holds, to which they had fled, not being able to keep the field against so powerful an enemy. Thus he continued ravaging the country, putting all

to

^z Venantius Fortunat. l. vii.

to fire and sword, for the space of eight years, till that warlike nation was entirely subdued, and almost utterly extirpated. In one of these expeditions, Henry duke of Forum Julii, now Friuli, took the royal palace of the Hunns, called Rhing, in which he found an immense booty, great part whereof was, by Charles's orders, sent to Rome, as a present to that see, or, as they term it, to St. Peter's. The entire reduction of the Hunns happened, according to the best chronologers, in the year of the christian æra 794. Some authors write, that, by this long war, the whole race of the antient Hunns was cut off; and that the country was afterwards peopled by the neighbouring nations, to whom the present Hungarians owe their origin. Of this opinion was the celebrated Æneas Sylvius, raised afterwards to the see of Rome. But the Hungarian writers maintain their nation to be descended from the antient Hunns, who, they say, were subdued, but not utterly extirpated, by the Franks. To confirm this, Bonfinius tells us, that in his time, a nation was, by some merchants, discovered on the banks of the Tanais, speaking the same language with that of the present Hungarians; and that Matthias, then king of Hungary, being assured by persons of credit, whom he himself had sent into those parts, that the report of the merchants was true, dispatched embassadors to the chiefs of that nation, entreating them to send a numerous colony into Hungary, at that time but thinly inhabited, by reason of the long war, in which great numbers of the natives had perished. The prince's request, says our author, has not yet been, but will be, we hope, one time or other, complied with^b. Others write, that, upon the death of Attila, the Hunns were quite driven out of Pannonia, and never returned till the year 744, when, under the conduct of one Hungar, a word signifying in their language courageous or valiant, they entered Pannonia anew, and settled in the antient seats of their forefathers, after having driven out those, who, coming from the neighbouring countries, had seized them, and held them for some ages. From Hungar they were called Hungarians, and the country no longer Pannonia, but Hungary. Thus Ranzanus^c; but what he writes evidently contradicts all the antient historians, who, as we have seen in the course of this history,

G 4

history,

^a Aimoinus, l. iv. c. 86.
l. iii. p. 39.

^b Bonfin. rer. Ungar. dec. i.

^c P. Ranzan. c. 6. p. 218.

history, speak frequently of the irruptions of the Hunns, of their passing the Danube, and laying waste the Roman provinces, long after the death of Attila and his children. Besides, the inhabitants of Pannonia are, by the writers of those times, constantly styled Hunns, and no mention is made of any other nation dwelling in that country. As for the name of Hungarian, most writers will have it to be compounded of Hunni and Avars, two names of one and the same nation^d. But on this subject, nothing can be offered, but what is founded on mere conjecture. And this is all we have been able to gather from the antients concerning the origin, migrations, government, manners, and wars, of the Hunns. As for the modern writers of the history of Hungary, their accounts of those antient times are, for the most part, evidently fabulous, quite groundless, or altogether improbable. We have therefore all along confined ourselves to the antient and original writers, who lived in or near the times, in which the things they relate were transacted, not thinking any thing related by the moderns, and not vouched by them, worthy of a place in our history.

S E C T. II.

The antient state and history of the Goths, till the settling of the Visigoths in Spain, and the Ostrogoths in Italy.

Scandinavia the country of the Goths.

THE Goths, a warlike nation, and, above all others, famous in the Roman history, came originally, according to Jornandes^a, out of Scandinavia, a country rightly styled by him officina gentium, and vagina nationum, on account of the incredible multitudes of people, that, issuing from thence in swarms, over-ran and stocked with inhabitants other, as well distant as neighbouring, countries. Scandinavia, comprising the present Sweden, Norway, Lapland, and Finnmark, was, by the antients, thought to be an island^b; but is now well known to be a peninsula. It is by Pliny called Scandinavia^c, or, as Vossius^d, and after him him Gronovius, will have it, Scandinovia ; by Xenophon Lampfacenus, Baltia^e ; by Timæus, Basilea ; and by Pytheas, sometimes Basilea, and sometimes Abalus^f. The writers of the middle ages style it Scanza, Scanzia, Scantia, and Scandia ; which names, as well as that of Scandinavia, some derive from the German or Gothic word Scenzen, signifying castles ; for the first inhabitants, say they, turned the high and steep rocks, with which the country abounds, into castles ; and hence came the word Scandinavia, that is, a country filled with castles^g. Others will have the names Scandinavia, Scanzia, &c. to come from the word Seekanten, importing the sea-coast or shore^h. As for the Greek word Baltia, it signifies a breaking in of the sea. What we call the Baltic, was known to Tacitus by the name of the Suevian sea ; and to Mela and Pliny by that of the Codan gulf. The bay in which the Vistula, now the Weiffel, empties itself, is called by Ptolemy the Venedic bay, no doubt from the neighbouring Venedi, the antient inhabitants of Livonia, Lithuania, and part of Poland. In antient times the Vistula was the boundary on the east between Germany and Sarmatia. In Scandinavia Tacitus places two different Nations, the Suiones and the Sittones, of whom the former placed there inhabited the present Sweden, and the latter Norway ; for by Tacitus and Ptolemy they were separated, according to Tacitus, by mount Sevo, now Scagen ; which mountain, or rather ridge of mountains, parts Norway from Sweden. The Suiones were divided, according to Ptolemy, into the following tribes, viz. the Chedini, Phavoni, Phiræsi, Dauciones, Hilleviones, Scritofinni or Scritobani, mentioned also by Procopiusⁱ, and the Gutæ. But these were either Gothic nations, or had settled in the country after the Goths were masters of it, it being certain, that long before Tacitus's time, Scandinavia was inhabited by the Goths, tho' not yet known to the Romans by that name ; nay, the learned Grotius, and after him Sheringham, and most of the northern writers, maintain with arguments, which have not yet been confuted, that the Cimbrians, Getes, and Goths, were one and the same nation ; that Scandinavia was first peopled by them ; and that from thence they sent colonies into the islands in Scandinavia first peopled by the Goths, and the likewise the islands in the Baltic, &c.

^a Vide Vales. rer. Franc. l. ix. p. 153. ^a Jorn. rer. Get. p. 83. ^b Plin. l. iv. c. 13. ^c Idem ibid. ^d Voss. in s. 3. l. vi. Pomp. Mel.

^e Plin. ibid. in præfat. ad script. Goth. p. 13, & seq. ^f Idem l. xxvii. c. 11. ^g Grot. Goth. l. i. c. 4. p. 34. ^h Prætor. in orbe ⁱ Procop. rer. Goth. l. xi. c. 15.

the Baltic, the Chersonesus, and the adjacent places, yet destitute of inhabitants. The islands were called by them with one common name Wetallaheedh, signifying, in the Gothic language, land surrounded on all sides with water ; but the Romans, after they became acquainted with the Goths under the name of Cimbrians, called them the Cimbrian islands ; which appellation they gave likewise to the Chersonesus, now Jutland ^k. The time when the Goths first settled in Scandinavia, and the time when they first peopled with their colonies the islands, the Chersonesus, and the neighbouring places, are equally uncertain, though the Gothic annals suppose the latter to have happened under the conduct of king Eric, whom they make contemporary with Saruch, the great grandfather of Abraham. But it is not at all probable, as Sheringham well observes, that Scandinavia, a country of no small extent, should, in the time of Saruch, who died soon after the confusion of languages, abound with people, so as to send colonies into other countries^l. Of this migration of the Getes or Goths from Scandinavia into the abovementioned places, under the conduct of king Eric, mention is made in all the antient Gothic chronicles, and it is moreover vouched by the Danish, as well as the Swedish writers, who agree all in this, though they disagree, as it generally happens between neighbouring and rival nations, in most other points. The Danes ingenuously confess, and confess it they must, unless they give the lie to their own chronicles, that their country was first peopled by the Goths of Scandinavia ; that to them they owe their origin, and that Dan, the son of Humelus, king of the Goths, from whom their country was called Dania, and they Dani, was the founder of their kingdom ^m. This is agreeable to what we read in Jornandes and Freculphus, who tell us, that the Danes were the descendants of the Ostrogoths dwelling in Scanzia ⁿ. The peopling of the islands in the Baltic sea, of the Chersonesus, and the adjacent places on the continent, is called, by the northern writers, the first migration of the Goths or Getes.

THE

^k Vide Grot. proleg. in hist. Goth. & Sheringh. de Ang. gent. orig. c. 7. p. 143. ^l Idem ibid. p. 146, 147. ^m Vide

Sheringh. ibid. p. 145, 146.

ⁿ Freculph. tom. i. l. ii. c.

THE second migration is related by Jornandes, and supposed to have happened several ages after the first, when the above-mentioned countries being overstocked with people, Berig, at that time king of the Goths, went out with a fleet in quest of new settlements, and landing in the country of the Ulmerugians, now Pomerania, drove out the antient inhabitants, and divided their lands amongst his followers. He fell next upon the Vandals, whose country bordered on that of the Ulmerugians, overcame them, but instead of forcing them, as he had done the Ulmerugians, from their antient seats, he only obliged them, probably because they were of Gothic extraction, to share their possessions with the new-comers °.

They send a colony into Germany.

THE Goths, who had settled in Pomerania, and the adjacent parts of Germany, being greatly encreased, inso-much that the country could no longer maintain them, they went out in great numbers under Filimer, surnamed the Great, their fifth prince, after their leaving Scandinavia, and, taking their rout eastward, entered Scythia, advanced to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and, driving out the Cimmerians, settled in the neighbourhood of the Mæotic lake. Thence, in process of time, they sent numerous colonies into Thrace, Dacia, and Mœsia, and lastly into the countries bordering on the Euxine sea, forcing every where the antient inhabitants to abandon their native seats. Thus Jornandes †, and Ablavius, a celebrated writer among the Goths, who flourished long before him. In the neighbourhood of the Mæotic lake, they had Filimer for their king, a warlike prince; in Thrace, Mœsia and Dacia, Xamolxis, a great philosopher; and in the countries on the Euxine sea, princes of the illustrious families of the Balthi and the Amali, the Visigoths being subject to the former, and the Ostrogoths to the latter ‡. In all these countries they were one and the same people, though subject to different princes, and known by different names. Thus, in Cimmeria, Sarmatia, Scythia, they were called Cimmerians, Sarmatians, Scythians; in Thrace, Dacia, and Mœsia, Thracians, Dacians, and Mœsians; and in the neighbourhood of the Ister and the Pontus, Istrians and Pontics. As for the appellations of Westrogoths, softened by the Latins into that of Visigoths, and Ostrogoths, they were distinguished by these names, ^{Ostrogoths and Visigoths.}

° Jorn. rer. Get. l. iv.
ibid.

† Idem ibid. c. 4, & 5.

‡ Idem

The Goths and Getes one and the same nation,

They inhabited the same country.

names, as Grotius shews from Jornandes, before they left Scandinavia, being called Westrogoths and Ostrogoths, or Western and Eastern Goths, from their situation there to the east and west, the former inhabiting that part of Scandinavia, which borders on Denmark, and the latter the more eastern parts, lying on the Baltic^r. What Jornandes writes on the various migrations and settlements of the Goths, is entirely agreeable to what we read in the antient Greek and Latin authors concerning the various migrations and settlements of the Getes^s. And truly that the Goths and Getes were one and the same people, is supposed by all the writers, who flourished in or near the times, in which both empires were over-run by them. These authors, without all doubt well acquainted with their origin, call them sometimes Goths, sometimes Getes, and sometimes Scythians; nay, several writers, namely Orosius^t, who flourished in the reign of Arcadius and Honorius, when the Goths broke into Italy, under the conduct of the famous Alaric, St. Jerom^u, St. Austin^w, Synesius^x, Photius^y, Capitolinus^z, Vopiscus^a, Spartian^b, tell us in express terms, that the Getes and Goths were one and the same nation; and that they had been long known to the Romans, and likewise to the Greeks, by the former name, but not by the latter, till their breaking into the empire. That this opinion was not, as some modern authors have been pleased to call it, a vulgar error, may be plainly proved; for, in the first place, it is evident from all the antients, that the Getes inhabited that part of Scythia, which is by Ptolemy called Asiatic Sarmatia, and comprises the Taurica Chersonesus, with the countries lying between the Tanais, the Mæotic lake, and the Euxine sea. On the other hand, it is no less evident from all the writers, who speak of the Goths, that, from those very countries, they broke into the empire. Since therefore the Goths dwelt in the countries, where all the antients place the Getes, we cannot help concluding from thence, that they were one and

^r Grot. in proleg. &c.
157.

^s Oros. l. vii. c. 4. p. 29.

^t Hier. de fide,
l. ii. c. 4. & tradit. Hebr. in Gen.

^u Aug. de civit. Dei,
l. xx. c. 10.

^w Synes. orat. de regno.

^x Phot. in epit. Philostor.

^y Capitol. in Maximo.

^z Vopisc. in Prob.

^a Spart. in Carac.

^b Vide Sheringh. c. 8. p. 156,

^c Hier. de fide,

^d Aug. de civit. Dei,

^e Phot. in

^f Vopisc. in and the same people, though known by different names. Ptolemy, who lived in the time of the emperor Antoninus, mentions no Goths in Scythia, Thrace, Mœsia, or Pannonia ; and nevertheless, scarce was half a century passed, when the Goths, coming in swarms from those very countries, over-ran great part of the empire. These Goths therefore, if we will not allow them to have dropt all on a sudden from the clouds, must have been the very people, who are by Ptolemy called Getes, Pontics, Istrians, Trapezites, Gelonians, and Sauromatæ, and were soon after known to the Romans by the common name of Goths. Were all those nations utterly destroyed, and their seats seized, by the Goths ? Of this general slaughter no mention is made by any historian ; and we cannot persuade ourselves, that, if it happened, the writers of those times, who speak of the Goths, would have passed over in silence such a memorable event. Cluverius, who will have the Getes and Goths to be two different nations, believes, or at least would make us believe, that they dwelt together in the same countries. But is it at all probable, that two nations, obeying different princes, should live peaceably together in the same country, in the same cities, and within the same walls ? How came the Getes to be so early known to the Romans, and the Goths, living among them, utterly unknown till their breaking into the empire ? It seems to us a paradox, that the Romans, who were constantly at war with those nations, and had both colonies and garrisons among them, should be well acquainted with the Getes, and utterly unacquainted with the Goths, a warlike and numerous nation, inhabiting the same countries. Besides, Melatells us in express terms, that Thrace, the banks of the Tanais, Sarmatia, and the countries lying east of the Mæotic lake, were inhabited by one and the same people, though known by different names^c ; and Strabo, that the Istrians, Dacians, Mœsians, and Thracians, spoke the same language, and consequently were the same people^d. To these we may add Procopius, and Ammianus Marcellinus, of whom the former writes, that there were several nations of the Goths, some being called by the antients Sauromatæ, others Melanclæni, and some Getes ; but that these nations differed only in name^e ; and the latter, speaking of the Goths, says, that cop. Vandal. l. i.

^c Mel. de sit. orb. l. ii. c. ii.

^d Strab. l. i. c. 20.

^e Pro-

Agreed in manners, laws, &c.

And spoke the same language.

that they inhabited Thrace, Mœsia, and Dacia, and were sprung from the fierce nations, that dwelt before in those countries, that is, from the Getes^f. That the Getes and Goths were one people, and not two different nations living in the same country, as Cluverius would have it, may be further confirmed by the great conformity of their laws, manners, and institutions; for, if we compare the accounts, which the antients give us of the manners of the Getes, we shall find them entirely agreeable to those of the more modern writers describing the customs and manners of the Goths^g. Their language was likewise the same, the Gothic being spoken by the Getes and Massagetes in Scythia, Thrace, Pontus, &c. as Grotius^h, and after him Sheringhamⁱ, have shewn; nay, Busbequius assures us, that, in his time, the Gothic language was still spoken, though with some variation in the dialect, by the Tartars of Precop^k; and Josaphat Barbarus, a nobleman of Venice, who lived among them, that they not only speak the antient Gothic language, but call themselves Goths, and their country Gothia^l. Scaliger adds, that the christian Tartars of Precop still have the scripture written with the same characters, that were invented by Wulphilas, the first bishop of the Goths; and that they read it in the very language they spoke in the time of Ovid^m. This is agreeable to what we read in Lucian and Procopius, of whom the former tells us, that the language of the Alans, who were, without all doubt, a Gothic nation, was common to all the Scythians; and the latter, that the Sauromatæ and the Melanclæni, by most writers called Getes, were Gothic nations, and spoke the language of the Gothsⁿ. Of the antient language of the Getes only the names of a few kings have reached us, and these Boxbornius shews to be all Gothic^o.

The migration of the Goths under Woden.

THE Goths, being in process of time greatly encreased in Scythia, resolved to seek new settlements; and accordingly, taking their rout eastward, and travelling through several countries, they returned at length into Germany. Their leader, in this migration, was the celebrated Woden, called ^f Ammian. l. xxvii.

^g Vide Shering. c. 10. p. 197.

^h Grot. in præfat. ad¹ Procop.

ⁱ Shering. c. 11. p. 198.

^k Busbeq. epist. ix. p. 244, 245.

^l Grot in præfat. ad

Procop. ^m Scalig. isagog. l. iii. p. 138.

ⁿ Procop.

hist. Vand. l. i.

^o Boxborn. hist. univers. ad ann. 261.

called also Voden, Oden, Othen, Godan, and Guodan. Of this Woden many strange and wonderful things are related in the Sueo-Gothic chronicles. He was king of the Asgardians, whom the northern writers will have to be the same people with the Aspurgians, mentioned by Strabo and Ptolemy. They were called Aspurgians from the city of Aspurgia, placed by Strabo near the Bosphorus Cimmerius ^p; and in the same place stood, according to the northern writers, the city of Asgardia: and truly that these were but two different names of one and the same city, is highly probable, the word gard signifying, in the Gothic language, the same thing as purgos in the Greek, viz. a fortress or castle. Aspurgia was the metropolis of a province, which Strabo calls Asia; and Woden, and his followers, are styled by the antient Gothic writers Asæ, Asiani, and Asiotæ. The kings of Aspurgia were masters of all that part of Scythia, that lay west of mount Imaus, and was by the Latins called Scythia intra Imaum, or Scythia within mount Imaus. In this large tract of ground are placed by Ptolemy three different nations, the Aufones, the Syebi, and the Iotæ; but they are all blended by Strabo under the common name of Aspurgians. Of this Aspurgia or Asgardia, Woden was king, who committing the government of the kingdom to his two brothers, Ve and Velir, went out, with incredible multitudes of his people, in quest of new settlements, foreseeing by his magic, say some antient chronicles, in which art he excelled all men, that he, and his posterity, should reign for many ages in the northern parts of the world. He first entered Riisland, and having with great success and expedition, obliged the inhabitants to submit, he appointed his son Bo to reign over them. Riisland, called by the Latins Roxalania and Ruffia, extended from the mouth of the Vistula to the Palus Mæotis, the banks of the Tanais, and the Riphæan mountains, and comprised Prussia, Livonia, and great part of Muscovy. From Riisland he went by sea into the north parts of Germany, and landing in Saxony, he reduced that country, and divided it amongst his children, appointing Vegdegg king of East Saxony, Begdegg of Westphalia, and Sigg of Franconia. Johannes Martinus, Wittekindus, Cranzius, and all the Saxon writers, assure us, that, time out of mind, a tradition has universally obtained of Asgardia.

Woden king

He reduces Roxalania.

Saxony.

And Jutland. tained among the Saxons, that their ancestors came first by sea into those countries. From Saxony, Woden passed into Reidogothland, now Jutland, which he likewise subdued, and gave to his son Skiold, from whom descended the kings of Denmark, thence called Skiolldungar, that is, the posterity of Skiold. Leaving Jutland, after he had settled his son there, he advanced into Suithiod, now Sweden, where he was kindly received by Gylfus or Gylvo, king of the country, and, being allowed to settle there with his followers, he built the city of Sigtunum, where he reigned to his death, and became so famous, that his name reached all countries, and he was, by the northern nations, ranked among the gods, and worshipped with divine honours. He is supposed to have brought with him out of Asia the Runic characters, and to have taught the northern nations the art of poetry; whence he is styled the father of the Scaldi or Scaldri, who were their poets, and described in verse the exploits of the great men of their nation, as the Bards did those of the Gauls and Britons. They are called Scaldi or Scaldri, according to Loccenius^a, from the sound skal, often heard in their verses and poems. The dialect, in which they wrote, was called Asamal, that is, the Asiatic dialect, because brought by Woden out of Asia. As for the Runic letters, the Goths used them in all their spells and enchantments, to which they were greatly addicted; whence, after embracing the christian religion, out of a blind and indiscreet zeal, they destroyed several antient monuments, and burnt a great number of books, because written with those characters. At length, in the year 1001, the Runic characters were quite laid aside in Sweden, and the Roman letters taken in their room, the Swedes being persuaded thereunto by the pope, and by Sigfrid, a British bishop^r. In Spain they were forbidden in 1136, by Alphonso king of Castile and Navar, and condemned by the council of Toledo in 1115^s. They were called Runic letters, according to some, from the Gothic word Ryn or Ren, signifying a furrow; according to others, from Ryne, signifying art, especially that of magic^t. One Fimbul, Fimbultyr, or Fimbulthular, is supposed to have invented these characters^u.

Settles in Sweden.

The Runic characters.

^a Loccen. antiq. Sueogoth. c. 15.

^s Wormius lit. Run. c. 28.

^r Idem ibid. c. 14.

^t Idem ibid. c. 1.

ters ^u. Wulphilas, the first bishop of the Goths, invented other characters, which he made use of in translating the scripture into the Gothic tongue. But to return to Woden :

T H A T the Goths, under his conduct, came out of Scythia into the north parts of Germany, is a received opinion among the northern writers, and confirmed by an immemorial tradition, by all the antient chronicles of those countries, and by a great many monuments and inscriptions in Runic characters, some of which are still to be seen in Sweden, Denmark, and the neighbouring islands : and truly that there were such migrations, can hardly be questioned, since we find the same names common to the inhabitants of Scandia, and Asiatic Scythia, and likewise the same language, as Grotius, and after him Sheringham, has shewn ^w ; nay, the antient language of the Goths is spoken at this very day by the Tartars of Precop, as we have observed above ; so that upon the whole, we may conclude the Scandian Goths and the Asiatic Scythians to have had one and the same original. As to Woden, there was, ^{Woden,} without doubt, a famous hero of this name, who became wonderfully revered by all the northern nations ; but we will not take upon us to vouch the strange things that are related of him in the Sueogothic and Sacogothic chronicles. Some writers suppose the migration of the Scythian Goths into the north parts of Germany, under the conduct of Woden, to have happened about twenty-four years before the birth of Christ ; for at that time, say they, Pompey laid waste Syria, and great part of Asia ; and it is not improbable, that the Scythians, flying from him, went out in quest of new settlements. But Skiold, who was by his father Woden appointed king of Reidogothland, or Jutland, as we have related above, lived, according to the Danish chronology, about a thousand years before Pompey ; so that, according to this account, Woden must have been more antient than Homer. On the other hand, how can this be reconciled with the genealogies of our Saxon kings, the founders of the heptarchy, who all derived their pedigree from Woden ? Hengist, the first that came into Britain, did not arrive in this island till the year 449, of the ^u Vide Worm. ibid. c. 20. & Sheringh. c. 13. p. 286. & c. 8. p. 172.

the christian æra, and nevertheless he is said to have been the abnepos or great-grandchild of Woden, as Cerdic, the founder of the kingdom of the West-Saxons, the tenth by descent from him. To reconcile these seeming contradictions, some authors are of opinion, and their opinion does not at all seem to us improbable, that several persons or great men bore the name of Woden, and what was done by all, was ascribed to one, in the same manner as it happened among the Greeks with respect to Hercules. Be that as it will, the descendents of the Scythians, or Asiatic Goths, who, under the conduct of Woden, settled in the north parts of Germany, were first known to the Romans by the name of Cimbrians, derived, according to the opinion, which seems to us the best grounded, from the Gothic word Kimber, signifying valiant. The Cimbrians held antiently the islands in the Baltic sea, the Chersonesus, and the neighbouring countries, and by degrees extended their conquests along the German ocean to both the mouths of the Rhine. The inland countries in that tract were likewise inhabited by them; but, in the different countries where they dwelt, they were distinguished by different names, some of them being called Saxons, others Suevians; some Angles, Sicambrians, Jutes, &c. but, by the Romans, they were all blended under the common name of Cimbrians, till the Saxons, placed by Ptolemy in the north part of the Chersonesus, became known to them by their conquests, and then the name of Cimbrians was quite laid aside, and that of Saxons used by the Latin writers in its room, which they gave likewise to the nations the Saxons had subdued, calling Saxony that part of Germany, which lies between the Rhine and the Elbe, and had been reduced by them. Thus far of the migrations of the Goths out of Scandinavia into the neighbouring islands and continent, thence into Germany, from Germany into Asia, and from Asia back again into Germany. These migrations the northern writers endeavour to make out against Verstegan and Cluverius, who will have Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, not to have been inhabited, till Germany so abounded with people, that they were obliged to remove into those countries, which they had not chosen to settle in at first, on account of the greater cold, and barrenness of the soil. To confute this opinion, which derives the origin of the Goths from Germany, the above-mentioned writers, especially Grotius, who outshines all the rest, prove

The Cimbrians descended from the Asiatic Goths.

And likewise the Saxons.

Scandinavia peopled before Germany.

prove Scythia to have been peopled before any other of the northern countries had inhabitants. The antients indeed went farther ; for they supposed, as appears from the epitomizer of Trogus Pompeius *, that all the other parts of the world continued quite destitute of inhabitants, till Scythia, no longer able to support such multitudes, sent out numerous colonies to people them. To maintain this, would perhaps be overshooting the mark ; but that Scythia was peopled before any of the northern countries, is highly probable, since of all the northern countries, it lay the nearest to Babylon, and the only way to them by land was through Scythia. Several eminent writers, and among the rest Lütther, Goropius Becanus, and sir Walter Raleigh, are of opinion, that the ark, on the subsiding of the waters, rested on the Imaon mountain in Scythia ; others say on the Gordiæan mountains, at a small distance from Scythia, and consequently that Scythia must have been peopled, when the other northern countries still continued uninhabited. Now, as the way was much shorter from Scythia into Scandinavia, than into Germany, and lay in a direct line, it is more natural to suppose, that those, who were seeking places to settle in, went strait into Scandinavia, than by much longer and round-about ways through Sarmatia into Germany ; nay, as Sarmatia and Scandinavia were near Scythia, and the ways leading to them not obstructed, it would not be absurd to suppose them to have been over-stocked with people, while not only Germany, but all the other countries of Europe, were quite destitute of inhabitants, as being separated from Asia by the Mediterranean sea, the Bosphorus Cimmerius, and the Palus Mœotis, unfurmountable obstructions, till the art of navigation was found out, which happened many ages after the confusion of languages. Then, and not till then, the inhabitants of Scandinavia passed into the neighbouring islands and places lying over-against them on the continent, till that period uninhabited. From thence, in process of time, they sent colonies into Germany, who, driving out the antient inhabitants, settled in their country, as we have related above. To prove the migrations of the Goths out of Scandinavia into the islands in the Baltic sea, the Chersonesus, and the adjacent places in Germany, several antient monuments and inscriptions in Runic characters on stones and rocks, are alledged by the northern writers, namely by Zeilerus ^y, Bureus ^z, Suaningius ^a, and Wormius ^b, in whose times many of them were still extant, mentioning their leaving Scandinavia, and their settling in the places we have spoken of above, with the names of some of their leaders. Besides these antient monuments and inscriptions, the northern writers endeavour to make it appear by other arguments, that the Goths came originally out of Scandinavia into Germany, and not out of Germany into Scandinavia, as Versteegan would have it. Their arguments are, 1. That the Scandian Goths were not subject to the Germans; but, on the contrary, the first inhabitants of the Chersonesus, and the adjacent places, to the Scandian Goths; which proves them to have been a colony. 2. It is hardly credible, say they, that the Germans should chuse to settle in Norway and Sweden, when they might have settled in a far more friendly climate, and fruitful soil, by only crossing the Rhine on one side, or the Danube on the other. They add, that no mention is made in history of any colonies sent out of Germany into Scandinavia; whereas we read of many coming out of Scandinavia to settle in Germany. Among these are reckoned by Freculphus ^c the Franks, by Grotius the Vandals and Lombards ^d, and by Lazius and Rhabanus Maurus ^e the Marcomanns. 3. Polygamy was not allowed among the Germans, as appears from Tacitus ^f; whereas those among the Goths, who had but four or five wives, were thought to live in a state of celibacy. It is therefore far more probable, that the Goths should encrease so as to people other countries with their colonies, than the Germans; and accordingly all the antients speak of the Goths issuing in swarms out of Scandinavia, which is therefore styled by Jornandes, as we have observed above, officina gentium, and vagina nationum. We may further add, that all the other Gothic nations owned themselves descended from those of Scandinavia, as we find attested by Ablavius, an antient Gothic writer, by Roderichus Toletanus, and by Jornandes. These are the arguments urged by the northern writers against Versteegan and Cluverius, whose opinion, deriving the origin of the Goths from Germany, seemed so absurd descript.

The islands in the Baltic, the Chersonesus, &c. peopled by Scandian Goths.

* Justin. l. ii.

^y Zeil. in descript. Succiaë.

^a Suan. in chronol. Danica. ad ann. mund. 2264.

^b Worm. in Gothlandicis. l. v.

^c Freculp. l. ii. c. 17.

^d Grot in proleg. in Procop.

^e Vide Goldast. Alan.

antiq. tom. ii. part 1.

^f Tacit. de morib. German.

absurd to Grotius, that he could scarce forbear reviling those, who maintained it, especially Cluverius, whom he taxes with introducing new opinions, in defiance to the most authentic writers, and supporting without the least regard to truth, what he thought would be best relished by his countrymen &. Thus far of the origin of the Goths from the best antient as well as modern writers.

As for the manners of the Goths, they were famous for their hospitality and kindness to strangers, even before they embraced the christian religion ; nay, from their being eminently good, they were called by the neighbouring nations Goths, that name being, according to Grotius, and most other writers, derived from the German word Goten, signifying good ^h. They encouraged, says Dion, the study of philosophy, above all other barbarous or foreign nations, and often chose their kings from among their philosophers. Polygamy was not only allowed, but countenanced among them, every one being valued and respected, according to the number of their wives ^l. By so many wives they had an incredible number of children, of whom they kept but one at home, sending out the rest, when come to man's estate, in quest of new settlements ^k ; and hence those swarms of people, that over-ran so many countries. With them adultery was a capital crime, and irremissibly punished with death ^l. This severity, and likewise polygamy, prevailed among them, when they were known to the Greeks and Romans only by the name of Getes, as appears from the poet Menander, who was himself a Gete ^m, and from Horace ⁿ, who bestows great encomiums on the virtue and chastity of their women. As for their laws, they do not fall much short of those of the antient Romans, as will appear when we come to speak of the Alaric code, and the laws of the Visigoths in Spain, and the Ostrogoths in Italy. Their government was monarchical ; for, as we have observed above out of Jornandes, in the neighbourhood of the Palus Mœotis, they had Filimer for king ; in Dacia, Mœsia, and Thrace, Xamolxes ; and in that part of Scythia, which bordered on the Euxine sea, princes sprung

The customs, laws, and manners of the Goths

H 3

^g Grot. in proleg. ad Procop. ^h Idem ibid. ⁱ Adam. Bremens. in Suegoth. ^k Idem ibid. & Walsingham. in hypodig. Neustr. ^l Adam. Bremens. ibid. ^m Menander. apud Strab. l. vii. ⁿ Horat. l. iii. od. 24.

Series of their kings.

from the illustrious families of the Amali and the Balthi. Of the latter Jornandes gives us the following series, viz. Gaptus, Hulmul, Auges, Amalus, Isarna, Ostrogotha, Cniva, Araric, Auric, Giberic, Hermaneric. To these princes were subject both the Visigoths and Ostrogoths. The former inhabited the country lying between the Borysthenes and the Tanais, and were afterwards allowed by the Roman emperors to settle in Pannonia, Thrace, and Illyricum. The latter dwelt between the Danube and the Borysthenes, and in the reign of Honorius, after having over-run Italy, settled in Gaul, as we shall relate anon. Upon the death of Hermaneric, the Visigoths were driven out of their native country by the Hunns, and were admitted by the emperor Valens within the Roman dominions. Theodosius allowed them lands in Thrace, whence, in the reign of Honorius, they broke into Italy, under the conduct of the celebrated Alaric, who took and plundered Rome. Alaric was succeeded by Ataulphus, who founded the kingdom of the Visigoths in Gaul, and Ataulphus by the following princes of the family of the Balthi, viz. Sigeric or Rigeric, Wallia, Theodoric, Thorismund, Theodoric II. Theodoric III. Euric, Alaric, Gesaleich, Amalaric, Theudis, Theudiselus, Athanagild, Linva, Leunigild, Ermenigild, Ricared, Linva II. Witteric, Gundemar, Sisebatus, Reccared, Suinthila, Rechimir, Sisenand, Chintila, Tulga, Chindasuinthus, Wamba, Ernigius, Egica, Witiza, and Roderic. Most of these princes were not only masters of Narbonne and Aquitain, but likewise of Spain, which they held till they were driven out of both, and their nation almost utterly extirpated, by the Arabs, as we shall relate at length in a more proper place.

Kings of the Visigoths in in Gaul and Spain.

THE Visigoths, being driven out of their own country by the Hunns, as we have related above, the Ostrogoths continued, after their departure, in the same seats, but subject to the Hunns, who nevertheless allowed them to be governed by their own kings of the house of the Amali. These were Winithar, Hunnimund, Thorismond, Wandalar, nephew to Hermaneric by his brother, and the three sons of Wandalar, viz. Walamir, Theodemir, and Widemir, who were all subject to Attila; but, upon that prince's death, they were allowed by the Romans to settle in Pannonia and Moesia. Theodemir was succeeded by his son Theodoric, who, having overcome Odoacer, made himself master of Italy, and was acknowledged king of that country. His successors in that kingdom were, Athalaric, Theodotus, Vitiges, Ildebald, Eraric, Totila, and Teia, the last king of the Ostrogoths in Italy °. As to the religion of the Goths, ^{The religion of the Goths.} it seems to have been the same with that of the antient inhabitants of Scandinavia and Saxony, of which we have spoke above p, and shall speak more at length in the history of the northern kingdoms. Apollinaris Sidonius describes their dress thus : They are shod, says he, with high shoes made of hair, and reaching up to their ankles ; their knees, thighs, and legs, are without any covering ; their garments of various colours, scarce reaching to the knee ; their sleeves only cover the tops of their arms ; they wear green cassocks, with a red border ; their belts hang on their shoulders ; their ears are covered with twisted locks ; they use hooked lances, and missile hatchets q.

As to the antient history of the Goths, Jornandes, supposing them to be one and the same people with the Scythians, Getes, Sarmatians, and Sauromatæ, ascribes to them all the exploits, that are said by the Greek and Latin writers to have been performed by those nations, especially by the Scythians. But of that warlike nation, and their migrations into Europe, under the name of Cimmerians, Celts, Gauls, &c. we have spoken elsewhere, and therefore shall confine ourselves here to the history of the Goths, from the time they became generally known by that appellation. The first Roman writer, that mentions the Goths, is Spartian, who, in the life of Caracalla, tells us, that he overcame in some encounters the Getes, who, says he, were the same people with the Goths r. The same author writes elsewhere s, that Maximin, afterwards emperor, upon the death of Caracalla, quitted the service, and, retiring into Thrace, kept up from thence a friendly correspondence with the Goths. His father, named Micea or Micca, was by nation a Goth, and his mother Ababa or Abala an Alan t. Hence Vorburgus concludes the Goths to have been masters of the countries bordering on Thrace before Maximin was born, that is, before the year 177 u.

H 4

Caracalla

° Vide Jorn. c. 30. Agath. l. i. Grot. in hist. Goth.

p Univers. hist. vol. xix. p. 11. q Apoll. Sidon. l. i. ep. 7. p. 29.

r Sprat. in Caracal. p. 89. s Idem in Maximin. p. 139.

t Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 15. p. 631. u Vorburg. hist. Rem. Germanic. p. 419.

Caracalla the first Roman emperor that quarrels with
the Goths.
Year after Christ 215.

The Goths receive an annual pension from the Romans.

They ravage Mœsia.
Year after
Christ 238.

Caracalla was the first Roman emperor that quarrelled with the Goths, and the advantages he gained over them were, it seems, very inconsiderable ; for, according to Spartian ^w, he overcame them only in a few skirmishes. This must have happened about the year 215, the fifth of Caracalla's reign ; for about that time he marched from Germany into Dacia ^x, and the Goths held then, according to Gro-tius ^y, part of that province. The Romans began very early to dread the power of that warlike nation ; for even in the reign of Alexander, which began in 222, considerable sums were annually sent them from Rome to keep them quiet, and prevent them from disturbing the peace of the empire. Thus Petrus the patrician, who adds, that the Carpi, dwelling in Sarmatia towards the present Poland, demanded the same sums, that were paid yearly to the Goths ; but their request was rejected by Menophilus, whom that writer styles duke of Mœsia, that is, general of the troops quartered in that province ^z. The Goths notwithstanding the large sums sent them yearly by the Roman emperors, hearing of the death of the emperor Maximin, who was of Gothic extraction, as we have hinted above, and had been murdered by his own soldiers, resolved to revenge it ; and accordingly, breaking into Mœsia, laid waste that province, and utterly destroyed the city of Istria or Istropolis, on the most southern mouth of the Danube ^a. Balbinus, who, with Maximus, had succeeded Maximinus, resolved to march against them, but was in the mean time murdered, with his colleague, by the mutinous soldiery ; so that the Goths, loaded with booty, retired beyond the Danube unmolested ^b. Not long after, they made themselves masters of Thrace ; but were driven from thence beyond the Danube by the emperor Gordian about the year 242, the fifth of that prince's reign ^c. But Gordian dying, and Philip, who succeeded him, refusing to pay them their annual pension, they passed the Danube, and, entering Thrace, committed dreadful ravages in that province, as well as in Mœsia. Philip dispatched against them the senator Decius, who was afterwards emperor ;

^w Spart. ubi supra. ^x Onuph. p. 252. Cusp. p. 371.
Dio, l. lxxiii. lxxix. p. 838; 910. ^y Grot. rer. Goth.
p. 19. 41. ^z Pet. Patric. legat. excerpt. p. 24. ^a Capitol. in vit. Maximin. p. 171. Baudr. p. 392. ^b Capitol, ibid. ^c Gord. vit, p. 162. Onuph. p. 259.

peror ; but he, not thinking it adviseable to engage them, returned to Rome, after having discharged with disgrace the troops that had suffered them to pass the Danube. These went over in a body to the enemy, commanded at that time by their king Ostrogotha, the grandson of Am- Ostrogotha ravages Thrace and Mœsia. lus, who received them kindly, and, being thus reinforced, laid siege to Marcianopolis, the capital of Mœsia ; but, Year after Christ 245. not being able to reduce it, he abandoned the undertaking for a large sum sent him by the inhabitants, who were glad thus to compound with him, and redeemed themselves from the calamities attending long sieges. Ostrogotha was scarce returned to his own country, when Fastida, king of the Gepidæ, elated with the success, that had attended his arms against the Burgundians, whom he had almost utterly destroyed, sent him the following haughty message, viz. That the Gepidæ being streightened for want of room, he must either allow them lands, or prepare for war. Ostrogotha answered, That he should be sorry to engage in a war with the Gepidæ his kinsmen (for they were a Gothic nation) ; but was determined to part with no lands. Hereupon both nations took the field, and a bloody battle ensued, in which the Gepidæ were defeated He overcomes the Gepidæ. with great slaughter ; but Ostrogotha, contenting himself with the victory, suffered the Gepidæ to retire and live in their own country unmolested ^c.

OSTROGOTHA was succeeded by Cniva, who, break- Cniva, first defeated by the Romans, gains great advantages over them. ing into Mœsia, was defeated, with the loss of thirty thousand men, by Decius, the eldest son of the emperor of that name, whom, in the end, he overcame, and, having cut his whole army in pieces, obliged the young prince to save himself by flight into the neighbouring provinces. Having now no enemy to oppose him, he made himself master of Philippopolis on the Hebrus, put the inhabitants, to the number of one hundred thousand souls, says Ammianus ^d, to the sword, ravaged Thrace, and laid waste great part of Macedon ^e. Hereupon the emperor Decius, setting out from Rome, hastened into Pannonia ; and, putting himself at the head of his army, he overcame the Goths in several engagements, and drove them out of the Roman dominions ^f. But they returned soon after with a numerous

^c Jorn. rer. Goth. p. 433—436. ^d Ammian. l. lxxxi. p. 446. ^e Jorn. ibid. c. 18. p. 636, 637. ^f Zos. l. i. p. 644.

Defeats and kills the emperor Decius, and his son,
Year after
Christ 250.

numerous army, headed by their king Cniva ; which obliged Decius to take the field a second time, when he was attended, at first, with the same good success, as he had been in their former irruption ; for he reduced them to such streights, that they offered to set at liberty all the prisoners they had taken, and relinquish their booty, provided he would suffer them to retire unmolested. But the emperor, who had sent Trebonianus Gallus, with a strong detachment, to cut off their retreat, thinking he had it now in his power to rid the empire of so troublesome an enemy, instead of hearkening to their proposals, marched with all his forces against them. The Goths knowing that all lay at stake, received him with great intrepidity, and, fighting like men in despair, gained a complete victory. In the battle fell first Decius, the emperor's eldest son, and then the emperor himself, upon whose death the Goths made a dreadful havock of the disheartened army ^g. We only touch upon these events here, having related them at length elsewhere ^h. Decius being killed, Gallus was by the soldiery proclaimed emperor in his room ; but he, instead of revenging the death of the late emperor, and the overthrow of the army, concluded a peace with the Goths, suffering them to retire unmolested with their booty, and the prisoners they had taken at Philippopolis, and elsewhere, nay, he engaged to pay them yearly a considerable sum, provided they continued quiet in their own country ⁱ. However, three years after, that is, in 253, they entered the Roman territories in an hostile manner, probably because their pension was not paid them. But Æmilianus, who commanded the troops in Pannonia, marching against them, put them to flight, and drove them quite out of the empire, though his soldiers, at first, betrayed great unwillingness to engage so formidable an enemy ^k. This Zonaras relates in a manner, which we do not well comprehend ; for he supposes the Goths, who were overcome and put to flight by Æmilian, to have lived in friendship and amity with the Romans ^l. In 256, the Goths with the Carpi, the Barani, and the Burgundians, all nations dwelling on the banks of the Danube, nube, made a new inroad into the empire, laying waste, according to Zofimus^m, all Illyricum, and Italy itself, without meeting with the least opposition. But this we can hardly believe, since no other writer takes notice of any ravages committed by them in Italy. They continued all this year in Illyricum, laying the country waste far and wide; but the following year Aurelian, afterwards emperor, being sent to succeed Ulpius Crinitus in the command of the troops in Thrace and Illyricum, drove them out of those provinces, took a great number of them prisoners, and, pursuing them beyond the Danube, laid waste their country, and returned to Thrace loaded with bootyⁿ.

^g Jorn. ibid. c. 18. p. 637. Zonar. p. 231. Aur. Vict. in Dec. Zof. l. i. p. 644.

^h Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 218, 220. ⁱ Jorn. c. 19. p. 638. Zof. l. i. p. 644. Zonar. p. 232. ^k Zof. p. 645. ^l Zonar. p. 232.

After this, they continued quiet till the year 262, the ninth of the emperor Gallienus, when, breaking unexpectedly into Thrace, they made themselves masters of that province, and from thence over-ran all Macedon, and laid siege to Thessalonica; but, not being able to reduce it, they attempted to enter Achaia, when Macrianus, who had assumed the title of Augustus, arriving in Greece on his march into Italy, fell upon them unexpectedly, and obliged them to save themselves by flight into their own country^o. At the same time another party of the Goths, having crossed the Hellespont under the conduct of one Raspa, committed dreadful ravages in Asia, plundered several cities, and even the famous temple of Diana at Ephesus^p. Jornandes tells us, that, in this irruption, they destroyed the city of Chalcedon, which, though afterwards rebuilt, says he, by one Cornelius Avitus, and enriched by the neighbourhood of Constantinople, yet, for the space of three hundred years and upwards, shewed the dreadful marks of its former ruin^q. On their return, they laid in ashes the poor remains of antient Troy; and, having repassed the Hellespont, they made an attempt upon Anquialum in Thrace; but, having spent some days in vain before that place, they abandoned the enterprize, and, after having ravaged Thrace, returned home, carrying with them an immense booty^r. The following year 263, they made a new irruption into Asia, but were soon driven out by the

The Goths lay waste Thrace and Macedon.

They ravage Asia, and plunder the temple of Diana at Ephesus. Year after Christ 262.

Roman

^m Zof. l. i. p. 646, 647.

ⁿ Aurel. vit. p. 213.

^o Gallien. vit. p. 177. Zonar. p. 233. Syncell. p. 381.

^p Gallien. vit. p. 177, 178. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 20. p. 619.

^q Idem ibid.

^r Gallien. vit. p. 177, 178. Jorn. rer.

Goth. c. 20. p. 619.

They make themselves masters of Dacia beyond the Danube.

They overrun Asia Minor, Lydia, Pontus,
&c.

Year after
Christ 266.

But retire at the approach of Odenatus.

Roman troops quartered there^s. Two years after, that is, in 265, they made themselves masters of all Dacia beyond the Danube, extending from that river to the Carpathian mountains, which had been reduced by Trajan to a Roman province, and joined to Moesia by a bridge, the most magnificent and wonderful of all that emperor's works^t. Encouraged with this success, the following year, having built an incredible number of vessels, they embarked on the Euxine sea, and landing at Heraclea in Pontus, over-ran Asia Minor, Lydia, and Bithynia, made themselves masters of Nicomedia, plundered the Greek cities in those countries, and laid waste the provinces of Phrygia and Troas^u. In Bithynia they met with some opposition; for we are told, that a battle was fought there; and, from what happened afterwards, it appears, that the Goths carried the day; for on one side the Romans, dissatisfied with the conduct of Gallienus, were for setting up another emperor; and on the other the Goths, pursuing their ravages, advanced as far as Galatia and Cappadocia, laying waste, without restraint, the countries through which they passed^w. Eutropius, and after him St. Jerom^x, and Orosius^y, mention the ravages committed by the Goths in Pontus and Asia; and Philostorgius names several cities ruined by them in Galatia and Cappadocia^z. We learn from St. Basil, that Dionysius, who was raised to the see of Rome in 259, and died in 270, wrote a consolatory letter to the church of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, sending at the same time considerable sums to redeem the christian captives^a, among whom were many holy ecclesiastics, who could not be ransomed, says Philostorgius^b, because they were destined by Heaven to convert their conquerors. In the mean time the brave Odenatus, of whom we have spoken at length in our Roman history^c, pitying the miserable condition, to which Asia was reduced by the Goths, hastened to the relief of that province. But the Goths, unwilling to engage so renowned a commander, reimbarqued at Heraclea, and, by the Euxine sea, returned home with an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives^d. Many of them however however were drowned, being attacked on their return by the Roman fleet^e. The following year, they embarked anew on the Euxine sea, and, landing at the mouth of the Danube, laid waste great part of Mœsia; but were defeated by the troops and generals who guarded Byzantium. However, they advanced as far as Illyricum; but being informed there, that the Heruli had received a dreadful overthrow in Greece, they began to retire, when Marcian and Claudius, whom Gallienus had sent against them, pursuing them close, cut great numbers of them in pieces^f; nay, Claudius was for cutting off their retreat, as might have been easily done, and putting them all to the sword; but Marcian thought it more adviseable to suffer them to retire^g. To be revenged on Claudius, they no sooner heard, that he was raised to the empire, than stirring up all the northern nations against him, they assembled on the banks of the Tyras, now the Niester, and there built, says Zosimus^h, six thousand ships; but Pollio, who makes the most of this war, writes, that their vessels amounted only to two thousandⁱ, and he is therein followed by Ammianus Marcellinus^k. Having employed the whole year 268, in making the necessary preparations, they embarked, to the number of three hundred and twenty thousand fighting men, and, landing in lesser Scythia, laid siege, at the same time, to the city of Tomi in that province, and to Marcianopolis in Mœsia; but being, in several attacks, repulied at both places, they reimbarqued on the Euxine sea, and entered the streights of the Bosphorus, where, by the rapidity of the current, and the great number of their ships running foul of one another, they suffered a great loss both of men and vessels, and besides, they met with a vigorous opposition from the inhabitants of Byzantium^l. Making therefore what haste they could out of the streights, they attacked the city of Cyzicus on the Propontis; but, not being able to reduce it, they abandoned the enterprize, and, entering the Ægean sea, they refitted their shattered vessels at mount Athos in Macedon, and then laid siege to Cassandria and Thessalonica, two cities in the same province. But, when they were upon the point of making themselves masters of both,

^s Gallien. vit. p. 178. ^t Aur. Vict. Eutrop. Oros. vii. c. 12. p. 214. ^u Gallien. vit. p. 179. ^w Idem ibid. ^x Hier. chron. ^y Oros. l. vii. c. 22. p. 214. ^z Philostorg. l. ii. c. 5. p. 270, 271. ^a Basil. ep. ccxx. p. 233. ^b Philostorg. p. 741. ^c Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 234, 235, 240, 243. &c. ^d Gallien. vit. p. 180. Syncell. p. 381.

They receive several overthrows.

They invade the empire with a formidable fleet and army.

Year after Christ 269.

^e Syncell. p. 382. ^f Gallien. vit. p. 181. Claud. vit. p. 208. Zos. p. 652. ^g Claud. vit. ibid. ^h Zos. p. 652. ⁱ Claud. vit. p. 204. ^k Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 445. ^l Claud. vit. p. 205. Zos. l. i. p. 652.

both, news was brought them, that Claudius approached at the head of a powerful army^m. That prince, upon the first news of their breaking into the empire, had dispatched his brother Quintillus against them, but, under him, committed the chief command of the army to Aurelian, afterwards emperor, whom he had, on that occasion, appointed general of all the troops in Thrace, Illyricum, and the other frontier provinces; but when he was informed of the number of the enemy's forces, he resolved to head the army in personⁿ. Zonaras writes, that while they were deliberating at Rome, whether the emperor should march against the Goths, or against Tetricus, who had usurped the empire in Gaul, and was then besieging Autun, Claudius told them, That the war with Tetricus was his; but that with the Goths was the war of the Roman people, whose interest he preferred to his own^o. However, he could not set out so soon as he wished, it being no easy matter, as the empire had been quite exhausted by his predecessor Gallienus, to make the necessary preparations for an expedition of such importance, and to draw together an army fit to be commanded by him^p. The Goths therefore, abandoning the siege of Thessalonica upon the first report of his approach, advanced into the country lying on the river Axius, plundered Pelagonia, and committed great ravages in the neighbourhood of Doberus in Pœonia, where they were vigorously attacked by the Dalmatian horse, who signalized themselves on this occasion, and killed near three thousand of the enemy^q. The rest took the rout to Upper Mœsia, and were met by Claudius in the neighbourhood of Naissus, whom they immediately engaged^r. The victory continued long doubtful; nay, the Romans at first gave ground; but, returning through certain narrow passes to the charge, they fell unexpectedly upon the Goths, who, after a long and obstinate resistance, were in the end put to flight, and utterly routed^s. Such of them as had the good luck to make their escape, returned towards Macedon, covering their rear with their waggons; but they found no fence against the famine that raged amongst them, and daily carried off great numbers of men and

Their army
is utterly routed by Claudius.

^m Zof. p. 653. Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 445.

ⁿ Idem, p.

214.

^o Zonar. p. 239,

^p Claud. vit. p. 204.

^q Zof. l. i. p. 653.

^r Idem ibid. Claud. vit. p. 205.

^s Idem ibid. Zof. p. 654.

and horses. The Roman cavalry, attacking them in front, cut off many thousands of them, and, by guarding the passes of Macedon, obliged them to shut themselves up on mount Hæmus, where they passed the winter in the greatest hardships imaginable ^t.

As for their fleet, one part of it, separating from the rest, ravaged Thessaly and Achaia, and took a great many prisoners in the open country, says Zosimus ^u, not being able to reduce one single city. However, Zonaras tells us, that they made themselves masters of Athens ; and that having laid together in one heap all the books they found there, with a design to set fire to them, they would have deprived the world of that unvaluable treasure, had not one among them, more discerning than the rest, told his companions, that, while the Greeks amused themselves with those books, they neglected the art of war, and were easily overcome ^w. The same author adds, that Cleodemus, a native of Athens, having assembled some troops and vessels, attacked them by sea, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to save themselves by flight into other countries ^x. From Athens they sailed to the islands of Crete, Rhodes, and Cyprus ; but no-where performed any thing worth mentioning ; nay, they lost great numbers of their men by the plague, that raged among them. They returned therefore to winter in Macedon, where the contagious distemper completed their ruin ^y. Those who had taken refuge on mount Hæmus, as we have related above, were, before the end of winter, reduced by the plague and famine to a very small number ; so that Claudius might have saved himself the trouble of attacking them. However, that prince bent upon their utter destruction, marched against them early in the spring, and having shut them up on all sides, in different skirmishes, put several thousands to the sword. Nevertheless the infantry having one day attacked them without the cavalry, which was employed elsewhere, the Romans, after having behaved some time with great gallantry, turned their backs and fled. On this occasion, the loss on the side of the Romans was very considerable, and had been been much greater, had not the cavalry come seasonably to their relief ^z. Pollio perhaps speaks of this encounter, where he owns the Romans to have lost in an attack near two thousand men ^a. But these were, as that writer tells us, Roman soldiers, who, after having put the enemy to flight, were busied in plundering their baggage ; and Claudius, according to him, was not yet arrived in the camp : whereas Zosimus writes, that the infantry attacked the enemy by the emperor's orders ; but he may therein be mistaken. However that be, the Romans, not in the least disheartened with this loss, continued harassing the Goths without intermission, and strengthening them daily more and more. As the plague at the same time made a dreadful havock among them, they were in the end obliged to submit, and beg quarter ; which was granted them. Some of them were incorporated among the Roman troops ; to others lands were given to cultivate ; and a small number of them found means to make their escape ^b. We have inserted elsewhere two letters relating to this war, written by the emperor himself, the one to the senate, while he was upon the point of engaging the enemy, the other, after the battle, to Junius Brecchus, governor of Illyricum ^c. As the army was composed of divers northern nations, and followed by a great number of women, servants, and children, all the provinces of the empire were filled with captives, among whom were several kings, and women of distinction. The emperor caused some of their waggons to be burnt, and gave the rest, with a great number of slaves, to the public ^d. For this victory, Claudius took the surname of Gothicus ^e, in the second year of his reign, that is, before the twenty-fourth of March of the present year 270, but soon after died at Sirmium of the plague, which had contributed so much to his victory over the Goths. He was succeeded by his brother Quintillus, during whose short reign the Goths, who had made their escape from mount Hæmus, plundered the city of Anquialum in Thrace, and made an attempt upon Nicopolis in Lower Mœsia ; but were driven out of that province

^t Zof. ibid. Claud. vit. p. 205. Syncel. p. 384. ^u Zof. p. 653. ^w Zonar. p. 239. ^x Idem, ibid. ^y Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 445. Claud. vit. p. 206. Zof. l. i. p. 654.

The land forces submit, and are made prisoners.

They plunder
the city of Anquialum.

^z Zof. ibid. ^a Claud. vit. p. 206. ^b Ibid. p. 204, 206. ^c Univ. hist. vol. xv. p. 252, 253. ^d Claud. vit. p. 205. Syncel. p. 384. Zonar. p. 239. Pan. ix. p. 191. Dexip. legat p. 10. ^e Goltz. p. 118.

province by the Roman troops quartered there ^f. Ammi-anus speaks of their taking both Anquialum and Nicopolis ^g; but this must have happened in some other irruption. The same year 270, the Goths, notwithstanding ^{Make new} the losses they had sustained, broke anew into the empire, ^{inroads into} and, entering Pannonia, laid waste that province; which ^{the empire;} Aurelian, who had been just raised to the empire, no ^{but are} sooner understood, than he left Rome, and, putting him- ^{driven out by} self at the head of the army, marched against them. As the enemy did not retire at his approach, a battle ensued, which lasted till night coming on parted the two armies, without the least advantage on either side. However, the Goths, not caring to renew the combat, repassed the Danube in the dead of the night, and sent embas-sadors the next morning to sue for peace ^h; which was readily granted them, the Alemans being at that time in arms, and ready to invade Italy; which they did accordingly, as we have related elsewhere ⁱ. But this peace was not of a long duration; for two years after, that is, in 272, Aurelian, on his march into the east against the celebrated Zenobia, found them ravaging Thrace, and drove them out of that province; nay, he even passed the Danube, and having engaged Cannabaud, a Gothic prince, slew him, and five thousand of his men ^k. It was perhaps on this occasion, that the emperor took a chariot drawn by four stags, which he afterwards made use of in his triumphal entry into Rome; for he is said to have taken it from a Gothic prince ^l. Among the prisoners were ten women, who had fought in the habit of men, and a great many more were found among the dead. The emperor, in a letter to Gallonius Avitus, governor of Thrace, mentions some Gothic women of distinction, whom he had sent to Perinthus to be kept there, and entertained in a manner suitable to their rank ^m. Among these was a woman of the blood royal, named Hunila, whom the emperor gave in marriage to Bonosus, one of his generals, who, in the reign of Probus, usurped the sovereignty, as we have related elsewhere ⁿ. Two years after, the Goths ^{They settle} settled in Dacia beyond the Danube, abandoned by Au- ^{in Dacia.} relian, ^{Year after}
 Christ 274.

^f Claud. vit. p. 206. ^g Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 445.
^h Zof. l. i. p. 654, 655. ⁱ Univers. hist. vol. vi. p.
 188. ^k Aur. vit. p. 216. ^l Ibid. p. 220. ^m Bo-nos. vit. p. 247. ⁿ Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 284.

They conclude a peace with Probus. They are defeated by Dioclesian. Year after Christ 289.

relian, who was well apprised, that he could not maintain it, without an immense charge, in the midst of so many barbarous nations °. The following year 275, they entered, in separate and numerous bodies, Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, and Cilicia, pretending to have been invited by Aurelian, who died some months before, to serve as auxiliaries against the Persians ; but Tacitus, who had succeeded that prince, not thinking it adviseable to trust them, endeavoured, by fair means, and even by offering them considerable sums, to induce them to return home. His offers were accepted by some ; but others refusing to retire upon any terms, the emperor, and his brother Florianus, fell upon them, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and drove the rest quite out of the empire p. Of this victory mention is made on one of Tacitus's medals q ; and from an antient inscription may be gathered, that he took the surname of Gothicus r. In 278, the second of the reign of Probus, they broke into Thrace, and advanced as far as Illyricum, laying waste the country with fire and sword ; but they no sooner heard, that the emperor was marching against them, and had already entered Rhoetia, than they withdrew, leaving their booty behind them. From Rhoetia the emperor pursued his march into Illyricum, and thence into Thrace, where he was met by deputies from all the Gothic nations, either suing for peace, says Vopiscus s, or submitting to his power. No further mention is made of the Goths till the year 289, the fifth of Dioclesian's reign, who is said to have gained a complete victory over the Sarmatians, that is, the Goths t ; nay, Eumenes writes, that the whole nation of the Sarmatians was cut off, and the province of Dacia beyond the Danube, which they had seized, re-united to the empire u. For this victory Dioclesian assumed the surname of Sarmaticus, as appears from several antient coins and inscriptions w. But that the advantages he gained over the Goths were greatly exaggerated by Eumenes, is manifest from another panegyrist x, who, in a speech he pronounced

° Aur. vit. p. 222. p Zonar. p. 240. Zof. l. i. i.
 p. 662. Prob. vit. p. 228. q Birag. p. 410. r Gruter. p. 192. s Prob. vit. p. 239. t Paneg. xi. p.
 132, 133. u Paneg. viii. p. 105, 107. w Noris de Dioclef. c. 4. p. 23. Birag. p. 426. x Mamert paneg. xi. p. 136, 137.

ced two years after, in the presence of the emperor, takes notice of the victories lately gained by the Goths over the Burgundians dwelling on the banks of the Danube, whom they had overcome, and were then bent upon utterly extirpating the whole nation, which it would be no easy matter for them to effectuate, the Burgundians being powerfully supported by the Alans and Thervingians. He adds, that another Gothic nation, assisted by the Taifalæ, made war upon the Vandals and Gepidæ. The Goths therefore were still a powerful nation, and had not been, as Eumenes boasts, utterly extirpated by Dioclesian; nay, the panegyrist, whom we have quoted above, ascribes their not disturbing the peace of the empire to their being engaged in wars with other barbarous nations, and not to any awe they stood in of Dioclesian.

FROM the year 289, the fifth of Dioclesian's reign, to the year 321, the fifteenth of Constantine's, the Goths gave no disturbance to the empire, being engaged, as we have observed above, in wars with the neighbouring nations. But all we know of these wars is, that they not only overcome the Burgundians, but likewise the Vandals, with their king Visumar, a prince of great renown, and descended from the Asdingi, the most illustrious family of that nation. The Vandals were, it seems quite driven out; for we are told, that they begged and obtained Pannonia of the emperor Constantine^y. The Goths were no sooner disengaged from other wars, than they broke into the empire; but they were overcome by Constantine in several battles fought at Campana in Pannonia, and at Marga and Bonnonia in upper Mœsia^z. Zosimus speaks of a city besieged by Raufimodes king of the Sarmatians, and relieved by Constantine, who, having defeated the enemy, and put them to flight, pursued them cross the Danube, and forced them to a second battle, in which great numbers of them were slain, and among the rest the king himself. Such as escaped the general slaughter, submitted to Constantine, who returned from this expedition with an incredible number of captives^a. Notwithstanding this defeat, the following year the Goths broke anew into the empire, while the emperor was busied in making a port at Thessalonica, and, over-running Thrace and Mœsia, ravaged both provinces, and

They overcome the Burgundians and Vandals.

But are overcome by Constantine.

I 2

^y Jorn. rer. Vandal. l. i. c. 23. ^a Idem, ibid.

^z Zos. l. ii. p. 680. Optat.

and took a great many prisoners ^b. It was on occasion of this irruption, that Constantine enacted the two laws, dated the twenty-eighth of April 323, whereof the one commands those to be burnt alive, who shall lend the least assistance to the barbarians, or receive any part of their booty; the other forbids the tribunes of the cohorts, and the other subalterns, to suffer the soldiers to be absent from the camp and their colours, on pain of death, in time of war; and of banishment, and confiscation of their estates, in time of peace ^c. Constantine marched against the Goths with incredible expedition, and, falling upon them, gave them a total overthrow, and pursued them with great slaughter into the dominions of Licinius; which that prince highly resenting, a war was kindled between him and Constantine, of which we have spoken at length elsewhere ^d. Some writers are of opinion, that the victory gained at this time over the Goths gave rise to the Gothic sports, which began, according to Bucherius's kalendar, on the fourth, and ended on the ninth, of February. The Goths, thus overcome, sued for peace; which was granted them, upon their setting at liberty all the prisoners they had taken ^e; nay Constantine entered, it seems, into an alliance with them; for they assisted him against Licinius with a body of forty-thousand men, who were distinguished by the name of Fæderati, or allies ^f. These are, without all doubt, the Goths, who, as we read in an anonymous writer published by Valesius ^g, fought at the battle of Chalcedon, under the conduct of one of their princes named Aliquaea. Notwithstanding the peace and alliance they had made with Constantine, they began about eight years after, that is, in 332, to make new inroads into the empire. Zosimus writes, that the Taifalæ, a Gothic nation, having broken into the Roman territories with five hundred horse, Constantine, who was then in Mœsia, suffered them to lay waste the country to the very gates of his camp; and that, instead of putting his troops in battle-array to oppose them, he betook himself to a precipitous flight, after having lost great part of his army ^h. Zosimus is the only author, who relates

They assist Constantine against Lici-nius.

They make new inroads into the empire.

^b Ammian. p. 474.

p. 272.

anonym. p. 474.

21. p. 640.

^h Zos. l. ii. p. 687.

^c Cod. Theod. l. vii. tit 1 leg. 5.

^d Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 395, & seq. Ammian.

^e Idem ibid.

^f Jorn. rer. Goth. c.

^g Anonym. Ammian. per Val. subjunct.

relates this event, altogether incredible. Socrates tells us, that the Goths and Sarmatians over-ran some provinces, but were overcome and driven out by Constantineⁱ. The same year, a war breaking out between the Goths and Sarmatians, the latter had recourse to Constantine, who, glad of the opportunity that offered to humble that fierce nation, fell upon them while they were busied in plundering the territories of the Sarmatians, and gained a memorable victory over them on the twentieth of April. Near an hundred thousand of the enemy were either cut in pieces, or perished after the battle with hunger and cold; which obliged Araric their king to sue for peace, and deliver hostages to the emperor, among whom was his own son^k. This victory is ascribed by some to Constantine Cæsar; and the emperor Julian tells us, that one of Constantine's sons awed the Goths with his victories^l. But Eutropius^m and Eusebiusⁿ tell us in express terms, that the Goths were overcome by Constantine in a great battle; nay Eusebius writes, that Constantine scorning to pay tribute to the barbarians, as other emperors had done, marched against them, while they were engaged in a war with the Sarmatians, and, having subdued the whole nation, obliged, what by dint of arms, what by treaties, the innumerable tribes, into which they were divided, to obey his commandsⁿ. Sozomen and Socrates write, that the victory he gained over them was so evidently miraculous, that the Goths, acknowledging the power of the God adored by Constantine, great numbers of them embraced the christian religion, which had been first preached among them about the year 270^p (A). Jornandes takes no notice of the victory

But receive dreadful overthrow.
Year after
Christ 332.

ⁱ Socrat. l. i. c. 11. p. 48.

^k Anonym. Ammian. p.

376. ^l Jul. orat. i. p. 16.

^m Eutrop. p. 538.

ⁿ Euseb. vit. Const. l. iv. p. 529.

^o Idem ibid. l. i. c.

8. p. 409.

^p Soz. l. i. c. 8. p. 411. Socrat. l. i. c.

34. p. 48.

(A) The Goths, says Sozomen (1), and the other barbarous nations dwelling on the banks of the Danube, had embraced the christian religion long before Constantine was sole master of the empire, providence having made use of the very ravages they committed victory gained over the Goths by Constantine; but only tells us, that they supplied his army with a body of forty thousand men, which was kept always complete^q. Eutropius writes, that Constantine, having granted a peace to the Goths, left among them a great opinion of his humanity and good-nature^r; and Eusebius, that he even preferred to great dignities and employments the most illustrious among them^s. In the time of Themistius was still to be seen at Constantinople, behind the hall where the senate used to assemble, a statue, which Constantine had caused to be erected in honour of the father of Athanaric king of the Goths; but this was done, says our author, to soften and gain over that barbarian^t.

I 3.

(1) Soz. l. ii. c. 6. p. 454.

They serve in the Roman army.

THE Goths not only continued quiet, but served the Romans with great fidelity, during the remaining part of Constantine's reign, and in the reign of Constans, Julian, Jovian, and Valentinian I^u. But in 364, the first of Valens, ^q Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 21. p. 640. ^r Eutrop. p. 588.

^s Euseb. vit. Constant. l. iv. c. 7. p. 530. ^t Themist.
orat xv. p. 191. ^u Liban. orat. xii. p. 309.

committed under Gallienus and his successors, to convert them to the true faith; for, having crossed over from Thrace into Asia; and there taken an incredible number of captives, and amongst the rest several holy ecclesiastics, who, by only invoking the name of Jesus, cured their sick, and delivered such among them as were possessed with the devil, they began to hearken to their doctrine; and observing, on the other hand, that their lives were quite blameless, many of them resolved to follow the example, that was set them by such wonderful men, and to acknowledge the God, whom they adored. Accordingly they took them for their teachers, hearkened with respect to their instructions, received the sacrament of baptism, built churches, and there celebrated, like other christians, the holy mysteries of our religion. Having embraced our faith, they divested themselves of their former fierceness, and led thenceforth more regular lives. Thus Sozomen, and what he writes is confirmed by Philostorgius, who, speaking of the ravages they committed in Asia, Galatia, and Cappadocia, under Valerian and Gallienus in 266, tells us, that they carried back with them, among the many other captives, the ancestors of Wulphilas, who, about the latter end of the fourth century, was revered by them as their lens, they broke into Thrace, and laid waste that province^w. The emperor, who was yet scarce well-seated on his throne, instead of employing his troops against them, sent them a considerable sum; which they no sooner received, than they forbore all hostilities, and returned home^x. The following year 365, while the emperor was in Bithynia, news was brought him that the Goths were ready to break anew into Thrace. Hereupon Valens dispatched a body of troops to reinforce those, that, under the command of count Julian, were posted on the banks of the Danube; which prevented their passing that river^y.

In

^w Ammian. l. xxvi. p. 315.

^x Them. orat. viii. p. 119.

^y Ammian. p. 322.

their prophet (2). This gives some light to what we read in St. Basil, viz. that from Cappadocia were brought to the Goths the first seeds of the christian religion (3). St. Cyril of Jerusalem in 347, names the Goths and Sarmatians among the nations that had bishops, priests, deacons, monks, virgins, and even martyrs (4); for the whole nation did not at once embrace the christian religion; nay, after it was preached among them, they had some pagan kings, who persecuted the christians (5). Sozomen writes, that the barbarians, who inhabited Gaul, and the banks of the Rhine, down to the ocean, embraced the christian religion by the same means, and at the same time, as those who dwelt on the Danube (6). However, we find no footsteps of christianity among the Franks, whom Sozomen seems chiefly to hint at, till the reign of Clovis, which began about the year 508. Eutyches, who began according to St. Basil (7), the conversion of the Goths, and the other illustrious captives, fulfilled in a literal sense what we read in the prophet Isaiah: And the people shall take them, and bring them to their place, and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids; and they shall take them captives whose captives they were, and they shall rule over their oppressors (8). To them may be likewise applied the words of Tobit, In the land of my captivity do I praise him, and declare his might and majesty to a sinful nation (9).

I 4

(2) Philost. l. ii. c. 5. p. 470, 471.

(3) Basil. epist.

cccxxxviii. p. 330.

(4) Cyrill. Hierosol. car. xvi. p.

86. (5) Idem, car. x. p. 92.

(6) Soz. l. ii. c.

6. p. 450.

(7) Basil. ibid.

(8) Isa. c. iv. ver. 2.

(9) Tobit, c. xiii. ver. 6.

They assist the usurper Procopius.

In the mean time Procopius having revolted, and assumed the title of emperor, the Goths, espousing his cause, sent a body of three thousand men to his assistance ; but Procopius being defeated, taken, and put to death, before their arrival, they continued in the territories of the empire, committing great ravages in Thrace and Mœsia. Valens dispatched a strong detachment against them, who, having cut off their retreat, obliged them to lay down their arms, and yield themselves prisoners^z. Hermanaric was then king of the Goths, of those at least, who by Ammianus are styled Greuthongi, and by Jornandes, Ostrogoths ; but the above-mentioned body of troops had been sent to the assistance of Procopius by Athanaric, whom Ammianus calls sometimes one of the most powerful men among the Goths^a, and sometimes the judge of the Thervingian Goths^b, that is, according to Jornandes, of the Visigoths^c. He was a man of great courage, and yet his courage, says Themistius^d, fell short of his penetration, eloquence, and address. He no sooner received the news of the captivity of his men, than he dispatched ambassadors to Valens, requiring they might be set at liberty, since they had been sent by a friend and ally of the Romans to the assistance of a Roman emperor. At the same time the letters were produced, which he had received from Procopius. On the other hand, Valens sent Victor, general of the horse, to complain of Athanaric, for assisting a rebel against his lawful sovereign. The Goths answered, that they had looked upon Procopius as the kinsman of Constantine ; and that it was not their business to examine whether he was, or was not, a lawful prince ; and therefore, if they were deceived therein, the emperor ought to excuse them^e. But Valens could not be prevailed upon to set the captive Goths at liberty, being bent, as he was then engaged in no other wars, upon humbling that powerful nation^f. With this view, great preparations were made throughout the empire ; which occasioned no small consternation among the people, who, as they had a mighty opi-

Which gives rise to a war with Valens.

^z Zof. l. iv. p. 740. Ammian. l. xxvi. p. 315. Eunap. excerpt. p. 18.

^a Ammian. l. xxxi. p. 440.

^b Idem,

l. xxvii. p. 341.

^c Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 23. p. 643.

^d Themist. p. 136.

^e Ammian. l. xxvii. p. 349. Eunap. p. 18, Zof. p. 748.

^f Zof. p. 740. Eunap. ibid. Ammian. p. 338.

nion of the valour of the Goths, dreaded the issue of this war^g. At the same time, in the dismantling of Chalcedon, certain verses were found engraved on a stone, which doubled their fears; for they seemed antient, and foretold a dreadful inundation of barbarians in Thrace^h. The emperor himself seems to have been under no small apprehension of this war; for Theodoret tells us, that, before he set out on so dangerous an expedition, in order to render Heaven propitious to his undertaking, he received the sacrament of baptismⁱ. The Goths, on the other hand, finding the emperor bent upon war, began to draw together their forces, with a design to attack him the first; which Valens no sooner understood, than he ordered his troops to take the field, though in the depth of winter, and soon after came in person to head them. Upon his arrival, he sent strong detachments to guard the banks of the Danube, and encamped, with the rest of the army, in the neighbourhood of Marcianopolis, the metropolis of Lower Mœsia^k. Ammianus^l and Zosimus^m tell us, that early in the spring he left Marcianopolis, and, having passed the Danube on a bridge of boats, he ravaged the enemy's country far and near, without meeting with the least opposition, the Goths having retired at his approach to the neighbouring mountains. In the beginning of the autumn he led back his army to the Roman dominionsⁿ, and passed the winter at Marcianopolis, whence, as soon as the season was fit for action, he marched to the banks of the Danube, with a design to cross that river, and pursue the ravages he had begun the year before; but the Danube continuing swelled beyond measure the whole summer, he was obliged to remain encamped in the same place, till the latter end of autumn, when he returned to Marcianopolis, and there took up his winter-quarters^o.

Who enters their country, and lays it waste.
Year after
Christ 367.

THE following year 369, the emperor marched into Lesser Scythia, and, having passed the Danube at Noviodunum, advanced far into the enemy's country, destroying all with fire and sword. The Goths, not daring to keep the field, lay concealed in the woods and morasses, whence they ^g Ammian. l. xxvi. p. 320. ^j Jorn. c. 9. p. 642, 643.

^h Eunap. excerpt. p. 18, 19. ⁱ Theodor. l. iv. c. 11. p. 674.
^k Eunap. c. 5. p. 86. ^l Philostor. l. ix. c. 8. p. 125. ^m Ammian. p. 340.
ⁿ Zof. p. 741. ^o Idem ibid. ^p Ammian. l. xxvii. p. 341.

He defeats
Athanaric.

The Goths
sue for peace and obtain it.
Year after
Christ 369.

they frequently sallied out upon the Romans. Against them the emperor employed not the soldiers, but the servants of the army, and those who attended the baggage, promising them a certain sum for each head they should bring. Hereupon, avarice supplying the place of courage, they resolutely entered the woods and marshes, and, hunting the Goths like wild beasts, put great numbers of them to the sword in their very asylums; which struck them with such terror, that they sent ambassadors to sue for peace^p. Thus Zosimus; but Ammianus writes, that Valens, having attacked and overcome in several encounters the Greuthongi, a warlike nation of the Goths, dwelling at a considerable distance from the Danube, at last gave a total overthrow to Athanaric, who, at the head of a numerous army, had ventured to engage him^q. After this victory, Valens returned to Marcianopolis, with a design to winter there, and renew the war early in the spring. But in the mean time the Goths earnestly suing, by repeated embassies, for peace, he was at last prevailed upon by the senate of Constantinople to hearken to their proposals^r. What induced the senate to become mediators in behalf of a nation by them so much dreaded, and now reduced to the utmost distress, we are no-where told. Valens, after returning a favourable answer to the ambassadors, approached the Danube, and appointed Victor and Arintheus to treat with the Goths. After some conferences, a peace was concluded highly honourable for the Romans; for, in virtue of this treaty, the Goths were not, for the future, to pass the Danube, or set foot on the Roman territories, on any account whatsoever, barring that of trade, which was now confined to two cities on the Danube; whereas they had been formerly allowed to carry it on with what cities of the empire they pleased. They were not to expect or claim the pensions which had been paid them annually by other emperors; but Valens consented to continue Athanaric's pension to him. This peace was ratified and signed by Valens and Athanaric, who met for that purpose in boats in the middle of the Danube, the latter absolutely refusing to pass that river, by reason his father had obliged him, as he pretended, solemnly to swear never to tread on Roman ground^s. Valens, having thus concluded a peace

^p Zof. l. iv. p. 741.
^{or}at. x. p. 133.

^q Ammian. p. 341.
^s Idem, p. 135. Ammian. p. 341, 342.

^r Themist.

peace with the Goths, ordered the forts on the Danube to be repaired, and some new ones to be built, and then, leaving strong garrisons in them, as if he distrusted the barbarians, he returned to Marcianopolis, and from thence to Constantinople^t. At this time Hermanaric was king of the Goths, as we have hinted above; he was descended from the noble family of the Amali, and had signalized himself in several wars; insomuch that he was compared to Alexander the Great. Jornandes names the many northern nations he subdued; but he might as well have spared himself that trouble, most of them being utterly unknown^u. Among the rest he mentions the Heruli dwelling near the Palus Mæotis; the Venedi on the German ocean; and the Æstii on the borders of the present Prussia and Poland; nay, Ablavius, as quoted by Jornandes^w, assures us, that Hermanaric was obeyed by all the nations both of Scythia and Germany. However, not thinking himself in a condition to withstand the Hunns, who, passing the Palus Mæotis in 376, over-ran his country, he chose rather to lay violent hands on himself, than to behold the calamities that threatened his people^x. He was succeeded by Vithimir, who, attempting to make head against the Hunns, was killed in a battle. His son Vitheric, driven out by the Hunns, retired with his people to the present Podolia, lying between the Nieper and the Danube. Athanaric, king or chief of the Thervingi or Visigoths, alarmed at this sudden irruption of the Hunns, encamped with all the forces he could assemble, on the banks of the Danaestus or Niester, in order to dispute with the enemy the passage of that river, parting the country of the Thervingi from that of the Greuthongi or Ostrogoths. But the Hunns, falling upon him when least expected, obliged him to abandon his country, and take refuge in the present Moldavia, where he fortified himself with a wall from the Pruth to the Danube^y.

The Goths are either driven out by, or forced to submit to, the Hunns. Year after Christ 376.

A general consternation being now spread among the Goths, such of them as had the good luck to escape the dreadful havock, which the Hunns made of their nation, either submitted to them, or fled for refuge to the Roman dominions. Two hundred thousand of them were admitted Admitted by Valens into Thrace.

^t Idem ibid. Themist. p. 133. Zos. p. 742.
rer. Goth. c. 23. p. 643.
l. xxxi. p. 439.

^w Idem ibid.

^y Idem, p. 440.

^u Jorn.
^x Ammian.

admitted by Valens into Thrace, upon their promising to live peaceably there, and to serve, when wanted, in the Roman armies. But, being justly provoked at the cruel treatment they met with from the Roman officers, who were to supply them with provisions, they had scarce entered Thrace, when they began to mutiny, and plunder the country.

A bloody war between them and the Romans.

Having submitted to Theodosius, they receive lands in Thrace.
Year after
Christ 382.

This gave rise to a long and bloody war between them and the Romans, the particulars whereof we have related at length in our Roman history^z, to which we refer the readers. At length they submitted to Theodosius I. in the year 382, and were allowed by him to settle in Thrace and Moesia; which two provinces were almost quite depopled by the frequent incursions of the neighbouring barbarians, and the late destructive war^a. The emperor exempted them from all the tributes and taxes, that were paid by the other subjects of the empire. Great numbers of them entered into the Roman service, but formed a separate body, and were commanded by officers of their own nation; which proved the source of many evils: for as they were well acquainted with the avarice, injustice, and cruelty of the Roman officers, they refused to put themselves into their power, and insisted upon their continuing united, in order to secure themselves against such insults, as they had reason to apprehend, when dispersed among the Roman troops. Zosimus does not forget to blame the conduct of Theodosius, and his want of foresight, in suffering them to continue united, not only in the army, but in the countries that were allotted them^b; and Synesius thinks it was highly impolitic to suffer them to settle upon any terms within the Roman dominions; for speaking to Arcadius, The Goths says he, after having been punished by the arms of Theodosius, for the evils they had brought upon the empire, were forced, with their wives and children, to implore the clemency of that prince, who, as he was naturally generous and merciful, suffered himself to be overcome by the prayers of those, whom he had overcome with his arms. He granted them all the rights and privileges of the Roman citizens, and distributed lands among them; which was encouraging all the other barbarians to demand, and even to exact, the same favour; and hence flowed the many evils, under which the empire has long groaned, ^z Univers. hist. vol. xvi. 312—340, 650—353.

orat. xvi. p. 199.

^b Zcs. p. 758.

^a Themist.

groaned ^c. Thus Synesius. But Themistius, who lived in those very times, in a speech, which he pronounced before the emperor himself, told him, that he had learnt by experience how dangerous a thing it was to reduce the Goths to despair ^d. And truly, as the Hunns had seized on their country, the emperor must either have allowed them settlements within the Roman dominions, or cut them all off; which it was highly dangerous for him to attempt, the Goths not being yet weakened to such a degree, as not to be able to make a stand, and even endanger the empire. Besides, people were wanting to inhabit and cultivate Thrace, where the lands had long lain fallow and uncultivated. Hence Zosimus himself, tho' no great friend to Theodosius, owns, that, partly by his victories, and partly by his treaties, he put a stop to the evils, that had almost overwhelmed the empire; that under him trade began to revive, and likewise agriculture, the husbandman cultivating his lands, and attending his flocks, without the least apprehension of seeing himself bereft by the barbarians of the fruits of his labour ^e. What chiefly introduced the Goths to lay down their arms, and submit to Theodosius, was, if Orosius is to be credited, that prince's generous behaviour to Athanaric, who being, by a faction at home, driven out of the country, which he had kept, in spite of the Hunns, beyond the Danube, came to Constantinople, notwithstanding his pretended oath never to tread on Roman ground. The emperor went out to meet him, received him with great marks of friendship, and attended him into the city, which he entered on the eleventh of January 381 ^f; but died soon after, viz. on the twenty-fifth of the same month (B). The emperor caused him to

Athanaric
takes refuge with Theodofius, and dies at Constantinople.

^c Synes. ad reg. ad Arcad. 211. ^e Zof. p. 759. ^d Themist. orat. xvi. p. ^f Idem, ibid. Ammian. p. 214. Socrat. p. 267. Themist. orat. xv. p. 190, 191. Marcel. Idat. chron.

(B) Prosper writes, that Athanaric was killed (10); but he was therein certainly mistaken; for Ammianus, who lived in those times, and count Marcellinus, tell us in express terms, that he died a natural death (11); and Zosimus, with all the other writers, only that he died, which must be understood of a natu-

to be buried after the Roman manner, with such pomp and solemnity, that the Goths, who had attended him in his flight, out of gratitude to the emperor, who had thus honoured the memory of their deceased prince, took upon them to guard the banks of the Danube, and prevented the Romans from being attacked on that side ^g; nay, the Goths, who had, for several years, maintained a war with the Romans in the very heart of the empire, were so taken with the generosity and good nature of Theodosius, that they renounced all further thoughts of war, and submitted to the laws of the empire. Thus Orosius ^h, and likewise Idatius and count Marcellinus ⁱ. Soon after the submission of the Goths, a soldier of that nation having committed some disorder at Constantinople, the populace fell upon him, and, having murdered him, threw his body into the sea. The emperor, fearing the Goths might upon this provocation, fly to arms, and renew the war, resented his death to such a degree, that he deprived the people of the bread, which, by his orders, was daily distributed among them. The emperor however, was appeased after a few hours, and the order he had given revoked ^k.

THE Goths, who were allowed by Theodosius to settle in Thrace, where, for the most part, Thervingians, or Visigoths. As for the Greuthongians, or Ostrogoths, they continued in their antient seats, but subject to the Hunns, who, as we have hinted above, suffered them to be governed by their own kings. However, great numbers of them, not able to brook that subjection, in the year 386, broke a natural death; for, had it been violent, they would have expressed themselves in a different manner, Zosimus especially, a declared enemy to Theodosius, would not have let slip this opportunity of upbraiding that prince with treachery and perfidiousness, had he only suspected him to have been any-ways accessory to the death of Athanaric, who had put himself under his protection. The manner he speaks of this death plainly shews, that no one entertained the least suspicion of any violence. Hence De Pontac thinks we ought to read in St. Prosper, occidit, instead of occiditur.

^g Ammian. p. 342. Zos. p. 759. Oros. l. vii. c. 34. p. 220. ^h Idem, ibid. ⁱ Idat. Marcel. chron. ^k Liban. orat. xiv. xv. p. 394, 410.

broke into the empire under the conduct of Odotheus, whom Claudian honours with the title of king ¹. Their design was to settle, as their countrymen the Visigoths had done, in some of the Roman provinces; but Theodosius, fearing the empire might be thus over-run by the barbarians, marched against them in person, with his son Arcadius, gave them a total overthrow, and returned, with an incredible number of captives, to Constantinople, which he entered in triumph on the twelfth of October of the present year ^m. This victory is likewise mentioned by count Marcellinus, who tells us, that Theodosius delivered Thrace from the barbarians, who invaded that province; and that he afterwards returned, with his son, in triumph to Constantinople ⁿ. Claudian too speaks of a victory gained in the fourth consulship of Honorius, that is, in the present year 386, over the Greuthongians, and their king Odotheus ^o. This is, without all doubt, the victory, which Zosimus describes in two places; but to rob Theodosius of the glory that was due to him, he would make us believe, that it was entirely owing to Promotus, who commanded in Thrace, in quality of general of the foot ^p. According to that writer's account, Odotheus having assembled an incredible number of barbarians, among whom were several nations never before heard of, Promotus fell upon them, as they were attempting to pass the Danube, and having utterly defeated them, invited Theodosius, who was encamped at a small distance, to come and see the great number of prisoners, and the immense booty, he had taken ^q. This, according to Zosimus, is all the share Theodosius had in that victory. But all other authors suppose the emperor to have commanded his troops in person; nay Claudian tells us, that he engaged Odotheus himself, who was killed in the battle ^r. The far greater part of this numerous army being either cut in pieces, taken prisoners, or drowned in the Danube, the emperor ordered Majoranus, who commanded under him, to cross the Danube, and lay waste the enemy's country; which he did accordingly, without meeting with the least opposition ^s. Theodosius ordered all the prisoners to be set at liberty, and even made them rich presents, in order to entice them into his service, says

The Ostrogoths break into the empire.

But are defeated by Theodosius, Year after Christ 386.

¹ Claud. conf. Honor. iv. p. 55. ^m Idat. p. 61.
^a Marc. chron. p. 6. ^o Claud. ubi supra: ^p Zos. l. iv.
P. 759, & 760—764. ^q Idem, p. 759: ^r Claud. ibid.
^e Sidon. car. v. p. 310.

says Zosimus, and employ them against Maximus, of whom we have spoken at length elsewhere ^u.

The Goths stirred up by Rufinus to invade the empire.

THE Goths continued quiet from this time to the year 395, the first of Arcadius and Honorius, when they were stirred up by the famous Rufinus to invade the empire. Rufinus governed with an absolute sway in the east under Arcadius ; and Stilicho, with the same arbitrary sway, ruled in the west under Honorius ; but as the latter pretended to have been appointed by Theodosius guardian to both his children, he was preparing to march into the east to dispossess his rival of the authority he had usurped. Rufinus therefore, to divert this storm, resolved to set all in a flame, and involve the whole empire in the utmost confusion. With this view, he privately stirred up the Hunns, who advanced as far as Antioch, destroying all with fire and sword, as we have related above. At the same time, he encouraged the celebrated Alaric to put himself at the head of his countrymen the Visigoths, and to break into Greece. Alaric was descended from the family of the Balthi, the most illustrious of the Gothic nation, after that of the Amali. He passed the Danube in 376, with his countrymen driven out of their own country by the Hunns, and served, with great reputation, in the war between the Romans and Goths, which lasted from that time to the year 382, when they all submitted to Theodosius, and were allowed to settle in Thrace, upon condition of their serving, when wanted, in the Roman armies. Pursuant to this agreement, they attended Theodosius in his expedition against the usurper Eugenius ; on which occasion Alaric commanded a body of his countrymen. As Theodosius had preferred him to no higher rank, he was highly dissatisfied, and even threatened to revolt. Rufinus therefore, finding him thus disposed, encouraged him by his emissaries, and even by privately conveying to him considerable sums, to assemble as many barbarians as he could, and with them lay waste the Roman provinces, assuring him, that he might penetrate as far as Greece, without the least opposition ^w. Alaric, thus animated, assembled a numerous army, consisting chiefly of his his countrymen, among whom served a body of Hunns, who, that winter, had passed the Danube on the ice, and, entering Pannonia, laid waste that province, as he did afterwards Macedon and Thessaly. When he drew near the famous streights of Thermopylæ Gerontius, one of Rufinus's creatures, who guarded them, withdrew, pursuant to the orders he had received from his patron, and opened a free passage for the barbarians into Greece, where they raged with incredible fury, rifling the temples, pillaging the cities, and committing such ravages and devastations, as were felt by the unhappy inhabitants for many years after, Antiochus, at that time pro-consul of Achaia, and another of Rufinus's creatures, never offering to oppose them *. Thus was the whole country between Dalmatia, the Adriatic gulf, and the Euxine sea, laid waste, and the city of Constantinople itself, in a manner, besieged, parties of the barbarians advancing, with great boldness, to the very gates of that metropolis. Rufinus, attired after the Gothic manner, went out, as he said, to treat with them, and was received by the barbarians with extraordinary marks of esteem; which confirmed the suspicion most people entertained of his treachery y. News of these ravages were not sooner brought to Stilicho, than he resolved to march to the relief of Greece; in which undertaking he embarked the more readily, as he hoped it would afford him an opportunity of ruining his rival Rufinus, and getting the whole power of both empires into his own hands. Leaving there-fore Gaul, where he then was, he set forward with all the western troops, and those likewise of the east, that had been left in the west after the defeat of Eugenius. He passed, with incredible expedition, the Julian Alps, crossed Dalmatia, and, entering Thessaly, was but at a small distance from the enemy's army, when an officer arrived in the camp, with a peremptory order from Arcadius to send him forthwith the oriental troops, and return with the rest into the west. This order Rufinus had procured, concluding that, if the barbarians were overcome and reprefsed, the storm would fall upon his own head. However, Stilicho, not daring to disobey it, sent back the troops belonging to the eastern empire, under the conduct of one Gainas,

^t Zof. p. 764.

^u Univers. hist. vol. v. p. 47—79.

^w Claud. in Ruf. l. ii. p. 21. Jornan. rer. Goth. c. 29. p. 651. Socrat. l. vii. c. 16. p. 346. Zof. p. 783. Mar. ad ann. 395.

* Claud. ubi sup. Zos. ibid. Philostorg. p. 254. Oros. l. vii. p. 221. y Claud. ibid. p. 21, 22.

Gainas, by nation a Goth, and his intimate friend, and returned with the rest to Italy, leaving the Goths to pursue their ravages without controul ^z. Zosimus writes, that they spared the city of Athens, defended, says he, by Minerva and Achilles, whose power Alaric dreaded, and therefore entered the city as a friend, and would not suffer his men to commit any ravages in Attica. But St. Jerom, who wrote at that very time, tells us, that the Athenians, and all the other Greeks, submitted to the barbarians ^a. Claudian names the Athenians among those, who were carried into captivity ^b; and Eunapius ascribes to the ravages committed by Alaric the entire suppression of the ceremonies, religion and sacrifices of Ceres and Proserpine, which had continued at Athens till that time ^c. Thus the remains of idolatry, which the christian princes had never been able to abolish with their laws, were at length utterly extirpated by Alaric and his Goths. During these ravages, several philosophers, over-zealous for the worship of their gods, were either put to the sword by the Goths, or died of grief to see their mysteries despised, their gods trod under foot, and their altars pulled down. Among the former were Proterus, Hilarius, and Priscus, a celebrated magician, who had been one of the emperor Julian's chief favourites ^d. Thus the Goths continued in Greece, and the other Roman provinces, all the year 395, and part of 396, destroying all with fire and sword, and sending into their own country an incredible number of captives, with the whole wealth of the ravaged provinces.

Stilicho returns to the relief of Greece.

But suffers Alaric to escape.

As Arcadius, to whom these provinces belonged, seemed entirely to neglect them, Stilicho, pitying the condition to which they were reduced, set out anew with the western troops to relieve them. He embarked on the Adriatic sea, and, landing in Peloponnesus, cut off great numbers of the barbarians in several encounters, and obliged the rest to take refuge on a mountain in Arcadia, named Pholoe, at a small distance from Pifa. But, after he had shut them up on all sides, and even turned the course of a river, that supplied them with water, he suffered them, by his misconduct, says Zosimus, to escape, to withdraw out

^z Zof. p. 781. Claud. ibid. p. 24. Soz. l. viii. p. 754.

^a Hier. epist. iii. p. 26.

^b Claud. ibid.

^c Eunap.

^e 5. p. 74, 75.

^d Idem, c. 6. p. 93, 94.

out of Peloponnesus unmolested, and to ravage Epirus in their retreat ^e. After this, he returned to Italy, suffering his soldiers to destroy and carry off whatever had escaped the avarice and fury of the Goths ^f. Orosius thinks that Stilicho's design was to deliver Greece, without destroying the barbarians, whom he might, some time or other, have occasion to employ; and therefore he often overcame them, often shut them up on all sides, but always suffered them in the end to escape ^g. But the poet Claudian tells us, that Stilicho would have put Alaric and all his men to the sword, as he had already killed great numbers of them on the mountains of Arcadia, had not Arcadius taken them under his protection, and ordered Stilicho to withdraw his troops out of Greece, a province belonging to the eastern empire ^h. Arcadius had, without doubt, been induced to conclude a peace with the barbarians by the eunuch Eutropius, who had succeeded Rufinus, not only in his power and employments, but in his cruelty, avarice, and other detestable qualities. He was no less jealous of Stilicho's great power, than his predecessor had been; and therefore, to rob him of the glory of delivering the empire, and triumphing over the barbarians, he persuaded the emperor to conclude a peace with them, and order Stilicho, to whom he must otherwise have been highly indebted, to leave the barbarians, and return with his forces into the west. Soon after, Alaric was appointed, no doubt in virtue of this treaty, commander of the troops in East Illyricum, which comprised Greece, and the other provinces he had laid waste ⁱ. Claudian complains, and indeed, with a great deal of reason, that the barbarian, who, in defiance to the most sacred ties, had turned his arms against the empire, should be preferred and enriched, and the person, to whom the empire owed its safety, stripped of all his honours, and reduced to poverty ^k; for Stilicho, though he immediately retired with his troops out of Greece, pursuant to the orders of Arcadius, yet that prince caused him to be declared a public enemy by the senate of Constantinople, and the lands he had in the east to be seized and confiscated ^l. It was, without all doubt, after Alaric had been Alaric preferred by Arcadius.

And Stilicho declared a public enemy

K 2 raised

^e Zos. p. 784, 785.

^f Idem, ibid.

^g Oros. l.

vii c. 37. p. 221.

^h Claud. in Eutrop. l. ii. p. 113.

ⁱ Idem, ibid.

^k Idem, ibid.

^l Idem, p. 130.

raised to this dignity, and not during the war, that, coming to Athens with a small attendance, he was received by the inhabitants, as we read in Zosimus^m, with all possible marks of honour.

A B O U T three years after, new disturbances were raised in the east by two Goths, subjects of the empire, and in the Roman service, viz. Gainas and Tribigild. The former had, under Theodosius, the chief command of all the Goths, and other barbarians in the Roman armies, to which post he had been raised, by degrees, from a common soldier. He reconducted, as we have hinted above, the eastern army to Arcadius, and, on that occasion, caused Rufinus to be cut in pieces by the soldiery, in the manner we have related elsewhereⁿ. For this eminent piece of service, he was preferred by Eutropius, who succeeded Rufinus in all his employments, to the post of general of the Roman horse and foot; but, not yet satisfied, he resolved to dispatch Eutropius, as he had done Rufinus, hoping, if he was once removed, to succeed him in his power and authority. With this view he persuaded Tribigild to revolt, who, at the head of a numerous body of his countrymen under his command at Nicolia in Phrygia, over-ran that province, and likewise Pisidia, pillaging the cities, and putting to the sword such of the inhabitants as fell into his hands. Eutropius dispatched a body of troops against him, under the conduct of one Leo, who was greatly attached to his interest; but, as he was a person in every respect unfit for that command, Tribigild, falling unexpectedly upon him, cut most of his men in pieces. Leo himself, attempting to make his escape, perished among the marshes. At length Gainas, who pretended to be highly provoked against Tribigild, on account of his revolt, was sent against him; but he, keeping the whole time a private correspondence with the rebels, instead of opposing them encouraged them to rage with greater fury than ever, magnifying, in all the letters he wrote to the emperor, the conduct of Tribigild, his exploits, and the number of his troops, and suggesting, that the only means to save the empire from imminent ruin, was to comply with his demands, the chief of which was, that Eutropius, the author of the present calamities, should be delivered up into his hands. A report being spread at the same time, that the king of Persia was preparing to invade Syria, the emperor, at his request, discharges Eutropius, who is put to death.

^m Zof. p. 784

ⁿ Univers. hist. vol. xvi, p. 123.

emperor, to put an end to the domestic disturbances, resolved at last to sacrifice the minister to the welfare of the state; and accordingly, having sent for him, caused him to be stripped of the consular ensigns, and discharged him. He was afterwards banished to the island of Cyprus; but Gainas having caused several charges to be brought against him, he was conducted from thence under a strong guard to Pantychium, between Chalcedon and Nicomedia, and there tried, condemned and beheaded^o. We only hint at these events here, having related them at length elsewhere^p. Eutropius being thus dispatched, Gainas, joining Tribigild with all the forces under his command, laid waste several provinces, and, approaching Constantinople, obliged the emperor to come to an agreement with him, upon terms highly dishonourable to the imperial dignity^q. Soon after, he formed a design of plundering the city of Constantinople, and enriching himself, and his Goths, with the spoils of that wealthy metropolis; but failing in his attempt, he pulled off his mask, and, making open war upon the empire, ravaged the neighbouring country, and thence marched into the Chersonesus, with a design to cross over into Asia. But being attacked in his passage by Fravitus, who was likewise a Goth, but greatly attached to the Roman interest, he was obliged to return to the coast whence he had sailed. From the Chersonesus he marched back to Thrace, and was there, according to Socrates^r, and Sozomen^s, cut in pieces, with all his men, by the Romans, who pursued him. Zosimus writes, that, being desirous to end his days in the antient country of the Goths, he passed the Danube, but was met on the frontiers by Uldin king of the Hunns, then masters of those countries, and, after a sharp dispute, cut in pieces, with all his men^t. As for Tribigild, all we know of him is, that he perished in Thrace, before Gainas passed the Danube^u; but, in what manner, we are no-where told.

K 3

DURING

^o Zof. l. v. p. 797. Claudian. in Eutrop. l. ii. p. 110. Philostorg. l. xi. c. 6. p. 529. Chryf. tom. iii. p. 671—673. ^p Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 139—145. ^q Vide Univers. hist. ibid. p. 145. ^r Socrat. p. 303. ^s Soz. p. 763. ^t Zof. p. 798, 799. ^u Philostorg. l. xi. c. 8. p. 351.

Alaric breaks into Italy.

He enters
Italy anew.
Yar after
Christ 400.

DURING the above-mentioned disturbances raised by the Goths in the east, the western provinces were alarmed with a sudden irruption of the same barbarians, under the conduct of Alaric, Arcadius, as we have related above, entered into a treaty with him, and appointed him commander in chief of all the Roman forces quartered in East Illyricum. The Goths, who were subject to the empire, created him, according to Jornandes^w, about the same time, their chief and general, with the title of king of the Visigoths. He was, in this very year 400, when he first broke into Italy, general of the Illyrian troops; whence some have thought he made that irruption by order of Arcadius, and as his general; for Arcadius never well agreed with his brother Honorius. But it is not at all probable, that Arcadius should chuse to make war upon his brother, while most of his forces were employed against Tribigild and Gainas. What Jornandes writes seems to us far more probable, viz. that the Goths, despising both Arcadius and Honorius, and discontented because they had not sent them the usual presents, resolved to make war on the empire, in order to enrich themselves with the spoils of so many wealthy provinces; and with this view it was that they chose Alaric for their chief, and even gave him the title of king^x. However that be, it is certain, that, in the year 400, the Goths, under the conduct of Alaric, entered Italy, and committed there dreadful ravages, laying the country waste far and near, and carrying off with them an incredible number of captives, as we have related elsewhere^y. Two years after, Alaric entered Italy anew, and ravaged, without controul, the provinces of Venetia and Liguria, there being then no army in Italy to oppose him. The emperor Honorius, who then resided at Milan, not thinking himself safe there, retired to Ravenna; which thenceforth became the usual place of his residence. In the mean time Stilicho, having assembled what forces he could, marched against the enemy, whom he found encamped at Pollentia on the Tanaro in Piedmont. There the two armies engaged; but, as to the issue of the battle, there is a great disagreement among authors, as we have observed in our Roman history^z. The wife of Alaric, with

^w JORN. rer. Goth. c. 29. p. 650. & reg. c. 43. p. 653.

^x JORN. rer. Goth. p. 651.

^y Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p.

152.

^z Ibid. vol. xvi. p. 155.

with his children and daughters-in-law, fell into the hands of the Romans; which he no sooner understood, than he sent deputies to Stilicho to sue for peace; which was readily granted him, and the captives sent back, upon condition of his marching forthwith out of Italy. Pursuant to this agreement, he repassed the Po; but, having plundered the country in his retreat, Stilicho detached a strong body of barbarians against him, by whom he was defeated, and obliged to take refuge among the mountains, where they kept him blocked up, till most of his men forsaking him, and joining the Romans, he privately withdrew in the night-time, and returned through by-ways into Thrace^a. Three years after, Radagaisus invaded Italy with an army of two hundred thousand Goths, and other barbarians dwelling beyond the Danube and the Rhine, who were then all blended under the common name of Goths; but this numerous army was defeated and cut in pieces, and Radagaisus himself taken prisoner by Stilicho, with the assistance of a body of Hunns and Goths, who served the Romans as auxiliaries, under the conduct of Uldin and Sarus^b. Of this invasion we have given a particular and distinct account in our Roman history, to which we refer the reader^c.

THIS storm was scarce blown over, when another was raised by Stilicho, who, in order to kindle a war between Arcadius and Honorius, persuaded the latter, that not only West Illyricum, but the whole province, belonged to the western empire; nay, he even prevailed upon the weak prince to appoint Alaric general of all the Roman troops in West Illyricum, in order to recover, with them and his own Goths, that part of the province, which he pretended to be unjustly withheld from him by his brother Arcadius. Stilicho, in thus setting the two brother's at variance, had nothing less in view than the raising himself to the empire; for, while the Goths invaded the eastern empire, his countrymen the Vandals, and their allies, were to break into the western provinces, and there second his treacherous and wicked design^d. At the same time

K 4

^a Oros. l. vii. c. 37. p. 221. Claud. p. 160, 161, & consul. Honor. vi. p. 178—183. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 30. p. 653. ^b Zos. p. 803. Oros. ibid. ^c Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 160, 162. ^d Zos. l. v. p. 802. Soz. p. 793. Phot. c. 80. p. 180.

time that he acquainted Alaric with his promotion, he caused a considerable sum to be transmitted to him, to defray the charges of the war; which he no sooner received, than leaving Pannonia and Dalmatia, where lands had been granted to him and his Goths, he entered Epirus, then belonging to the eastern empire, and there waited for orders from Stilicho to begin hostilities. But while that general was upon the point of setting out from Ravenna to join him with the Roman forces, he was stopped by letters from Arcadius, acquainting him with the revolt of Constantine in Britain, and, by a false report, with the death of Alaric^e. Hereupon Alaric, after having long continued inactive in Epirus, left at length that country, and, bending his march towards Italy, arrived at Æmona, now Ljubljana, between Upper Pannonia and Noricum. Thence he continued his rout, and, passing the river Aquila, and the streights of the mountains that bound Pannonia on that side, where a handful of men might have stopped his whole army, he entered Noricum^f. From thence he dispatched a messenger to Arcadius, demanding a sum of money for the time he had spent in Epirus, and the trouble of marching his troops into Noricum. Upon this demand the senate being assembled, (for Honorius was then at Rome) Stilicho pleaded so warmly in his favour, that it was agreed four thousand pounds weight of gold should be sent him^g. But the emperor putting off from time to time the payment of this sum, Alaric entered Italy, and, marching strait to Rome, laid siege to that metropolis, and, in a short time, reduced it to such streights, that the unhappy inhabitants, afflicted both with the plague and famine, were obliged to redeem themselves with an immense sum; which Alaric no sooner received, than he raised the siege, and retired with his army into Hetruria^h. But soon after, he returned anew before Rome, the emperor shewing great backwardness to execute the articles of the treaty between Alaric and the Romans, which he himself had ratified. On this occasion, the Romans, after a few days siege, opened their gates to Alaric, who entered the city attended by a small guard, Alaric advances into Noricum.

He besieges Rome.

Which is redeemed with immense sums.

Year after Christ 408.

^e Soz. ibid. Zos. p. 802, 803. ^f Soz. Zos. ibid. Philostorg. l. xii. c. 2. p. 532. Rutil. l. ii. p. 141. ^g Zos. p. 805, 806. ^h Soz. p. 808. Zos. p. 817. Socr. p. 88. Univers. hist. ibid. p. 457, 458.

guard, obliged the Romans to renounce their allegiance to Honorius, and acknowledge Attalus, then prefect of Rome, for emperor. But Honorius having, in the mean time, declared, that he was ready to comply with the terms proposed by the Goths, Alaric deposed Attalus, and, leaving Rome, approached Ravenna, where the emperor then was, in order to put the last hand to the treaty of accommodation. But the emperor refusing to comply with the terms proposed to him, Alaric departed in a great rage from the neighbourhood of Ravenna, and, returning before Rome, took and plundered that wealthy metropolis, as we have related at length elsewhere ⁱ. From Rome Alaric marched into Campania, and, having ravaged that and the neighbouring provinces of Lucania, Samnium, Apulia and Calabria, he approached the streights of Sicily with a design to pass over into that island, and thence into Africa; but he was seized in the neighbourhood of Rhegium with a fit of sickness, which carried him off in a few days. The Goths chose Ataulphus, whose sister the deceased prince had married, king in his room; for to Alaric, as we have observed above, the Goths had given the title of king of the Visigoths. Ataulphus, leaving Italy after he had quite drained it of its wealth, marched into Gaul, and there reduced the cities of Narbonne and Toulouse ^k. Soon after he married with great solemnity, Placidia, the sister of Honorius, who had been taken with many other captives at Rome, and treated, both by Alaric and him, with all the respect due to her rank and sex. After this marriage, Ataulphus seemed mighty desirous of concluding a peace with Honorius, and turning his arms against the Alans, Vandals, Suevians, Burgundians, Franks, and other barbarous nations, that had broken into Gaul; but all the measures that were taken by him, and his wife Placidia, to bring about an accommodation, being defeated by Constantius, and his party, who bore a great sway at court, the war was renewed, and Ataulphus in the end obliged to retire with his Goths into Spain, where he was soon after murdered in the manner we have related in our Roman history ^l. Before his death he charged his brother, Alaric takes and plunders Rome. Year after Christ 410.

Ataulphus, his successor, invades Gaul.

Being driven out of Gaul, he retires to Spain, where he is murdered. Year after Christ 415.

ⁱ Univers. hist. vol. vi. p. 464. ^k Oros. l. ii. c. 19. p. 164. Socr. l. vii. c. 10. p. 347. Philostorg. l. xii. c. 3. p. 534. ^l Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 194.

brother, not named by any historian, to send back Placidia to the Romans, and live in friendship with them; but the Goths, instead of his brother, chose for their king Sigeric, or Sergeric, brother to Sarus, whom Ataulphus had put to death. Sigeric was no sooner proclaimed king of the Visigoths, than, to revenge the death of his brother, he caused the six children Ataulphus had by a former wife to be inhumanly murdered^m. He seemed inclined to live in peace and amity with the Romans, and desirous of being employed by them in driving out the Vandals, Alans, and Suevians, who had entered Spain, in 409, and in the space of two years reduced almost the whole country, and divided it among them; but he was assassinated by his own people the seventh day after his election, perhaps on account of his cruelty to the children of his predecessor Ataulphusⁿ. In his room was chosen Vallia, after he had caused all those to be assassinated, who stood in competition with him for the crown^o. As the chief provinces of Spain were already possessed by the Vandals, Alans, and Suevians, he resolved to pass over into Africa, and attempt the reduction of that country, which still continued subject to the Romans; but the fleet he was sending thither being shipwrecked, and a great number of Goths on board of it drowned, he not only concluded a peace, but entered into an alliance, with the Romans, upon the following terms; viz. that Placidia, whom the emperor had promised to Constantius, should be sent back; that the Goths should make war upon the barbarians, who had settled in Spain, restoring to the Romans the places and territories they should recover out of their hands; that, on the other hand, the Romans should reward the Goths with lands within the empire, and send them forthwith six hundred thousand measures of corn. Pursuant to this agreement, the promised corn was immediately sent to the Goths, who were then in the utmost distress; and they no sooner received it, than Vallia sent back Placidia to her brother, and began to make the necessary preparations for the intended war with the barbarians in Spain^p. Jornandes writes, that Constantius advanced at the head of a powerful army to the frontiers of Spain, with a design to make

Sigeric his successor murdered.

Vallia concludes a peace with the Romans.

^m Jorn. p. 655. Phot. p. 188. Oros. p. 224. Soz. l. ix. c. 9. p. 811.

ⁿ Oros. Phot. ibid.

^o Oros. p. 224.

^p Oros. ibid. Philostorg. l. xii. c. 4. p. 534.

make war upon Vallia, in case he refused to send him Placidia, who had been promised to him in marriage; that Vallia came to meet him, on the Pyrenean mountains, with an army no-ways inferior to his; and that the above-mentioned peace and alliance was there concluded^q. But Jornandes is so little acquainted with the history of those times, even that of his own nation, that we cannot give entire credit to any thing he writes.

AN alliance being thus concluded between the Romans and the Goths in Catalonia, in 416, Vallia, without loss of time, fell first on the Vandals, called Silingians, who had settled in Bœtica or Andalusia, and having, in several successful encounters, cut off great numbers of them, he obliged the rest to abandon their country, and take refuge among the Alans in Celtiberia, now the kingdom of Arragon. Against these he marched next, and made such a dreadful havock of that nation, that their king Ata being killed, the few who remained, instead of chusing him a successor, fled for protection to Gonderic, king of the Vandals, who had settled in Galicia, and submitted to him*. To reward these eminent services of Vallia and his Goths, Honorius bestowed on them Aquitania Secunda, comprising the present archbishoprick of Bourdeaux, and some neighbouring cities, that is, the whole tract from Toulouse to the sea; to which was added, soon after, Novempopulania, or Aquitania Tertia, that is, the provinces of Auch and Gascony^r. Vallia, on the other hand, yielded to the Romans, not only the country he had taken from the Vandals and Alans, but likewise Catalonia, which the Goths had held ever since their entering Spain, under the conduct of Ataulphus their second king. Vallia fixed his residence at Toulouse, which by that means became, and continued to be, for the space of eighty-eight years, the metropolis of the kingdom of the Visigoths. Vallia died soon after he had brought his Goths back into Gaul, that is, in the year 418, according to the chronicle of Idatius^s, having reigned only three years^t. He left behind him one daughter, married to a Suevian, by whom she had the famous Ricimer, of whom we have made frequent mention in our Roman history^u.

VALLIA

^q Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 32. p. 656.

car. ii. p. 300.

chron. p. 15.

xvi. p. 264, 274, 279.

* Idat. chron. Sid.

^r Vales. l. iii. p. 115.

^s Idat.

^t Isidor. chron.

^u Univers. hist. vol.

Theodoric
first makes war, and then concludes a peace with the Romans.

VALLIA was succeeded by Theodoric, who, breaking the alliance which his predecessor had concluded with the Romans, made himself master of several places in Gaul belonging to them, and even laid siege to Arles; but, at the approach of Aetius, he abandoned the enterprise, and returned to Toulouse ^w. He made peace soon after with the Romans; for Sidonius tells us, that after the siege of Arles, which the Goths had attempted in vain to reduce, several Gauls were delivered up to them as hostages, and among the rest one Theodorus, who was nearly related to Avitus, afterwards emperor: he adds, that Avitus went to visit his kinsman at the court of Theodoric; on which occasion he rejected the great offers, with which Theodoric endeavoured to entice him into his service ^x. After this, the Goths continued quiet in the countries, that had been allotted them in Gaul, for the space of ten years, that is, to the year 436, when the Romans being engaged in a war with the Burgundians, Theodoric laid hold of that opportunity to enlarge his dominions. Having, therefore made himself master of several cities, he laid siege in the end to Narbonne. But the Romans having in the mean time concluded a peace with the Burgundians, count Litorius hastened to the relief of the place at the head of a body of auxiliary Hunns, and, falling upon the Goths, put them to flight, and entered the city, each horseman carrying with him two bushels of corn; which proved a seasonable relief to the inhabitants, reduced, by the long siege, to the utmost extremity ^y. Idatius ascribes the raising of the siege to Aetius ^z; probably, because Litorius commanded under him, and acted by his orders. The Romans pursued the war against the Goths with great vigour, and equal success. In 438, a battle was fought, in which Aetius, who commanded the Roman forces, cut eight thousand of them in pieces ^a. The following year, Litorius, who commanded the auxiliary Hunns, gained great advantages over them, and even laid siege to Toulouse, their capital. Theodoric, who was in the place, sent several bishops to Litorius, hoping, by their mediation, to prevail upon the Roman general to accept the advantageous terms, which he offered; but Litorius,

He breaks new with the Romans.

Who besiege Toulouse.

^w Prosp. chron.

chron. Vales. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 136.

^a Prosp. chron.

^x Sid. car. vii. p. 337.

^y Prosp.

^z Idat. p. 21.

Litorius, who thought the Goths reduced to the last extremity, openly declaring, that he would hearken to no proposals, Theodoric marched out at the head of his men, and offered him battle; which he not declining, as a more prudent commander would have done, both armies engaged with the utmost fury. Victory continued a long time doubtful, the loss being equal on both sides, but Litorius having in the end advanced too far at the head of his Hunns, in whose valour he chiefly confided, the Goths, making the last effort, cut most of them in pieces, put the rest to flight, and, having surrounded Litorius, who had received a dangerous wound, took him alive, and carried him, with his hands tied behind his back, into the city, which he had hoped to enter on that very day in triumph. Theodoric caused him to be exposed for some time to the insults and outrages of the populace and children, and then to be thrown into the public prison; where, after he had undergone inexpressible hardships, he was by the king's orders put to death ^b. After this victory the Goths might have extended their conquests to the Rhone; and this resolution they had taken, according to Sidonius, Aetius, who, at that time had neither men nor money ^c, being noways in a condition to oppose them. However, Theodoric, at the request of Avitus, then prefect of Gaul, and by him had in great esteem, readily hearkened to the proposals that were made to him, and concluded a peace with the Romans on the same terms he had offered them before the battle ^d.

The Romans defeated, and the siege raised by Theodoric.

Who concludes a peace with the Romans.

SOME years after, that is, in 453, Theodoric, entering into an alliance with the Romans, assisted them powerfully against the Hunns, who had entered Gaul, and, heading his own troops in person, distinguished himself in the famous battle of Chalons; but, falling unluckily from his horse, he was, according to some, trod to death by his own people, who did not know him; according to others, killed by a Goth, named Andagus, who served under Attila, and was descended from the royal family of the Amali ^e. He was succeeded by his son Thorismund, who who had fought under his father, and had been wounded in the same battle. The young prince was for revenging the death of his father on the Hunns, and attacking Attila in his camp ; but Aetius, fearing the Hunns, whom he considered as a check upon the Goths and Franks, might be thus entirely cut off, craftily advised him to return home, lest his brothers should raise disturbances during his absence, and, seizing on the royal treasures, give rise to a civil war. Thorismund followed his advice, and, returning with his troops to Toulouse, was there received as king with the greatest demonstrations of joy imaginable ^f. Being soon after apprised of the deceitful advice given him by Aetius, he broke the alliance he had made with the Romans, and laid siege to Arles ; but was prevailed upon by Ferreolus, prefect of Gaul, to drop that enterprize, and retire ^g. Sidonius writes, that Ferreolus did more by an entertainment, than Aetius could have done with an army ; that by his obliging manner, and agreeable conversation, he gained Thorismund, and saved Arles ^h. The same year Thorismund had a favourable opportunity of revenging, on the Hunns, the death of his father ; for Attila having invaded Gaul anew, with a design to make war upon the Alans, next neighbours to the Visigoths, and, by reducing them, get footing in Gaul, Thorismund joined the Alans with all his forces, engaged Attila, and, having gained a complete victory over him, obliged him to return with shame and disgrace into his own country ⁱ. Gregory of Tours writes, that he overcame and subdued the Alemanns and the Alans ^k. It appears from Sidonius, that his dominions extended to the Rhone ^l : that writer styles him the haughty and untractable king of Gothia ^m ; for in his whole conduct he betrayed great pride and arrogance, was incapable of living himself, or suffering others to live, in peace, and seemed to delight in nothing but wars and slaughter. On the other hand, his brothers Theodoric, Frederic, Turic, or rather Euric, Rotemer, and Himnarit, were inclined to peace ; which occasioned daily quarrels between them and the

He is killed in the battle of Chalons.

^b Greg. Tour. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 47. p. 81. Salvian. gub. l. vii. p. 164. Idat. p. 18. Sid. p. 341. ^c Sid. car. vii. p. 341. ^d Prosp. Idat. chron. ^e Vide Buch. hist. Belg. c. 37—40.

Thorismund his successor breaks with the Romans.

Defeats Attila.

Extends his dominions. ^k

^f Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 41. p. 671.

718. Prosp. p. 54.

^l Jorn. ibid. c. 43. p. 674—676.

Franc. l. ii. c. 7. p. 277.

^m Idem ibid.

^g Isidor. chron. p.

^h Sid. l. vii. epist. 12. p. 200.

^k Greg. Tur. rer.

ⁱ Sid. l. vii. epist. 22 p. 199.

the king. At length, his brothers, especially Theodoric and Frederic, finding they could by no means divert him from engaging in new wars, resolved to dispatch him. Being therefore one day let blood on account of some slight indisposition, while his vein was still open, one of his officers, named Ascaleru, having first removed privately his arms, cried out aloud, that assassins were coming in to murder the king, and at the same time threw himself upon him with several others. Thorismund, missing his weapons, with the only arm he had free, laid hold of a foot-stool, and with it dispatched some of the conspirators; but was in the end overpowered and slain ^a. This Idati-
He is murdered.
Year after
Christ 453.
us supposes to have happened in 452, and he is followed therein by Isidore, who will have Thorismund to have reigned only one year; but Prosper places the death of that prince in 453, and the year must have been near ended, since Thorismund was then, according to Jornandes^o, in the third year of his reign.

THORISMUND was succeeded by his brother Theodo-Theodoric II.
ric, a prince, according to Sidonius ^p, whom he honoured with his intimacy, of uncommon parts, and great accomplishments; but in point of religion, a mere hypocrite. The same writer calls him elsewhere a martial prince, who even surpassed his illustrious parent, the glory of the Gothic nation, and the support of the Roman empire, not able A friend to
the Romans to maintain itself without the assistance of the barbarians, whom the Romans had so often overcome ^q. He was, it seems, a man of some learning, and well versed in the Latin poets ^r. In the beginning of his reign he not only concluded a peace, but entered into an alliance, with the Romans, sending his brother Frederic with a chosen body of troops into Spain, to make war upon the Bagaudæ, who, driving out the Romans, had seized on part of Hispania Tarraconensis. Frederic recovered several places out of their hands, which he restored to the Romans ^s. However, in the year 455, the emperor Maximus apprehending, that Theodoric designed to break with the empire, sent Avitus, who was greatly esteemed and respected by the Goths, to the court of Thoulouse, to divert the storm. Avitus was received by the king with the greatest marks
of

^a Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 36. p. 664, 665.
^p Sid. epist. vii. p. 2—6.
^r Idem, car. vii. p. 346.

^o Idem, ibid.
^q Idem, car.
^s Idat. p. 30.

Causes Avi-tus to be proclaimed emperor at Toulouse.

of friendship and esteem, and the peace between the two nations confirmed. But in the mean time Maximus dying, Theodoric pressed Avitus to assume the sovereignty, promising to assist him to the utmost of his power. Avitus, encouraged with this promise, suffered himself to be proclaimed emperor by the Goths at Toulouse, on the tenth of July; and was, on the eighth of August, acknowledged and proclaimed anew at Arles by the Roman soldiery, and all the persons of distinction in Gaul. Theodoric went immediately, attended by his brothers, to Arles, to congratulate the new prince on his accession to the empire, and was received by him as one to whom he was chiefly indebted for the dignity he enjoyed^t. The following year, the Suevians, taking advantage of the confusion which the assassination of Valentinian III. and Maximus had bred in the empire, over-ran and pillaged the province of Cartagena, with a design to drive the Romans quite out of Spain. Hereupon Avitus dispatched count Fronto to Requiarius, their king, putting him in mind of the treaties concluded between him and the Romans: Theodoric likewise interposed his good offices, conjuring Requiarius, who had married his sister, not to disturb the public tranquility; and at the same time acquainting him with the engagements which he had entered into with Avitus^u. What answer Requiarius returned to the ambassadors our historian does not tell us; but he had no sooner dismissed them, than, assembling his forces, he entered the province of Tarraco, which then belonged to the Romans, and there committed unheard-of ravages, without any regard to the faith of treaties, or the laws of justice. Upon this, Theodoric sent him a second embassy, to which he answered, with great haughtiness, that he did not understand, why the king of the Goths should concern himself with his affairs; that if he found fault with his conduct, he would soon give him an account of it at Toulouse. Theodoric, piqued at this answer, began to prepare for war; but in the mean time Requiarius, entering anew the province of Tarraco, laid it waste far and near, carrying with him into Galicia a great number of captives^w. Soon after, Theodoric, having concluded a peace with all his neighbours, left left his own dominions, and, with the consent and approbation of Avitus, entered Spain at the head of a numerous army, consisting of Goths and Burgundians; the latter, whom he had called to his assistance, being commanded by their king Helperic or Chilperic. Requiarius met him about twelve miles from Astorga on the Urbicus, now the Orbegua: hereupon a battle ensued, in which the Suevians were utterly defeated, and their king, who was dangerously wounded, obliged to fly for shelter to the most distant corner of Galicia ^x. This battle was fought on the fifth of October, and Theodoric, pursuing the fugitives, entered Braga on a Sunday, the twenty-eighth of the same month, and gave it up to be plundered by his soldiers, who abstained from slaughter, and spared the sacred virgins, but committed all other disorders ^y. Requiarius had retired to a place called Portucal, thought to be the present city of Porto on the Dauno; and from thence attempted to make his escape by sea; but, being driven back by a storm, he was taken and delivered up to Theodoric, who kept him under close confinement till December, and then ordered him to be put to death ^z. The Suevians, disheartened by the captivity of their king, and destitute of a leader, were most of them either taken prisoners, or put to the sword; though Theodoric had strictly enjoined his men to spare all, who laid down their arms, and submitted ^a. Thus was the power of the Suevians reduced by the Goths to the lowest ebb. Some authors think, that Avitus, who owned himself indebted to Theodoric for the imperial dignity, had yielded to him all the countries in Spain he should recover out of the hands of the Suevians: others are of opinion, that Avitus being in the mean time deposed, Theodoric thought he might retain for himself the countries he had conquered, in the name of that prince. Be that as it will, it is certain, that the king of the Visigoths, appropriating to himself the countries he had taken from the Suevians, appointed one Aquilphus to govern them. Aquilphus, or, as others call him, Acliulphus, was not a Goth, as Jornandes takes care to tell us, but born in the country of the Warni, who are thought to have passed about this time from Lower Saxony, into Frisia and Holland ^b. He therefore,

^t Sid. p. 349. Idat. chron. Buch. Belg. p. 523. ^u Jorn. c. 44. p. 675. ^w Idem, p. 656.

Makes war upon the Suevians in Spain.

Takes their king prisoner, and puts him to death.

Recovers several provinces from the Suevians.

Which he retains.

^x Idem, p. 676. ^y Idat. p. 33. ^z Jorn. p. 676.
^a Idat. p. 34. ^a Jorn. Idat. ibid. ^b Buch. p. 525.
 VOL. XIX. L

therefore, without any regard to the most sacred ties, abandoned the Goths, and, retiring into Galicia, endeavoured to persuade the Suevians dwelling there to acknowledge him for their king ^e; but a powerful army being sent against him by Theodoric, he was overcome in battle, taken and beheaded ^d. Thus Jornandes; but Idatius only says, that he died in the month of June of the following year 456, at Porto ^e. The Suevians, who, refusing to submit to Theodoric, had retired into Galicia, upon the news of the death of their king, chose one of their own nation, named Maldra, in his room.

Enters Lusitania, and reduces several places there.

THE following year 457, Theodoric, having almost entirely reduced the Suevians in Galicia, passed from thence into Lusitania, and there, after having laid in ashes several cities and villages, besieged and took Merida the metropolis of that province; but was, as we are told, deterred from plundering it by some prodigies that happened. He continued at Merida till Easter, which this year 457, fell on the thirty-first of March, when receiving some disagreeable tidings from Gaul, not specified in history, he returned in great haste to Toulouse. However, he left in Spain a body of troops, composed of different nations, with orders to reduce the Suevians in Galicia, who had not submitted to the Goths. These forces, being on their march admitted as friends into the city of Astorga, held by the Romans, or rather by some banditti, who called themselves Romans, fell unexpectedly upon the inhabitants, put great numbers of them to the sword, set fire to the city after they had plundered it, and, having ravaged the neighbouring country, pursued their march, carrying with them an immense booty, and a great many captives, among whom were several ecclesiastics, and two bishops. We are told, that they had express orders from Theodoric to act in this manner ^z. The city of Palentia met with the same treatment; but the castle of Coviaca, about thirty miles from Astorga, making a vigorous resistance, the Goths, after several unsuccessful attempts, in which they lost great numbers of their men, abandoned the enterprize, and returned to Gaul ^h. In their room Theodoric sent another army into Spain, commanded by one Cyrila; but we read of no other exploits performed

^e Jorn. ibid.

^d Idem, p. 677.

^e Idat. p. 37.

^f Idat. p. 35.

^z Idem, p. 36.

^h Cuspinian. p. 451.

performed by them, besides the ravaging the provinces of Boetica, now Andalusia ⁱ. Idatius writes, that ambassadors were sent at this time, by the Goths and Vandals to the Suevians ; but he does not tell us, what was the subject of their embassy ^k. Perhaps the Goths and Vandals had entered into an alliance with the emperor Majorianus, and were endeavouring to draw the Suevians into the same league ; but they did not therein succeed ; for the following year Theodoric recalled Cyrila, and sent another general, named Sunieric, in his room, with orders to pursue the war with the Suevians ^l, who nevertheless ravaged the province of Lusitania under the conduct of Maldra their king, and Galicia under that of his son Remismund, whom Jornandes calls Richmund ^m. Theodoric, tho' thus engaged in war with the Suevians, broke at the same time, upon what provocation we know not, with the Romans, and, taking unexpectedly the field, made himself master of several cities in Gaul, belonging to them. But Majorianus, who was then at Arles, marching against him with what troops he could assemble, defeated him in a pitched battle, and obliged him to sue for peace, which was readily granted him, upon his promising to assist the Romans against the Suevians and Vandals ⁿ. But Majorianus dying soon after, Theodoric thought himself no longer obliged to maintain the peace he had concluded with him ; and therefore made himself master of several places in Gaul belonging to the Romans, and amongst the rest of Narbonne, which was betrayed to him by one Agrippina. From Narbonne he marched to Arles, which he invested, but was obliged to raise the siege by Ægidius a native of Gaul, whom Severus, the successor of Majorianus, had appointed commander in chief of the Roman forces there ^o. The following year 463, Ægidius gained a signal victory over the Goths in the neighbourhood of Orleans. In this battle great numbers of the Goths were slain, and, amongst the rest, Frederic, the king's brother, who commanded in chief ^p. The Goths being overcome and dispersed, Ægidius laid siege to Chinon in Touraine ; but the vigorous resistance he met with obliged him to drop the enterprize,

Is defeated by Majorianus.

He takes Narbonne.

But is defeated by Ægidius.

L 2

and

ⁱ Idem, ibid. ^k Idat. p. 36. ^l Idem. p. 37.
^m Cusp. p. 451. Idat. p. 38. Jorn. p. 679. ⁿ Idat. ibid.
Cusp. p. 451. ^o Prisc. p. 42. Idat. p. 41. Cusp. p. 452.
^p Idat. ibid.

The Goths
masters of the greater part of Spain.

and retire ^q. The Goths were attended with better success in Spain than in Gaul ; for Idatius speaks of them as now masters of the whole country, except part of Galicia, which was still held by the Suevians ; and the provinces of Tarraco and Cartagena, which belonged to the Romans, and were governed by a duke ; for in 465, a Roman, named Vincentius, resided at Tarraco with that title ^r. The provinces subject to the Goths were governed by the generals Sunieric and Nepotianus, the former a Goth, and the latter a native of Languedoc, which was subject to the Goths.

IN the year 464, died Ægidius, and upon his death the Goths, says Idatius ^s, made themselves masters of the far greater part of Gaul. But he is therein certainly mistaken ; for Berri, Sens, Auvergne, still belonged to the Romans in 472 ^t ; Syagrius the son of Ægidius held Soissons, and its territory ^u ; Childeric king of the Burgundians reduced the city of Paris after a siege, according to some, of five, according to others, of ten years ^w. The Franks were masters of the countries bordering on the Rhine, the Saxons of Nantes and Bayeux, and the Britons driven out by the Angles of Vennes and Trequier ^x. The following year 465, Theodoric, more bent on making acquisitions in Gaul than in Spain, came to an agreement with Remismund king of the Suevians ; but before he could put his vast designs in execution, he was taken off by the same crime that had raised him to the throne, being murdered by his brother Euric, after he had reigned thirteen years ^y. Jornandes, ever favourable to the Goths, only writes, that the joy Euric had betrayed on this occasion induced some to imagine, that he had been accessory to the death of his brother ^z. Euric, called also Eoric, Evairix, and Euthoric, had no sooner ascended the throne, than he dispatched ambassadors to Leo emperor of the east, to Remismund, king of the Suevians, and to Genseric king of the Vandals. Remismund no sooner heard the ambassadors than he sent others to Euric, to the emperor, and murdered.

Theodoric

Euric.
Year after
Christ 466.

^q Greg. Tur. c. 22. p. 387; 388. ^r Concil. tom. iv. p. 1052. Idat. p. 41. ^s Idem, p. 43. ^t Greg. Tur. p. 282. ^u Idem, p. 285. Sid. epist. viii. p. 260 ^w Bol- land. 3. Januar. p. 140. ^x Val. rer. Franc. p. 236, 237. Sid. epist. vii. p. 16. Idat. Isidor. Marc. chron. ^z Jorn. c. 44. p. 677.

and to the king of the Vandals^a; but, what was the subject of so many embassies, our historian has not thought fit to acquaint us. All we know is, that the ambassadors, sent by Euric to the king of the Vandals, hearing that the Romans were making great preparations to attack that people, returned in great haste to Toulouse; and that Remismund, upon the departure of Euric's ambassadors, recalled, and assembled into one body, the troops he had sent out in small parties to ravage the country^b. These people were perhaps negotiating an alliance among themselves against the common enemy the Romans. Be that as it will, Euric this very year 466, committed great ravages in Lusitania, and, having reduced the cities of Pampelona and Saragosa, made himself master of Upper Spain^c. The following year, Remismund, having entered Lusitania, took Coimbra, made himself master of several other places, and ravaged the country, committing every-where unheard-of cruelties. Hereupon the natives, recurring not to the Romans, which shews that their power in Spain was now reduced to a very low ebb, but to the Visigoths, sent a solemn embassy, at the head of which was one Ophilio, to implore the protection of Euric, who readily interposed his good offices, but, it seems, to no effect; for Remismund, upon the departure of the ambassadors sent to him by Euric, plundered the city of Coimbra, destroyed several houses, with part of the walls, and carried such of the inhabitants, as had not the good luck to make their escape, into captivity^d. Idatius adds, that the ambassadors sent by the Lusitanians reported, upon their return, that several prodigies had happened in Gaul, and, among the rest, that a fountain of blood had sprung up in the midst of Toulouse, and flowed a whole day^e. Euric having made himself master of Pampelona and Cæsaraugusta, or Saragosa, as we have related above, Tarra-co with its territory was the only place held now in Spain by the Romans; and that city Euric besieged in 468, the second of the emperor Anthemius's reign, and having, after a long siege, reduced it, levelled it with the ground. Thus were the Romans driven quite out of Spain, and a period put to their empire there, after they had been at least seven hundred years masters of that country. All those

Takes Pam-pelona and Saragosa.

Drives the Romans
quite out Spain.

L 3

^a Idat. p. 44, 45.
719.

^d Idat. p. 45.

^b Idem ibid.

^e Idem ibid. & p. 46.

^c Idem, chron. p.

those provinces, except Galicia, and part of Lusitania, which were subject to the Suevians, acknowledged Euric for their king, who, residing at Toulouse, governed them by his lieutenants.

Defeats the Britons.

Makes himself master of Berri and Gevaudan.

EURIC, not satisfied with the conquests he had made in Spain, resolved to extend his dominions likewise in Gaul. With this view he began to draw together his forces, and make other military preparations; which the emperor Anthemius no sooner understood, than he wrote to Riatham king of the Britons, who had settled on the Loire, pressing him to join the Romans against the common enemy; for the Britons were greatly attached to the Roman interest. Riatham readily comply'd with the emperor's request, and, having assembled a body of twelve thousand men, marched at the head of them to Bourges, and from thence to Bourgdeols on the Indre, in the province of Berri; but being there met by Euric, he was overcome by the Goths with great loss, and obliged to abandon that province, and take refuge among the Burgundians the friends and allies of the Romans^f. Gregory of Tours, writes, that, after the defeat of the Britons, one Paul, whom he distinguishes with the title of count, having assembled a body of troops, consisting of Romans and Franks, made war upon the Goths, and gained considerable advantages over them^g. However, Sidonius tells us, that the Goths overcame the Franks, and afterwards entered into an alliance with them^h. He writes elsewhere, that Euric gave his daughter in marriage to Sigimer a barbarian princeⁱ, whom Valesius conjectures to have been by nation a Frank^k. The war between the Romans and Goths continued all this and the following year 471, but the authors, who speak of that war, without descending to particulars, only tell us, that the Goths gained great advantages over the Romans, and in the end made themselves masters of the provinces of Berri and Gevaudan^l, the inhabitants, who were greatly oppressed by the Roman officers, especially by Seronatus, governor of Gaul, chusing rather to live under the Goths than the Romans^m, or, ⁱ Idem, l. iv. ep. 20. p. 251. ^k Vales. rer. Franc. p. 219, 220. ^l Sid. l. iii. ep. 1, 4. p. 63, 68. & l. vii. ep. 5. p. 180.

^f Jorn. rer. Goth: c. 45. p. 678. Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 18. p. 282. ^g Greg. Tur. ibid. ^h Sid. l. viii. ep. 3. p. 215.

^m Oros. l. vii. c. 28. Isidor. chron. Sid. l. ii. ep. 1. p. 33. et ep. 13. p. 143.

or, as Salvianus expresses it, chusing rather to live free, under the appearance of slavery, than be treated like slaves under the appearance of libertyⁿ. In 473, a peace was concluded^o; but Anthemius being murdered the same year by Ricimer, and Olybrius proclaimed emperor in his room, as we have related in our Roman history^p, Euric, taking advantage of the weak and distracted state of the empire, renewed the war, hoping to drive the Romans quite out of Gaul, as he had done five years before out of Spain. Auvergne was the only province they still held in Aquitania Prima, lying between the ocean, the Rhone, and the Loire; and into this province Euric broke at the head of a powerful army in the beginning of the year 474, but met with a vigorous resistance from the inhabitants, who, without the assistance of any regular troops, gained some considerable advantages over the enemy. But in the end they laid siege to Clermont, and continued before that place, without being able to reduce ^{Besieges} Clermont in it, till the rigour of the season obliged them to retire^q. ^{vain.}

As they seemed resolved to renew the siege early in the spring, Nepos, who had succeeded Olybrius in the empire, thinking he could better secure by treaty, than by arms, what he still possessed in Gaul, dispatched the quæstor Licinianus with the character of ambassador to Euric, in order to enter into a negotiation with that prince. Euric received him in a very obliging manner, and several conferences were held, at which some bishops of Provence were allowed to assist; viz. Leontius bishop of Arles, Faustus of Riez, Grecus of Marseilles, and Basilus of Aix^r. To Basilus, Sidonius, then bishop of Clermont, wrote a letter, recommending to him the interest of the Catholic religion, and begging he would take care, that by the treaty the Catholics should be allowed to ordain bishops for the vacant churches in the countries subject to the Goths. For the Goths held the doctrine of Arius, and Euric, a professed enemy to the catholics, would not allow them to appoint new bishops in the room of those who died; insomuch that nine episcopal sees were at that time vacant^s. A report being spread, which proved afterwards true, that a treaty was upon the point of being concluded ⁿ Salvian. l. v. de guber. Dei.

L 4

^p Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 280.
^r Sid. l. vii. ep. 6, 7. p. 184, 186.

^o Sid. l. vii. ep. 6. p. 183.
^q Sid. l. vi. ep. 6. p. 162.
^s Sid. l. iv. ep. 15. p. 101.

concluded between the Romans and Goths, in virtue of which Auvergne was to be delivered up to the Goths, Sidonius, who was bishop of Clermont in that province, and a zealous defender of the orthodox faith, wrote a letter to Grecus bishop of Marseilles, conjuring him not to agree to so shameful an article, and assuring him, that the inhabitants were ready to undergo the greatest hardships, rather than submit to the Goths, who, mindful of the vigorous resistance they had often met with from them, would treat them more like criminals than slaves. He concludes, by earnestly begging, that if the country was to be yielded to the Goths, the inhabitants might be allowed to retire, and some place allotted to them within the bounds of the empire^t. However, the treaty was concluded, and Auvergne delivered up to Euric, tho' he would not by any means consent to the ordaining of catholic bishops for the vacant churches within his dominions^u.

Auvergne yielded to him by treaty. Year after Christ 475.

FIVE years after, that is, in 480, the few places in Gaul, that were still held by the Romans, having submitted to Odoacer, who, after putting to death Orestes, and deposing his son Augustulus the last emperor of the west, had assumed the title of king of Italy, that prince yielded them to the Goths, whose dominions, by that addition, extended from the Loire to the Alps^w. However, the cities of Arles and Marseilles held out, it seems, sometime against the Goths^x. We leave Bucherius to enquire why Odoacer abandoned these countries, and, in abandoning them, chose rather to bestow them on the Goths, than the Burgundians, the friends and allies of the empire^y. That writer supposes the Burgundians, jealous of the too great power of the Goths, to have made war upon them; and that this is the year of which Jornandes speaks, where he tells us, that a war was kindled between two nations in Gaul^z; for he speaks soon after of the war between the Burgundians and the Goths. The Burgundians, sprung originally from the Vandals, had entered Gaul in 406, with the Vandals and Alans, and having some years after made themselves masters of the country, now known by the

The Goths masters of all the countries held by the Romans in Gaul. Year after Christ 480

^t Idem, l. vii. ep. 7, p. 185.

47. p. 675.

^x Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 47. p. 680.

^z Jorn. p. 681.

^u Jorn. rer. Goth. c.

^w Procop. bell. Goth. l. ii. c. 12. p. 341.

^y Bucher, p. 566.

the name of Alface, they were allowed to settle there as friends and allies of the Roman people. They were removed from thence in 431, by Aetius, to the present duchy of Savoy. In 456, they seized on part of Spain, and made themselves masters of the city of Lyons, and in the present year 482, the Goths gained great advantages over them^a. However, it appears from the acts of the council of Agde held in 526, and of the council of Epaune in 527, that no fewer than twenty eight cities or dioceses belonged to the Burgundians, in which number were Lyons, Vienne, Besançon, and Embrun^b; so that the Goths were not, as Jornandes supposes them to have been, masters of all the south part of Gaul^c. Euric, having thus made himself master of the best part of Gaul, that is, of the whole tract between the Rhone and the Loire, and of all Spain, except a small corner of Galicia, and part of Lusitania held by the Suevians, was still bent on making new conquests, and reducing the remaining part both of Spain and Gaul, when death put an end to his vast designs. He died at Arles in 484, the nineteenth year of his reign^d, after the eleventh and before the end, of September^e. He had made himself way to the throne by the murder of his brother, and governed his subjects with a rod of iron^f. He passed the greater part of his life in the field, was constantly quarrelling with his neighbours, and never pleased, but when he had an opportunity of staining his hands in the blood of his enemies^g. He was a prince of great penetration, formidable in war, and attended with success in most of his undertakings^h; whence he was dreaded by all nations, and his friendship courted by the neighbouring as well as the distant peopleⁱ. Sidonius, speaking in 476, of the court of this prince then at Bourdeaux, describes the Saxons, the Franks, the Heruli, the Burgundians, and even the Romans and Persians, falling down before him in the posture of suppliants, and conquered people^k. Upon this

Euric dies,
Year after
Christ 484.

His character.

Bucherius

^a Idem ibid. ^b Notit. Gall. per Adrian. Vales. p. 105. ^c Jorn. p. 680. ^d Isid. chron. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 47. p. 680. Labb. chron. ^e Concil. tom. iv. p. 1394. ^f Ennod. in vit. Epiph. p. 385. ^g Idem, p. 384. ^h Sid. l. vii. ep. 5. p. 183. & l. viii. ep. 3. p. 215. Ennod. ibid. p. 385. ⁱ Idem ibid. ^k Sid. l. viii. ep. 9. p. 229, 230.

An enemy to the catholic church.

Bucherius makes a long descant¹, to which we refer the reader. Apollinaris Sidonius makes several excellent reflections on the success that attended Euric in most of his undertakings^m, though he was not only separated from, but an irreconcilable enemy to, the catholic church, being a zealous Arian, and firmly persuaded, says Sidonius, that the success of his arms was owing to the purity of his faith. His aversion to the catholic church was so great, that he could not even endure the name of catholicⁿ. Gregory of Tours writes, that having raised a persecution against the catholics, he caused their churches to be shut up, and either banished, imprisoned, or put to death, their bishops, their clergy, and all who dared to oppose or impugn the Arian impiety^o. But if that writer had no other voucher for that persecution but Sidonius, whom he quotes, his account is greatly exaggerated; for Sidonius only says, that Euric banished two bishops, and would not suffer any to be named to the vacant sees^p. Most churches, continues Sidonius, in the countries held by the Goths are without pastors, and the bishopricks end there with the lives of the bishops. Of these vacant bishopricks he names nine, viz. Bourdeaux, Peregueux, Rhodes, Limoges, Mande, Eause, Bazas, Cominges, and Auch. He adds, that the vacancy of the sees was attended with the ruin of religion, since it was the province of the bishops to provide the churches with inferior ministers, and bring back to the fold the sheep gone astray; that christianity was almost extinct in those dioceses; that the churches were ready to fall both in towns and villages; that some of them were shut up by the thorns and briars that grew in the entry, and others lay open only for the sheep, that came to graze at the very foot of the holy altar. If such was the state of affairs in 474, when Sidonius wrote, we leave the reader to judge to what a deplorable condition they must have been reduced before the end of Euric's reign, which lasted ten years longer; for that prince never suffered the vacant sees to be filled. The two bishops he banished in 474, were Crocus, supposed to have been bishop of Nismes, and Simplicius, whose see is quite unknown^q. Euric

¹ Buch. p. 552, 562.

^m Sid. l. vii. epist. 6. p. 182, 183.

ⁿ Idem, ibid.

^o Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 25. p. 284.

^p Sid. epist. vi. p. 184.

^q Idem, ibid. p. 484.

ric was the first who gave written laws to the Goths, governed, till his reign, by customs only ^r. The laws he published were called the Theodorian laws; which appellation has occasioned great disputes among authors. Baronius supposes them to have been so called, because the two Theodorics, predecessors of Euric, were the authors of them ^s. But Isidore tells us in express terms, that Euric was the first who gave written laws to the Goths. Cujacius will have them to have been called Theodorian laws from Theodoric the Ostrogoth king of Italy ^t, not reflecting that they are styled Theodorian by Apollinaris Sidonius, who died, as is plain from Gregory of Tours ^u, before Theodoric was master of Italy. Besides it is certain, that Theodoric king of Italy paid the greatest respect to the Roman laws, and governed by them. Sirmund and Alteserra are of opinion, that they were, by paronomasia, called Theodorianæ, in opposition to the Theodosianæ; but this paronomasia, says the learned Savaron ^w, would have been but very insipid, had not Evaric, the author of these laws, been likewise called Theodoric; and that this was his true name, is plainly shewn, both by him and by Grotius in his nomenclature. As for the name of Evaric or Euric, which Grotius explains by legibus pollens, it was given him on account of the laws he published. These laws were by Euric obtruded upon the people of Gaul and Spain, who had been long accustomed to the Roman laws; but Alaric, his son and successor, restored the Roman laws to their former splendor, causing them to be observed throughout his dominions, as we shall see in the reign of that prince, where we shall have occasion to speak of the Alaric code. The person Euric chiefly employed in compiling his laws was Leo, his prime minister, and one of the most learned men, and best civilians, of his time ^x (C). Some Spanish writers tell us, that,

^r Isidor. chron.

^s Baron. annal. tom. v. ann. 468.

^t Ciron. obs. jur. can. l. v. c. 1.

^u Greg. Tur. hist.

Franc. l. ii. c. 23.

^w Savar. in l. ii. Sid. ep. 1.

^x Sid.

l. viii. ep. 13. p. 215.

(C) Leo. was, according to Sidonius, a man of uncommon parts, the best civilian of his time, and well versed in every branch that, besides Leo, he employed seventy bishops, among whom was one Severus, bishop of Barcelona, whom he afterwards put to death, with a country-man named Emetarius, on account of their zeal for the catholic faith. But what these authors write is founded on an antient tradition, which Bollandus thinks quite groundless *. Euric married one Ragnahild or Ragnachild, the daughter of a king, for whose use in bathing Evodius caused a silver vessel to be made, on which were engraved some verses composed by Sidonius †. By her he had a son named Alaric, by whom he was succeeded, and a daughter, who was married to a barbarian prince named Sigismer ‡. From the description branch of literature (2). Hence he was highly esteemed by Euric, and raised to the first honours in his court. By him were penned all the letters that prince wrote to foreign kings and states (3). His advice was of such weight with Euric, that he suffered himself to be entirely guided by him in affairs of the greatest importance (4). He was descended from Cornelius Fronto, who was preceptor to the emperor M. Aurelius, and one of the greatest orators of antiquity (5). He professed the catholic faith in the court of an Arian prince, and led a life without blemish or reproach (6). Sidonius, in sending him the life of Apollonius Tyanæus, bestows great encomiums upon him, and returns him thanks for the many favours he had received at his hands (7). Leo had advised him to apply himself to the writing of history; and Sidonius exhorts him to undertake that task himself, telling him, that no one was better qualified for it (8). St. Gregory of Tours tells us, that Alaric the son of Euric having once complained in the presence of Leo, that a fine view from his palace was obstructed by the church of Narbonne, he advised him to lower the church; which was done accordingly. Gregory of Tours adds, that Leo paid dear for this advice, having soon after entirely lost his eyesight (9).

* Bolland. 8. Mar. p. 244, 245. † Sid. l. iv. epist. 8. p. 97, 98. ‡ Idem, epist. 20. p. 115.

(2) Sid. l. iv. ep. 22. p. 119; & l. viii. ep. 3. p. 215.
 (3) Sid. car. xxi. p. 412. (4) Idem, l. iv. ep. 22. p. 119.
 (5) Idem, l. iii. ep. 3. p. 215. (6) Idem, ibid. p. 216.
 (7) Idem, l. viii. ep. 3. p. 214—216. (8) Idem, l. iv. ep. 22. p. 118, 120.
 (9) Greg. Tur. de glor. martyr. c. 92. p. 208, 209.

tion which Sidonius, who saw that prince, gives of him, Valesius concludes him to have been by nation a Frank ; and that Euric gave him his daughter in marriage, hoping, by that means, to gain the nation of the Franks, which began to be very powerful in Gaul. But by that very nation the son he had by her was killed in battle, and a period put to the kingdom of the Visigoths in Gaul, who, being driven from thence, fixed their royal seat at Toledo in Spain. But, as in Euric's reign they firmly established their dominion in the latter of these countries, we shall, in compliance with our plan, leave them for the present, and reserving for modern history an account of their affairs from the time they settled in Spain, to the loss of that country to the Arabs, return to the Ostrogoths, who, as we have observed above, upon the departure of their countrymen the Visigoths admitted by Valens, in 376, into the empire, continued in their antient seats, but subject to the Hunns, who nevertheless allowed them to be governed by their own kings of the illustrious family of the Amali.

THE Ostrogoths, as we have related above, upon the death of Ermenric or Hermanaric their king, chose Vithimir, by some called Winithar, in his room. The new king gained at first some small advantages over the Hunns, but was in the end overcome, and killed in battle by Balamir or Balamber, king of the Hunns ^a. His son Vitheric withdrew, attended by great numbers of his subjects, into the plains between the Borysthenes and the Danube, that is, into the present Podolia. Of him no further mention is made in history. He was succeeded by Hunimund, the son of Ermenric, who submitted to the Hunns, and is said to have made war upon, and gained a signal victory over, the Suevians. His son Thorismund, reigned next, who defeated with great slaughter the Gepidæ ; but was soon after killed in the flower of his age by a fall from his horse. The Goths so lamented the loss of this prince, that, for the space of forty years, they chose no king in his room. After so long an inter-regnum, Wandalar, son to the brother of Ermeric, was raised to the throne ; but of him no further mention is made in history. He was succeeded by his three sons Valemir, Theodomir, and Vidimir, who reigned jointly, and attended

^a Jorn. rer. Goth. p. 644.

They are allowed to settle in Pan-nonia.
Year after Christ 453.

They gain two victories over the Hunns.

ed Attila in most of his expeditions. Upon that prince's death, several nations, by him formerly subdued, revolting from his children, begged and obtained leave from Marcian, then emperor, to settle in the Roman territories, almost quite dispeopled by the frequent incursions of the Hunns, and other barbarians. Among these mention is made of the Squiri, Satagairæ, and Alans, who settled in Lesser Scythia, and Lower Mœsia. To the Rugians, Sarmatians, and Cemandrians, lands were granted in Illyricum, near a place called the Castle of Mars. To the Ostrogoths Marcian granted all Pannonia, from Sirmium, now Sirmish, in Slavonia, to Vindobona, now Vienna in Austria ^b. The Goths, as well as the other barbarians, acknowledged the authority of the Constantinopolitan emperors, and were subject to the empire; but at the same time governed by their own princes, to whom the emperors agreed to pay an annual pension, upon their promising to guard the frontiers of the empire, and serve, when wanted, in the Roman armies ^c. Pannonia being granted to the Ostrogoths, the three brothers divided that country among them, Valimir settling in the eastern part of it, Theodomir in the western, and Vidimir between the other two ^d. They were scarce warm in their new seats, when the sons of Attila, pursuing them even into Pannonia, fell upon Valimir in the neighbourhood of Sirmium; but that prince with a handful of men, overthrew them with great slaughter, and obliged them to take refuge in that part of Scythia, which bordered on the Danube ^e. About eight years after, the Goths being engaged in a war with the Satagæ, Dintzio, one of Attila's sons laying hold of that opportunity, entered Pannonia at the head of a considerable army; and, having ravaged the country, laid siege to Bassiana, thought to be the present city of Posega, which gives name to a county, in Hungary between the Save and the Draw. But the Goths, leaving the Satagæ, marched with all their forces against the Hunns, who readily engaged them, but received such an overthrow, that they ever after stood in awe of the Goths, and never offered to molest them ^f. In the year 455, the emperor Leo refusing, under several pretences, to pay the Ostrogoths their usual pension, they entered tered Illyricum, and there committed dreadful ravages ; ^{They ravage} but Anthemius, son-in-law to the emperor Marcian, having ^{Illyricum.} assembled the troops quartered in that province, obliged them to retire with no small loss ^{g.} Soon after, Leo sent deputies to Valemir, to upbraid him with his late conduct, and renew the antient treaties ^{h.} The treaties were accord- ^{They con-} ingly renewed, and the peace re-established, upon the em- ^{clude a peace} peror's promising to pay the Goths what was due to ^{with Leo,} them to that time, and for the future three hundred ^{and send him} pounds weight of gold a year. On the other hand, ^{Theodoric as} Valemir sent to Constantinople by way of hostage the fa- ^{an hostage.} mous Theodoric, afterwards king of Italy, but then only eight years old ^{i.} Males the historian, and Damascus, who wrote the life of Isidore, and was contemporary with Theodoric himself, suppose him to have been the son of Valemir ^{k.} But Jornandes, who lived some time after, but was perhaps better acquainted with the history of the Ostrogoths, being himself one of that nation, assures us, that Theodoric was the son of Theodomir by a concubine named Erelieva, and consequently only nephew to Valemir ^{l.} Leo received him with the greatest marks of esteem and affection, maintained him for the space of ten years at his court, in a manner suitable to his rank, and took care to have him instructed by the best masters in every branch of polite literature ^{m.}

^b Idem, c. 48. p. 683. Phot. l. i. c. 242. p. 1041. Theoph. p. 112. ^c Jorn. c. 57. p. 695. ^d Idem, c. 50—52. p. 688, 689. ^e Idem, ibid. p. 690. ^f Idem ibid p. 691

IN the year 466, the tenth of Leo's reign, a war breaking out between the Goths in Pannonia and the Squiri, whom the emperor Marcian had allowed to settle in Lesser Scythia and Lower Moesia, both nations had recourse to Leo, whose subjects they were, imploring his assistance. Aspar, Leo's chief favourite, was for aiding neither, but suffering them to destroy each other. However, the emperor wrote to the governor of Illyricum, enjoining him to march with all the troops under his command to the assistance of the Squiri, who nevertheless were utterly ^{They defeat} defeated, and most of them cut in pieces either in the fight ^{the Squiri.} or the pursuit. But the Goths lost on this occasion Valemir their king, who, falling from his horse as he was riding full-speed through the ranks to animate his men, was surrounded-

^g Idem, p. 690. Sid. car. ii. p. 296. Prisc. p. 74.

^h Prisc. p. 74, 75. ⁱ Jorn. Prisc. ibid. ^k Phot. c. 78.

p. 172. ^l Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 52. p. 689. ^m Idem,

c. 55. p. 693, 694. Theoph. p. 612.

Valemir slain.

Theodomir and Videmir defeat the Squiri, Sue-vians, Ale-mans, &c:

Theodoric overcomes and kills the king of the Sarmatians.

surrounded, and, with many wounds, dispatched by the enemy ⁿ. Such of the Squiri as escaped the general slaughter, had recourse to the Sarmatians, the Rugians, and the Gepidæ, who, readily joining them, renewed the war, and, entering the territories of the Goths, laid them waste far and near. Hereupon the Goths, putting themselves under the conduct of the two remaining brothers Theodomir and Videmir, took the field, and, engaging the enemy on the banks of the Danube, cut ten thousand of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to retire with great precipitation beyond that river, which Theodomir passed soon after on the ice, and, having laid waste the enemy's country, returned loaded with booty into Pannonia ^o. In this war Theodomir not only defeated the Sarmatians, Rugians, and Gepidæ, but gained a signal victory over the Suevians and Alemans, who had joined the above-mentioned nations ^p. Upon his return, he received with great joy his son Theodoric, whom Leo had sent back loaded with rich presents, after having kept him at his court as a hostage for the space of ten years ^q. He was scarce returned, when news was brought, that Babai, king of the Sarmatians, having defeated a Roman general named Camundus, had made himself master of Singidunum in Upper Mœsia. Hereupon Theodoric, having assembled without his father's knowledge, a small body of troops, passed the Danube, and, entering the Sarmatian territories, fell upon Babai, put him, and most of his men to the sword, and, on his return home, retook Singidunum; but did not restore it to the Romans ^r.

IN the year 473, during the short reign of Glycerius, the Goths in Pannonia, without the least provocation, says Jornandes, and only because they were incapable of living in peace, resolved to make war on the empire. Pursuant to this resolution, the two brothers Theodomir and Videmir met, when it fell to the lot (for they cast lots) of the latter to invade Italy, where Glycerius then acted as emperor, and to that of Theodomir to attack the eastern empire, governed at that time by Leo I. Videmir immediately set out on his march; but had scarce entered Italy, when he died, leaving the command of his troops to his son, who bore the same name. Jornandes adds,

ⁿ Prisc. p. 44. ^o Jorn. c. 50. p. 687. & c. 53. p. 691, 692.
^p Jorn. ibid. ^q Idem, c. 53. p. 693. ^r Idem ibid.
^s Jorn. p. 694.

adds, that the young prince being prevailed upon by the rich presents, which Glycerius sent him, to retire out of Italy, he marched into Gaul, and, joining the Visigoths, ^{Part of the Ostrogoths join the Visigoths in Gaul.} settled there, assisted them in the conquest of that country, and in the reduction of Spain, becoming one people with them ^s. As for Theodomir, he entered Illyricum, and, having made himself master of Naissus, he divided his army into several small bodies, under the command of his son Theodoric, and other generals, who reduced, without any considerable opposition, the cities of Ulprana, Heraclæa, and Larissa. Having afterwards re-united their forces, and left a strong garrison in Naissus, they laid siege to Thessalonica. But Clarianus, governor of the place, prevailed upon Theodomir, with rich presents, to abandon the enterprize, and retire. Soon after a peace was concluded between the Romans and the Goths, during which Theodomir died, and was succeeded by his son Theodoric, called Amalus, being descended from the Amali, the most illustrious family among the Goths ^t. The emperor Zeno, ^{Theodomir dies, and is succeeded by his son Theodoric.} overjoyed at the news of the young prince's accession to the crown, immediately invited him to court, received him with the greatest marks of friendship and esteem, raised him to the rank of a patrician, and even adopted him, if Jornandes is to be credited, for his son ^u. Theodoric was scarce returned to Pannonia, when news was brought him, that Basiliscus, of whom we have made frequent mention in our Roman history ^w, revolting from Zeno, had been proclaimed and acknowledged emperor by the senate of Constantinople. The usurper was chiefly supported by a Goth in the Roman service, named likewise Theodoric, who had been raised to the first posts in the army, and the command of his countrymen, who, following the example of their leader, had all declared for Basiliscus. However, king Theodoric, espousing the cause of Zeno, marched against them; but as his troops were far inferior in number to those of the enemy, Zeno assured him, that he should be joined at the straits of mount Hæmus by the general of Thrace, with ten thousand foot, and two thousand horse; and that, after passing the ^s Idem, rer. Goth. c. 56. p. 694, 695. & reg. c. 47. p. 654, 655. ^t Idem ibid. p. 696. ^u Idem ibid.

^w Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 275,—284—287.

He is abandoned by Zeno.

the mountains, he should find twenty thousand horse on the banks of the Hebrus ready to join him ; but at neither place did he find any troops, and the guides, who had been sent him by the Romans, leaving the known roads, and beaten ways, led him through deserts, where his men suffered greatly for want of provisions, and over steep mountains, till they brought his army, quite spent with such long and fatiguing marches, in sight of the enemy, encamped in a most advantageous post. But though they might, with great ease, have cut the king and his whole army in pieces, yet Theodoric their leader sent only some persons to upbraid the king with making war on his countrymen in favour of the Romans, who had thus betrayed him with fair promises, and only sought to set Goths against Goths, that they might have the cruel satisfaction of seeing them destroy each other. These remonstrances occasioned a mutiny in the king's army, who, finding himself reduced to the alternative of being abandoned by his own men, or coming to an agreement with Theodoric, chose the latter. The two generals conferred, having a river between them, and, in the end, agreed not to make war upon each other. They both dispatched ambassadors to Constantinople, Theodoric to demand the arrears that were due to him and his army, and the king to acquaint the emperor with the treaty he had made, and at the same time to let him know, that, unless provisions were sent to the army, it was not in his power to restrain his men from plundering Thrace^x. What answer Zeno returned to the former, we are no-where told ; but to the latter he made a long apology for not sending, as he had promised, the Roman troops to join him. But the author of Zeno's life, though not a little biased in favour of that prince, cannot help owning, that he was therein greatly to blame^y. The emperor did all that lay in his power to persuade the king to break the treaty he had lately concluded with Theodoric, sending to him for that purpose two solemn embassies, and promising not only to reward him with large sums, and great revenues, if he should defeat the rebels, but to give him in marriage Juliana, the daughter of Olybrius, and grand-daughter of Valentinian III. But the king could not, by any offers, be prevailed upon to make the least breach in the treaty with Theodoric ; which which obliged the emperor to conclude a peace with him upon the following terms, highly dishonourable to the imperial dignity ; viz. that Theodoric should have the command of the emperor's guards ; that he should retain all the honours conferred upon him by the usurper Basiliscus ; that his estate, which had been confiscated, should be restored to him ; and lastly, that he should be appointed commander in chief of the Roman cavalry, which post was then held by king Theodoric, but, in virtue of this treaty, taken from him, and bestowed on the other ².

^x Males. p. 83—96.

^y Idem, p. 83, 84.

IN the mean time king Theodoric, who was still with his army among the mountains of Thrace, not receiving from the Romans either money or provisions to support them, marched down into the province of Rhodope on the Ægean sea, and, being highly provoked at the emperor's conduct, laid waste the most fertile places of Thrace, destroying with fire and sword what he could not carry off. The emperor sent several generals to oppose him ; but though he lost, as we are told, a great many men in skirmishes, yet the loss on the side of the Romans must have been far more considerable, since, in the end, all the emperor's generals declined the command of the army in Thrace ^a. From Thrace Theodoric marched into Macedonia, and, having pillaged the open country, made himself master of Stopi on the river Axios. From thence he marched into the neighbourhood of Thessalonica ; which threw the inhabitants into such a consternation, that, thinking themselves abandoned by the emperor, they pulled down and broke in pieces all his statues, and were ready to fall upon their governor, named John ; but, in the end, contented themselves with taking from him the keys of the city, and delivering them to the bishop ^b. Theodoric, without making the least attempt on Thessalonica, led his army from thence to Heraclea, where he was met by ambassadors from Zeno, with proposals for an accommodation ; which he being willing to conclude, sent others to Constantinople, and, in the mean time, ordered his men to forbear all hostilities. The person employed by Zeno to treat with Theodoric was the patrician Adamancus, who, as appears from some laws, had been governor of Constantinople, and was on this occasion, honoured with the consular ornaments, but not with the consulship. During the

He breaks with Zeno, and ravages Thrace and Macedonia.

Proposals for an accommodation.

M 2

nego-

^a Idem, p. 78.

^b Idem, p. 79.

^c Idem, p. 95.

Which are rejected by Zeno.

negotiations, Theodoric found means of making himself master of Duras on the Adriatic sea, that he might have some place of strength to retire to, in case the negotiations should not have the desired effect. Hereupon the conferences were broken off, Adamancus declaring, that he could not treat with the Goths, till they had restored the city of Duras to the empire. Theodoric could not, by any means, be prevailed upon to part with that important place during the winter; but promised to abandon it early in the spring, to march against the other Theodoric, who had raised new disturbances in the empire, and that the emperor might not question the sincerity of his intentions, to deliver up to him his mother and sisters as hostages. He likewise offered, with the emperor's approbation, to march into Italy, and restore Nepos, who was nearly related to the empress Verina, Zeno's mother-in-law, and had been lately driven from the throne by Glycerius. To these proposals Adamancus answered, That he had no power to grant him any terms, till Duras was restored^c; but that he would write to the emperor, and acquaint him with his answer. The Romans, in the mean time became more intractable, being elated with some advantages they gained at that very time over the Goths. Theodoric had marched before with a strong detachment to surprise Duras, while the main body, with the baggage, followed by slow marches, under the conduct of his brother Theudimund. This Sabinianus, governor of Illyricum, and at that time the best commander in the whole empire, no sooner understood, than he ordered all the troops quartered in that province to assemble at Lychnidus in Macedon, and, marching from thence with incredible expedition, overtook the Goths, as they were descending from the mountains of Candavia, between Lychnidus and Duras. Theudimund, and his mother, who followed the army, had just time to pass a torrent, and cause the bridge to be broken down, by which means they saved themselves, but stopped the march of the army; so that the Romans, falling upon them, cut most of them in pieces, took five thousand prisoners, two thousand waggons, and an immense booty^d. Zeno, elated with this victory, and, not doubting but he should either take Theodoric himself prisoner, or oblige him to submit to what terms he pleased, wrote to Sabinianus,

Most of Theodoric's army cut pieces by by the Romans.
Year after
Christ 479.

^c Idem, p. 84.

^d Idem, p. 85.

nianus, and to Gento, a Goth of great reputation in the Roman service, to pursue the war, and not suffer Theodoric, with the troops he had with him, to retire, but to keep him shut up on all sides, ordering at the same time Adamantius to break off the conferences, and return to Constantinople^e. But of this war all we know is, that the following year 480, Theodoric ravaged Greece, and that Sabinianus, as count Marcellinus writes, put, in the end, a stop to his ravages, more by address than by dint of arms^f; which plainly shews, that the Romans had not been attended with the success they expected.

No further mention is made of Theodoric till the year 482, when Sabinianus being dead, he ravaged without controul both Macedons, with Thessaly, and even took and plundered Larissa, the metropolis of the latter province^g; insomuch, that the emperor, to appease him, was at length obliged to yield to him part of Lower Moesia and Lower Dacia, to give him the command of the troops of the household, and to name him consul for the ensuing year 484, which was the greatest honour he could confer upon him. Hereupon Theodoric, disbanding his troops, set out for Constantinople, with a small retinue, and, being received there by the emperor with the greatest marks of kindness and esteem, discharged the following year the office of consul^h. During his consulship, Leontius, a native of Chalcis in Syria, and commander of the troops in that province, revolting, caused himself to be proclaimed emperor. Against him Zeno dispatched Illus, captain of his guards; but he, instead of opposing Leontius, joined him, and both together defeated and took prisoner Longinus, the emperor's brother, who, at the head of a considerable army, had ventured to engage them in the neighbourhood of Antioch; which city, after his defeat, submitted to the usurper. Zeno, upon the news of the defeat and captivity of his brother, dispatched one John, an officer of great valour, and experience in war, into Syria, and prevailed upon Theodoric to join him with a numerous army of Goths. These two commanders, meeting Leontius and Illus in the neighbourhood of Seleucia, gave them a total overthrow, and obliged them to fly for refuge Theodoric grows powerful, and ravages Macedonia and Thessaly; but is appeased by the emperor.

He defeats the usurper Leontius.

M 3

to ^e Idem ibid. ^f Marcell. chron. ^g Idem ibid. ad ann. 482. ^h Marcell. chron. Theoph. p. 222. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 57. p. 686. Mad. p. 84.

He falls out with Zeno, and retires from Constantinople.

He defeats
the Bulgarians.

He ravages Thrace.

to the strong castle of Papyra in Ciliciaⁱ. Evagrius, and others, ascribe this victory to the Valamerians, that is, the Goths ; for so we find them stiled by several writers, from their king Valemer^k. As the rebels were no more in a condition to give the least apprehension or uneasiness, Theodoric, leaving part of his forces with the other commander to pursue the war, returned with the rest to Constantinople ; but finding that Zeno began to mistrust him, and even to seek underhand his destruction, he withdrew from court, and retired into Thrace, the emperor having, some time before, appointed him general of the troops quartered in that country. Thus Evagrius^l. But Marcellinus, accusing Theodoric of ingratitude towards his benefactor Zeno, tells us, that, not satisfied with the innumerable favours received at the emperor's hands, he retired from court, and began to seek some plausible pretence of making war on the empire^m. Jornandes, ever favourable to that prince, but not well acquainted with his history, supposes him to have retired into Pannonia, chusing rather to live in poverty amongst his Goths, than in affluence among the Romansⁿ. Be that as it will, it is certain, that, soon after his leaving Constantinople, he fell upon the Bulgarians, who, under the conduct of their king or leader named Libertem, had broken into Thrace, and gained a complete victory over them, Libertem himself being dangerously wounded, and most of his men cut in pieces^o. The following year 486, Theodoric spent in raising forces, and in 487, broke into Thrace at the head of a powerful army, putting all to fire and sword. Upon what provocation he thus turned his arms against the empire, we are no where told ; but, without all doubt, the same motives that, some time before, had induced him to withdraw from court, prompted him now to act as an enemy. Having ravaged Thrace, he approached Constantinople, and encamped in the neighbourhood of Melantiades, a city placed by Sanfon about fifteen miles west of Constantinople, with a design as was believed, of laying siege to the imperial city. But, while the inhabitants were under the utmost consternation, Theodoric, decamping all on a sudden, marched back to Novæ in Mœsia, ⁱ Theoph. p. 111, 118. Evagr. l. iii. c. 35. p. 366.

^k Evagr. ibid. ^l Idem. l. iii. c. 27, p. 356. ^m Marcel. ad ann. 485. ⁿ Jorn. c. 57. p. 696. ^o Ennod. p. 292, 296.

Moësia, whence he was come ^p. Some writers ascribe this sudden retreat to the regard he had for that metropolis ; others to a private treaty between him and Zeno, who, putting him in mind of the kindness he had ever shewn him, and of the many honours he had heaped upon him, and representing to him at the same time the dangers to which he exposed himself in making war upon the empire, persuaded him to conclude a peace with the Romans, and turn his arms against Odoacer, who, having put Orestes to death, and deposed his son Augustulus, had taken upon him the title of king of Italy ^q. The Romans afterwards pretended, that Zeno had sent Theodoric to conquer Italy, not for himself but for the emperor of the east, to whom of right it belonged ^r. On the other hand, the Goths maintained, that Zeno had yielded Italy to Theodoric and his posterity ^s. Of this opinion was not only Jornandes ^t, by nation a Goth, but Procopius, a Roman writer ^u, who tells us, that Zeno encouraged Theodoric to conquer Italy, which he was to keep for himself. Ammianus writes, that, in virtue of this treaty with Zeno, Theodoric was to hold Italy during his life ; but that, upon his death, it was to be re-united to the empire ^w. Be that as it will, it is certain, that Theodoric received with joy the proposal made him by the emperor of driving Odoacer out of Italy, and returned, as we have hinted above, to Novæ in Moësia, in order to make the necessary preparations for that expedition.

THE following year 488, Theodoric, having assembled, says Ennodius ^x, an infinite number of people, carrying with them on waggons their wives, children, and all their effects, set out from Novæ, bending his march towards Italy. His mother, and sister named Amafrides, attended him in this expedition ^y. Several Romans of great distinction flocked to him from all parts to serve as volunteers in this war, and among the rest Artemidorus, who was nearly related to, and in great favour with, the emperor ; but joyfully abandoned his country, and the grandeur he lived in at Constantinople, to share with Theodoric

M 4

^p Procop. bell. Goth. l. ii. c. 6. p. 461. Marcell. Theoph. p. 113. ^q Jorn. p. 697. Evagr. l. ii. c. 27. p. 356.

^r Mal. p. 84. ^s Procop. bell. Goth. l. ii. c. 6. p. 402.

^t Jorn. c. 57. p. 696, 697. ^u Procop. p. 665. ^w Am-mian. p. 479. ^x Ennod. vit. Theodor. p. 293, 292.

^y Idem, ibid. p. 303.

Is advised by Zeno to turn his arms against Odo-acer.

He sets out for Italy.
Year after Christ 488.

He defeats
the Gepidæ and the Sarmatians on his march.

He puts O-doacer to flight.

doric in his good and bad fortune, who afterwards created him a patrician, and made him governor of Rome^z. On the other hand, a great many Goths declined following Theodoric into Italy, and, settling on the sea-coast in Thrace, formed there a separate nation, which lived in amity with the Romans, and is highly commended by Procopius^a. From Novæ in Mœsia Theodoric marched strait to the Adriatic sea; but, for want of ships, was obliged to go round, and traverse the several nations dwelling on the coast. This march he performed in the depth of winter, a violent plague and famine, says Ennodius^b, raging the whole time in his army, and carrying off great numbers of his people. He found the Gepidæ encamped on the banks of a certain river, with a design to oppose his passage; but Theodoric, passing it at the head of a choice body of men, charged them so briskly, that they immediately betook themselves to a precipitous flight. At another place he was met by the Sarmatians, whom he likewise overcame, and put to flight^c. Thus, after a long and fatiguing march, he entered at length Italy, and, advancing to the river Sontius, now Zonzo, in the neighbourhood of Aquileia, halted there, in order to rest his men, being informed, that Odoacer was in full march to meet him with a very numerous army, consisting of various nations, commanded by their respective kings or chiefs^d. Soon after, Odoacer appeared, and was met by Theodoric with his men in battle-array. Hereupon an engagement ensued, in which Odoacer was, after a faint resistance, put to flight, and great numbers of his men cut in pieces. Theodoric pursued the fugitives, and, on the 28th of August 489, entered their camp, though defended by a river, and a great many works^e. Odoacer retired to the plains of Verona, and encamped there at a small distance from the city. But Theodoric, pursuing him close, forced him to a second engagement, when he met with a far more vigorous opposition than in the former, for great numbers were killed on both sides; but, in the end, Odoacer was again put to flight, and obliged to shut himself up in Ravenna; so that Theodoric, having now no enemy in the field

^z Cassiodor. l. i. epist. 43.

63.

301.

Theoph. p. 361.

^b Ennod. vit. Theod. p. 299.

^d Jorn. p. 697. Ennod. ibid.

^a Procop. ædif. c. 7. p.

^c Idem, p.

Idem ibid

field to oppose him, made himself master of several important places, and among the rest of Milan and Pavia ^f. At the same time Tufa, commander in chief of Odoacer's forces, came over to Theodoric, with most of the troops under his command, and was immediately by him dispatched, with one of his own officers, in pursuit of Odoacer to Ravenna. Odoacer had left that city, and was advanced as far as Faenza, in which place he was closely besieged by Tufa; but that treacherous commander, declaring for his former master, joined him anew with all his troops, delivering up to him at the same time several officers, who had been appointed by Theodoric to command under him, and were, by Odoacer's orders, sent in irons to Ravenna ^g. Ennodius writes, that Theodoric did not send against Odoacer all the troops that came over to him with Tufa, but placed several detachments of them, together with his own forces, in the towns that had submitted to him. He adds, that, when Theodoric was informed of Tufa's treachery, he caused them all, by a private order, to be cut in pieces, lest they should follow the example of their general ^h. About the same time Frideric, the son of Fava king of the Rugians, who had joined Theodoric with a considerable body of his countrymen, fled over to Odoacer; who, being thus reinforced, left Faenza, and advanced as far as Milan; which city he is supposed to have taken, since he is said to have recovered all Liguria ⁱ. Theodoric in the mean time, finding himself abandoned both by Tufa and Frideric, kept himself shut up in Pavia, a place in those days of great strength, while Odoacer, without controul, ravaged the country that had submitted to him, and besieged him at last in Pavia, where the Goths, who had brought along with them their families, and all their effects, were greatly streightened for want of room. But Heaven, says Ennodius ^k, openly declared in favour of Theodoric, the enemy's men quarrelling daily among themselves, and every thing contributing to their ruin. However, Theodoric, fearing he should in the end be overpowered with numbers, had recourse to Alaric king of the Visigoths, who had settled

And makes himself master of Milan and Pavia.

He is obliged to shut himself up in Pavia.

^f Ammian. anonym. p. 479. Jorn. p. 697. Ennod. p. 303, 304. ^g Ennod. vit. Epiph. p. 300. Cassiodor. l. ii. ep. 16. p. 38. ^h Ennod. panegy. Theodor. p. 306. ⁱ Idem de Lurent. p. 465. ^k Idem vit. Epiph. p. 397.

settled in Gaul. As the Visigoths and Ostrogoths were originally one and the same nation, and the Visigoths had received among them, about sixteen years before, a great number of Ostrogoths, under the conduct of their king Videmir, cousin-german to Theodoric, they readily granted him the desired supplies; which he no sooner received, than leaving Pavia, he marched to the river Addua, where the enemy lay encamped, engaged them the third time, and gave them a total overthrow. Odoacer took refuge anew in Ravenna; but left numerous garrisons in all the strong places^l. In this battle, which was fought on the eleventh of August, Odoacer lost several officers of distinction, and among the rest Pierius, his comes domesticorum, or captain of the guards^m. Theodoric, after the battle, marched in pursuit of Odoacer, and, approaching Ravenna, encamped at a place called Pinaia, about three miles from the city. On the other hand, Odoacer, with many new works, fortified himself in the town, and, with frequent sallies, especially in the night, greatly harassed the Goths. The siege lasted three years, during which time great numbers were killed on both sides in the frequent sallies and attacks. Authors speak in particular of a sally made, according to some, on the tenth, according to others, on the fifteenth of July 491, in which Odoacer commanded in person, and, at the head of the Heruli, entered the camp of Theodoric at Pinaia, and made a dreadful havock of his men; but he was, after a long and sharp dispute, obliged to retire. The Goths pursued him to the very gates of the city, killing many of his men, and among the rest Libila or Levila, who commanded the Heruli under the king, and had eminently distinguished himself on that occasionⁿ. After this, Theodoric, leaving part of his army before Ravenna, marched with the rest against the strongholds, in which Odoacer had left garrisons, and was everywhere received with great joy, except at Cesena in Romagna, where he met with some opposition^o. Thus he made himself master of Italy^p, not at once, but by degrees; for he laid siege to Ravenna in 490, and pope Gelasius, who

He receives a powerful supply from the Visi-
goths.

He besieges Odoacer in Ravenna.
Year after Christ 490.

He reduces all Italy.

^l Ammian. anonym. p. 470. Cassiodor. p. 68. Procop. bell. Goth. p. 309.

^m Ammian. anonym. p. 479.

ⁿ Jorn. c. 57. p. 697. Onuph. p. 17. Ennod. pan. Theodor. p. 306.

^o Ennod. ibid. p. 309.

^p Jorn. ibid.

who was raised to the see of Rome in 492, speaking of Odoacer, still gives him the title of king of Italy ^a. The sally we have spoken of above was made on the tenth or fifteenth of July, and Theodoric was, on the thirty-first of the following August, at Pavia, and returned to the siege of Ravenna on the twenty-ninth of August 492, pitching his camp at a place called the Little Palace. He was then master of Italy, no one place remaining to Odoacer, except Ravenna, in which he had been shut up three years with his foreign, and some Roman troops, now reduced to great streights by the enemy without, and the famine within ^r, wheat being sold at six pieces of gold a bushel ^s. On the other hand, the Goths were quite worn out with the fatigues of a three years siege; so that both parties being willing to put an end to the war, Odoacer sent John bishop of Ravenna to Theodoric, with proposals for an accommodation. This prelate died in 494, and there is still extant the original act of a donation made to him in January 491 ^t. Jornandes writes, that Odoacer only begged his life; which Theodoric bound himself by a solemn oath to grant him ^u. Procopius tells us, that they agreed to live together on equal terms in Ravenna ^w; which expression we do not well comprehend, it being altogether incredible, that Theodoric, who was already master of all Italy, and had reduced Odoacer to the last extremity, should suffer him to reign jointly, and have an equal share of power, with himself. The agreement was concluded on the twenty-seventh of February, Odoacer delivering up his son named Thelan to Theodoric as an hostage, who thereupon entered Ravenna in triumph by the Fleetgate on the fifth of March ^x. Theodoric did not long stand to the agreement he had made; for having, a few days after, invited Odoacer to a banquet, unmindful of his oath, he dispatched him with his own hand, according to some, in the palace, according to others, in a grove of laurels adjoining perhaps to the palace ^y. Some authors pretend, that Odoacer had formed a design upon the life of Theodoric, which he being acquainted

The besieged reduced to great streights.

Odoacer submits, and is put to death by Theodoric. Year after Christ 493.

^a Concil. tom. iv. p. 1208. ^r Jorn. p. 698. Procop. p. 309. ^s Anonym. p. 480. ^t Ugh. tom. ii. p. 333. Mabill. it. Ital. p. 201. ^u Jorn. p. 698. ^w Procop. bell. Goth. l. i. c. 1. p. 310. ^x Idem ibid. p. 310. Onuph. p. 57. Anonym. p. 488. ^y Procop. Anonym. ibid.

Theodoric
proclaimed
by the Goths, and acknowledged by the emperor,
king of Italy.

acquainted with, resolved to be before-hand with him ^z. But the dead are always found guilty. Jornandes, though himself a Goth, seems to insinuate, that Odoacer was murdered upon a bare suspicion, and that, as was then believed, quite groundless ^a. All his servants and relations were massacred at the same time, except his brother Aonulphus, and a few more, who, having had the good luck to make their escape, retired beyond the Danube ^b. Theodoric had sent, some months before, Faustus Niger, a leading man in the senate of Rome, to obtain of the emperor Zeno the ensigns of royalty. But Odoacer having submitted before the return of the ambassador, Theodoric, without the emperor's permission, caused himself to be proclaimed by his Goths king of Italy ^c. However, he dispatched soon after Festus or Faustus, his magister officiorum, and Irenæus, both distinguished with the title of illustrious, to Constantinople, to excuse the liberty he had taken ^d. The ambassadors were received in a very obliging manner by Anastasius, the successor of Zeno, who readily confirmed the peace, which his predecessor had made with Theodoric, approved of what he had done, and sent him the ensigns of royalty ^e. Hence it is manifest, that Theodoric himself owned he held the kingdom of Italy of the emperors of the east, by whom he suffered even the Roman consuls to be named ^f. There is still extant a letter from Theodoric to Anastasius, concerning one Felix, who was consul in 511, wherein he acquaints the emperor, that he had named Felix for the consulship, and at the same time intreats him to confirm, by his suffrage, that dignity to so deserving a person ^g.

Sicily submits to him.

He secures his new kingdom by alliances.

THEODORIC, now master of all Italy, began to make the necessary preparations for reducing the island of Sicily, which refused to acknowledge him; but the inhabitants were persuaded by Cassiodore to submit to their new lord without bloodshed. After this, Theodoric, sheathing his sword, endeavoured, in the first place, to establish himself in his new kingdom, by alliances, with the neighbouring princes. With this view, he sent Festus to Constantinople, to confirm the peace he had made with Anastasius, marrying

^z Vide Vales. rer. Franc. p. 344. ^a Jorn. de reg. c. 47. p. 655. ^b Anonym. ibid. Isidor. chron. p. 721. ^c Anonym. p. 408. ^d Concil. tom. iv. p. 1181. ^e Procop. l. ii. c. 6. p. 402. ^f Idem ibid. ^g Cassiodor: l. ii, ep. 1.

ing at the same time Andefleda, the daughter of Clodoneus, king of the Franks, and bestowing his own two daughters, whom he had by a concubine, on Alaric king of the Visigoths in Gaul, and on Sigismund, the son of Gundobald king of the Burgundians. Having thus secured his new kingdom, he made it his chief study to govern it with salutary laws, following therein the advice of Cassiodore, a man of great learning and integrity, whom he had created a patrician, and raised to the dignities of count, of consul, and even to that of præfectus prætorio. He first placed all his Goths in the castles and strong-holds, with their officers who were to command them in time of war, and govern them in time of peace. The Roman laws he retained, and commanded them to be inviolably observed and to have the same force, which they had under the emperors of the west^h. In the first five books of Cassiodore, consisting of the letters and edicts of Theodoric, nothing is so much recommended to the judges and magistrates as the due observance of, and respect for, the Roman laws. In these books are quoted many constitutions of the Theodosian code, and many novellæ of Theodosius, Valentinian, and Majorianusⁱ, Theodoric declaring, that he did not intend to introduce any new laws into Italy, the Roman laws, by which it had been so long governed, being the most equitable that could be enacted; nay, so great was the respect he bore to the Roman laws, that he ordered them to be observed, not only by the Romans, but likewise by the Goths, who lived among the Romans. To his Goths he left some of their own laws, or rather customs; but, in all matters of moment, such as successions, testaments, adoptions, contracts, penalties, crimes, and in whatever belonged to public or private property, the Roman laws were common to all. All law-suits and disputes between a Roman and a Goth, or Roman and Roman, were to be decided by the Roman laws, as appears from one of Theodoric's rescripts to Januarius, president of Samnium^k. But when the dispute arose between Goth and Goth, they were to have recourse to their own judge, who decided it according to Theodoric's own edicts, which did not much differ from the Roman laws, and were given to those, who were sent into the provinces as judges of the Goths.

^h Cassiodor. l. iii. c. 43. & l. i. c. 27. ⁱ Vide Grot. in proleg. c. 3. ^k Edict. Theodor. apud Cassiodor.

And the same magistrates.

Goths¹. Theodoric not only retained the same laws, but the same form of government, the same magistrates and dignities. As the emperors had, before his time, translated the imperial seat from Rome to Ravenna, to be near at hand, and ready to put a stop to the irruptions of the barbarians, who, on that side, broke into Italy, he likewise chose that city for the usual place of his residence, governing from thence the provinces by the same magistrates, that had presided over them in the times of the emperors, viz. by the consulares, the correctores, and the præsides. But, besides these, he sent, according to the custom of the Goths, to each city inferior judges, distinguished with the title of counts, who were to administer justice, and decide all controversies and disputes: and herein the polity of the Goths far excelled, as Grotius observes, that of the Romans; for, in the Roman times, a whole province was governed by a consularis, a corrector, or a præses, who resided in the chief city, and to whom recourse was to be had at a great charge from the most remote parts; but Theodoric, besides the consularis, the corrector, or the præses, appointed, not only in the principal cities, but in each small town and village, inferior magistrates of known integrity, who were to administer justice, and, by that means, save those who had law-suits the trouble and expence of recurring to the governor of the whole province^m, no appeals to distant tribunals being allowed, but in matters of the greatest importance, or in case of manifest injusticeⁿ. Thus Italy, from the dominion of the Romans, came under that of the Goths, almost without perceiving the change. But of the eminent virtues of Theodoric, of his glorious reign, and the reigns of the Gothic kings of Italy his successors, to the expulsion of the Goths by Narses, we shall, pursuant to our plan, speak at length in a more proper place, and, in the mean time, proceed to the history of other antient nations.

S E C T.

¹ Cassiodor. l. ii. var. ep. 13. & l. vii. c. 2.
proleg. hist. Goth. Cassiodor. l. vi. c. 7.

^m Grot. in ⁿ Grot. ibid.

S E C T. III.

The antient state of the Vandals, till their settling in Spain and Africa.

THE Vandals were originally a Gothic nation ; for The origin of the Vandals. Procopius, who could not be a stranger to their descent, being well acquainted with Gelomir their king, and the other Vandals, who were brought prisoners to Constantinople in the reign of Justinian, tells us in express terms, that the Goths and Vandals were one and the same people, distinguished in names, but agreeing in original and manners °. He adds, that they spoke the Gothic language, as did likewise the Gepidæ, Lombards, Burgundians, and Alans. They were called Vandals from the Gothic word Vandelen, which signifies to wander, because Their name, they often changed their seats, wandering from one country to another P. They are supposed to have come originally out of Scandinavia with the other Goths, under the conduct of Eric, of whom we have spoken in the foregoing section, and to have settled in the countries now known by the names of Mecklenburg and Brandenburg. Several ages after, another colony of the Goths, leaving Scandinavia under the conduct of king Berig, settled in Pomerania, after having driven out the Rugians, by Jornandes called Ulmerugians. At the same time Berig subdued the Vandals inhabiting the above-mentioned countries ; but, instead of driving them from their antient seats, he only obliged them, as they were a Gothic nation, to share their territories with the new-comers ¹. In the reign of Augustus, part of the Vandals, streightened in their own country for want of room, settled on the banks of the Rhine ; but were driven from thence by Tiberius and Drusus, and obliged to return home. As their country was overstocked with people, great numbers of them soon left it anew, and, taking their rout eastward, entered the country lying between the Bosphorus Cimmerius and the Their different seats. Tanais, ° Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 2. P Vide Matth. Prætor. in orbe Goth, ¹ Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 4.

Tanais, inhabited at that time by the Sclavi, whom they drove out, and, seizing on their country, took the name of the antient inhabitants, calling themselves Sclavi. Some of these, several ages after, that is, in the reign of Mauritius, which began in 586, settled in Dalmatia and Illyricum, which from them were called Slavonia^r. Others seated themselves in the eastern parts of Dacia beyond the Danube, which province comprehended the present countries of Transylvania, Moldavia, Wallachia, and the eastern parts of Upper Hungary. From those who remained in Germany, the present Poles and Bohemians are said by most writers to derive their origin^s. But the Vandals who, under Godegisilus their king, broke into Gaul, and afterwards settled in Spain and Africa, came, according to Procopius^t, from Dacia, and the neighbourhood of the Palus Mæotis. As the Vandals were a Gothic nation, the same customs, manners, religion, form of government, &c. obtained among them as among the

Their kings. Goths. They had, without doubt, their own kings long before they were known to the Romans; but Godegisilus, under whose conduct they entered Gaul in 406, is the first of their princes, whom we find mentioned in history. He was succeeded by Gunderic, who, in 409, from Gaul passed into Spain, and settled in Galicia. Genseric reigned next, who, abandoning Spain in 428, passed with his Vandals over into Africa, which the Vandals held under the following kings, Hunneric, Gundamund, Thrasamund, Genseric II. and Gelimer, till the year 533, when an end was put to their dominion by Belisarius, and Africa re-united to the empire. Salvianus, speaking of the Vandals, says, that they were excelled by all the other barbarous nations both in power and courage; but nevertheless made themselves masters of the best and most fertile province of the empire, Providence so disposing to convince the world, that their conquests were not owing to their valour, but to the Lord of hosts, who made use of so weak and contemptible an enemy to punish the sins of the Romans^u. They embraced the christian religion at the same time that the Goths were converted, but held, like the

^r Vide Olaus Rudbeck. Atlantica, part. i. c. 24. & Joann. Marian. l. v. c. 1. ^s Matth. Prætor. in orbe Goth. l. iii. c. 1. & 2. ^t Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 3. ^u Salvian. l. vii. p. 161.

the other Gothic nations, the tenets of Arius, and were irreconcilable enemies to the catholic church. Salvian however extols their continence and chastity ^w.

As to their irruptions into the empire, for we know nothing of their wars with other nations, they first began to be troublesome to the Romans in the reign of M. Aurelius and Lucius Verus, about the year 166, when, entering into an alliance with other barbarous nations, viz. the Marcomanns, the Narischiens, the Hermundurians, Quadians, Suevians, Sarmatians, Victovalians, Roxolani-ans, Bastarnians, Costobochians, Alans, Iazygians, &c. they broke into the empire, took and plundered several cities, and, having put to flight the Roman armies sent against them, committed every-where unheard-of ravages. Of this war, which is compared by the antients to the Punic and Cimbrian wars, we have spoken in our Roman history ^x. On this occasion the Marcomanns and Vandals made themselves masters of Pannonia, after having defeated and killed Furius Victorinus the præfectus prætorio, who, with a considerable army, attempted to put a stop to their inroads ^y. They continued in Pannonia till the year 170, when they were driven out by M. Aurelius, who pursued them to the Danube, and cut great numbers of them in pieces, as they were passing that river ^z. They entered, it seems, afterwards into an alliance with the Romans; for one of the articles of the peace concluded in 180, between the emperor Commodus and the Alemans was, that they should not make war upon the Vandals ^a. In the year 215, a war was kindled between them and the Marcomanns; for Caracalla, as we read in Dion ^b, used to glory in his having set at variance these two nations, which, till then, had lived in peace and amity with each other. By this war both nations were greatly weakened; and this is all we know of it. In 271, the second of Aurelian's reign, while the emperor was engaged in a war with several German nations, who had broken into Italy, the Vandals having passed the Danube under the conduct of two of their kings, and several other princes, laid waste the neighbouring provinces. Hereupon Aurelian, having gained

The Vandals make themselves masters of Pannonia. Year after Christ 476. Are driven out by M. Aurelius.

They break into the empire, but are driven out with great slaughter by Aurelian.

^w Idem, p. 160, 166.

^x Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 3.

^y M. Aur. vit. p. 29.

^z Idem ibid. p. 31.

^a Dio,

l. lxxii. p. 817.

^b Dio, p. 754, 757.

gained a complete victory over the Germans, led his army against the Vandals, who, upon the news of his approach, retired with great precipitation. The emperor however, pursued and overtook them before they reached the Danube, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to sue for peace ; which he readily granted them, upon their delivering to him, as hostages, the sons of their two kings, and several other persons of great distinction. He incorporated two thousand of their best men amongst his own troops, and ordered the rest to be supplied with provisions at the public expence, till they reached the Danube. Five hundred of them, who had separated from the rest to plunder the country, were cut in pieces by the general of the foreign troops, and their leader put to death by their king's order ^c. They continued quiet the remaining part of Aurelian's reign ; but they no sooner received the news of his death, which happened in 275, than entering into an alliance with the Lygians, Franks, and Burgundians, they advanced as far as the Rhine, and having, without opposition, crossed that river, entered Gaul, and made themselves masters of almost the whole country, which they held for the space of two years, that is, till the year 277, when Probus, who had succeeded Tacitus, marching against them, overcame them in several battles. Most of the Lygians, a German nation, were cut off, and their king Semno taken prisoner ; but he was soon after set at liberty, in virtue of a treaty, by which the Lygians, after having restored the booty, and dismissed the prisoners they had taken, solemnly promised not only to live in amity with the Romans, but to guard the confines of the empire against the other barbarians, who should attempt to break into it ^d. The Vandals and Burgundians retired at the approach of the Roman army, and, having crossed the Rhine before Probus could overtake them, encamped on the banks of that river. However, being provoked by the insults and raillery of the Roman soldiers, encamped on the opposite bank, they attempted to pass the river, with a design to give them battle ; but the Romans, falling upon the first that landed, cut great numbers of them in pieces, took many prisoners, and drove the rest, who were hastening to the assistance of their companions, back into the river, where most most of them perished. The emperor was preparing to pass the Rhine, in order to pursue the shattered remains of their army ; but, upon their suing for peace, and promising to send back all the prisoners and booty they had taken, he agreed to let them retire unmolested. This promise they did not perform with due fidelity ; which so provoked the emperor, that crossing the Rhine, he fell upon them as they were retiring, put many of them to the sword, and took a great number of prisoners, among whom was Igillus their king, with other persons of great distinction ^e. These were afterwards sent by Probus into Britain, and are supposed to have settled in the neighbourhood of Cambridge, where, according to Butherius, they gave name to the village of Vandelburg ^f. Two years after, Probus finding, on his return from Persia, the province of Thrace almost quite destitute of inhabitants, allowed a great number of Bastarnæ, a Scythian nation, some say an hundred thousand, to settle there. He likewise granted lands in the same province to the Gepidæ, the Juthungians, and the Vandals. The Bastarnæ continued faithful to the empire, and by degrees brought themselves to live after the Roman manner ; but the other nations revolting, while the emperor's troops were employed against Saturninus and Proculus, of whom the former had assumed the purple in Egypt, and the latter in Gaul, overran, says our historian, the whole empire, committing every where dreadful ravages, to the great dishonour of the Roman name ^g. But Probus, having with great success overcome the two usurpers, marched all his forces against the barbarians, and in several battles, the particulars of which are unknown to us, made such a dreadful havock of them, that few of those, who had entered the Roman dominions, had the good luck to escape the general slaughter ^h. No farther mention is made of the Vandals, till the year 291, the eighth of Dioclesian's reign, when we find them engaged in a war with the Goths. The Taifalæ assisted the Goths, and the Gepidæ the Vandals ; but as the Romans were no-ways concerned in this war, authors only tell us in general terms, that it was carried on with great vigour ; and that the barbarians were so weakened

The Vandals receive a great overthrow from Probus. Year after Christ 277.

^c Aur. vit. p. 215. Dexip. legat. p. 17. p. 238. 239. Zos. l. i. p. 664.

^d Prob. vit.

Some of them allowed to settle in Thrace.

They revolted, and are defeated by Probus.

N 2

^e Idem, p. 238. Zos. l. i. p. 663. ^f Buch. Belg. l. vii. c. 1. p. 218. ^g Prob. vit. 240. Zos. l. i. p. 666. ^h Prob. vit. p. 240—245.

They break
into Gaul.
Year after
Christ 406.

ened by it, that, for a considerable time, they suffered the Romans to live in peace, not being in a condition to molest themⁱ. As for the Vandals, they seem to have continued quiet till the year 406, the twelfth of Honorius's reign, when, stirred up by Stilicho, who hoped, by their means, to raise his son Eucherius to the empire, they broke into Gaul with the Alans and Suevians. The Vandals, in attempting to cross the Rhine, were attacked by the Franks, who cut twenty thousand of them in pieces, with their king Godigiscles; and would have put them all to the sword, had not the Alans and Suevians come seasonably to their relief. These, joining the Vandals, obliged the Franks to retire; and, crossing without opposition the Rhine, entered Gaul on the last day of the present year 406^k. Procopius writes, that the Vandals, who entered Gaul, had been obliged by a famine that raged among them at home, to abandon their own country, and seek new settlements; but that the greater part of the nation continued in their antient seats beyond the Danube^l. Having passed the Rhine, they first ravaged Germania Prima, took by storm, and levelled with the ground, the city of Mentz, the metropolis of that province. From Germania Prima they passed into Gallia Belgica, and from thence into Aquitain, the most fertile and opulent province of all Gaul. Having advanced to the Pyrenean mountains, which they did not at first venture to pass, they over-ran all the neighbouring provinces, committing everywhere unheard-of ravages. The Vandals, Alans, and Suevians, were soon joined by the Burgundians, and other barbarous nations, stirred up partly by Stilicho, and partly by the desire of booty, and hopes of enriching themselves with the spoils of so many wealthy provinces^m. An incredible number of barbarians, says St. Jerom, writing about this time, having spread themselves all over Gaul: the whole country between the Alps, the Pyrenean mountains, the ocean, and the Rhine, is held by themⁿ. In the mean time Constantine, being proclaimed emperor by the British legions, from Britain passed over into Gaul, taking with him

ⁱ Paneg. xi. p. 135—138. ^k Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 9. p. 62. Oros. c. 40. p. 223. Vales. p. 98. ^l Procop. bell. Van. l. i. c. 22. p. 227. ^m Zos. l. vi. p. 825. ⁿ Hier., ep. xi. p. 93. Salvian. l. vii. p. 167. Oros. l. vii. c. 40. p. 223.

him all the Roman forces quartered in the island, and the flower of the British youth, who were joined, soon after his landing at Bologne, by the Roman troops quartered in Gaul. With these he overcame the Vandals, and other barbarians in several battles, and, in the end, reduced them to such streights, that they were obliged to sue for peace; which he granted, without obliging them to quit Gaul, probably because he hoped to maintain himself, by their means, in the power he had usurped^o. Soon after, Geroncius, to whom Constans, the son of Constantine, had committed the government of Spain, revolting upon some disgust, and setting up one Maximus for emperor, the Vandals, Alans, and Suevians, flew to arms, probably at the instigation of the usurper, and made themselves masters of several cities in Gaul. Hereupon the natives, expecting no relief either from Honorius or Constantine, resolved to defend themselves; and accordingly, uniting their forces, they fell upon the barbarians, and defeated them in several encounters. The barbarians, meeting with greater opposition than they expected, and at the same time acquainted with the distracted state of Spain, which was represented to them as a wealthy and fruitful country, resolved to try whether they could settle there. With this design, they bent their march towards the Pyrenees, which they passed without opposition, the guards who had been placed there, either abandoning their posts at the approach of such multitudes, or joining them, in order to avoid the punishment due to the ravages they had committed in those provinces before their arrival^p. Thus the Vandals, Suevians, and Alans, first entered Spain in 409, according to some, on the twenty-eighth of September^q, according to others, on the thirteenth of October^r. They soon made themselves masters of several cities and strong-holds, defeated the troops, which Constantine had sent, under the conduct of his son Constans, to suppress the rebellion of Geroncius, and before the end of the year 410, obliged Constans himself to abandon the country, and retire to his father at Arles^s. As for Geroncius, he entered into a kind of alliance with them against their com-

The Vandals, Suevians, and Alans, enter Spain.
Year after Christ 409.

N 3

mon

^o Oros. ibid. ^p Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 2. p. 42.
^q Oros. l. vii. c. 40. p. 223. Sozom. l. ix. c. 12. p. 814.
^r Prosop. chron. ^s Idat. fast. & chron.
^s Oros. ibid. Soz. l. ix. c. 12. p. 814. Saly. l. vii. p. 108.

The unhappy condition of these provinces.

mon enemy Constantine ^t. And now the barbarians, having no enemy to oppose them, over-ran the whole country, committing every-where, without controul, unheard-of cruelties ; which they themselves afterwards repented ^u. St. Austin, speaking of the duty of bishops on such occasions, alledges the example of the bishops of Spain, when over-run by the barbarians : Many holy bishops, says he, fled, after having seen their flocks dispersed by the barbarians, put to the sword, destroyed by long sieges, or carried into captivity ; but many more remained among the barbarians, because those who were committed to their care, chose to remain, being willing to endure all sorts of hardships, rather than be wanting to their duty ^w. The barbarians allowed such of the natives, as desired to abandon the country, to retire unmolested ; nay, for a small sum, they conducted them to such places of safety, as they thought proper to chuse ^x. Idatius, who was about this time bishop of a city in Spain, describes at length the calamities suffered on this occasion by that unhappy people. He tells us, that in 409, the country was ravaged on one side by the barbarians, and on the other by a dreadful plague, which daily swept off great numbers ^y ; that, besides these two evils, so great a famine raged in 410, that many were reduced to the dreadful necessity of feeding upon human flesh ; that several parents, pressed by hunger, devoured their own children ; and that the wild beasts, accustomed to live upon the dead bodies of those who were killed by the barbarians, or died of the plague, being deprived of that food, fell upon the living, and made a dreadful havock of the country-people in the fields and villages. To these calamities was added, says our author, the cruelty of the soldiers and officers, who, being employed by Constantine to levy the taxes, seized and carried off the effects and wealth of the inhabitants, who had conveyed them into the towns, as places of safety ^z. Olympiodorus tells us, that the Romans, who, upon the breaking in of the barbarians, had taken refuge in the fortified cities and strong-holds, were in the end obliged to feed upon one another. He adds, that a woman, who had no fewer than forty children, killed and devoured them one after the other ;

^t Phot. c. 80. p. 184.

ep. clxxx. p. 306.

chron. p. 10.

^u Oros. ibid.

^x Oros. c. 41. p. 223.

^z Idem, p. 11.

^w Aug.

^y Idat.

ther ; which the people no sooner knew, than they fell upon her, and stoned her to death ^a. Such was the deplorable condition, to which the provinces of Spain were reduced by the Vandals, Suevians, and Alans, upon their first entering that country ; and in this state they continued from the year 406, to 411, when Heaven, says Idatius ^b, inspiring the barbarians with thoughts of peace, they began to prefer agriculture to war. Having therefore divided among themselves by lot the provinces of Spain, they applied themselves to the tilling of the ground, and to other works of agriculture. In that division, Galicia fell to the Vandals and Suevians, the former having Gonderic, who had succeeded Godigiscles, for their king, and the latter Ermeric ; Lusitania, and the province of Cartagena, to the Alans ; Bœtica to the Vandals, called Silingians, who are supposed to have given to their lot the name of Vandalusia, changed afterwards into that of Andalusia ^c. Such of the natives as had escaped the general slaughter, and taken refuge in the fortified places, submitted in the end to the barbarians, who, touching the holy book of the gospels, swore that they would treat them for the future as their friends and allies ; which oath they observed so religiously, that many Romans chose to live in poverty under the barbarians, rather than to return into the dominions of the empire ^d. However, the inhabitants of Galicia maintained their liberty, and formed a separate state in a corner of that province, where they were often attacked by Ermeric king of the Suevians, who, in the end, suffered them to live in peace, being seized with a distemper, of which he languished the seven last years of the fourteen he reigned ^e. Pope Leo observes, that the catholic church suffered greatly by this irruption of the barbarians, who would not suffer the civil and ecclesiastical laws enacted against heretics, especially the Priscillianists, to be put in execution. On the other hand, the bishops not meeting and holding councils as usual, the followers of Priscillian, who, till that time, had been obliged to keep themselves concealed, began publicly to own their tenets, and gained over a great many profelytes ^f.

N 4

IN

^a Phot. c. 80. p. 189.

^b Idat. ibid.

^c Oros. c.

41. p. 223.

^d Idem, l. iii. c. 23. p. 173. & l. vii. c. 41.

p. 223.

^e Isidor. chron.

^f Leo, ep. xv. p. 449.

IN the year 416, Vallia, king of the Goths in Gaul, having concluded a peace with the Romans, took upon him to drive the barbarians out of Spain ; which gave rise to a war, of which we know but very few particulars. Orosius writes, that on this occasion Vallia gave signal proofs of his zeal for the welfare of the empire^g ; and Idatius, that Vallia made head against the Alans and Vandals, masters of Lusitania and Boetica, and gained great advantages over them^h. This is all we know of the present war. In 422, the emperor Honorius, acquainted with the low condition to which the Vandals had been reduced by the Goths under the conduct of Vallia, resolved to attempt the recovery of the provinces held by them in Spain. With this view, he ordered Castinus, general of the foot, and captain of the guards, to march against them at the head of a considerable army, in which served a great number of Goths. Castinus defeated them in several encounters, and reduced them to such straits, that they began to think of abandoning the country, which they had seized ; but the Roman general having in the mean time unseasonably ventured an engagement, twenty thousand of his men were cut in pieces, and he obliged, with the poor remains of his shattered army, to take refuge in the city of Tarracoⁱ. Idatius ascribes this defeat to the treachery of the Goths, who served as auxiliaries in the Roman army ; but Gregory of Tours, and Salvian, suppose it to be entirely owing to the rashness of Castinus. After this victory, the Vandals made themselves masters of Seville ; and, having firmly established their dominion in Andalusia, they ravaged the neighbouring provinces, almost utterly destroyed the city of Cartagena, and, passing over into the Balearic islands, committed unheard-of ravages there, carrying back with them into Spain an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives^k. Not long after, the Vandals and Suevians falling out, Gonderic, king of the Vandals, gained great advantages over Ermeric king of the Suevians, whom, in the end, he obliged to fly for refuge to the mountains of Biscay, and there kept him and his people blocked up. But in the mean time Asterius, count of Spain, and the vicar Maurocelus, falling

They gain a great victory over the Romans.

^g Oros. ibid.

^h Idat. chron.

ⁱ Greg. Tur.

^k Idat. chron.

^l ii. c. 9. p. 63, 64.

Salvian. l. vii. p. 165—168.

falling unexpectedly upon Gonderic, cut great numbers of his men in pieces, and obliged the rest to abandon Biscay and Galicia, and retire into Andalusia¹. Gonderic, on his return to Seville, took the church of that city from the catholics, and gave it to the Arians; upon which, being immediately possessed, says Idatius, and tormented with an evil spirit, he perished soon after, that is, in 428, in a Gonderic miserable manner^m. The Vandals gave out, that he had^{dies.} been taken prisoner by the Suevians, and by them put to death, hoping by that means, say some modern writers, to conceal his shameful end; which was a manifest condemnation of the tenets of Arius held by them. Gonderic left several sons behind him; but was nevertheless succeeded by his brother, named by the antients Gaiferic, Geiseric, and Gizeric, but now commonly known by the name of Genferic. Procopius tells us, that he was^{Genferic,} the natural son of Godigiscles, killed by the Franks in 406, and Sidonius, that he was the son of a king; but that his mother was a slaveⁿ. He renounced the catholic faith, which he first professed, to embrace the doctrine of Arius held by the Vandals his countrymen^o. He was remarkably brave and courageous, well skilled in the art of war, and, from his infancy, inured to the hardships and toils attending a military life^p. But, as we have elsewhere drawn his character^q, we shall only add here from Idatius, that, before his accession to the crown, he was well known to the Romans by the many advantages he had gained over them in Spain; that the victory over Castinus in 422, was no less owing to his bravery, than to the rash conduct of the Roman general; and that chiefly by his means the Suevians in Spain were reduced to the lowest ebb of power^r. Upon his arrival in Africa, he caused the wife of the deceased king to be drowned in the river Amsachus, and soon after put all her children to death, to prevent the disturbances they might have raised, as they had an undoubted right to the crown^s. Genferic had scarce taken possession of the throne, when he^{He is invited} was invited over into Africa by count Bonifacius, who^{by Bonifacius} commanded^{us into Africa.}

¹ Idem ibid.

^m Idem, p. 27.

ⁿ Sid. car. ii. &

v. p. 300, 310.

^o Idat. p. 17.

^p Procop. p.

184.

^q Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 218

^r Idem

ibid.

^s Vict. Vitens. de persecut. Vandal. l. ii. p. 21.

Malch. leg. p. 959.

commanded the Roman troops in that province. Bonifacius had served the empire with the utmost fidelity, and, on that account, had been raised by the empress Placidia to the highest honours, and sent with an unlimited power into Africa ; which province he had defended with great bravery against the repeated attempts of the usurper John. His rise gave no small jealousy to his rival Aetius, who thereupon found means to persuade Placidia, that Bonifacius had preserved Africa for himself, and only waited an opportunity of pulling off the mask, and establishing there an independent sovereignty. Placidia, giving entire credit to the insinuations of Aetius, whom she did not in the least mistrust, declared Bonifacius a public enemy, as we have related more at length elsewhere ^t, and dispatched a strong body of troops against him. Bonifacius, finding the empress bent upon his ruin, and himself not in a condition to contend with the whole strength of the empire, had recourse to Genseric king of the Vandals, who, at this time, peaceably enjoyed the province of Andalusia. Procopius writes, that, in virtue of the treaty concluded between them and Bonifacius, Gonderic, whom he supposes to be still living, against the testimony of Idatius, and Genseric, were to have two-thirds of Africa, and he the other ; and that they were to assist each other to the utmost of their power ^u. The treaty being agreed to, Genseric began to make the necessary preparations for so important an expedition. The barbarians, says Prosper ^w, had no vessels, neither did they know how to make use of them ; but those who employed them, took care to supply them with every thing they wanted. When necessary vessels were got ready, and the Vandals upon the point of going on board, Genseric was informed, that Hermigarius, a celebrated commander of the Suevians, was laying waste the neighbouring provinces. Hereupon Genseric, putting himself at the head of a chosen body of troops, went in quest of the enemy ; and, coming up with them in Lusitania, gave them a total overthrow. Hermigarius their leader attempted to make his escape ; but was drowned in crossing on horseback the river Guadiana near Merida ^x. Idatius looks upon his death as a punishment inflicted upon him for speaking contemptuously of St. Eulalia,

He defeats
the Suevians.

^t Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 217.

^w Prosp. chron.

^x Idat. p. 27.

^u Procop. p. 45.

Eulalia, and pillaging the city of Merida, where the body of that saint was kept and revered ^y.

FROM this expedition Genferic returned to the place where the vessels were kept in readiness for his embarkation. There he had ordered, before his departure, all the Vandals to assemble with their wives, children, and effects; and having, upon his return, commanded them to go on board, he put to sea in the month of May of the year 428, and, abandoning Spain, crossed the streights of Gibraltar, and landed in Africa ^z. The Romans took possession anew of the provinces, which the Vandals had abandoned, and held them till they were driven out by the Suevians, as the Suevians were in their turn by the Goths, as we have related above. Genferic gave out, that his army was eighty thousand strong; but in that number he must have comprised the old men, the children, and even the slaves ^a. The author of St. Austin's life describes at length the dreadful ravages committed by them in that wealthy province. According to that writer, they were, in the month of May of the year 430, already masters of all the cities of Africa, except Carthage, Cirtha, and Hippo. Cassiodore writes, perhaps to curry favour with those under whom he lived, that the Vandals were driven out of Spain by the Goths. But Salvian assures us, that they abandoned those countries of their own accord, when they were in a condition to maintain themselves in the possession of what they had acquired with their valour, in spite of the utmost efforts of their enemies. Heaven, that had made use of them to punish the sins of the Spaniards, employing them for the same purpose against the Africans. The same writer adds, that they themselves could not help owning, that they were animated to this enterprize more by a secret impulse from Heaven, than by their own inclination ^c. In the mean time Placidia, having discovered the true cause of the revolt of Bonifacius, wrote a most kind and obliging letter to him, assuring him of her favour and protection for the future, and exhorting him to return to his duty, and exert his usual zeal for the welfare of the empire, by driving out the barbarians, whom the malice of his enemies had obliged him to call in for ^y Idem, p. 28. ^z Prosp. chron. Idat. p. 17, 18. Vict. Vitenf. de persecut. Vandal. l. i. p. 3. ^a Vict. Vitenf. ibid. ^b Cassiodor. chron. ^c Salvian gub. l. vii. p. 168.

for his own safety and preservation. This Bonifacius readily undertook, offering them considerable sums, provided they quitted Africa, and returned to Spain. But the Vandals, already masters of the far greater part of Africa, first returned him a scoffing answer, and then falling unexpectedly upon him, cut most of his men in pieces and obliged Bonifacius himself to take refuge in Hippo; which place they invested in the month of May 430, about three months before the death of St. Austin bishop of that city. The siege lasted about fourteen months, that is, till the month of July of the following year 431, when the Vandals were forced, by a famine that began to rage in their camp, to drop the enterprize, and retire ^d. Soon after Bonifacius having received two reinforcements, the one from Rome, and the other from Constantinople, under the conduct of the celebrated Aspar, a resolution was taken by the Roman generals to offer the enemy battle. The Vandals readily accepting the challenge, a bloody engagement ensued, in which the Romans were utterly defeated by the barbarians, who took an incredible number of captives, and obliged the rest to take shelter among the rocks and mountains. Among the prisoners was Marcian, then assessor to Aspar, and afterwards emperor. Aspar, who commanded the eastern troops, escaped with much-ado out of Africa, and returned to Constantinople. As for Bonifacius, he repaired with all speed to Italy, being called thither by the empress Placidia. Upon their departure, the barbarians over-ran all Africa, committing every-where, without controul, unheard-of ravages; which struck the inhabitants of Hippo with such terror, that they abandoned their city, which was first plundered, and then set on fire by the victorious enemy ^e; so that Cirtha and Carthage were the only two strong places in Africa still held by the Romans ^f. About the same time Genferic made several attempts upon Sicily; but was constantly repulsed by Cassiodore, great-grand father to the celebrated senator of the same name ^g. At length a peace was concluded on the eleventh of February of the year 435, between Valentinian and Genferic ^h, whose moderation is greatly extolled by Procopius ⁱ. But other several victories over the Romans.

They gain

Genferic,
king of the Vandals, concludes a peace with the Romans, who yield to him part of Africa.

Year after
Christ 435.

^d Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 3. p. 185. Vit. S. Aug.

^e Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 3. p. 185.

^f Salvian. gub. p.

141, 142.

^g Cassiodor. l. i ep. 4. p. 4.

^h Prosp. chron.

ⁱ Procop. ibid. c. 1. p. 386.

ther writers ascribe his making peace with the Romans, not to his moderation, but to the apprehension he was under of being attacked anew by the united forces of both empires. Be that as it will, the Romans yielded to him part of Numidia, the province proconsularis, and likewise Byzacene ^k. Prosper writes, that, for these provinces, Genseric was to pay a yearly tribute to the emperor of the east ^l. He delivered up to the Romans his son Hunneric by way of hostage; but so great was the confidence they placed in Genseric, that, some time after, they sent him back his son; of which they had soon occasion to repent, being convinced by experience, that he had either brought with him into Africa, or learnt there, the treachery peculiar to the inhabitants of that country; for four years after, that is, in 439, the Romans being engaged in a war with the Goths in Gaul, Genseric laying hold of that opportunity, ^{He takes Carthage.} surprised the city of Carthage on the twenty-third of October; by the taking of which place, the Vandals remained masters of the proconsularis, of Byzacene, Gætulia, and part of Numidia ^m. However Valentinian maintained, so long as he lived, the other provinces of Africa, though reduced to a most deplorable condition. These were the two Mauritania, viz. Cæsariensis and Sitifensis, with Tripolitana, Tingitana, and that part of Numidia, in which Cirtha stood. Thus Carthage fell under the power of the Vandals, after it had belonged to the Romans for the space of five hundred and eighty-five years ⁿ. When news of the taking of Carthage by the Vandals was brought to Rome, Valentinian, not doubting but they would soon make some attempt upon Italy itself, ordered the walls, towers and gates of all the cities on the coast to be repaired. The governor of Rome was strictly enjoined to put that city in a state of defence against any sudden attack, and impowered to oblige all the inhabitants, without distinction, to concur in the work. Levies were made, and guards placed on the walls, and at the gates, as appears from a law enacted on the second of March, and addressed to the people of Rome ^p. From another law dated the twenty-fourth of June 440, we learn, that the Roman people had already received intelligence telligence of Genferic's being failed from Carthage with a powerful fleet, but were still unacquainted with his design. Hereupon Valentinian published a law, granting to all ranks of people the liberty of taking arms, to defend themselves against the common enemy. By the same law he yields to them whatever they shall take from the Vandals; and exhorts them to act on this occasion with the courage of true Romans, and with that moderation and justice, that become men of honour. He adds, that an army, destined by Theodosius for the defence of Italy; was in full march; and that Aetius would soon arrive from Gaul at the head of another army. Several bodies of troops were placed, at proper distances, along the coast, under the conduct of Sigisvult, by nation a Goth; and the people ordered to be in readiness to take arms upon the first alarm^q. But, notwithstanding all these precautions, Genferic, in the month of June, made a descent upon Sicily, and, meeting with little or no resistance, ravaged the open country, and even laid siege to Palermo; but, not being able to reduce the place, he returned to Africa with an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives^r. It was, without all doubt, on this occasion, that Pascasinus, bishop of Lilybæum, was carried into captivity, as pope Leo informs us, and kept in a most miserable servitude for the space of three years, viz. to the year 443, when he returned back to his see^s.

^k Vict. Vitenf. l. i. p. 5. ^l Prosp. chron. ^m Idat. p. 22. Prosp. chron. Chron. Alex. p. 730. Vict. Vitenf. l. v. p. 5. ⁿ Prosp. chron. ^p Noell. xl. p. 17. & xli. p. 18.

GENSERIC being now become formidable to both empires, Theodosius resolved to assist Valentinian his cousin and son-in-law against so powerful an enemy. Accordingly, he fitted out a fleet consisting of eleven hundred large ships, and putting on board of it the flower of his army under the conduct of Arcovindas, Ansilus, and Germanus, he ordered them to land in Africa, and, joining the western forces there, to drive Genferic out of the countries he had usurped. But Genferic pretending in the mean time to be desirous of concluding a peace with both empires, the Roman generals waited on the coast of Sicily the result of the negotiations, till the season proper for action was over. The following year 442, the Hunns breaking into Thrace and Illyricum, and committing there dreadful ravages, Theodosius was obliged to recal his forces, and Valentinian to conclude a peace with Genferic, which he could not obtain,

^q Novell. xx. p. 102.
^{rom.} i. p. 412.

^r Prosp. Idat. chron.

^s Leo,

He ravages Sicily.

obtain, but by yielding to him all the countries in Africa which he had seized ^t. Some years after, that is, in 455, Eudoxia, the widow of Valentinian III. being forced by the usurper Maximus, who had murdered her husband, to marry him, in order to avenge this affront, dispatched a trusty messenger to Genferic, conjuring him to come and revenge the death of his friend and ally Valentinian, and rescue her out of the arms of a tyrant, who had imbrued his hands in the blood of her husband ^u. As the empress assured him, that he would meet with little or no resistance in Italy, and at the same time promised to assist him to the utmost of her power, he embraced, with great joy, so favourable an opportunity of enriching himself with the spoils of so wealthy a country; and putting to sea without loss of time, steered his course strait to Rome, which he took and plundered, as we have related at length in our Roman history ^w. Amongst other persons of great distinction, Genferic carried with him over into Africa the empress Eudoxia, her two daughters Placidia and Eudocia, and Gaudentius the son of Aetius. Marcian, who succeeded Maximus, dispatched ambassadors to Genferic, earnestly entreating him to suffer the empress and the two princesses her daughters to return to Rome; but he, despising both his entreaties and menaces, kept them till the year 462, when he sent back Eudoxia, with her second daughter Placidia, to Leo, the successor of Marcian; but kept Eudocia, and married her to Hunneric his eldest son, who had by her Hilderic, afterwards king of the Vandals in Africa ^x. Victor Tunensis tells us, that Leo, then bishop of Rome, went out to meet Genferic, and with his affecting eloquence, persuaded him to forbear shedding the blood of the innocent citizens, and setting fire to the city ^y; but, according to Evagrius, the Vandals not only pillaged the city, but set it on fire; so that several public as well as private buildings were entirely consumed ^z. Baronius writes, upon what authority we know not, that Genferic spared, as Alaric had done, the churches of St. Peter, St Paul, and the Lateran ^a.

Valentinian yields to Genferic all the countries he had seized. Year after Christ 442.

Genferic takes and plunders Rome. Year after Christ 455.

GEN-

^t Chron. Alex. p. 730. Prosp. chron. c. 7. p. 298. ^w Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 262. ^u Evagr. l. ii. c. 9. p. 255. Theoph. p. 93. Evagr. p. 98. ^y Vict. Tun. chron. ^z Evagr. ibid. ^a Baron. ad ann. 455.

GENSERIC, upon his return to Africa, made himself master of the countries that were still held there by the Romans. Hereupon Avitus, who had succeeded Valentinian III. dispatched ambassadors to him, putting him in mind of the treaty he had concluded with the empire in 442, and threatening if he did not observe the articles of that convention, to make war upon him, not only with his own forces, but with those likewise of his allies, meaning the Visigoths, that were ready to embarque and pass over into Africa. Accordingly, he sent a numerous fleet to Sicily, under the conduct of Ricimer, whom we have had frequent occasion to mention in our Roman history, with orders to keep themselves in readiness to put to sea upon the first notice ^b. But Genseric, without the least regard to the emperor's remonstrances or threats, sailed from Carthage with a fleet of sixty ships, having on board a great number of land-forces, and shaped his course towards Corsica, it being yet a secret whether he designed to make a descent upon Italy or Gaul. But Ricimer no sooner heard he had put to sea, than he too weighed anchor, and, coming unexpectedly upon him near Corsica, utterly defeated him ^c. However, he returned soon after with a more numerous fleet, and, making a descent on the coast of Italy, carried off unmolested an immense booty, and a great number of captives; which Marcian, the emperor of the east, hearing, and at the same time pitying the condition to which Eudoxia and her two daughters were reduced, dispatched ambassadors to Genseric, earnestly entreating him to send back the three princesses, and to forbear ravaging the lands of the empire, pursuant to the treaties he had concluded with the emperor of the west. Genseric heard the ambassadors; but dismissed them without any answer. Upon their return Marcian, imagining that an Arian might speak with more liberty to, and be more favourably received by, a prince of that persuasion, wrote a letter to him with his own hand, and charged Bleda, a bishop of that sect, to deliver it to him. Bleda, finding he could obtain nothing by prayers and entreaties, told him boldly, that he ought not to let himself be so blinded by the success that had hitherto attended him, as not to reflect on the danger to which he exposed himself, by provoking such a warlike prince as Marcian. Genseric

He is defeated by Ricimer.

^b Prisc. legat. p. 63.

^c Idat, p. 34. Vict. Vitenf. p. 34.

feric heard him with patience; but refused to comply with either of the emperors requests ^d. Some writers tell us, that Marcian, finding he could obtain nothing of Genferic by fair means, resolved to make war upon him, but died before he could put his designs in execution ^e. Jornandes, as quoted by other writers, supposes him to have concluded a peace with the Vandals ^f. Procopius, who greatly extols Marcian in other respects, blames him for neglecting the affairs of Africa, and scrupling to make war upon Genferic, by reason of the oath he had been obliged to take, when prisoner in Africa, that he would never molest the Vandals ^g. Evagrius supposes Eudoxia, with her second daughter Placidia, to have been sent back to Marcian ^h; but he was therein certainly mistaken; for Genferic set those two princesses at liberty several years after, at the request of the emperor Leo. Priscus writes, that Genferic obtained of the emperor of the east, Marcian, or his successor Leo, part of the effects of the deceased emperor Valentinian, as the portion of Eudocia that prince's daughter married to Hunneric the son of Genferic ⁱ. But we do not well comprehend what right the emperor of the east had to dispose of what belonged to the emperor of the west. In the year 457, Avitus, emperor of the west, who had succeeded Valentinian III. being deposed, after a short reign, Majorianus was chosen in his room. In the beginning of that prince's reign, the Vandals made a descent on the coast of Campania; but the Romans, falling upon them while they were busied in plundering the country, put great numbers of them to the sword, among whom was the brother-in-law of Genferic, and obliged the rest to quit their booty, and to save themselves on board their fleet ^k. Majorianus, not satisfied with this small advantage, resolved to pass over into Africa, and attempt the recovery of those wealthy provinces. With this view he assembled a fleet, consisting of three hundred vessels, hired a great number of troops of the barbarians, who lived in amity with the empire, and are named by

The Vandals defeated by the Romans.

Majorianus resolves to pass over into Africa.

Year after Christ 460.

Sido-

^d Evagr. l. ii. c. 7. p. 298.

^e Theodor. lect. l. ii. p.

552.

^f Prisc. p. 41. not. p. 208.

^g Procop bell.

Vand. l. i. c. 4. p. 186.

^h Evagr. l. ii. c. 7. p. 298.

Prisc. p. 42.

^k Sid car. v. p. 321.

Sidonius ^l, and made other necessary preparations for so great an undertaking ; the Gauls, though greatly exhausted by heavy imposts, contributing with joy their share towards them ^m. Of these military preparations mention is made by Procopius ⁿ, and likewise by Cassiodore ^o, who tells us, that Majorianus spent the whole year 457, and the three following, in making the necessary preparations for driving the Vandals out of Africa. At length, in the year 460, Majorianus leaving Arles, where he then resided, soon after Easter, which that year fell on the twenty-seventh of March, bent his march towards Spain, which he entered in the month of May, with a design to cross over from thence into Africa ^p. Procopius writes, that Majorianus, the better to inform himself of the strength of the enemy, went in disguise to the court of Genferic, pretending to be an embassador sent by the Roman emperor with proposals for an accommodation : he adds, that, while Genferic was shewing him his arsenal, all the arms moved of their own accord with a dreadful noise ^q. The Romans did not in the least doubt of success, having Majorianus for leader ; and the Vandals, dreading the issue of a war under the conduct of so renowned a commander, did all that lay in their power to avoid it. Genferic sent embassadors with proposals for concluding a peace with the empire, which he promised to observe with the utmost fidelity, but these being rejected by the emperor, he laid waste all Mauritania, and even poisoned the waters, being informed, that Majorianus designed to land there, and thence march to Carthage ^r. In the mean time, the Roman fleet being assembled in the bay of Alicant, and Majorianus ready to embarque, a squadron of Genferic's best ships appeared unexpectedly, and, falling upon the Roman vessels at anchor, sunk a great number of them, disabled others, and returned with some in triumph to Africa. This misfortune, which, we are told, was owing to the treachery of some on board the Roman fleet, disconcerted all the emperor's measures, and put a stop to the enterprize. However, Majorianus, persisting in his resolution of invading Africa, ordered the ships to be repaired,

His fleet surprised by the Vandals.

^l Idem ibid. p. 324.
bell. Vand. l. vii. p. 194.

^p Marc. Idat. chron. Prisc. p. 42.

^r Procop. ibid.

^m Idem ibid.

^o Cassiodor. ad an. 457.

^q Procop. ibid.

ⁿ Procop.

ed, and in the mean time returned to Arles, to pass the winter there. Genferic, finding the late misfortune had not diverted Majorianus from his former resolution, and dreading the arms and valour of so great a general, dispatched ambassadors to him with new proposals, which he in the end accepted *. Thus a peace was concluded between Majorianus and Genferic ; but the articles of the treaty have not been transmitted to us. Whatever they were, Genferic did not long observe them ; for he was no sooner informed of the death of Majorianus, which happened the following year 461, than he sent a powerful fleet to pillage the coasts of Sicily and Italy, and even made himself master of Sardinia †.

Concludes a peace with Genferic.

THE following year 462, the inhabitants of Italy, being informed, that Genferic was making great preparations with a design to renew his ravages on their coasts, had recourse to Leo emperor of the east, Severus, whom Ricimer had raised to the empire of the west, being no ways qualified for that high station, and altogether incapable of protecting them against so powerful an enemy as Genferic. They earnestly entreated Leo either to supply them with ships of war, or to procure for them, by his mediation, some kind of agreement with the king of the Vandals. Leo declined sending them any supplies, which, he said, would be an open breach of treaties subsisting between Genferic and the emperors of the east ; but dispatched ambassadors into Africa, with proposals for a peace with the western empire, earnestly pressing Genferic at the same time to send back Eudoxia and her daughter Placidia. Genferic answered, that he would hearken to no terms till the effects of Valentinian were delivered up to him, which he claimed as the portion of Eudocia, that prince's eldest daughter, whom his son Hunneric had married. However, he sent back to Leo the two princesses, declaring, that he was willing to live in peace with the emperor of the east ; but under the above-mentioned pretences he never failed, for some years, to make descents early in the spring on the coasts of Sicily and Italy, pillaging the country ; but ever avoiding to engage the Romans, and retiring as soon as their forces appeared †. Olybrius, of whom Genferic ravages the coasts of Italy and Sicily.

O 2

we

* Idat. p. 39. 40. Sid. l. i. ep. 11. p. 28. Cusp. p. 552.
† Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 6. p. 192. Idat. p. 41.
Prisc. p. 42. Sid. car. ii. v. 349.

we have spoken elsewhere ^w, having soon after married Placidia, Genferic took from thence a new pretence to ravage Italy more than ever, declaring, that he would wage an eternal war with the western empire, unless Olybrius, brother-in-law to his son, was raised to the imperial dignity ^x. Hereupon the inhabitants of Italy had recourse anew to the emperor Leo, who dispatched the patrician Tatian to Genferic, enjoining him to conclude a peace with that prince upon any terms; but Genferic would hearken to none ^y. In the mean time the emperor Severus dying, the Romans sent deputies to Constantinople, entreating Leo to send Anthemius into Italy, whom they designed to chuse emperor. Anthemius was a native of Constantinople, descended of an antient and illustrious family, had married the daughter of the late emperor Marcian, and was at that time count of the east. Leo readily complied with the request of the Romans; so that Anthemius, arriving in Italy, was with one consent chosen emperor, notwithstanding the great interest made by Genferic in favour of Olybrius. Hereupon Genferic, highly provoked against Leo for contributing to the promotion of Anthemius, sent a powerful fleet with orders to ravage Peloponnesus and the Greek islands, which they did accordingly, committing unheard-of cruelties, and carrying off a great number of captives ^z. Leo was no sooner informed of these ravages, than he dispatched one Philarchus to acquaint Genferic, that, if he did not forbear such acts of hostility, he should be obliged to make war upon him, and repel force with force. But Genferic, despising his menaces, answered, that, if Leo thought fit to make war upon him, he should not find him unprepared; and soon after to bid him in a manner, defiance, he sent his fleet to ravage anew the coasts of Greece, and the other maritime provinces of the eastern empire; nay, a report was spread in Constantinople, that his fleet had appeared before the city of Alexandria, which greatly alarmed the emperor, and the whole court. But we are told, that the famous anchoret Daniel Stylita, to whom the emperor had recourse, removed their fears, by assuring them, that the design of the barbarians would prove abortive; and that they would soon return to Africa, without being able to make

And likewise Peloponnesus, and the Greek islands.

^w Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 274.

^x Prisc. p. 43.

^y Idem ibid.

^z Chron. Alex. p. 478. Procop. ibid. l. i. c. 6. p. 191.

make themselves masters of Alexandria, or any other place. As he foretold, so it happened ; for the barbarians, after several unsuccessful attempts on Alexandria, and some other places, returned home, without either captives or booty ^a.

THE following year 468, Leo, resolving, at all events, ^{Leo makes} to revenge the affront offered by Genseric to the eastern ^{vast prepara-} empire, made vast preparations for carrying the war over ^{tions, with} into Africa. Procopius writes, that on this occasion he ^{a design to} spent an hundred and thirty thousand pounds weight of ^{invade Afri-} gold ^{ca.} ^b. Candidus, as quoted by Suidas, tells us, that the prefects contributed forty-seven thousand pounds weight of gold towards defraying the charges of this war ; the prince seventeen thousand of gold, and seventy thousand of silver, out of his privy purse ; that the money arising from the sale of confiscated estates, was employed in buying up provisions, purchasing ships, hiring troops, &c. and that Anthemius, emperor of the west, assisted Leo to the utmost of his power both with men and money ^c. Cedrenus computes the charges of this war in a manner, that to us seems quite unintelligible ^d. Leo, says Procopius, assembled all the ships that were found in the seas and ports of his empire ^e, which, according to Theophanes, amounted to one hundred thousand ^f. But that writer confounded perhaps the number of the ships with that of the men, who, according to Procopius ^g, did not exceed that number. Nicephorus supposes, with Theophanes, the fleet to have consisted of an hundred thousand sail ; but, speaking of the rowers, he makes them to amount to no more than seven thousand ^h ; a mistake altogether unpardonable. Procopius only says, that Leo fitted out the greatest fleet the Romans had ever had ⁱ ; and Cedrenus, that the number of the ships amounted to one thousand one hundred and thirteen, each ship having an hundred men on board ^k. In this enterprize were employed the best troops of both empires ; for not only Anthemius sent very considerable supplies both of men and ships ^l, but likewise Marcellinus, who had established a new sovereignty in Dalmatia, as we have related related elsewhere ^m; nay, that prince commanded in person, not only his own troops, but those likewise that were sent by Anthemius emperor of the west ⁿ. The fame of these warlike preparations struck the whole world, says Constantine Manasses ^o, with terror and amazement: nothing, continues he, seemed capable of defeating so numerous an army, so powerful a fleet, except gold, which no power can resist. But as the time appointed by Providence for punishing the Vandals was not yet come, Heaven suffered Leo to commit the whole management of this war to Basiliscus, brother to his wife Verina. Basiliscus had gained great advantages over the barbarians in Thrace, where he had commanded as general of that province; so that, as to his military capacity, he seemed sufficiently qualified for so great a command, the more as he had under him one John, a person of extraordinary courage, and experience in war ^p. But, on the other hand, Basiliscus was actuated by two very dangerous passions, viz. avarice and ambition. The latter even prompted him to aspire at the sovereignty, which he hoped to attain by means of Aspar, who governed under Leo with almost an absolute sway; but, as he professed the doctrine of Arius, he was himself, on account of his religion, excluded from the imperial dignity. He had lately quarrelled with Leo, and therefore fearing, lest that prince, if he got the better of the Vandals, should, by his victory, be enabled to reduce his power, and punish him, as he well deserved, for his arrogance, he is supposed to have entered into a private treaty with Basiliscus, promising to raise him to the throne, provided he spared Genferic, for whom he might likewise have some regard, as for one who professed the same tenets with himself ^q. The island of Sicily was appointed the place of the general rendezvous ^r. From thence Marcellinus was to sail for Sardinia, which the Vandals had lately seized; Heraclius of Edessa, a brave and experienced officer, for Libya; and Basiliscus, with the greatest part of the fleet, and the flower of the troops, to steer his course strait to Carthage ^s. Pursuant to this plan, Marcellinus landed in Sardinia, and made himself master of that island, while

O 3

^a Theoph. p. 99. ^b Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 6. p. 191. ^c Suid. p. 1126. ^d Cedren. p. 350. ^e Procop. ibid. ^f Theoph. p. 99. ^g Procop. ibid. ^h Niceph. p. 631. ⁱ Procop. ibid. p. 192. ^k Cedren. p. 350. ^l Sid. car. ii. ver. 540.

Sardinia and Tripoli recovered from the Vandals.

^m Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 271.

ⁿ Sid. ibid.

^o Const. Manass. in breviar. p. 59, 60.

^p Procop.

l. i. p. 191. & 193. Theoph. p. 99.

^q Procop. ibid.

Theoph. p. 100. Theodoret. lect. p. 555. ^r Phot. c. 242. p. 1041.

^s Theoph. p. 101.

while Heraclius, with the troops quartered in Egypt, in Thebais, and Cyrenaica, landing unexpectedly in the province Tripolitana, reduced Tripolis, and the other cities in that country. From thence he began his march by land, with a design to join Basiliscus at Carthage^t. That commander, sailing from Sicily, arrived with his fleet at cape Mercury, but fourteen leagues from Carthage, soon after Genseric had received the disagreeable news of the loss of Sardinia and Libya. The arrival of so formidable a fleet, and the losses he had already sustained, struck him, tho' a man of great intrepidity, with such terror, that, looking upon himself as irretrievably lost, he is said to have had some thoughts of evacuating Africa, and retiring elsewhere: and truly, if Basiliscus had marched directly to Carthage during the panic which had seized the barbarians, he might, in all likelihood, have made himself master of that city, and put an end to the war at once, by an entire reduction of the country^u. Some authors write, that he had already gained considerable advantages over the fleet of Genseric^w; and Jornandes, that he attacked Carthage several times by sea; but either for want of skill, or because he was willing to favour Genseric, his attacks were not so vigorous as the barbarians expected^x. Hereupon Genseric, recovering from his late consternation, sent deputies to the Roman admiral, begging a truce of five days, to settle with him the conditions, on which he was to submit to Leo^y. Some writers tell us, that with the ambassadors, Genseric sent privately a considerable sum to Basiliscus, hoping to induce him, by that means, to grant him his request; which he did accordingly, continuing in the mean time inactive in his camp^z. Genseric demanded the above-mentioned truce, hoping a favourable wind might spring up during that time for falling upon the Roman fleet; for his men were all on board the ships of war, which were to tow other light and empty vessels. The wind proving as favourable as the Vandals could wish, before the truce was expired, they weighed anchor, and, drawing near to the Roman fleet, set fire to the empty ships,

O 4

The Roman fleet in Africa entirely defeated.

^t Procop. p. 192. Theoph. ibid.
^w Theoph. p. 100. Phot. c. 79. p. 174. Candid. Isaur. p. 18. Year after which being, by the wind, driven upon the Roman fleet, spread to many of their ships, and threw their whole navy into the utmost confusion. While the Romans were thus in disorder, and busied either in keeping off the fire-ships, or extinguishing the flames on board their own, the Vandals, falling upon them, overwhelmed them with showers of darts, took several of their ships, sunk others, and obliged the rest to save themselves in the best manner they could ^a. Several Romans distinguished themselves on this occasion in a most eminent manner; but above all John, whom we have mentioned above, who, finding himself surrounded on all sides by the enemy, attacked them one after another, and killed a great number of them on board their vessels; but, not being able to prevent their boarding his, when he saw himself overpowered, he threw himself, armed as he was, on a plank into the sea. Genfon, the son of Genferic, admiring his courage and gallant behaviour, begged he would not abandon himself to despair, offering him at the same time his life and liberty; but the brave commander answering, John shall never fall into the hands of such dogs, quit-ed his plank, and was drowned ^b. Theophanes writes, that Genferic fell upon the Romans in the night, and that finding them not upon their guard, but asleep, as they depended upon the truce, he easily overcame them ^c. Basiliscus, says Constantine Manasses, was glad to be overcome ^d; and Zonaras writes, that, instead of encouraging his men with his example, he betook himself the first to flight; which gave new vigour to the enemy, and quite disheartened the Romans ^e. Heraclius, who was in full march from Libya to Carthage, upon the news of the bad success of Basiliscus, thought it adviseable to turn back, and hasten into the territories of the empire. Marcellinus returned into Sicily, where he was assassinated by an officer who commanded under him, not without the privity, as was supposed, of Anthemius, to whom his power gave no small umbrage ^f. As for Basiliscus, he returned to Sicily with the few ships that had escaped, and from thence to Constantinople, where, upon his arrival, rival, he took refuge in the church of St. Sophia: But tho' his treachery was publicly known, his life was spared, and leave granted him to retire to Heraclea in Thrace, the empress Verina, his sister, having employed the great interest she had with the emperor in his behalf^g. But Aspar who had promised him the sovereignty, as the reward of his treachery, was so far from being able to perform his promise, that he could not save his own life, being, by Leo's orders, put to death soon after, as we have related at length in our Roman history^h. Such was the issue of this unhappy expedition, which is said to have drained both empires of their wealth, and to have cost them the lives of above fifty thousand menⁱ. Genseric, finding the Romans quite disheartened by the losses they had sustained, resolved not to let slip so favourable an opportunity of extending his conquests. Accordingly, without loss of time, he put to sea, and landing in Sardinia, reduced that island from the Romans. Thence he sailed to Sicily, which he likewise reduced, as he did the three following years all the islands between Italy and Africa^k, the Romans being no-ways in a condition to put a stop to his conquests, and trembling at the very name of Genferic^l. From these islands he sent yearly fleets to ravage the coasts of Italy, of Peloponnesus, and the Greek islands, equally despising both emperors, and bidding defiance to their power. At length, in the year 476, he concluded a peace with Odoacer king of Italy, to whom he yielded the island of Sicily, but upon condition he should hold it of him, and pay him a yearly tribute, for the securing of which he kept the strong castle of Lilybæum^m. The year before, he had concluded a peace with the emperor Zeno, the successor of Leo, who, renouncing all claim to the provinces of Africa, yielded them for ever to Genferic, and his descendents. The person employed by Zeno on this occasion was one Severus, a senator of an unblemished character, and highly esteemed on account of his disinterestedness, candor, and integrity. He was received by Genferic with all possible marks of honour and esteem, that prince, who was stricken in years, being desirous to put an end to the war by a lasting peace, that Genferic reduces Sicily, Sardinia, &c.
^x Jorn. p. 654. ^y Procop. ibid. ^z Jorn. reg. p. 654. Christ 468.
 Procop. ibid.

^a Procop. p. 192—194. ^b Procop. p. 192. ^c Theoph. p. 100. ^d Const. Manass. p. 60 ^e Zonar. p. 42. ^f Marc. chron. Procop. l. i. c. vi. p. 193.

Concludes a peace with Zeno, who renounces all claim to Africa.

Year after Christ, 475.

his

^g Procop. ibid:
ⁱ Theoph. p. 100.
Vit. l. i. p. 5.

^h Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 278.
^k Procop. l. ii. c. 5. p. 341.
^m Vict. Vit. & Procop. ibid:

^l Vict.

his son Hunneric might quietly enjoy the kingdom he had founded. After the conclusion of the peace upon the terms we have mentioned above, Genferic, greatly taken with the frugal life and modesty of the Roman embassador, sent him a considerable sum of money, and very rich presents ; which he refused, saying, that the only present worthy of a Roman embassador, would be the delivery of the many Romans, who were held in captivity. Genferic was so pleased with this answer, that he immediately sent for Severus, and told him, that all the Roman captives, who had fallen to his share, and to the share of his children, were free, and at his disposal ; and gave him at the same time leave to ransom such as had been divided among the soldiers and officers of his army, provided he could prevail upon them to part with them, it not being in his power to force them to it. Severus, having thus obtained without ransom the liberty of all the Roman captives belonging to the king and the royal family, sold publicly by auction all his plate and furniture, and, with the money accruing from thence, redeemed many othersⁿ. Severus prevailed likewise on Genferic to suffer the church of the catholics at Carthage to be opened, and to recal the ecclesiastics belonging to it, whom he had banished some time before^o. Genferic died soon after ; but the peace was religiously observed by his successors till the reign of Justinian, who, espousing the cause of Hilderic against his brother Gilimer, who had usurped the crown, drove the Vandals out of Africa, and reunited those provinces to the empire. But as by this peace the dominion of the Vandals was firmly established in Africa, the Romans renouncing all claim to that province, we shall pursuant to our plan, reserve a farther account of their affairs to a more proper place, and in the mean time deliver what we have found in the antients concerning the Sueves, from the earliest account of time till their settling in Spain.

ⁿ Malc. p. 87. Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 7. p. 195. • Vict. Vitenf. l. i. p. 16.

S E C T. IV.

The antient state, &c. of the Sueves, till their settling in Spain.

TH E Sueves were, in Cæsar's time, the greatest and most warlike nation of all Germany ^{p.} Tacitus divides them into several tribes or nations, known by different names, comprehending, under the common name of Sueves, the following people, viz. the Longobardi, the Semnones, the Rhudingi, the Aviones, the Angli ^{q.} Ptolemy mentions only three nations of the Sueves, viz. the Suevi Longobardi, the Suevi Samnones, and the Suevi Angili, whom Tacitus, and other writers, call Angli. Some writers will have the Vandals and Sueves to be one and the same people, called Vandals from the word Wandrende, and Sueves from the word Schwacbende, both which signify wanderers; for Strabo tells us, that the Sueves often changed their seats, wandering from place to place ^{r.} In the time of the emperor Nero, they dwelt between the Rhine and the Elbe; for Strabo, who flourished under that prince, speaks of them thus: the Sueves are a great and powerful people; for their country extends from the Rhine to the Elbe, nay, some of that nation dwell beyond the Elbe. Some years after, that is, in the time of Tacitus the historian, they were seated between the Elbe and the Vistula or Weisser; for there they are placed by that writer ^{s.} From them the Suevus, now the Oder, took its name; and the Baltick was called the Suevian sea. Solinus is of opinion, that they were called Suevi from mount Suevio, parting Germany from Sarmatia. As to their origin, nothing has been alledged by authors but what is very uncertain, and no-ways to be depended upon, some deriving their origin from Scandinavia, some from Hungary, and some endeavouring, with several arguments, and monuments of antiquity, to convince us, that they were originally a German nation ^{t.} Some writers tell us, they came out

The name, seats, origin, &c. of the Sueves.

^p Cæsar bell. Gall. l. i. ^q Tacit. de mor. Ger. c. 38.
^r Strabo, l. vii. ^s Tacit. ibid. ^t Vide Rudbeck. Atlant. par. i. c. 24. Grot. in proleg. Prætorium in orb. Goth. l. iii. c. 1. Pastorium in hist. Polon. c. 7.

out of Scandinavia, and settled on the banks of the Albis or the Elbe; that they were there subdued by the Saxons, and thence blended under their name, as were all the other nations conquered by that people. However, the Sueves retained at the same time their own name; and hence the Angli, who were, as we have hinted above, a Suevian nation, are sometimes called Saxones Angli. Cifnerus supposes these to be two different nations^u; but his opinion is plainly confuted by the learned Sheringham^w. The Sueves were a warlike nation, and, as such, are commended both by Cæsar and Tacitus, of whom the former often confounds them with the Catti, as after him does Strabo^x, and likewise Seneca the tragic writer^y; for, by these writers, they are placed in the Hercynian forest, which was, beyond dispute, inhabited by the Catti or Chatti. The Sueves had kings of their own, and seem to have agreed in customs and manners with the other German nations. But of their affairs we know very little till the Romans became acquainted with them, which happened in the year of Rome 742, the twenty-second of Augustus's reign, and about eight years before the birth of our Saviour, when Drusus, the son of Livia, and brother to Tiberius, passing the Rhine, entered Germany, and, in three campaigns, reduced all the nations between that river and the Elbe^z, and among the rest the Sueves. But that young prince dying on his return to Rome, the nations he had subdued threw off the yoke; which obliged Augustus to dispatch Tiberius against them, who over-ran great part of Germany, and forced the barbarians to send deputies to Augustus, suing for peace; but the emperor would not even hear them, because the Sicambrians, one of the most warlike nations among them, had not sent their deputies with those of the other barbarians. The war was therefore continued, till the Sicambrians, no longer able to hold out, submitted to such conditions as Augustus thought fit to impose upon them, as did likewise the Sueves, the allies and confederates of the Sicambrians^a. The Sicambrians and Sueves

The Sicambrians and Sueves submit to Tiberius.
Year before Christ 8.

hav-

^u Cifner in præfat. ad Kranz. p. 3. ^w Shering. de Anglor. gent. orig. c. 2. ^x Strabo, l. iv. p. 134. ^y Senec. in Medea, v. 713. ^z Tacit. annal. ii. c. 41. p. 53. Suet. l. iii. c. 50. p. 386. Vell. l. ii. Dio, l. lv. p. 548. ^a Suet. l. ii. c. 21. p. 178.

having thus submitted, Tiberius, pursuant to the instructions he had received from Augustus, obliged forty thousand of them to pass the Rhine, and settle in Gaul^b. Suetonius tells us, that seats were allotted to them on the banks of that river^c; but Suetonius, says Bucherius, was therein perhaps mistaken, it being probable, that they were placed at a considerable distance from the Rhine, to prevent their passing that river, and joining the other German nations; nay, that author endeavours to prove from several antient monuments, which are still extant, that the country about Courtray was antiently inhabited by the Sueves^d. Some are of opinion, that from these Sueves sprung the Burgundians, so called from the boroughs, in Latin burgi, in which they were placed by the Romans; but this opinion is generally exploded. There are no traces remaining, whence we can conjecture what country was allotted to the Sicambrians^e. Though some of that people remained beyond the Rhine, yet, in the space of about sixty years, the whole nation was extinct^f. Of them therefore is to be understood what we read in Dion, viz. that Augustus having distributed into several villages the Germans he had taken in war, they were so grieved thereat, that they destroyed themselves with their own hands, especially the persons of distinction among them, who were very numerous^g. Mention is made of the Sicambrians after this time; but it is commonly thought, that the name of Sicambrians was given to the neighbouring nations, who settled in their country^h, that is, in the southern parts of Westphalia. Augustus thus obliged part of the Sicambrians and Sueves to quit their own country, in order to weaken them, having found by experience, that he could neither depend upon their word nor their hostagesⁱ.

IN the reign of Tiberius, the Sueves, quarrelling among themselves, which was chiefly owing to his intrigues, drove out Marobodes their king, a prince greatly dreaded by the Romans, and chose Catualdes in his room, who, at the instigation of Tiberius, had stirred up the Sueves against him. Marobodes took refuge in the Roman dominions,

They drive out their king Marobodes.

^b Suet. p. 178. Strabo, l. vii. p. 290.

9. p. 336.

p. 49.

p. 552.

^d Buch. l. i. c. 20. p. 49, 50.

^f Tacit. ann. xii. c. 39. p. 181.

^h Buch. ibid.

^c Suet. l. iii. c.

^e Idem,

^g Dio, l. lv.

ⁱ Strabo, l. vii. p. 91.

Some Sueves allowed to settle beyond the Danube.
Year after
Christ 19.

nions, and was allowed by Tiberius to settle at Ravenna, where he passed the last eighteen years of his life. Catualdes himself was soon after driven from the throne, and obliged to take refuge in the city of Frejus. As both princes came attended by great numbers of Sueves, their friends and adherents, Tiberius, apprehending they might disturb the peace of the empire, allotted them lands beyond the Danube, and appointed a Quadian, by name Vannius, to reign over them. Vannius governed them for the space of thirty years, that is, to the year 50, of the christian æra, the tenth of the emperor Claudius, when being in the end become obnoxious to the nation, on account of his haughty and imperious conduct, he was by them, with the assistance of their neighbours the Hermundurians and Lygians, deposed and banished^k. Claudius refused to assist him; but nevertheless allowed him to retire into Pannonia, and even gave him and his followers lands in that province^l. Vangio and Sido, nephews to Vannius by his sister, but his declared enemies, divided his dominions between them, and continued ever faithful to the Romans^m. Sido, and Italicus, who had succeeded Vangio, joined Vespasian with all their forces against Vitellius, and on that occasion commanded their troops in personⁿ. In the year 83, a colony of Sueves was settled in Frisia; for Tacitus, in the life of Agricola, tells us, that some Germans in the Roman service, and quatered in Britain, having killed their officers, and made their escape, were driven ashore on the coast of Germany, and there taken and sold for slaves by the Sueves and Frisians, who believed them pirates^o. How, or on what occasion, the Sueves came to settle there, we are no-where told. In the year 85, the Sueves, and their allies the Lygians, being greatly harassed by the neighbouring nations, sent deputies to Domitian, earnestly entreating him to assist them in their distress. Domitian dismissed the ambassadors with a favourable answer, but sent them only one hundred horsemen; which so provoked the Sueves, that, joining the Iazyges, a Sarmatic nation, they resolved to pass the Danube, and, by laying waste the Roman territories, revenge the affront that had been offered them; for they thought themselves

^k TACIT. annal. ii. c. 62, 63. p. 61, 62. & annal. xii. c. 20. p. 180. ^l Idem, ann. xii. c. 29, 30. p. 180. ^m Idem. ⁿ Idem. n. ibid. l. iii. c. 7, 21. p. 63, 67. ^o TACIT. vit. Agric. c. 28. p. 147.

selves affronted and derided by the emperor ^p. What happened after, our historian has not thought fit to tell us ; but Tacitus, in one place ^q, writes, that the Sarmatians and Suevians rose in arms against the empire : and in another ^r, that, soon after Agricola was returned to Rome, that is, in 85, the Roman armies were defeated in Pannonia. The Sue- ^{They defeat} ves, of whom Dion speaks here, were, without all doubt, ^{the Romans} those to whom Tiberius had allotted lands beyond the Da- ^{in Pannonia.} nube, as we have related above. That writer places them, ^{Year after} and likewise the Lygians, in Mœsia, giving to that province ^{Christ 85.}
a far greater extent than other historians and geographers have done ; for, even according to him, these people dwelt beyond the Danube, which was, according to all other writers, the boundary of Mœsia to the north, that province extending along the south side of the Danube, from the confluence of that river, and the Saw or Savo, at Belgrade, to the Euxine sea ^s. We find no farther mention of the Sueves till the year 168, when, joining the Marcomans, and other German nations, they laid waste several provinces, defeated great armies, and threatened the empire with utter destruction. But of this war, which is compared, by the antients, to the Punic and Cimbrian wars, we have spoken at length in our Roman history ^t, to which we refer the reader. In 268, the first of Claudius's reign, the Sueves, entering into an alliance with other German nations, broke into Italy, and advanced as far as the lake Benacus, now lago di Garda, in the neighbourhood of Verona ; but were there utterly defeated by the emperor, and most of them cut in pieces ^u. This, perhaps, is the victory of which Vopiscus speaks, where he tells us, that, in the reign of Claudius, Aurelian fought a great battle with the Sueves, and gained a signal victory over them ^w. In 357, the twenty-first of Constantius's reign, the Sueves broke into Rhætia, the Quadians into Valeria, and the Sarmatians into Lower Pannonia and Upper Mœsia, which obliged the emperor, who was then at Rome, to quit that metropolis, and march against them ^x. But as he returned soon after to Italy, and no mention is made of any engagement, we may conclude from thence that at his approach the barbarians withdrew, and retired

^p Dio, l. lxxvii. p. 761.

^{vit.} Agric. c. 41. p. 151.

^{vers.} hist. vol. xv. p. 12—17.

118.

^w Vit. Aur. ibid.

^q Tacit. l. i. c. 2. p. 4.

^s Vide Plin. l. iii. c. 26.

^u Aur. vit. p. 213. & Goltz, p.

^x Ammian, l. xvi. p. 72.

^r Idem,

^t Uni-

They enter Gaul, and thence pass into Spain.

Which they divide with the Vandals and Alans.
Year after
Christ 411.

retired to their respective countries. The poet Claudian, in his poem against Eutropius, tells us, that when news was brought to Honorius of that minister's promotion to the consulship, the prince was then busied; with Stilicho, in receiving the submissions of the Alemans, the Sicambrians, and the Sueves; in giving them kings, and settling the number of troops which they were to furnish^y. This is supposed to have happened about the year 398, but as these nations are not said, by any historian, to have submitted to Honorius, we are inclined to believe these pretended submissions to be only a poetical fiction. In the year 406, they entered Gaul with the Alans and Vandals, and from thence passed into Spain in 409, as we have related above. They continued ravaging that country, putting all to fire and sword, till the year 411, when the Romans being quite driven out, they made peace with the natives, and divided the Spanish provinces, by lot, among them. In this division, Galicia fell to the Vandals and Sueves; but the inhabitants of that province, refusing to submit to the barbarians, stood up in defence of their liberties, and formed a separate state in a corner of their antient country, where they were often attacked by the Sueves, under the conduct of Emeric or Emeric, their king. But that prince, being seized with a lingering distemper, suffered them to live in peace the seven last years of his reign^z. About three years after the Sueves, Vandals, and Alans, had divided the Spanish provinces among them, Ataulphus, king of the Visigoths, quitting Gaul, settled in Catalonia, where he was murdered the same year, as was likewise his successor Sigeric, after a short reign of seven days, as we have related above. But Vallia, who succeeded Sigeric, having concluded a peace with the Romans, fell upon the Sueves, Vandals, and Alans in Spain, gained several advantages over them, and cut off such numbers of the Alans, that the few, who escaped the general slaughter, were obliged to submit to Gonderic, king of the Vandals. The Sueves likewise sustained great losses in this war; but nevertheless maintained, against the utmost efforts of the Goths, that part of Galicia, which, in the division of the provinces, had fallen to their share. The Goths returning soon after, that

^y Claud. in Eutrop. l. ii. p. 111. & l. i. p. 102.
l. iii. c. 23. p. 163. & l. vii. c. 41. p. 223. Idat. chron.

^z Oros]

that is, in 418, to Gaul, where Constans had bestowed on them Aquitania Secunda, the Vandals and Sueves began to quarrel among themselves; for, the year after the departure of the Goths, we find the Sueves, with their king Emeric, shut up by Gonderic, king of the Vandals, among the mountains of Biscay. But Asterius, count of Spain, and Maurocelus, vicar to the præfectus prætorio, falling unexpectedly upon the Vandals, obliged them to leave the Sueves, and retire out of Galicia into Bætica^a.

Upon their retreat, the Sueves made themselves masters of that part of Galicia which had been held by them. In the year 430, a body of Sueves attempted to cross the Rhine, with a design to enter Gaul, and from thence to pass into Spain, and join their countrymen settled in Galicia; but Aetius, who was then in Gaul, falling upon them, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to return to their own country, between the Elbe and Weisfel^b. Of this victory Jornandes speaks without all doubt, where he tells us, that Aetius overcame the Sueves, made a dreadful havock of that nation, and subjected them to the empire^c. At the same time he defeated, with great slaughter, the Juthongians, whose country bordered on Rhoetia, and the Norici, who were subjects of the empire, but had revolted, and joined the Sueves and Juthongians^d.

The Sueves
in Germany defeated by Aetius.
Year after
Christ 430.

IN Spain the Sueves made their utmost efforts to reduce the inhabitants of Galicia; but that brave people still maintained themselves free, defending their strong holds, against the repeated attacks of the barbarians, with such resolution, that Emeric thought it adviseable to conclude a peace with them, that his people, who began to be greatly distressed for want of corn, might apply themselves to the tilling of the land, and other works of agriculture. This peace, however, was but short-lived; for, the following year 431, the Sueves began hostilities anew, and, breaking into the territories of the natives, committed there dreadful ravages, destroying all with fire and sword. Hereupon the unhappy Galicians dispatched Idatius the chronologer, their bishop into Gaul, to acquaint Aetius with the deplorable

The Sueves
in Spain make war upon the natives of Galicia.

^a Idat. chron. Greg. Tur. hist. Fran. l. ii. c. 9. p. 63.
^b Sid. p. 131. ^c Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 34. p. 660. ^d Tiro Prosp. chron.

rable condition to which they were reduced ; and to entreat him to send what troops he could spare to their assistance. Aetius, who was then at war with the Franks, not being able to afford them the least aid, sent count Cenforius into Spain, with the character of ambassador, to Emeric, hoping to induce him, by that means, to conclude a peace with the natives. Emeric received the Roman ambassador with the greatest marks of honour, and, at his request, began to treat with the Galicians ; but the treaty was soon broken off, and hostilities renewed, which continued till the year 437, when Cenforius was sent again to the court of Emeric, with one Fretimund, to bring about an accommodation between that prince and the Galicians ; which they did in the end, Emeric being seized with a lingering distemper, and thereby rendered incapable of bearing the toils of war^e. A peace being thus concluded, Emeric resigned the crown to his son Rechila, after he had reigned twenty-eight years, reckoning from the year 409, when the Sueves first entered Spain under his conduct. He lived four years after his resignation quite retired, without ever concerning himself with public affairs^f. Rechila signalized the beginning of his reign, says Idatius, with a victory gained in Boetica over one Andevotus, whose rich treasures he pillaged^g ; but who this Andevotus was, we are no-where told. In the year 439, Rechila, entering Lusitania, made himself master of Merida, the capital of that province^h ; and, pursuing his conquests, reduced, the two following years, the city of Seville, and the two provinces of Boetica, and Cartagena. Hereupon the Romans, who had anew taken possession of Boetica, upon the departure of the Vandals dispatched into Spain one Astierus, to drive them out of the provinces they had seized. Astierus fell upon the Bagaudæ, who had lately settled in the province of Tarraco, and, cutting most of them in pieces, recovered that countryⁱ ; but we do not find, that he attempted any thing against the Sueves. Not long after, Vitas, who commanded a considerable body of Roman troops in Spain, with the title of magister militiæ, entering the provinces of Boetica and Cartagena, committed there great ravages ; but a body of Goths, who came to his assistance being defeated by Rechila, both he and his army were seized with such a panic, that,

Rechila,
 king of the Sueves, makes himself master of Merida, Seville, and the provinces of Bæti-ca and Cartagena.
 Year after
 Christ 441.

^e Idat. p. 21.

^h Idem, p. 22.

^f Idem, p. 25.

ⁱ Idem, p. 23.

^g Idem ibid.

that, betaking themselves to a shameful flight, they left the Sueves at full liberty to pillage the country at their pleasure, and reduce several strong-holds, that, till then, had been held by the Romans^k. Two years after, that is, in 447, died Rechila, and was succeeded by his son Rechiarus, who took the royal ensigns at Merida, in the month of August of the present year, notwithstanding the opposition he met with from some of his own nation^l. He professed the catholic faith; but began his reign by plundering his neighbours lands^m. The following year, he married the daughter of Theodoric, king of the Goths in Languedoc, and, immediately after his marriage, entering the territories of the Gascons, who were still in Spain, says father Labbé in his chronology, laid them waste far and nearⁿ. From thence he went to pay a visit to his father-in-law at Thoulouse, and, on his return to Spain, surprised the city of Lerida, whence he carried with him a great number of captives. He afterwards pillaged the territory of Saragosa^o, which, according to Isidorus, in his chronology of the Sueves, belonged to the Romans^p. The same writer adds, that in this expedition Rechiarius had with him a body of Goths; and that he likewise laid waste the province of Cartagena, which Rechila, says he, had restored to the Romans^q. In the year 452, the twenty-seventh of the reign of Valentinian III. Mansuetus, count of Spain, and count Fronto, were sent, by the emperor, to Rechiarius, with proposals for an accommodation between him, and the natives of Spain who still continued subject to the Romans. Rechiarius not only received the Roman ambassadors with the greatest marks of esteem, but concluded a peace upon the terms which the emperor had enjoined them to propose. What these terms were, we are no-where told; but they are said, by Idatius, to have been very advantageous to the empire^r. The peace thus concluded, was religiously observed by Rechiarius till the death of Valentinian in 455, when, taking advantage of the general confusion occasioned by the murder of that prince, and likewise of his successor Maximus, he over-ran and pillaged the province of Cartagena, with a design, says Jornandes, to make himself master of all the countries that were still held Rechila succeeded by his son Rechiarius.

Year arr. Christ, 447.

Rechiarius concludes a peace with the Romans.

P 2

in ^k Idat. p. 24.

^l Idem, p. 25.

^m Idem, p. 26.

ⁿ Idem ibid.

^o Idem ibid.

^p Isidor. chron.

^q Idem

ibid,

^r Idat. p. 29.

Theodoric,
king of the Visigoths,
espouses the cause of the Romans against him.

in Spain by the Romans^s. Hereupon Avitus, who had succeeded Maximus, dispatched count Fronto into Spain to put the king of the Sueves in mind of the treaty he had concluded with Valentinian. At the same time, Theodoric, king of the Visigoths, who had espoused the interest of Avitus, dispatched ambassadors to Rechiarius his son-in-law, earnestly intreating him not to seize on the countries belonging to the empire; lest he too should be obliged to treat him as an enemy, and join the emperor, whom he was bound to support against him^t. What answer Rechiarius returned to the ambassadors, our historian does not inform us: he only tells us, that he had no sooner dismissed them, than, breaking into the province of Tarraco, which belonged to the Romans, he laid it waste, without the least regard either to treaties or justice^u. Hereupon Theodoric sent him a second embassy, to which he answered, with great haughtiness, that if Theodoric found fault with his conduct, he was ready to give him an account of it at Thoulouse. Theodoric, piqued at this answer, began to prepare for war; and, having first concluded a peace with the neighbouring nations, he set out, with the consent and approbation of Avitus, for Spain, leading with him a very numerous army, consisting of his own people, and a body of auxiliary Burgundians, commanded by Gondiac and Hilperic, or Chilperic, the son, as is supposed, of Gundicarius, king of that people, who was killed about the year 436^w. Rechiarius was in the mean time busied in ravaging anew the province of Tarraco, whence he carried with him a considerable booty, and a great number of captives^x. But hearing that Theodoric was marching against him, he went to meet him at the head of a powerful army. Hereupon an engagement ensued, on the banks of the Urbicus, now Orbegua, at a place about twelve miles from Astorga. Both armies engaged with great resolution and intrepidity; but in the end the Sueves were utterly defeated, and put to flight. Rechiarius, who was dangerously wounded, with much ado made his escape, and took refuge in a distant corner of Galicia. The battle was fought on a Friday, the fifth of October; and,

Rechiarius utterly defeated, taken, and put to death by Theodoric.

^s Jorn. p. 675. Idat. p. 30.

^t Jorn. ibid.

^u Idat.

p. 32.

^w Idem ibid. Isidor. chron. Jorn. p. 676

^x Idat. p. 33.

and Theodoric, pursuing the enemy, entered Braga on a Sunday, the twenty-eighth of the same month. and gave it up to be plundered by his soldiers^y. From Braga he advanced to a place called Portucal, whither the fugitive king had retired. Jornandes writes, that Rechiarius attempted to make his escape by sea, but was driven back by a storm^z. Be that as it will, all authors agree, that he was taken and delivered up to Theodoric, by whose orders he was put to death, after he had been kept, some time in prison^a. The Sueves, disheartened by the captivity of their king, submitted to the Goths, by whom great numbers of them were put to the sword, tho' Theodoric had ordered their lives to be spared^b. Theodoric appointed one of his officers, named Aquilphus, to govern the Sueves who had submitted to him. But he, revolting from Theodoric, caused himself to be proclaimed king of the Sueves; which obliged Theodoric to send a powerful army against him, by whom he was defeated, taken prisoner, and by Theodoric's orders, soon after beheaded^c. Thus Jornandes; but Idatius only says, that he died the following year at Porto^d. The Sueves, who, refusing to submit to the Goths, had retired to the most distant corner of Galicia, no sooner heard, that Rechiarius was dead, than scorning to live in subjection either to the Goths, or the treacherous Aquilphus, they chose one Maldra, the son of Maffilel, in his room^e. Maldra chosen king in his room. Year after Christ 456.

Theodoric king of the Visigoths, after the above-mentioned victory over the Sueves, had marched from Galicia into Lusitania, and there after reducing several other cities, had laid siege to Merida, the metropolis of the province, which, in the end was obliged to surrender. The king designed at first to give up the city to be plundered by his soldiers; but St. Eulalia, a famous martyr of that place, is said to have deterred him, by some prodigies, from putting his design in execution^f. Being soon after obliged to return to Gaul, he left behind him part of his troops, consisting of different nations, and commanded by several generals, with orders to march into Galicia, and there reduce such of the Sueves, as had not yet submitted to him.

P 3

But

^y Jorn. ibid. Isidor. chron. Idat. ibid. ^z Jorn ibid.
^a Isidor. chron. Idat. p. 34. ^b Jorn. ibid. ^c Jorn.
p. 677. ^d Idat. p. 37. ^e Idem, p. 34. ^f Idem,
p. 35. Cusp- p. 451.

The Sueves quarrel among themselves.

They make themselves masters of Lisbon.

But these troops, after having committed dreadful ravage in the countries belonging to the Romans, were recalled by Theodoric, who had occasion to employ them elsewhere, before they began to act against the Sueves. That people, having now nothing to apprehend from so formidable an enemy, began to quarrel among themselves, some of them continuing faithful to Maldra, whom they had lately chosen, and others setting up against him one named Franton. Being thus divided among themselves, they made peace with the Galicians, or the natives of that province, who still held several strong-holds, and maintained themselves a free people among the mountains, and in some of the fortified towns^g. These are, by most authors, styled Romans, because they still acknowledge the Roman emperor, and looked upon themselves as subjects of the empire. Notwithstanding the peace concluded between them and the Sueves, the partisans of Maldra, breaking unexpectedly into Lusitania, pillaged the country, and put to the sword a great number of Romans, under pretence of making war on the Goths. Being received into Lisbon as friends, they made themselves masters of the city, and kept it^h. Soon after, that is, in 458, Franton dying, the whole nation of the Sueves acknowledged Maldra for their king, by whose orders they laid waste that part of Galicia, which lay on the Douro, without the least regard to the treaty of peace concluded the year beforeⁱ. About this time Theodoric sent an army into Spain against the Sueves, under the conduct of Cyrila, who, entering Boetica, which belonged to the Romans, committed there the same disorders, as the Sueves did in Galicia, without offering to molest those against whom they were said to have been sent. At the same time ambassadors were sent to the Sueves, both by Theodoric, king of the Visigoths, and by Genseric king of the Vandals in Africa, probably to conclude not only a peace but an alliance with them against the emperor Majorianus, whose great parts, and military genius, gave them no small umbrage. The peace however was not concluded ; for the following year 459, Theodoric, having recalled Cyrila, and the army commanded by him, sent one Sunierac with another army in his room ; which did not prevent the Sueves from pillaging Lusitania under the conduct of Maldra, and Galicia under that of his son Remif-

^g Idat chron.
chron. p. 5.

^h Idat. p. 37.

ⁱ Idem ibid. Isidor.

Remismund ^k, by Jornandes called Richmund. Some writers speak of a battle fought this year between the Sueves and Galicians, in which the latter lost many persons of distinction ^l. The same year 459, Maldra killed, upon what provocation we are not told, his brother, whose name has not been transmitted to us. Soon after this murder, he surprised the strong castle of Portucal, which was held by the natives. But he was soon overtaken by the doom his treachery and barbarity well deserved, being killed, by whom our historian does not tell us, in the end of February of the following year 460 ^m. Upon his death his son Remismund and Frumarius divided his troops between them. Frumarius was likewise, as we may suppose, the son of Maldra, and brother of Remismund; for he not only had part of the troops, but shared with Remismund the dominions of the deceased prince. In the first year of their reign, the Sueves of Lugo in Galicia, falling treacherously upon the Romans, who lived in that city, on Easter-day, which, in 460, fell on the twenty-seventh of March, cut great numbers of them in pieces, as they were not upon their guard, thinking themselves sufficiently protected by the solemnity of a day held by all christians in the greatest veneration ⁿ. Sunieric and Nepotianus, who commanded the troops of Theodoric in Spain, no sooner heard of this outrage, than they detached part of their forces to take vengeance on the traitors. The Goths, entering Galicia, laid waste the territory of Lugo; but a false report being spread among them by Dictines, Spinio, and Ascanius, who were natives of the country, but held a private correspondence with the Sueves, they returned into their own territories, without daring to advance farther into the enemies country ^o. The same year the three above-mentioned persons led a party of the Sueves through by-ways, to surprise the city of Aquæ Flaviæ, where they took Idatius, bishop of the place, prisoner, the twenty-sixth of July, and carried him into captivity, as he himself relates ^p. After this Frumagrus laid waste the territory of Braga, and Remismund, at the same time, that of Orenso, on the Minho in Galicia. But the two princes, growing jealous of each other's power, began to quarrel, which gave the natives some respite; for with them they concluded a peace, that they Maldra killed and succeeded by Remismund and Frumarius.

Year after Christ 460.

They lay waste great part of Spain.

P 4

^k Idat. p. 37. ^l Idat. p. 38. Cusp. p. 451. Isidor.
chron. ^m Idat. & Isidor. chron. ⁿ Idem ibid. ^o Idat.
P. 39. ^p Idem ibid.

Remismund sole king of the Sueves.

they might be more at leisure to watch each other's motions.

This peace was observed for the space of four years, that is, till the year 464, when Frumarius dying, the Sueves were again all reunited under Remismund, who immediately dispatched embassadors to Theodoric, acquainting him with the death of Frumarius, and soliciting him to conclude a peace with the Sueves, which he did accordingly, sending embassadors to Remismund with rich presents, and likewise arms, in token of his sincere friendship, and the confidence he reposed in him. At the same time he sent a young woman of extraordinary beauty, whom he married^a; but who she was our historian does not inform us. Jornandes writes, that Remismund sent the bishops of Galicia to Theodoric, hoping, by their mediation, to obtain a peace; that Theodoric received them with all the respect that was due to their rank and dignity; that he soon after recalled the general and troops he had in Spain; and that Remismund, by a second embassy, returned him

He surprises
Coimbra.

thanks for the peace he had granted him. This peace, however, did not hinder Remismund from surprising, this very year, the city of Coimbra, which was held by the natives, and carrying with him from thence several captives. He did not, it seems, keep this city, for three years after, that is, in 467, he surprised it a new^r. The following year 465, Remismund was prevailed upon by Theodoric to set at liberty the prisoners he had taken at Coimbra, and make peace with the natives^s. But this peace, says Idatius, was attended with a greater and far more dangerous evil than the war itself. Rechiarius, king of the

The Sueves
embrace the tenets of A-rius.

Year after
Christ 465.

Sueves from the year 447, to 456, renouncing paganism, had embraced the catholic faith, and his example had been followed by the whole nation of the Sueves; but at this time they suffered themselves to be infected with the heresy of Arius by one Ajax, a native of Galatia, who abandoning the catholic faith, had been ordained by the Arians. Coming into Gaul, he had staid some time at the court of Theodoric, and had been treated by that prince, who held the tenets of Arius, with great respect. From Gaul he passed into Spain, where he was well received by the Sueves, upon the recommendation of Theodoric. The kind kind reception he met with encouraged him to propagate his errors among the Sueves, and impugn the doctrine of the trinity^t. Isidore writes, that he infected the whole nation with the pestiferous tenets of Arius, and that they continued in their errors during the reigns of several princes till the time of king Theodomir, who, about an hundred years after, brought them back to the true faith^u.

^a Idem ibid

^r Idem ibid, Isid. chron.

^s Idat. p.

In the mean time Theodoric being murdered by his brother Euric, Remismund, thinking himself no longer bound by the treaty of peace, which he had concluded by his mediation with the natives, broke into Lusitania, and, having surpris'd the city of Coimbra, gave it up to be plundered by his soldiers. He likewise ravaged and laid waste the territory of Aunona, belonging to the Galicians; who thereupon sent deputies to Euric king of the Visigoths, begging his mediation and good offices with the king of the Sueves. Accordingly Euric prevailed upon Remismund to grant a peace or truce to the people of Aunona; but, in the mean time, he himself committed dreadful ravages in Lusitania, made himself master of Pampelona and Saragosa, and having overcome and put to flight the nobility of the province of Tarraco, who continued faithful to the Romans, made himself master of all Upper Spain^w. Thus were the inhabitants of Spain, who could not prevail upon themselves to withdraw their obedience to the Romans, and submit to the barbarians, in a most cruel manner plundered and harrassed on one side by the Goths, and on the other by the Sueves, while the Romans were no-ways in a condition to relieve them. Of the calamities they suffered, the reader will find a full and pathetic account in Idatius, who tells us, that the Sueves, when they surpris'd Coimbra, plundered the houses, laid most part of the city in ashes, and carried with them into captivity such of the inhabitants as had not the good luck to make their escape^x. The following year 688, they made themselves masters of Lisbon, which was betrayed to them by one Lufides, who was a native of the place, and commanded in the town. As Lisbon was at that time held by the Goths, the troops of that nation entering Lusitania, committed dreadful ravages on the territories belonging to the Sueves, as did the Sueves on those of the Goths. However, Euric, being wholly bent upon driving the Romans quite out of Spain, with a second time and plunder Coimbra.

They surpris'd

^t Idem ibid.

^u Isidor. chron.

^w Idem ibid. p. 719.

^x Idat. p. 45.

The greater part of Spain reduced by the Visigoths

Galicia yielded to Remismund.

with a design to fall afterwards upon the Sueves, concluded, for the present, a peace with Remismund, and then turning his arms against the Romans, made himself master of all the places, that had been hitherto held by them, as we have related above, in the history of the Visigoths; but he died before he could put in execution the design he had formed against the Sueves. Remismund, finding he could no longer cope with the Visigoths, who were now masters of almost all Spain, retired into Galicia, and there, giving over all thoughts of new conquests, ended his days. His successors followed his example, contenting themselves with the kingdom of Galicia, and observing a strict neutrality in the disputes, that arose between the Visigoths and the Romans. By this means they maintained themselves in the quiet possession of Galicia, till the year 585, when they were subdued by Leunigild or Leovigild king of the Visigoths, and their kingdom reduced to a province of the Gothic monarchy, after it had lasted an hundred and seventy-four, or, as some will have it, an hundred and seventy-seven years. But of these successors of Remismund, to which prince the emperor Anthemius is said to have yielded Galicia, in 468, and of the downfall of their kingdom, we shall speak at length in a more proper place.

S E C T. V.

The antient state of the Franks, till their settling in Gaul.

The origin and name of the Franks.

AS the antients, by whom mention is first made of the Franks, have given us no account of their origin, and Valesius, a most diligent and curious enquirer into the antiquities of his nation, has prudently waved this subject, it cannot be expected we should say any thing relating thereto, that may be depended upon. Of the various opinions, or rather, conjectures, that have been offered on this head by the modern writers, and which it would be too tedious to relate, that of Bucherius seems to us the most probable, viz. that the Franks were originally a motly multitude of several antient nations dwelling beyond the Rhine, who, uniting against the Romans in defence of their common liberty, liberty, stiled themselves Franks, that word signifying, in their language, as it still does in ours, free y. It is certain, that under the name of Franks are comprised in history several nations, whose names were known long before theirs, viz. the Actuarii, Chamavi, Bructeri, Salii, Frisii, Chauci, Amfivarii, and Catti. The Franks are sometimes called Sicambrians, because they inhabited the country, formerly possessed by that nation, of which the far greater part was cut off by Augustus, and the rest transplanted into Gaul, as we have related above. As for the opinion of those writers, who derive the name and origin of the Franks from one Francio, the son of Hector, it is too fabulous to be seriously confuted. No less ridiculous, if we may be allowed to use that term, is the opinion of the abbot Urspurgenfis, and several others, who suppose the name of Franks to have been first given them by the emperor Valentinian. The original of the Franks, says Urspurgenfis, is to be fetched from the antient stock of the Trojans; for at the time that Æneas, after the destruction of Troy, came into Italy, other Trojan exiles arrived in the neighbourhood of the Palus Mæotis, and, settling there, enlarged their bounds as far as Pannonia, and built the city of Sicambria, from which they took the name of Sicambrians. Being in process of time become a powerful and mighty nation, they drove out the Alans their neighbours. Valentinian admiring their courage and intrepidity in war, gave them the name of Franks, and for the space of ten years, exempted them from all tributes and taxes. That time being expired, the emperor sent an officer to raise the usual tribute; but they, shaking off all subjection, slew the officer, and openly declared they would no longer obey the Roman emperors. At that time reigned amongst them two, who bore the antient names of Priamus and Antenor. The emperor, highly incensed against them, ordered all the Roman forces, and a great many auxiliaries, to march into their country. The Franks met them; but, in the battle that ensued, they were overpowered with numbers and put to flight, their king Priam being killed in the engagement. Scorning to live in subjection to the Romans, they abandoned their country, and, retiring into Germany, settled in Thuringia, where they were governed by Marcomicus the son of of Priam, and Sunno the son of Antenor. Thus Urspergensis. And the same account of the origin and name of the Franks is given by Aimonius, Ado archbishop of Vienna, Gaguinus, and Æneas Sylvius; only the latter writer supposes Francio to have been their leader from Troy to the Paulus Mæotis; and Ado brings them from hence, not into Thuringia, but to the countries bordering on the Rhine. This account, of all others the most akin to the idle romances of our Geoffrey of Monmouth, is so far from being vouched by any antient historian, that, on the contrary it evidently contradicts all antient history, in supposing the Franks to have been so called from Valentinian; whereas it is certain, that their name occurs in history at least an hundred years before that emperor's time. Goropius Becanus explodes the opinion of those, who derive the origin of the Franks from the Trojans; but at the same time supposes them to have come from the Palus Mæotis into Germany, without being able to alledge any thing to support his opinion, but a few groundless, not to say childish, conjectures. Bodin will have the Franks to have been descended from the Gauls, who, being encreased to such a degree, that the country was too narrow for them, sent colonies beyond the Rhine into Germany. Some of these colonies settled on the banks of that river, and, in process of time, conquered their antient country. Cæsar indeed tells us, that the Gauls sent colonies into Germany; but upon what authority can we suppose the Franks to have been descended from those Gauls, rather than from some other of the many nations settled in Germany? Upon the whole, we think the opinion of Bucherius, which we have mentioned above, to be by far the most probable; for as we have hinted before, we find several German nations, whose names occur in history many ages before that of the Franks was known, comprised under the general name of Franks; a strong proof, that the Franks were not a new nation come from the Palus Mæotis, or any other country, to settle in Germany, but consisted of several German nations united, as Bucherius conjectures, against the Romans in defence of their common liberty.

By others from the Gauls.

Their seats.

As for the seats of the Franks, it appears from their constant incursions into Gaul, that they dwelt on the banks of the Rhine, in the neighbourhood of Mentz. All historians historians speak of them as placed there, till their settling in Gaul^z. The orator Eumenes, who flourished at Autun, in the end of the third century, distinguishes the country, which the Franks held originally, and he places on the coast of the ocean, from the country which was conquered by the Romans beyond the Rhine, and afterwards seized by the Franks^a. Their country, according to the best modern geographers and historians, was bounded on the north by the ocean; on the west by the ocean and the Rhine; on the south by the Lhone or the Mein; and on the east by the Weser^b: according to which description, they possessed the present countries of Westphalia, Hesse, and some adjacent states. St. Jerom calls them a nation not so great as powerful, and places them between the Saxons and Alemans^c, viz. the Saxons to the east, and the Alemans to the south; for those were properly called Alemans, who dwelt between the Rhine, the Mein, and the Danube. The same writer tells us, that the Saxons received a great overthrow at Deuson, in the country of the Franks^d; which place Pontanus, and most other writers, suppose to be the same, that by later historians, is called Duitsum, and now Duyts, over against Cologne. Pontanus adds, that, in his time, a stone was discovered in a monastery there, with an inscription, importing that fortress to have been placed there in the country of the Franks by the emperor Constantine. Beatus Rhenanus assures us, that he saw at Ausburg, in the custody of Peutinger, a map drawn in the time of the later emperors, wherein the country, from the mouth of the Rhine to Cologne, is marked in capital letters with the word Francia. Aimoinius likewise writes, that Clodio, who succeeded Pharamond, resided at Dyspargum, now Duisburg, at a small distance from the Rhine. Upon the whole, we may conclude, that the Franks possessed the countries we have mentioned above, and that, in process of time, they extended their borders along the Rhine, as far as the mouths of that river, and the ocean. The Franks were antiently divided into several tribes, whereof the Ansuarii and Salii, mentioned by Ammianus, were by far the most considerable. Pontanus supposes

The Ansu-
arian Franks

^z Vide Vales. p. 2. & Coint. 235. ^a Eumen. pan. ix. p. 193. ^b Vales. not. Gall. p. 200. & rer. Franc. p. 209. Buch. p. 306. ^c Hier. vit. Hil. p. 246. ^d Hier. chron. ad ann. 389.

poses the Ansuarii to be the same people with the Anfinarii, of whom mention is made by Tacitus. These, being driven out of their own habitations by the Chauci, seized on the country from which the Frisians had been driven by the command of Nero. Tacitus calls them a more powerful nation than that of the Frisians. Pontanus is of opinion, that they were a nation that wandered from place to place, without any fixed habitation, ready to join any other, as they found their advantage therein ; that, agreeable to this principle, they joined the German nations lying towards the ocean, when, uniting against the Romans, in defence of their common liberty, they took the name of Franks ; that they too were blended under that common appellation, but at the same time retained their antient name, being called Ansuarii, or Anfinarii Franci. This name some derive from the Teutonic word Hance, signifying excellent, free ; whence the free towns of Germany are still called the hance towns. Others, and among the rest Goropius Becanus, will have them called Ansuarii or Anfinarii, from the German word Ansie, signifying society, because they were ready to join any other nation in league and society ; and hence, according to these writers, the free towns of Germany are styled hance towns, they being united in one society, though far separated from one another. As for the Salian Franks, who broke into Taxandria, now Brabant, but were driven out by Julian, as we read in Ammianus ^e, Beatus Rhenanus derives their name from the Sala, which falls into the Mein ; Paulus Æmilius from another river of the same name, that empties itself into the Elb ; Sidonius Apollinaris from the Latin word Salio, as if they had been so called from their leaping and dancing ; and lastly, Pontanus from the river Sala, now the Issel, on the banks of which they dwelt. The latter opinion seems to us by far the most probable, since the other two rivers, bearing the same name, flowed at some distance from the territories of the Franks. As for the derivation of Sidonius, it appears to us quite childish, though perhaps not ill adapted to the present Franks, a leaping and dancing people. As for their manners, Vopiscus paints them as a most treacherous and faithless nation, accustomed to sport with the most solemn oaths and ties, and not deeming it at all dishonourable to break their word ^f. Salvianus, mixing together their good and bad qualities, says, that they were greatly addicted to lying, but civil and kind to strangers.

And Salian
Franks.

The manners of the Franks.

^e Ammian. l. xvi.

^f Vopisc. in Procul. vit. p. 247.

gers §. Procopius, describes them as of all nations the most faithless, and regarding the least their word and oaths ^b. But Agathias, who flourished soon after Procopius, extols them on account of the fidelity, justice, and concord, with which they lived among themselves¹; and St. Bernard, in one of his epistles, tells us, that they observed their oaths with the greatest strictness and religion; insomuch that they thought themselves bound by a public oath, even when it was sinful to take it ^k. This change the French writers ascribe to the christian religion; but whether they may not still be taxed with their original want of faith in the observance of the most solemn oaths and treaties, let the world judge. They seem to have been always troublesome neighbours; whence Egonhardus, chancellor to Charles the Great, used to say, I should chuse a Frank for a friend, but not for a neighbour: and truly, from the earliest accounts we have of that restless and ambitious nation, it appears, that they have ever encroached upon their neighbours, till they attained the power they now enjoy, which, however great, is not capable of satisfying their boundless ambition, and preventing their aspiring at a far greater power and grasping at universal monarchy.

As to their form of government, it was, without all doubt monarchical, tho' authors have given us no account of their first kings. The Franks are first mentioned in history about the year 241, and yet Tyro Prosper tells us, that the most antient king of that nation, whose name occurred to him in searching the records of time, was Priam, who reigned about the year 382^l. After him reigned his two sons Marcomir and Sunno, and at the same time Genobald. Next to them came Theodomir or Theudemir, the son of Ricimer, who was consul in 384. Theodomir was succeeded by Pharamond the son of Marcomir, and grandson of Priam. It is however to be observed here, that as Fredigarius supposes Theodomir to have been the son and immediate successor of Clodio, and ascribes to the former whatever else is by other writers ascribed to the latter, the learned Usher concludes from thence, that Theodomir and Pharamond were one and the same person, and accordingly places the defeat and death of Pharamond in the year 428, when Clodio began his reign, and the Franks were by § Salv. l. vii. p. 172. ^b Procop. bell. Goth. l. ii. c. 25. p. 447.
Aetius

¹ Agath. l. i. p. 13. ^k Bernard. ep. ccxix. p. 203. ^l Vide Coint. p. 417. & Vales. p. 86.

Aetius driven out of that part of Gaul, that bordered on the Rhine, as we read in Prosper. In the reign of Pharamond, or not long before, the Franks, passing the Rhine, which had been the boundary between them and the Romans for the space of near two hundred years, settled in Thongria, that is, in the territory of Tongres, where they were governed by as many kings as they had cities or cantons. These kings were chosen out of the most illustrious families among them, and distinguished from their subjects by the length of their hair^m. But whether Pharamond had any authority over the other princes, or was only a prince more powerful than the rest, is what we cannot gather from history. Bucherius is of opinion, that, in Pharamond's time, Honorius concluded a treaty with them, in virtue of which they were allowed to settle in the country bordering on the Rhine on the side of Cologneⁿ. But what he writes is not vouched by any of the antients. Aetius obliged them, as we have hinted above, to repass the Rhine, having overcome them in battle, and slain their king Theodimir or Pharamond. However, Clodio, the successor of Pharamond, settled anew in Gaul; for we are told by Gregory of Tours, that he resided in the castle of Disparg, supposed by Bucherius, and most geographers, to have stood in Brabant, on the borders of Thongria^o. Clodio was succeeded by Merovæus, Merovæus by Childeric, and he by Clodavæus or Clovis, the first christian king of the Franks, who drove the Goths out of Gaul, and fixed the royal seat at Paris, where it has continued ever since his time.

TYRO PROSPER tells us, as we have observed above, that Priam, the father of Marcomir and Sunno, is the first king of the Franks, whose name he found recorded in history; but it is certain, that, by the antients, other kings are mentioned long before his time, that is, before the year 382, when Tyro Prosper supposes him to have reigned. These are Atec, Genobald, Ascaric, Gaisus or Regaisus, Maloric, Mallobaudus or Mellobaudus. Atec and Genobald seem to have reigned at the same time, but over different nations or tribes of the Franks; for they are both named by Mamertin in his panegyric on Dioclesian, pronounced about the year 288, as reigning at that time. Atec, with his Franks, had

^m Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 3. p. 64.

450, 451.

^o Idem. p. 475.

Coint. p. 426.

ⁿ Buch. p.

Child. p.

had plundered the coasts of Gaul ; but was obliged by Dioclesian to sue for peace, and make great submissions to that prince, in order to appease him, and be confirmed by him in his kingdom. Genobald likewise was forced to submit, says our panegyrist, which was the only means of his being restored to the quiet possession of his dominions ^p. In the same panegyric, Mamertin speaks of a great victory gained by the generals of Dioclesian over a fickle and deceitful nation of barbarians ; which description suits no nation so well as that of the Franks. It was perhaps upon this victory that the two above-mentioned kings were obliged to submit to the emperor, who, in all likelihood, took, on that occasion, the surname of Francicus, which, in antient inscriptions, is given both to him and his colleague Maximian ^q. Ascaric and Gaifcus of Ragaisus reigned over the Franks in the time of Constantius the son of Constantine the great, and were, by the latter, in the first year of his reign, that is, in 306, taken prisoners, and exposed to the wild beasts in the public sports ^r. Malaric, who lived in the reigns of Constantius the son of Constantine, of Julian and Jovian, is called, by Marcellinus, only the governor, or chief of his countrymen, in the emperor's palace ^s ; but is, by Procopius, reckoned among their kings. Jovian, in the year 364, the first of his reign, appointed him general of the Roman troops in Gaul ^t ; but he declined that employment ^u. Mallobaudus, or Mellobaudus, styled by Marcellinus king of the Franks ^w, commanded under Gratian in 377, and the following year 378, gained a signal victory over the Alemans, of whom thirty thousand were killed upon the spot, and, among the rest, Triarius their king ^x. Mallobaudus, though king of the Franks, served in the Roman army, and thought himself honoured with the employment of comes domesticorum to the emperor Gratian. Ricomer, Ricimer, or Richimer, who was comes domesticorum to the same emperor, general of the Roman horse, and consul in 384, is, by some, reckoned among the kings of the Franks. His son Theodomir reigned over the Franks in the time of Honorius, and was killed by the Romans, with his mother Ascula,

^p Panegy. x. p. 125—127. Buch. Belg. p. 223. Val. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 11, 12. ^q Vide Val. ibid. ^r Eutrop. p. 587. Eumon. panegy. ix. p. 198. ^s Ammian. Marcel. l. xv. p. 39. ^t Idem, l. xxv. p. 302. ^u Idem, p. 307. ^w Idem, l. xxxi. p. 454. ^x Idem, ibid. p. 453.

Ascella, according to an antient chronicle quoted by Gregory of Tours ^y. Fredegarius supposes him to have been killed by count Castinus, who was sent against the Franks, by the emperor Honorius, about the year 421^z, at which time all other writers suppose Pharamond to have reigned. Usher, as we have hinted above, will have Theodomir and Pharamond to have been one and the same person. But why might not Theodomir and Pharamond have reigned at the same time? it being certain, that the Franks, in the time of Pharamond, had several other kings, nay, as many kings as they had cities or cantons, as we have observed above. 'Tis true, that Fredegarius makes Theodomir the father and immediate predecessor of Clodio, and says of him what is said by other writers of Pharamond. But Fredegarius, whom Valesius styles an impertinent writer^a, might have been, and probably was, therein mistaken; seeing all other writers suppose Pharamond the son of Marcomir, or of Sunno, as we read in Vitalis^b, to have succeeded Theodomir. Tyro Prosper is the only author that mentions Priam, according to him, the father of Marcomir and Sunno. His name perhaps gave rise to the romances of those writers, who derive the origin of the Franks from the Trojans, whose last king bore that name. Such romances were, in some degree, countenanced, not only by the name of Priam, but by an opinion, which obtained among most writers, as Gregory of Tours informs us^c, viz. that the Franks had dwelt in Pannonia before they settled on the banks of the Rhine. Having thus given the reader the best account we have been able to gather from the most authentic writers of the first kings of the Franks, without taking upon us to ascertain the order of their succession, or their descents, we shall now pass to their wars and exploits, from the time they are first mentioned in history to their settling in Gaul.

They break
into Gaul, but are repelled by Aurelian.

THE first historian, by whom mention is made of the Franks, is Vopiscus, in the life of the emperor Aurelian; where that writer tells us, that the Franks made an irruption into Gaul, and, though few in number, committed there dreadful ravages. But Aurelian, then only tribune of the sixth legion, quartered at that time in Mentz, marching against gainst them, killed seven hundred of them, took three hundred prisoners, whom he sold for slaves, and obliged the rest to quit their booty, and retire^d. This event is placed, by Valesius, in the year 254, the second of the emperor Valerian's reign^e; by Bucherius and Cointius^f, in 234, in which year it is certain, the Germans made an irruption into Gaul; and Aurelian, say they, born in 200, and then only thirty-four years old, might have attained to no higher post in the army than that of tribune. But as it appears from Vopiscus, that at that time Aurelian overcame the Franks, the emperor was preparing to march against the Persians, and Gordian marched against them in 242. Vorburgh concludes from thence, that the Franks were defeated by Aurelian the preceding year 241^g. But at what time soever this happened, it is agreed on all hands, that the Franks, who afterwards proved so troublesome neighbours to the Romans, and greatly contributed to the downfall of the western empire, are first mentioned in history on this occasion. In the year 256, the fourth of Valerian's reign, they broke anew into Gaul, with several other German nations, but were entirely defeated by Gallienus, whom Valerian had taken for his partner in the empire^h. For this victory Gallienus took the surname of Germanicus, as appears from a medal struck in the latter end of the present yearⁱ. However, the Franks and other German nations, returning soon after in far greater numbers, Gallienus, no longer able to repress them by force, offered advantageous terms to one of their chiefs, who, readily accepting them, took upon him to guard the frontiers of the empire, which he did accordingly, often engaging the Franks, and other barbarians, attempting to break into the empire. Thus Zosimus^k; but who this prince was, he has not thought fit to tell us: Vopiscus indeed informs us, that Gallienus lived in friendship with Attalus king of the Marcomans, to whom he yielded part of Upper Pannonia, taking his daughter, by name Pipa, or Pipara, as he pretended, for his wife; but by historians she is looked upon only as his concubine, he being already married to Solonina^l, stiled, in the antient inscriptions, Cornelia

^y Greg. Tur. p. 64. ^z Vide Val. l. iii. p. 112. ^a Vales. l. ii. p. 61. & l. iii. p. 125. ^b Vital. apud Buch. l. xiv. c. 9. ^c Greg. Tur. hist. Fran. l. ii. p. 64.

Q 2

nelia

^d Vopisc. vit. Aur. p. 212. ^e Vales. rer. Fran. l. i. p. 2.
^f Buch. Belg. l. vi. c. 13. p. 209. ^g Coint. tom. i. p. 14.
^h Vorburgh. hist. Roman. German. p. 474. ⁱ Zos. l. i. p. 646.
^j Zon. vit. Gallien. p. 235. ^k Birag. p. 371. ^l Zos. ibid.
^m Aur. vit. epist. p. 521. Gallien. vit. p. 184.

They ravage
Gaul, and part of Italy.
Year after
Christ 260.

They break into Spain, which they hold for the space of twelve years.
Year after
Christ 265.

nelia Solonina Augusta^m. The following year 257, some Franks seem to have served in the Roman army against the Goths; for among the auxiliaries that marched with Aurelian into Thrace, which province the Goths were then pillaging, mention is made of Hartoman, Haldegastus, Hildemon, and Carioviscusⁿ, which names bear a great resemblance to others that frequently occur in history among the Franks; whence Vorburgus concludes them to be the names of some chief men of that nation, who came with a body of their countrymen to assist the Romans in this expedition^o. Three years after, that is, in 260, the Franks, and other German nations, taking advantage of the confusion which the captivity of Valerian, taken prisoner by the Persians, had caused throughout the empire, broke into Gaul, and, having ravaged the most wealthy provinces there, made an irruption into Italy^p. St. Jerom^q and Orosius^r add, that the Franks, crossing the Alps, and passing through Rhætia and Lombardy, advanced to the neighbourhood of Ravenna, laying waste the country, and committing every-where dreadful ravages. Zosimus writes, that this sudden irruption obliged Gallienus to take the field, in order to drive back the barbarians; but whether they were forced by him to retire, or withdrew of their own accord, he does not tell us. Five years after, they committed unheard-of ravages in Spain. Victor writes, that, after they had ravaged Gaul, they passed from thence into Spain^s; but Valesius endeavours to prove, from the panegyric of Nazarius on Constantine, that they conveyed themselves thither by sea^t; for that author writes, that they suffered themselves to be transported, by their warlike ardour, beyond the bounds of the ocean, and struck terror into the coasts of Spain itself^u. They passed the bounds of the ocean, according to Valesius, by entering the Mediterranean, and landing in one of the Spanish provinces bordering on that sea. Be that as it will, they penetrated into a country, to use the expression of Eutropius, so far distant from their own, and made themselves masters of it, as we are told by St. Jerom^w. Orosius writes, that they held, or rather pillaged, Spain for the space of twelve years^x; and that they took by storm, plundered, ^m Goltz. Birag p. 380. ⁿ Aur. vit. p. 212. ^o Vorb.

p. 519. ^p Aur. vit. p. 215, 216. Dexip. legat. excerpt.
p. 8. ^q Hier. chron. ^r Oros. l. vii. c. 22. p. 214.
^s Vict. in Gallien. ^t Val. rer. Fran. l. i p. 3, 4. ^u Pane-
gyr. vii p. 163. ^w Hier. chron. ^x Oros. l. vii. c. 23. p. 223.

plundered, and almost utterly destroyed, the city of Tar-raco, which was then one of the chief cities of Spain, and the metropolis of several provinces; but for the space of a hundred and fifty years it bore the marks, adds the same author, of what it suffered on that occasion ^y. Some of the Franks, having provided themselves with vessels, crossed over into Africa, with a design to enrich themselves with the spoils of that wealthy nation ^z; but what was the issue of that undertaking, we are not told. The same year 265, Posthumius, who had revolted in Gaul, and taken upon him the title of emperor, gained great advantages over the Franks, attempting to break into those provinces, drove them all beyond the Rhine, and even built some forts in their country; whence, on his medals he is styled the restorer of Gaul, the defender of the empire ^a. On the same medals frequent mention is made of his victories over the Franks, chiefly in the fifth year of his reign, that is, in 265, and on some he is styled Germanicus Maximus, the Franks being distinguished in those times, as Valesius well observes, by the name of Germans, from the Alemans, and other nations inhabiting Germany. That writer is of opinion, that the medals of Posthumius, on which Deuso, now Duitz, over-against Cologne, and Macusa, now Inchuse, in north Holland, are mentioned, allude to the victories he gained over the Franks ^b. However, they afterwards served under him against Gallienus, and supported him, to the utmost of their power, in the authority he had usurped ^c. In the year 273, the fourth of the emperor Aurelian's reign, they made an irruption into Gaul; but were driven back with great slaughter by that prince, who, having taken several of them prisoners, led them, with the captives of several other nations in triumph, when he made his publick entry into Rome, which we have described at length in our Roman history ^d. Aurelian dying two years after, the Franks together with the Lyges, the Burgundians, and the Vandals, crossing the Rhine, entered Gaul, and, having reduced above seventy of the chief cities of that country in the space of two years, looked upon themselves as masters of all Gaul. But in the mean time Tacitus, who had succeeded Aurelian, dying, Probus, who was chosen in his room, marching in person against the Burgundians and Vandals, dispatched dispatched some of his best generals against the Franks, who gave them a total overthrow, and obliged them to abandon their booty, and return home^e, Probus himself was attended with the like success against the Burgundians and Vandals; so that all Gaul was, by his valour delivered, to use the expression of St. Jerom, from the yoke of the barbarians. The emperor, not satisfied with driving them out of Gaul, pursues them cross the Rhine, laid waste their territories far and near, and even built some forts in their country; which struck the barbarians with such terror, that nine of their kings came in person to sue for peace, which Probus granted them, upon their promising to supply the Romans yearly with a certain quantity of corn, and other provisions, and to send sixteen thousand men to serve in the Roman army^f. These Probus divided into several companies of fifty or sixty men, distributing them among the Roman troops in different places^g. Some of the Franks who had either submitted to Probus, or had been taken prisoners in this war, were sent by the emperor to the coast of the Euxine sea, where lands were allowed them to cultivate. There they continued for some time; but, growing weary in the end of living after the Roman manner in a country so far distant from their own, having seized on some ships, they put to sea, and, roaming about, pillaged first the coasts of Asia and Greece, and then, passing over into Africa, landed in several places there; but, being constantly repulsed by the Roman troops quartered in that province, they quitted Africa, and, steering their course to Sicily, landed in that island, took and plundered the city of Syracuse, and, having put most of the inhabitants to the sword, reimbarqued with an immense booty. From Sicily they sailed for the streights of Gibraltar, and entering the ocean, plundered the coasts of Gaul and Spain, and returned in the end, loaded with booty, to their native country, at the mouth of the Rhine^h. This happened while Probus was making war on several tyrantsⁱ, that is, about the year 280. The same year, Proculus having revolted, and assumed the title of emperor at Cologne, the Franks at first espoused his cause, and promised to assist him to the utmost of their power; but as they scrupled no more, in those days, than they have done in later times, to break their word, they not only

The Franks, Burgundians, and Vandals, seize on seventy cities in Gaul. Year after Christ 275?

Q 3

^y Idem ibid. 186. Birag. 393, tyr. p. 177. ^z Vict. & Val. p. 5. ^a Trig. tyr. c. 4. p. ^b Vales. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 6. ^c Trig. ^d Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 263.

But are driven out by Probus.

A small number of Franks ravage the coasts of Asia, Greece, Sicily, &c.

^e Tacit. vit. Aur. p. 227. Prob. vit. p. 218. Val. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 7, 8. ^f Prob. vit. p. 238, 239. ^g Idem ibid. ^h Zos. l. i. p. 666. Prob. vit. p. 240. Panegy. x. p. 218. ⁱ Prob. vit. ibid.

only abandoned, but betrayed the usurper into the emperor's hands ^k. From this time they continued quiet till the year 287, the fourth of Dioclesian's reign, when, in conjunction with the Saxon pirates, they plundered the coasts of Gaul, carrying off an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives. But Carausius having, by the emperor's order, fitted out a fleet at Boulogne, and gained some advantages over them, they retired for a while to their respective countries ^l. It was, no doubt, on account of these advantages, that Mamertinus, in his panegyric on Maximian, by whom Carausius had been sent against these pirates, calls him the conqueror of the Franks; and adds, that he put an end to the piratic war ^m. But as Carausius kept, and applied to his own use, the booty he had taken from the barbarians, instead of returning it to the proprietors, Maximian, suspecting that with this view he connived at their piracies, resolved to put him to death; but he having timely notice of his design, passed over into Britain, with the fleet under his command, and there caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, as we have related elsewhere ⁿ. The following year, Maximian, crossing the Rhine, entered Germany, and, having laid waste the enemy's country far and near, returned to Gaul with an immense booty, and a great number of captives. The fame of his name struck such terror into the Franks, that two of their kings, Atec and Genobald, the first we find named in history, submitted to him, desiring him to confirm them in their respective kingdoms ^o. From an antient inscription it appears, that Dioclesian, as well as his colleague Maximian, took, probably on this occasion, the surnames of Francicus, Alemanicus, and Germanicus ^p.

Atec and Genobald, two kings of the Franks, submit to Maximian. Year after Christ, 288.

The following year Maximian allowed lands, in the neighbourhood of Treves and Cambray, to great numbers of Franks and Letes, who had submitted to him, those territories being almost quite destitute of inhabitants ^q. The Letes were originally a Gaulish nation; but having afterwards left Gaul, and settled in Germany, they were reckoned among the German nations ^r. Their name often occurs in history, as appears from Valesius, who is of opinion, that the names of the river Lis in Flanders, and

Q 4

of

^k Procul. vit. p. 247. Vict. epit. Eutrop. ^l Eutrop. p. 585. ^m Panegy. xi. p. 133. ⁿ Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 295. ^o Panegy. ix. p. 125. Val. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 11, 12. ^p Vales. ibid. ^q Panegy. ix. p. 112. ^r Val. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 33, 34, & l. iv. p. 162.

Several Franks transplanted into Gaul by Constantius Chlorus.
Year after
Christ 293.

of the Abbey of Lieffis in Hainault, owe their origin to them ^s. Ammianus speaks of this nation as dwelling in Germany, on the banks of the Rhine, about the year 356^t. A few years after, the Franks made themselves masters of Batavia, and that part of Flanders which is watered by the river Escaut; but Constantius, the father of Constantine the Great, marching against them soon after he was raised to the dignity of Cæsar, overcame them in battle, and, having obliged them to surrender at discretion, transplanted them, with their wives and children, into Gaul, where they were forced to cultivate the lands which they themselves had waisted, to pay the usual tributes and taxes, as subjects of the empire, and to serve, when wanted, in the Roman armies. Upon their submitting, their arms were taken from them, nor were they allowed any in their new settlements, that they might, by degrees, forget their native fierceness and barbarity, and accustom themselves to live after the Roman manner ^u. The emperor Julian, speaking of Maximian and Constantius, tells us, that they not only drove the barbarians out of the Roman territories, which they had long held, and cultivated as their own, but built several castles on the frontiers; by which means the country, no longer infested by the barbarians, enjoyed a profound tranquillity ^w. It was perhaps on account of the victory, which Constantius gained over the Franks, that the surname of Germanicus was given him on a monument erected to him by the city of Nicomedia, while he was consul, that is, in 294^x. From this time they continued quiet till the year 306, the first of Constantine's reign, when that prince being employed in Britain, they laid hold of the opportunity to break into Gaul. But the emperor, returning soon after, fell upon them unexpectedly, while they were busied in plundering the country, cut great number of them in pieces, and having taken two of their kings prisoners, Ascaric and Gaisus, he exposed them to be devoured by the wild beasts, in the magnificent shews which he afterwards exhibited ^y. He thought himself obliged, says the panegyrist, to renew the rigour of the antient Romans towards their captive kings, in order to restrain by the fear of punishment takes two of their kings prisoners, whom he exposes to wild beasts.

Constantine

^s Idem ibid. ^t Ammian. l. xvi. p. 135. ^u Panegy. i. iii. vii. viii. p. 3, 47, 93, 104, 106, 107. ^w Julian. orat. i. p. 12. ^x Laët. pers. p. 336. ^y Panegy. ix. p. 190, 197. v. 127. vii. 163.

ment, a perfidious nation, that made no account of the most sacred ties^z. After this victory he crossed the Rhine, and, entering the country of the Bructerians, who were one of the several nations then known by the name of Franks, he made a dreadful havock of that people, and took a great many prisoners, whom he likewise exposed to the wild beasts^a. He repaired all the forts on the Rhine, placed numerous garrisons in them, kept on that river a great number of vessels well armed and manned, and by that means put a stop, for some time, to the incursions of the Franks. In memory of the advantages he had gained over them, he instituted solemn sports, called from them ludi Francici, which were annually celebrated from the fourteenth of July to the twentieth^b. However, two years after, that is, in 308, they began anew to assemble in considerable bodies, with a design, as was supposed, to make an irruption into Gaul; but Constantine marching against them upon the first news of their motions, they dispersed^c. In 310, all the nations known by the name of Franks, taking arms, approached the banks of the Rhine, and there dividing their army, which was very numerous, into several bodies, attempted to break into Gaul at different places. Constantine marched in person against them, and, not depending upon the relations of others, ventured in disguise, into the midst of their army, pretending to be a deputy sent to them by the emperor. As he found that, not caring to put the whole to the issue of a general engagement, they designed to carry on the war in separate bodies, which would have rendered it more tedious, he assured them, that the emperor was not then with the army; which they no sooner understood, than they dismissed the pretended deputy, and uniting all their forces, marched against the enemy. Constantine received them at the head of his army, put them to flight at the first onset, and made a dreadful havock of them in the pursuit^d. Eusebius writes, that he not only drove the barbarians out of Gaul, but utterly subdued those, who dwelt on the banks of the Rhine, and near the ocean^e, that is, the Franks. However, three years after, taking advantage of the emperor's absence, who was gone to Rome,

They are defeated with great slaughter by Constantine.
Year after
Christ, 310.

^z Panegy. v. p. 126. ix. p. 196, 197.
197, 198.

^b Eutrop. p. 587.

^a Panegy. ix. p.
^c Paneg. ix. p. 200,

201. ^d Paneg. vii. p. 164. Syn. reg. p. 19.

^e Euseb. vit.

Const. l. iii. c. 25. p. 420.

Who punishes them with great severity.

Rome, they began to assemble anew on the banks of the Rhine; which Constantine no sooner understood, than leaving Italy, he hastened into Gaul. The Franks, who had not yet passed the Rhine, withdrew at his approach; but Constantine, giving out that the Alemans too were ready to break into Gaul, left some troops concealed among the woods at a small distance from the river, and retired with the rest. The Franks no sooner heard of his departure, than they passed the Rhine; but the Romans, rising unexpectedly out of their ambuscade, fell upon them before they could draw up their forces, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to repass that river in the utmost confusion. Constantine followed them in person with his whole army, and, entering their country, laid waste their lands, burnt their habitations, and, having taken a great deal of prisoners, exposed them all to be devoured by the wild beasts. This severity towards a perfidious and faithless enemy is commended by his panegyrist; but does not answer the character of a mild, generous, and good-natured prince, which is given to Constantine by most writers of those times. For this victory over the Franks, he took the title of Francicus^f. Notwithstanding this severity, the Franks were no sooner informed, that Constantine had left Gaul, with a design to visit Italy and Illyricum, than they crossed the Rhine in great numbers, and entering Gaul, laid waste several provinces. But Crispus the son of Constantine, marching against them, obliged them to quit their booty, and retire. Optatianus seems to insinuate, that he gained a great victory over them^g; but Nazarius only says, that he drove them out of Gaul, and obliged them to sue for peace; which he readily granted them^h. From some medals it appears, that the young prince gained a victory over the Alemans, who, in all likelihood, had invaded Gaul at the same timeⁱ; but the Franks, it seems, quitting their booty, retired at his approach^k. This happened in 320, and no farther mention is made of the Franks in history till the year 341, the fourth of Constantius's reign, when they made an irruption into Gaul, committing every-where great ravages. Constans marched against them, and gave them battle; but as the loss was equal on both sides, the war was not ^f Vales. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 23.

vii. p. 164.

^g Optat. c. 15.
ⁱ Buch. l. viii. c. 16. p. 265.

^h Paneg.
^k Vales. p. 26.

not ended till the ensuing year^l, when Constans either conquered or appeased them, as Idatius expresses it, that is, prevailed upon them, with presents, and money, to retire, as may be gathered from Libanius, who tells us, though speaking as a panegyrist, that the Franks were not conquered by dint of arms^m. Be that as it will, it is certain they concluded a peace with Constans, and submitted to the princes he was pleased to appoint over themⁿ. As they were the most powerful nation in those parts, the peace they concluded with the emperor prevented the others from attempting any thing against the empire; so that Constans, having nothing to fear on that side, passed over into Britain, to oppose the Scots, who made frequent inroads into the Roman dominions^o. Some years after, that is, in 355, the eighteenth of the reign of Constantius, Malaric, king of the Franks, held a chief employment in the emperor's court^p. But the following year, those of his nation, no longer able to live in peace, entering into an alliance with the Alemans and Saxons, They make themselves masters of above forty cities in Gaul. crossed the Rhine, took and pillaged above forty cities on the banks of that river, laid waste the neighbouring provinces, and carried off an incredible number of captives. Year after The city of Cologne was on this occasion taken by them, Christ 355. and almost intirely ruined^q. From thence they advanced as far as Autun, which city they besieged; but being vigorously repulsed by the veterans, who were quartered there, they abandoned the enterprize, and contented themselves with plundering the open places, roaming about without controul, and destroying with fire and sword what they could not carry off. Constantius, who was then in Italy, not thinking it adviseable to quit that country, raised his cousin Julian to the dignity of Cæsar, and at the same time appointed him governor of Gaul. Julian, without loss of time, set out for his government, and, arriving at Vienne, was received there with extraordinary marks of joy. As he arrived in that city in the depth of winter, he continued there the remaining part of that season, deliberating about the operations of the ensuing campaign; and, taking the field early in the spring, he marched, at the head of a small body, from Vienne to Autun, and from ⁿ Idat. p. 85. Socr. l. ii. c. 12. p. 90. Vales. l. i. p. 28.

^l Socr. p. 88. Soz. p. 504.

^m Lib. orat. iii. p. 139.

^o Lib. orat. iii. p. 140. ^p Ammian. l. v. p. 39. ^q Idem, ibid. p. 50.

from thence to Auxerre. On his march he found himself surrounded on all sides by the enemy, who moved about in great bodies ; but he put them to flight with a handful of men, and opened himself a way through the midst of the barbarians to Troies, and from thence to Rheims, where the main body of the army waited his arrival. Being joined there by all the Roman troops quartered in Gaul, he hastened from thence to Decempagi, now Dieuze on the Seille in Lorraine, with a design to fall upon the Franks, who were busied in ravaging the country. But the enemy, receiving timely notice of his approach, took advantage of a dark and wet night to attack his rear unexpectedly, and would have cut off two legions, had not the rest of the army, alarmed at the sudden noise, turned back to their assistance. The Franks, encouraged with this success, attacked him anew a few days after ; but were put to flight, though not with great loss. However, this small victory opened him a way to Cologne, which the enemy abandoned at his approach, after it had been ten months in their hands. During his stay at Cologne, one of the kings of the Franks, dreading his arms, sent deputies to him to sue for a peace ; but Julian only granted him a short truce^r. The following year, Julian gained a complete victory over the Franks, and other German nations, that had invaded Gaul, as we have related at length elsewhere^s, and took by storm two castles on the Meuse, in which some Franks had shut themselves up, after having ravaged the country about Rheims. They defended themselves with great bravery for the space of fifty-four days ; but being in the end obliged to surrender, they were all sent to the emperor, who incorporated them among his troops^t. After this, Julian put his troops into winter-quarters, and took up his own in Paris. But in the mean time, the Salii, a nation of the Franks, breaking unexpectedly into Taxandria, now Brabant, settled there ; but Julian, marching against them early in the spring, obliged them to abandon the country they had seized, though they offered themselves ready to guard the frontiers of the empire on that side, to supply the Romans with troops when required, and to pay the usual taxes and tributes. Zosimus tells us, that they had been driven out

But they are defeated and driven out by Julian.

^r Idem, l. xx. p. 168. l. xxiii. p. 203. Liban. orat. ii. p. 270. & orat. ix. p. 237.

^s Ammian. l. xvii. p. 89.

^t Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 483.

out of their own country by the Saxons and Quadians, who were by Julian forced to restore it to the antient proprietors, which so gained the Salian Franks, that, submitting to Julian, great numbers of them served in his army y.

THE Franks continued quiet the whole time Julian reigned; but they no sooner heard of his death, than entering into an alliance with their neighbours the Saxons, they began to infest Gaul both by sea and land. But count Theodosius, father to the emperor of that name, being sent against them by Valentinian, obliged them to retire with great loss^z. That commander is said to have overcome the Saxons, to have gained a victory over them off the Orcades, and to have defeated the enemies of the empire in Batavia, near the Rhine and the Vahal; which country was then held by the Franks^a. From an inscription of 369, or 370, it appears, that Valentinian styled himself the conqueror of the Franks^c, no doubt on account of the advantages gained over that nation by count Theodosius. As it appears from a law dated the thirtieth of September^d 368, that Valentinian was then at Cologne, some writers conclude from thence, that he marched in person against the Franks; but of this expedition no mention is made by any of the antients. At this time Mallobaudes was king of the Franks, and engaged in a war with the Alemans, who, having concluded a peace with the Romans, had entered, upon what provocation we know not, the territories of the Franks, destroying all with fire and sword. Mallobaudes met them at the head of a considerable army, and, pretending to avoid an engagement, drew them into an ambuscade, by which means he cut great numbers of them in pieces, and among the rest their king Macrianus, a warlike prince, who had long infested, with continual inroads, the Roman dominions^e. Three years after, that is, in 377, Mallobaudes was raised by the emperor Gratian to the consulate, having the emperor himself for his colleague in that dignity^f. The following year he was honoured by the same emperor with the post of comes domesticorum, and distinguished himself in a most eminent manner

in

y Zof. l. iii. p. 561.
^a Val rer. Franc. l. vi.
 Theodo chron. p. 83, 84.
 l. xxxi. p. 451. Grut. p. 379.

^z Ammian. l. xxvii. p. 346.
^c Idem ibid.
^d Cod.
^e Ammian. l. xxx.
^f Idem,

in the battle of Argentaria, in which above thirty thousand of the Lentinenses, who had broken into the empire, were cut in pieces, with their king Triarius. This victory was chiefly owing to Mallobaudes, who, on this occasion, commanded the Roman troops, in conjunction with count Nennianus, as we have related in our Roman history^g. He was consul the second time in 383, the eighth and last of Gratian's reign, and commanded the army, under that prince, against the usurper Maximus; but was not attended on that occasion with his usual success, for Gratian was put to flight, soon after taken prisoner, and put to death at Lyons. All authors agree, that the unhappy prince was betrayed by his own people; and Prosper, in his chronicle, names Mallobaudes among those, who kept a private correspondence with the usurper^h. But Baronius maintains, that Prosper was therein mistaken, and that Mallobaudes continued ever faithful to Gratianⁱ. And truly Pacatus upbraids Maximus for hating Mallobaudes, and reducing him to the fatal necessity of laying violent hands on himself, for no other crime than that of an inviolable fidelity to Gratian, whose cause he had maintained to the last^k. Three years after the death of Gratian, that is, in the year 388, we find the Franks ravaging Gaul with more fury than ever, perhaps to revenge on the usurper Maximus the death of Gratian, who had shewn a particular kindness to their nation. However that be, Gregory of Tours tells us, that they over-ran all Belgic Gaul, committing every-where unheard of ravages, made the city of Cologne tremble, burnt several villages, and then returned home with their booty, leaving several parties in Gaul to pursue the ravages they had begun. These were defeated by Nannius and Quintinus, the two generals of Maximus, who cut great numbers of them in pieces in the province of Hainault. Quintinus, not satisfied with this advantage, passed the Rhine at Nuys, contrary to the opinion of Nannius, who refused to follow him, and, entering the enemy's country with the troops under his command, burnt several villages, which he found abandoned by the inhabitants. Encouraged with this success, he advanced far into the country; but being, on his return, cunningly drawn into marshes, woods, and unpassable places, by the enemy pretending to fly before him, he found himself on a sudden surrounded on all sides by great ad ann. 383.

^g Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 28.

^k Pacat. p. 267.

^h Prosp. chron.

ⁱ Bar.

great multitudes, who falling upon his men while they were entangled in the woods and marshes, cut most of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to shelter themselves in the woods, where they perished with famine, only Quintinus, and a few more, having, with the utmost difficulty, found means to make their escape, and return to Gaul, after suffering unexpressible hardships in the enemy's country. The loss sustained by the Romans on this occasion was very great, and is, by some, compared to the disaster of Varus and his legions, in the time of Augustus¹. This happened while the Franks were governed by Genobald, Marcomir, and Sunno, who, being elated with this victory, broke anew into Gaul the year following; which obliged Theodosius to send Valentinian to make head against them. Upon that prince's arrival in Gaul, Arbogastes, general of the troops in those provinces advised him to march into the enemy's country; and force them to restore the booty they had carried off the year before, and deliver up the authors of the war^m. Whether or no Valentinian followed his advice, we are not told. All we know is, that he had a conference with Marcomir and Sunno, who delivered up hostages; and that he afterwards retired to Treves, and there passed the winterⁿ.

THREE years after, that is, in 392, Arbogastes, having put Valentinian II. to death, persuaded Eugenius, whom he had raised to the empire in his room, to make war upon the Franks. Arbogastes, of whom we have spoken at length in our Roman history^o, was himself by nation a Frank; but, as he bore an old grudge to Marcomir and Sunno, he not only induced Eugenius to make war upon them, but, taking upon himself the whole management of it, he passed the Rhine near Cologne, in the depth of winter, and laid waste the countries of the Bructerians and Chamavians, without meeting with the least opposition, Marcomir only shewing himself at a distance on the hills, with some parties of the Ansivarii and Chatti. But, as to the issue of this war, historians only tell us, that Arbogastes, after having put many of his countrymen to the sword, concluded in the end a peace with them; and that Eugenius himself approached the Rhine to renew the antient

¹ Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 9. p. 58, 59, 60. ^m Idem ibid. ⁿ Idem ibid. p. 60, 61. ^o Univers. hist.
vol. xv. p. 451. xvi. p. 80, 93.

They renew the antient alliances with Honorius.
 Year after
 Christ 395.

tient treaty with the kings of the Franks and Alemans ^p. From this account it appears, that the Franks had several kings at the same time, and that, under the name of Franks, were comprised several antient German nations. Great numbers of the Franks lifted themselves among the troops of Eugenius ; for Orosius tells us, that he led against Theodosius an infinite number of Franks and other barbarians ^q. Two years after, Theodosius died, and by his last will, divided the empire between his two children, bequeathing the east to his eldest son Arcadius, and the west to Honorius. Stilicho, who was prime minister to the latter, advised him, in the first place, to renew the antient alliances with the Franks, and other German nations, which they had broken, by assisting the usurper Eugenius against Theodosius. This province Stilicho took upon himself, and, repairing to the banks of the Rhine, accomplished it in a very short time ^r. However, Marcomir and Sunno attempting to raise new disturbances soon after the conclusion of the peace, one of them, says Claudian, was taken, and, after having been kept some time in prison, confined to Tuscany. The other was for revenging on the Romans the affront they had offered his brother ; but his own people, unwilling to engage in a war with the empire, put him to death. Claudian adds, that Honorius appointed other kings over the Franks in their room ^s. An antient historian supposes Marcomir to have outlived Sunno, and consequently that it was he, who was banished into Tuscany ^t. Marcomir, or, as the antients call him, Marcomer, is supposed to have been the father of Pharamond, the first in the catalogue of the French kings ^u. In the year 406, the Franks, falling upon the Vandals, as they were attempting to break into Gaul with the Sueves and Alans, cut near twenty thousand of them in pieces, with their king Godigiscles ; and would have put them all to the sword, had not the Alans come seasonably to their assistance. These two nations, together with the Sueves, opened themselves a way, in spite of the Franks, and, passing the Rhine, entered Gaul ^w. Great numbers of Franks

They cut off
 20,000 of the Vandals attempting to enter Gaul.
 Year after
 Christ 406.

^p Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 9. p. 61.

^q Oros. l. vii.

c. 35. p. 220.

^r Claud. p. 128.

^s Idem,

p. 129.

^t Vide Val. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 119.

^u Idem ibid. & l. ii. p. 92.

^w Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 9.

p. 62. Oros. c. 40. p. 223.

Franks followed them, to have some share in the spoils of those wealthy provinces; but far greater numbers of the same nation entered Gaul four years after, being invited thither by the usurper Constantine, of whose forces the commander in chief was one Edobic, a Frank by nation^x. In the year 413, they made an irruption into Gaul, and not only pillaged, but burnt, the city of Treves the second time, says Frigerid, an antient author quoted by Gregory of Tours^y. When this first irruption happened, we are no-where told; but that unhappy city was the third time plundered, and set on fire, by the Franks about the year 420, as Salvian informs us, who was an eye-witness of the deplorable condition, to which it was reduced on that occasion^z. Our author greatly complains of the insensibility and hardness of heart, which he discovered in the inhabitants, who having lost all their effects, and with much ado escaped with their lives, instead of applying themselves to works of piety, pressed the emperor to cause the sports of the circus to be exhibited among the ashes and ruins of their demolished city^a.

ABOUT this time Pharamond must have reigned over the Franks. He is said by Vitalis to have been the son of Sunno; but all other writers suppose him to have been the son of Marcomir, the brother of Sunno. Gregory of Tours, a very accurate writer, never once mentions this prince; which is very surprising. But both Aimonius and Tyro Prosper speak of him, and place his reign at this time. In the chronicle of the latter, as published by Scaliger, at the twenty-fifth year of Honorius's reign we read the following words; 'Pharamond reigns in France:' then follows the year 26, with these words; 'This year there was an eclipse of the sun.' If therefore Pharamond reigned in the year preceding the eclipse, he reigned in the year 417, for all authors agree, that there was an eclipse, on Friday the 19th of July 418. Philostorgius writes, that the stars were then seen at two in the afternoon. The Alexandrian chronicle, and likewise the chronicles of count Marcellinus and Idatius, mention this eclipse; but the latter,

The beginning of Pharamond's reign uncertain.

^x Soz. l. ix. c. 13. p. 814.

p. 63.

^y Philost. l. xii. c. 8. p. 166.

^y Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 9.

^z Sal. l. vi. p. 145—147.

^a Idem ibid.

latter, by mistake, supposes it to have been on a Thursday ; whereas, in 418, the 19th of July fell on a Friday. Tyro Prosper likewise was mistaken, in supposing the year 418. to have been the twenty-sixth of Honorius, that year being, according to the best chronologers, only the twenty-third or twenty-fourth of his reign. Father Le Cointe will have Pharamond to have begun his reign the same year in which the eclipse happened ; others, and among the rest father Labbé in his chronology, maintain, that he began to reign in 420, and not before ^c. But it is impossible to fix, with any certainty, the precise time, in which this prince began his reign, since Prosper's chronicle, on which we must chiefly depend, is full of mistakes, and differently read in this very place. It is even uncertain, whether it was in his reign, or some time before, that the Franks, passing the Rhine, first settled in Gaul. Bucherius is of opinion, that, about this time, Honorius, entering into a treaty with their chiefs, yielded to them the country bordering on the Rhine towards Cologne, and on the same side of that river, which country was afterwards called Ripuaria ; but he alledges only a few conjectures to support his opinion ^d. Gregory of Tours supposes them to have settled about this time in Thongria, that is, in the territory of Tongres, where they were governed, as we have hinted above, by as many kings as they had cities or cantons ^e. Pharamond, who reigned at this time, was one of the most powerful princes among them ; but we are not told whether he had any authority over the rest. He is supposed to have reigned from the year 417, or 418, to the year 428, in which Clodio, his son and successor, is said by Tyro Prosper to have reigned in France, that is, in the country of the Franks ^f. In the year, in which he is supposed to have died, the famous Aetius made war upon the Franks in Gaul, and drove them from the country in which they had settled ^g. Of this war Jornandes speaks without all doubt, where he tells us, that Aetius, with great slaughter, tamed the barbarity of the Franks, and forced them to submit to the empire ^h. The learned Usher is of opinion, that, in this war, Pharamond was was killed ⁱ. Chifletius, a learned antiquary, will have Pharamond to have made himself master of all Belgica Secunda, and to have died at Rheims, the metropolis of that province. He founds his opinion on the authority of an old manuscript genealogy lodged in the palace in Brussels, in which Pharamond is said to have been buried at Rheims, according to the custom of the barbarians, without the city, towards Laudunum, on a little hill ^k. But we can hardly believe, that all the antients would have passed over in silence the conquest of such an extensive country ; for Belgica Secunda comprised Champagne, and all the countries lying between that province and the ocean. Some writers are of opinion, that the Salic laws were compiled by Pharamond, after his settling in Gaul, with the assistance of four sages, named Wisegast, Lesegast, Widegast, and Solegast ; but Valesius thinks, that the Franks had no written laws till the time of Clovis, who, according to him, was their first legislator ^l.

^c Vide Val. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 118. Buch. de Belg. p. 453. Coint. tom. i. p. 44. 45. Childer. p. 4. ^d Buch. p. 450. ^e Greg. Tur. l. ii. p. 64. ^f Prosp. p. 51. ^g Vide Buch. Belg. l. xv. c. 8. p. 471. ^h Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 34. p. 660.

PHARAMOND was succeeded by his son Clodio in the year ^{Clodio.} 428, the fourth of the reign of Valentinian III. Gregory ^{Year after} of Tours calls him a most illustrious prince, and one to ^{Christ 428.} whom his people, whose interest he had at heart, were highly indebted ^m. An historian, who flourished in the time of Charles Martel, and after him most other writers, suppose both Clodio, and his successor Meroveus, to have been the children of Pharamond ⁿ. Fredegarius, in his abridgment of Gregory of Tours, which he compiled in the time of Pepin, will have him to have been the son of Theodomir, who was killed by the Romans, as we have related above. The authority of Fredegarius is of no great weight ; but as Gregory of Tours too mentions the death of Theodomir, some are of opinion, that Theodomir and Pharamond were one and the same person, as we have hinted above. As Gregory of Tours begins the history of the Franks with the reign of Clodio, (for he makes no mention of Pharamond) and derives from him the pedigree of the succeeding kings ^o, several historians reckon him the first king of that nation ^p. And truly he ought to be deemed

R 2

ed

ⁱ Uff. rer. Brit. p. 402, 403.
Belg. p. 518.
Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 9. p. 64.
124, 125.
P. 473.

^k Vide Miræi chron.
^l Vales. p. 119, 120.
ⁿ Greg. Tur. p. 65.

^m Greg.
^o Vales. p.
^p Buch.

He is overcome by Aetius.

ed the founder of the French monarchy in the country we now call France, since he established his dominion so firmly there, that the Romans were never able to drive him out, as they had done his predecessor Pharamond about the year 428. He is commonly surnamed the long-haired, as if he had been the first among the princes of his nation, who was distinguished from his subjects by the length of his hair ; whereas this mark of distinction is taken notice of by several historians, as common to the kings of the Franks before his time ^a. On this subject Bucherius makes a long descant ^r, and to him we refer the reader. Sidonius, speaking of the Franks, describes their hair, their beard, their arms, and their whole attire ^s ; and from him it appears that their hair was long before, and quite short behind. We know but very little from the antients of what happened in this prince's reign. Idatius tells us, that, in the year 431, Aetius was employed in an expedition in Gaul ^t. This expedition was, without all doubt, undertaken against the Franks ; for the same writer, who was then with Aetius, adds, that, in 432, he overcame the Franks in a combat. Majorianus, afterwards emperor, served, in all likelihood, under Aetius in this expedition ; for Sidonius extols his exploits on the Rhine, the Vahal, and the Meuse ; and adds, that nothing was performed by Aetius without him ^u. Aetius, after having overcome the Franks, concluded a peace with them the same year ^w ; but upon what terms, we know not. Bucherius is of opinion, that Aetius, being obliged to march against the Visigoths, and other barbarians settled in Gaul, in order to keep the Franks quiet, restored to them the country from which he had driven them in 428, that is, the territory of Tongres ^x. This, he thinks, may be gathered from the notitia ; but the whole is founded upon a mere conjecture. Gregory of Tours, speaking of Clodio before the conquest of Cambray, supposes him to have resided in the castle of Dispard, commonly thought to be the present Doesburg, between Brussels and Lovain, in the antient diocese of Tongres, or on the confines of that country ^y ; which is agreeable to what that writer adds, viz. that the country, which the Romans still held, lay south of the

^a Idem, p. 475, 479.

^r Idem ibid.

^s Sid. car.

^t p. 316.

^u Idat. p. 19.

^u Sid. car. v. p. 315.

^w Idat. ibid.

^x Buch. Belg. p. 473.

^y Greg. Tur.

the territories possessed by Clodio residing at Dispard. In the year 435, the Franks made, it seems, an attempt upon Tours ; for Sidonius tells us, that Majorianus defended that city against them. Not long after, the Franks made an irruption into the country of the Attrebates, now Artois. But Aetius, marching against them with all possible expedition, fell upon them unexpectedly, while, without the least apprehension of danger, they were celebrating the nuptials of one of their chiefs, and cut great numbers of them in pieces ^z. This action happened at a place called Vicus Helenæ, which some take to be the village now called Le Vieil Hesdin, and others the city of Lens on the Escaut. The latter opinion seems the most probable to such as have examined narrowly those places, and compared them with the description, which Sidonius gives of the spot, where the action happened ^a. This was, without all doubt, the only advantage gained by the Romans in this war, since no other is mentioned by Sidonius in his panegyric on Majorianus, who commanded the Roman troops, in conjunction with Aetius, and distinguished himself in the above-mentioned action. Valesius, who supposes the battle of Lens to have been fought in the year 437, tells us from Gregory of Tours, that Clodio, having sent spies to reconnoitre and view the country as far as Cambray, upon their return, set out on his march, advanced, in spite of all opposition, to that city, and, having made himself master of it, fixed, for some time, his residence there ^b (D). From Cambray Valesius supposes him to have made the above-mentioned irruption

^z Sid. p. 315, 316.

^a Vales. p. 132.

^b Idem,

p. 131, 132. Greg. Tur. l. i. ii. c. 9. p. 64.

(D) The words of Gregory of Tours are : Chlogio, (for so he calls him) having sent spies as far as Cambray to view the country, set out with his army, upon their return, and marching through the country which they had viewed, overthrew the Romans, and made himself master of the city, in which residing some time, he extended his conquests as far as the Somme (1). The author of the geste of the Franks adds, that Clodio entering the Carbonarian forest, marched to the city of Tournay, which he took ; and from thence advancing to R 3 Cambray,

(1) Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 5.

irruption into the Artois, and to have been surprized by Aetius

Cambray, he likewise made himself master of that place, put the Roman garrison to the sword, and, in a short time, reduced the whole country between Cambray and the Somme (2). The Sylva Carbonaria was part of the Sylva Arduenna, which extended, as we read in Cæsar (3), from the Rhine to the Scheld, and the country of the Nervii, that is, to Tournay. Gregory of Tours supposes Clodio to have resided at Dispard or Doesburg before he set out on this expedition: and truly from that place, if situated in the country of Tongres, the shortest route he could take was through the Carbonarian forest (4). By the taking of Cambray and Tournay, the Franks became absolute masters of the whole country between those cities and the Rhine, and at the same time had a free communication with Tongria, with the Wahal, and consequently with the antient Francia; for the country between Tournay and the Wahal, which is now so well peopled and cultivated, was, even in the fifth century, almost quite destitute of inhabitants, and covered with woods and forests. It was under the successors of Clovis and Charlemagne that the cities of Bruges, Ghent, Antwerp, Brussels, Malines, Louvain, &c. were built, the country between the Artois, the ocean, and the Rhine, being till their time filled with woods and marshes. As therefore Tournay and Cambray were, in the days of Clodio, the only cities in that tract, by the reduction of them the Franks became masters of the whole country. This expedition is placed by Petavius in 445 (5). But by father Daniel before the year 428: in which year, Felix and Taurus being consuls, the Franks were overcome by Aetius, as we read in Prosper, driven out of Gaul, and obliged to repass the Rhine. But that writer is certainly mistaken; for Majorianus, afterwards emperor, who performed wonders at the battle of Lens or Hesdin, if Sidonius is to be credited, was still a young man in 458. since Sidonius, in the panegyric which he pronounced that year, styles him juvenis, a young man; and how could he be a young man then, if he had signalized himself in a battle fought at least thirty years before? Thus far Sirmond (6), who rightly observes, that, in 428. Aetius waged war with the Franks on the banks of the Rhine; whereas the battle mentioned by Sidonius was fought in Artois, near the village of Helena, which some take to be Lens, and others

(2) Gest. Franc. c. 5. apud Du Ch. tom. i. p. 699.

(3) Cæs. l. v. c. 3. & l. vi. c. 29. (4) Vide Val. in notit. Gal. ad voc. Syl. Carbon.

(5) Petav. rat. temp. l. vi. p. 343.

(6) Sirm. in not. ad Sid. p. 120.

Aetius and Majorianus at the Lens. But, notwithstanding that overthrow, he extended his conquests as far as the Somme^c. Some add, that he took Tournay, Amiens, and several other cities^d. But we shall content ourselves with what we find in the best and most credible writers, among whom we do not reckon De Guise, the author of the annals of Hainault, tho' Bucherius has copied many things from him. Aetius is supposed to have afterwards concluded a peace with the Franks, and to have left them in possession, at least, of some part of the country they had conquered, since he granted the like favour to other nations, whom he dreaded less^e. Priscus, who flourished in those days, tells us, that he saw at Rome the second son of the king of the Franks, who had been sent thither on an embassy, tho' a youth yet quite beardless. He takes notice of his long, yellow hair; and adds, that Aetius adopted him for his son, by presenting him with his armour, and treated him with the greatest marks imaginable of esteem, friendship and affection^f. Upon his leaving Rome, he was loaded

R 4

^c Greg. Tur. p. 65.
i. p. 164. Buch. p. 505.
legat. p. 40.

^d Val. p. 130, 131. Du Ch. tom.
^e Val. l. iii. p. 134.

^f Prisc.
legat. p. 40.

others place on the Canche, where the ruins of it are still to be seen, and known by the name of Vieil-Hesdin. Father Daniel will have Clovis to have possessed nothing in Gaul when he came to the crown; and to support this system, he places the irruption of the Franks under Clodio, the taking of Cambray, and the battle of Lens or Hesdin, before the year 428. in which the Franks were driven out of Gaul by Aetius, and obliged to repass the Rhine. That writer was well apprised, that he could not allow the above-mentioned events to have happened after the year 428, without allowing at the same time the countries, which Clodio seized in that irruption, to have been kept by him, since no mention is made in history of the Franks being driven out of Gaul after the year 428. But against father Daniel's system lie the above-mentioned, in our opinion, unanswerable objections, to which we shall add another, viz. that we find Clovis possessed of Tournay, without being told by any historian, that either he, or his predecessors Merovæus and Childeric, reduced it; whence we conclude it to have been held by him and the two princes who reigned before him, as the successors of Clodio, by whom the whole country between Cambray and the Rhine was reduced, in the manner we have related.

loaded with rich and valuable presents, sent him both by Aetius and Valentinian III. then emperor ^g. This young prince was, in all likelihood, Merovæus, the successor of Clodio; for he lived in great friendship with Aetius, and joined him against Attila. He went, in all likelihood, to Rome in 439. for in that year Valentinian was there.

He destroys Treves.

Takes Co-logne.

SALVIANUS, who wrote about the year 440. tells us, that the city of Treves had been the fourth time pillaged by the Franks, and utterly destroyed ^h. This must have happened about the year 477. during the war between him and the Romans, of whom we have spoken above. The same writer adds, that the Franks made themselves masters of another city not yielding to Treves in grandeur, and standing at a small distance from it ⁱ. This city can be no other but Cologne, which was held by the Franks, as appears from that writer, in the year 440. The enemy entered the city while the chief inhabitants were feasting and revelling, without the least apprehension of danger ^k. Several of Salvianus's relations were, on that occasion, taken by the Franks, and by them kept in slavery, and, among the rest, a holy widow, who, having ransomed herself, was reduced to such poverty, that she was obliged to earn her bread by working for the wives of the barbarians ^l. The taking of Cologne happened, according to the best chronologers, in the reign of Clodio, about the year 438, or 439 ^m. 'Tis to be observed, that this town, in the time of Clovis, had a king of its own, but a Frank by nation ⁿ. Father Le Cointe observes, that, till this time, Cologne is constantly called Agrippina, and seldom Colonia; whereas the latter name universally prevailed, and the former was quite laid aside, after the Franks became masters of the place, which induced Hincmar, and some others to imagine, that the name of Colonia had been given it by them ^o. As the Franks were still pagans, the church suffered much in the countries subject to them; and hence it is, that we find no bishops of Cologne, named in the ecclesiastic history, from the time of Evergilius, who is supposed to have died about the Year 430. till the time of Aquilinus, who governed that church in the reign of Clovis ^p. The churches of Tournay and Cambray fared no better; for they seem to have had no bishops from ^g Idem ibid.

^h Salv. gub. l. vi. p. 133.

ⁱ Idem

ibid.

^k Idem, p. 143, 144.

^l Idem, epist. i. p. 198.

^m Coint. tom. i. p. 69.

ⁿ Val. l. iv. p. 236.

^o Coint.

tom. i. p. 92.

^p Idem, p. 63.

from the year 407. when the Vandals broke into those ^{He dies.} countries, till the end of that century ⁹. Clodio reigned about twenty Years, that is, from the year 428. to 448 when Tyro Prosper tells us, that Merovæus reigned in France ^r, that is, in the countries subject to the Franks on either side the Rhine. From the words of Prosper some conclude, that he held yet nothing in Gaul; for, by the word Francia, say they, is to be understood the country inhabited by the Franks on the German side of the Rhine. But they are therein certainly mistaken; since it is manifest from all the antients, that both Clodio and Morovæus were masters of several ^{Merovæus.} places in Gaul. There is a great disagreement among au- ^{Year after} ^{Christ, 448.} thors about Merovæus: according to the opinion which to us seems the most probable, he was the second son of Clodio, and him Priscus saw at Rome in 439. as we have hinted above, he being then about eighteen years old. Both he and his elder brother outlived their father Clodio; but Merovæus, by the assistance of Aetius and the Romans, carried the crown; for that there were great contests, between them, is certain, the elder brother having called in Attila to his assistance; for this Attila himself alledged, among the other motives that had prompted him in 451. to enter Gaul. He had a considerable number of Franks in his army, those, without doubt, who had espoused the cause of the elder brother. But Merovæus, king of the Franks, fought for the Romans, and distinguished himself in the famous battle of Chalons, which to him secured the crown, and made his elder brother give over all hopes of ever wearing it; nay, Attila himself advised him, after the battle, to return home ^s. The elder brother's name is commonly thought to have been Claudebald, who, in an antient manuscript copy of the Salic law, is said to have been the son of Clude, or Clodio, the son of Pharamond, and the brother of Cleno, of whom no farther mention is made ^t. Valesius takes Claudebald to be the same person with Clodomir, who, in the life of St. Genulphus, is said to have reigned between Clodio and Merovæus ^u. But that life was written long after those times, and is therefore of no great authority. Gregory of Tours only says of Merovæus, that he was the father of Childeric ^w. However, he must have been a prince of no small renown, since the authors of the seventh

⁹ Idem, p. 70. ^r Val. c. iii. p. 125, 144. ^s Sid. car. vii. Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 7. p. 56. Du Ch. p. 393. ^t Du Ch. ibid. ^u Val. p. 144. Bulland. 17. Jun. p. 98. ^w Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 9, p. 65.

He extends his conquests from the Somme to the Seine.

He dies.

seventh and eighth century, and after them many others, have given the name of Merovingian to the kings who reigned after him till the time of Pepin the first king of the second race, as they style it ^x, the first being called Merovingian from Merovæus. Rorico extols him greatly, but by eulogiums couched in general terms ^y; and besides, no great stress is to be laid on what that author writes. Of his exploits, Bucherius speaks at length; but all he says is founded upon conjecture ^z. Valesius, from what we read of Childeric, concludes Merovæus to have extended his conquests from the Somme to the Seine, probably after the death of Actius. All we know for certain is, that upon the news of the death of Valentinian III. the Franks, under the conduct of Merovæus, ravaged Germania Prima, and Belgica Secunda, that is, the provinces of Mentz and Rheims ^a. Bucherius thinks, that Merovæus died the year after Valentinian III. that is, in 456 ^b. but Valesius will have him to have lived till the year 458 ^c. Rorico writes, that he was loved, honoured, and revered, by his people, as a common father, and that from him the Franks in general were called Merovingians ^d. In the genealogical table of the French kings, prefixed to a manuscript life of Charles the great, lodged in the royal library at Brussels, he is made the stock or head of the first race (E). MERO-

^x Val. p. 144, 145. ^y Du Ch. p. 801. ^z Buch. p. 520, 521. ^a Sid. car. vii. 342. ^b Buch. p. 526.
^c Val. l. iv. p. 189. ^d Gest. Franc. l. 1.

(E) It is greatly disputed among authors, whether Merovæus was brother to his predecessor Clodio, only his kinsman, or even of a different family. Gregory of Tours only says, that by some it was held for certain, he was of the same race or family (1). It is past all doubt, that the king of the Franks, who died some time before the year 451. and could be no other but Clodio, had two sons, who, after his death; contended for the kingdom (2). If Merovæus was one of these princes, he was certainly the son of Clodio. But perhaps both Clodio's children lost what each of them strove to get, and a kinsman of theirs, or one who was no-ways related to the family, possessed himself of the kingdom. Du Chesne seems to have been of this opinion (3). It is not unlikely, that Merovæus was the first of legat. p. 40.

(1) Greg. Tur. hist. Fran. l. iii. c. 9. p. 65.

(3) Du Ch. p. 14.

(2) Prisc.

MEROVÆUS was succeeded by his son Childeric. When he ^{Childeric.}
^{Year after} was ^{Christ 456.}

of a new branch, since his successors were from him called Merovingians (4). But on the other hand, if we admit the authority of Tyro Prosper, we can hardly deny Merovæus to have reigned in 451, when Attila broke into Gaul, and consequently to have been one of the two sons of Clodio. For Priscus does not say, that a contest arose among three princes; but only, that the two brothers contended for the kingdom: and it is certain, that the contest was not ended in 451, for Attila came to make war on the Franks in favour of the elder brother (5). It appears from Priscus, that the king of the Franks, who sided with Aetius against Attila in 451, fought at the same time against his brother, and the king of the Hunns (6). The very expression used by Priscus, viz. that Attila came to make war on the Franks, in favour of the elder brother, shews, that the bulk of the nation acknowledged the younger; and, since Attila was obliged to retire, it is not at all likely, that the elder brother, supported by him, got the better of the younger, supported by the Romans, by whom Attila was overcome, and forced to abandon Gaul. The king of the Franks had, according to Gregory of Tours (7), a share in the victory; and in history we find no mention made of any but Merovæus, who in 451, could be styled king of the Franks. Gregory of Tours knew of no other king between him and Clodio, who died before the irruption of the Hunns. We must therefore either suppose Merovæus not to have begun his reign in 448, but only in 451, and consequently bring in another king between him and Clodio, for which there is not the least foundation in history, or allow Merovæus to have been the son of Clodio. Father le Cointe allows Merovæus to have been the son of Clodio; but will have him to have been the elder brother, and adds, that he was acknowledged king; that the younger brother had recourse to the Romans, and to Attila; and that the Romans, hearing Attila was coming with a formidable army, abandoned the younger brother, and declared for the elder, who thereupon sided with the Romans against Attila (8). But it is not at all probable, that Merovæus would have dared to abandon, nay, to betray Attila, at a time when all nations, the Romans not excepted, trembled at his name? Besides, it is certain, that Attila was assisted by the Franks, and that several of that nation served in his army (9). The above-mentioned

(4) Val. p. 145. Buch. Belg. p. 505.

(5) Prisc. p. 40.

(6) Idem ibid.

(7) Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 8. p. 56.

(8) Coint.

p. 72.

(9) Sid. car. vii. p. 541.

was but a youth, he was taken prisoner by Attila, with his mother, and other persons of distinction ; but delivered from captivity by the fidelity, courage, and address, of a Frank, mentioned writer could not persuade himself, that the younger son of Clodio, who was a beardless youth when he came to Rome, was the father of Childeric, who, as early as the year 456 had abandoned himself to all manner of lewdness and debauchery ; and this is what induced him to embrace the aforesaid opinion. Some chronologers suppose the son of Clodio to have gone to Rome in 439, and others place his journey to that metropolis still later. If in 439, he was eighteen, he might have had Childeric in 440. Le Cointe places the beginning of the reign of Childeric in 456, and Valesius in 458, when that prince, then eighteen years old, might well have been guilty of all the debaucheries, which, by historians, are laid to his charge. Besides, we are not told, that he abandoned himself to a debauched life as soon as he ascended the throne : so that the chief argument with which Le Cointe strives to support his opinion is of no weight. The only proof of any strength, that can be alledged in favour of the opinion denying Merovæus to have been the son of Clodio, is the name of Meroviginan, which was given to his successors ; for if they were descended from Clodio, as well as from him, why did they take their name rather from him than from Clodio ? But that name is not given by Gregory of Tours to the kings of his time, nor is it to be found in any writer till near two hundred years after Merovæus's time ; and some authors will have it to have been common to the Franks in general. Those, who maintain Merovæus not to have been the son of Clodio, must at the same time suppose, with Du Chesne, that both the sons of Clodio were by him excluded from the throne ; that this happened after the defeat of Attila, that is, after the year 451, and that the Romans suffered it, though they had espoused the cause of Merovæus, finding they could reap no advantage from a war with the usurper (10). As for the fables related by Fredegarius on the birth of Merovæus, it would be degrading our history to allow them a place in it (11) ; and with them are much of a piece those we read in the annals of Hainault, by de Guise, tho' Bucherius thinks them agreeable to what we find in Priscus. It is surprising, that a man of his learning and penetration should reason on that subject in the manner he does (12) : he surely must never have perused the original Greek copy of Priscus.

(10) Du Ch. p. 14.
p. 506.

(11) Vide Val. p. 144.

(12) Buch.

Frank, named ^eWionald, as we read in Fredegarius ^e. This happened in the year 453. when Attila, attempting to pass the Rhine, in order to enter Gaul, was opposed by Merovæus, at the head of the Franks, who had espoused his cause against his competitor. Childeric no sooner ascended the throne, than he began to think of enlarging his dominions, the more, as Aetius, who had kept the barbarians in awe, was now dead. He is said to have extended his conquests as far as the Loire, and to have reduced the city of Paris, after a siege, according to some, of ten years ^f. In the year 470. he made himself master of Angers, after having killed count Paul the Roman general of the place ^g. Thus Gregory of Tours, without acquainting us how count Paul and Childeric came to fall out; for he had told us, a few lines before, that the Roman general, with the assistance of the Franks, had made war on the Goths, and gained some advantages over them. Bucherius thinks, that the Romans and Franks were overcome by the Goths; and founds his opinion upon the authority of Sidonius, who writes, without marking any time, that the Franks were defeated, and put to flight by Euric king of the Goths ^h. The same author adds, that Euric, after having overcome the Franks, entered into an alliance with them ⁱ; and elsewhere, that he gave his daughter in marriage to one Sigismer, a barbarian prince ^k, whom Valesius takes to have been a Frank ^l. This alliance between the Goths and Franks induced, in all likelihood, Childeric to turn his arms against the Romans, and seize on the city of Angers, at that time belonging to them. He likewise made himself master of Orleans, after having defeated one Odoacer, who came with a body of Saxons to the relief of the place ^m. Gregory of Tours tells us, that Childeric, entering into an alliance with Odoacer king of Italy, marched against the Alemans, who had entered that country, and gave them a total overthrow. Soon after his return to Gaul, he died at Ternacum, now Tournay, where his remains were discovered in 1653. with many gold coins of the Roman emperors, and other things of great curiosity and value; among which was the king's signet, with the inscription Childerici regis, and his image engraved on it, with his long hair

He extends his conquests to the Loire.

He dies.

^e Du. Ch. tom. ii. p. 726. ^f Bolland. 3. Jan. p. 140.
^g Greg. Tur. p. 282. ^h Sid. l. vii. ep. 3. p. 215.
 Idem, ibid. ^k Idem, l. iv. ep. 20. p. 215. ^l Val.
^m Du Ch. p. 697, 802.

hair covering both his shoulders, and a dart in his right-hand. But of this discovery the curious reader will find a minute and learned account in the Anastasis Childerici, which Chiffletius wrote in 1655. by order of the archduke Leopold, at that time governor of the Low-countries for Philip IV. king of Spain ⁿ. Childeric, in the beginning of his reign, abandoned himself to all manner of lewdness, loading at the same time his subjects with exorbitant taxes and impositions, to supply his extravagant expences. Hereupon some of those, whose wives and daughters he had debauched, revolting, drove him from the throne. Gregory of Tours writes, that foreseeing the storm, he prudently withdrew of his own accord, and retired into the territory of Tongres, where he continued, till, his subjects returning to their duty, which was chiefly owing to his trusty friend Wiomald, he was recalled, and restored to the throne. During his absence, the Franks submitted to Ægidius, by nation a Gaul, but commander of the Roman troops in that country ^o, whom, upon the return of Childeric, they easily drove out, and received their lawful sovereign with the greatest marks of joy imaginable (F).

FREDE-

ⁿ Anastasis Childerici, per Chifflet. Antwerpia, 1655. ^o Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 12. Papir. Masson. annal. l. i. p. 13.

(F) This event is thus related by Gregory of Tours : Childeric, by seducing the daughters of his subjects, provoked them to such a degree, that, fearing he should be assassinated by them, he thought it adviseable to abandon his kingdom, and retire. He therefore withdrew into the country of the Thuringians ; but left behind him a trusty friend to mollify the exulcerated minds of his people, and dispose them to receive again their lawful sovereign. Upon his departure he cut in two a piece of gold, whereof he took one part with him, and left the other with his friend, to be sent to him, as a token, that he might return without the least apprehension of danger. After this he withdrew, and took refuge in Thuringia, living as a private person in the court of king Basinus, and queen Basina his wife. Childeric being thus withdrawn, the Franks with one consent chose Ægidius for their governor, who had been raised by the emperor to the post of “magister militiæ, ” or commander in chief of the Roman forces in Gaul. While Ægidius was in the eighth year of his reign, Childeric’s faithful friend, having privately and by degrees reconciled the minds of the Franks to his master,

FREDEGARIUS, in his epitome of the history of the Franks, tells us, that Childeric, being driven from the throne, fled to Constantinople, to implore the protection of the emperor master, dispatched a messenger to him with the piece of gold, which he had kept. Childeric, understanding, from that token, that his subjects were ready to receive him, left Thuringia, and, returning home, was restored to the throne (13). Thus Gregory of Tours, who was born about sixty-three years after the death of Childeric, and consequently must have been acquainted with several persons who had conversed, at least, with his contemporaries, and probably, knew some who had seen Childeric himself; so that it can hardly be supposed, that he was not well informed of such remarkable events as the deposition and restoration of the king of the Franks, and the chusing of Ægidius to reign in his room. And yet father Daniel looks upon this account as altogether incredible and fabulous: he thinks that the conduct of the Franks, had they chosen Ægidius for their king, would have been no less unaccountable than that of the Turks in 1687, if, after deposing Mahomet IV. they had raised to the throne prince Charles of Lorrain, who then commanded the emperor's army in Hungary, and owed all his glory to the advantages he had gained over them. Is it at all likely, says he, that the Franks, who were barbarians and pagans, should chuse for their king a Roman, and one who professed the christian religion; and supposing they had to such a Roman offered the crown, would not he, thro' fear of incurring the emperor's indignation, have rejected their offer? But in those days we find several instances of pagans acknowledging and obeying christian princes, and of pagan princes ruling over those who professed the christian religion. As to the jealousy, which his accepting that dignity might have given to the emperor, Majorianus reposed an entire confidence in Ægidius; and besides the crown, which the Franks placed upon his head, was but a small addition to the power and honours he enjoyed before, as magister militiæ, which employment raised him above all the kings of the barbarians, whom he commanded accordingly in the field. The title of king was no great thing in those times, since it was given not only to all the chiefs of the barbarians, but to the different leaders of many tribes, into which each nation was divided. Ennodius, bishop of Pavia, who flourished in the fifth century, speaking of the army which Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths in Italy led against the barbarians, says, that the country, in which that prince encamped, could hardly peror Mauritius, and returned from thence by sea into Gaul. A strange anachronism ! Mauritius having been raised hardly supply with provisions so many soldiers as he had kings in his army (13). The title of king, therefore, which the Franks bestowed on Ægidius, could give no jealousy to the emperor : it was inferior to that of magister militiæ, which he bore already, and with which the greatest kings among the barbarians thought themselves greatly honoured. Nay, Majorianus, who reposed an entire confidence in Ægidius, must have been highly pleased to hear, that the Franks had submitted to him, which, in effect, was submitting to the empire. The Franks did not then wage war with the Romans, but were their confederates, and had often served in their armies under the conduct of Ægidius, whose probity and moderation could not, by that means, be unknown to them ; so that every one must be well apprised of the wide difference between their chusing him, and the Turks chusing Charles of Lorraine, for their king. But the circumstances, adds father Daniel, attending the deposition of Childeric, and election of Ægidius, are evidently fabulous. This we allow to be true, speaking of the circumstances that have been added to those events by later writers ; but, in the account Gregory of Tours gives us of them, nothing occurs that to us seems childish, to use father Daniel's expression, or incredible. Gregory of Tours is not accountable, and much less are we, for the fables which later writers have been pleased to add to his relation. Is an event related, we may say, by a contemporary writer, to be deemed fabulous, because others, who wrote after, have added to it several fabulous circumstances ? How many uncontested events have been thus disfigured, and turned into fables ? As for the silence of the contemporary writers, on which father Daniel lays great stress, there flourished at that time but two, viz. Idatius and Apollinaris Sidonius, of whom the former, who wrote in Spain, at that time over-run by the barbarians, was not perhaps informed of what passed among the Franks in Gaul, or, if he was, he did not think proper to insert in his chronicle an event that no-ways concerned his countrymen ; for, in the affairs of Gaul, he is so concise, as to give, in one line, an account of the most memorable battles and sieges that happened there. As for Sidonius, he did not write the history of those times, but only speaks of some events occasionally ; and his subject did not lead him to mention the deposing of Childeric by the Franks, and their chusing Ægidius raised to the imperial throne near an hundred years after the flight of Childeric. Walthomius, in his chronicle written in the year 810, reads Martianus instead of Mauritius ; but, according to the best chronologers, Martian died in 457, whereas Childeric either fled, or was driven out, in the year 461, and restored eight years after. Besides, Gregory of Tours, who lived in the next age, takes no notice of his journey to Constantinople ; and Aimonius expressly tells us, that he kept at a small distance from his own dominions, not doubting but Wiomald would, by some means or other, appease his subjects, and procure his return ^p. He was received in his own territories by the inhabitants of Barrum, who went out to meet him, and were, on that account, exempted from all tribute, which immunity they enjoyed gildius in his room. The only objection of any weight, that can be brought against the account of Gregory of Tours, is in point of chronology. It is certain, that Ægidius was magister militiæ when he was chosen by the Franks for their king ; that Majorianus was then acknowledged emperor in Gaul ; and that he was not acknowledged there before the latter end of the year 458. On the other hand it is no less certain, that Childeric was restored before the death of Ægidius ; and that Ægidius died in 464, the fifth year after the deposition of Childeric. Gregory of Tours therefore was certainly mistaken, in supposing Ægidius to have reigned eight years over the Franks. This mistake in point of chronology has induced father Daniel to question the whole account Gregory of Tours gives us of the deposition of Childeric, and election of Ægidius. But might not this mistake have crept into the text of our historian through the ignorance or carelessness of the transcribers ? It is owned by all the critics, that in several other passages the numbers have been altered by the transcribers ; and this they cannot help owning, without supposing Gregory of Tours to have contradicted himself. Why then may not the mistake as to the years of Childeric's exile be likewise charged upon the transcribers ? the more, as in all the antient manuscript copies the numbers are written in arithmetical figures, which are very liable to be altered. But allowing Gregory of Tours to have been mistaken as to the years Ægidius reigned, can we infer from thence, that he did not reign at all ? are not the best historians sometimes grossly mistaken in point of chronology ?

^p Aimon. l. i. c. 7.

enjoyed for many years. This Barrum Franchett will have to be Barrum ducis, or Bar le duc ; Belleforest to be Bar on the Seine ; while Uredius and Chiffletius take it to be a place in Brabant, or Holland ; for they are of opinion, that Childeric took shelter, not in Tungria, but in Thuringia, as we read it in Gregory of Tours ; but that writer, or his transcriber, often confounds these two countries (G). Whatever place he came from, he was soon followed by Basina the wife of king Bafinus, by whom he had been entertained during his exile. Some French historians would make us believe, that she abandoned her husband to follow Childeric, being taken with his good qualities. But the answer she gave to Childeric, when asked by him for what reason she had left her husband to follow him, seems to insinuate, though related by Gregory of Tours in the most modest terms, that she was not so much taken with his good qualities, as with the abilities of another kind, which she had discovered in him (H). Be that as it will, Childeric married her, and had by her Clodovæus, who succeeded him in the kingdom ⁹.

C L O D O -

⁹ Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 12.

(G) A modern critic (14) is of opinion, that the words Tungria and Thuringia were used, by those who transcribed the history of Gregory of Tours, as synonymous terms to express one and the same country, viz. that of Tongres. Morel, who in 1561, published the second edition of the history of Gregory of Tours, writes, that in an antient manuscript of that historian he found the following words : ‘ Dispargum which stands on the borders of the Tungrians or Thuringians ;’ and father Ruinart, a most accurate writer, quotes two manuscript copies of the history of Gregory of Tours, viz. that which was made use of by the first editor of that history, and another lodged in the abbey of Royaumont, in both which the Franks are said to have settled in Thuringia after they had passed the Rhine ; which evidently proves, that by Thuringia was meant Tungria, or the country of Tongres, lying on the Roman side of the Rhine ; for there they settled after having crossed that river.

(H) The words of Gregory of Tours are : ‘ His ergo regnantibus simul, Basina illa, quam supra memoravimus, relicto viro suo, ad Childericum venit. Qui cum solícite interrogaret, qua

(14) Dubos, hist. critic. vol. i. c. 7. p. 339.

CLODOVÆUS, called also Hludovicus, Ludovicus, Ludicin, and Clovis, was no sooner raised to the throne, than he began to think of enlarging his dominions, which, according to the best writers, extended only from the Wahal to the city of Tournay. That Childeric was, at his death, master of Tournay, cannot be questioned, since he was interred there; and on the other hand, we know for certain, that Clovis resided at Tournay during the first years of his reign^r. The kingdom, therefore, to which he succeeded, was bounded on the north by the Wahal; on the east by the city of Tongres, which belonged to another tribe of Franks, and was not reduced by Clovis till the tenth year of his reign, as Gregory of Tours tells us in express terms; on the south by the kingdom of Ragnacha-rius, who held Cambray; on the west by the kingdom of Chararic, commonly placed between the Escault and the ocean. Ragnacharius and Chararic were likewise kings of the Franks, but ruled over different tribes, and were quite independent of Clovis, as well as of each other. The other provinces of Gaul were held by the Romans, by the Visigoths, and by the Burgundians, who all lorded it over the unhappy natives. Clovis, resolved to enlarge his dominions, and perhaps, as his ambition knew no bounds, he being then but in the twentieth year of his age, aspiring Clodovæus:

Year after Christ 482.

S 2

at

^r Vide Du Ch. tom. i. p. 632.

qua de causa ad eum de tanta regione venisset, respondisse fertur; Novi, inquit, utilitatem tuam, quod sis valde strenuus; ideoque veni, ut habitem tecum. Nam noveris, si in transmarinis partibus aliquem cognovissem utiliorem te, expetissem utique cohabi-tationem ejus. At ille gaudens eam sibi conjugio copulavit.' Is not the meaning of these words, novi utilitatem tuam, &c. as plain as a modest writer could well make it, and very different from that which Dubos, in his critical history of the French monarchy, would obtrude upon us? viz. Because I know you are a man of honour, of courage, and worthy of my affections:
had there been a more deserving man in the world, I should have crossed the seas in quest of him, &c. (15). Is this speech consistent with the character of a woman who had broken her conjugal faith, and abandoned her husband to cohabit with another man?

(15) Idem ibid. vol. xi. c. 6. p. 86.

He makes war upon Syagrius.

Year after

Christ 487.

at nothing less than the monarchy of all Gaul, thought it advisable to begin with the Romans, who, by the downfall of the western empire, were reduced to the lowest ebb of power. Syagrius, the son of Ægidius, of whom we have spoken above, held the city of Soissons. He had succeeded his father in the government of that city, and perhaps had made himself absolute master of it during the anarchy which had prevailed in Gaul, upon the downfall of the western empire, since he is, by Gregory of Tours, distinguished with the title of kingⁱ. However that be, Clovis, being resolved to reduce that city, invited Chararic and Ragnacharius to assist him in the enterprize, which the latter readily did; but Chararic declined being any-ways concerned in that war, with a design, says Gregory of Tours, to join the prince who should prevail over the other^k. Clovis was no sooner joined by Ragnacharius, whom our historian calls his kinsman, than he set out on his march for Soissons, and arriving with his army in the neighbourhood of that city, he sent a messenger to Syagrius, offering him battle. Syagrius, accepting the challenge, marched into a neighbouring plain, where the two armies engaged. The combat lasted some time; but the Romans being in the end put to flight, Syagrius, from the field of battle, fled to Tholouse, and there took refuge at the court of Alaric king of the Visigoths; which Clovis no sooner understood, than he dispatched embassadors to Alaric, threatening to make war upon him, if he did not forthwith deliver up the fugitive Roman into his hands. Alaric, unwilling to provoke the king of the Franks, ordered Syagrius to be immediately delivered up to the embassadors; upon whose return he was, by Clovis's order, kept under close confinement, till that prince had reduced Soissons, and then privately beheaded^l. Clovis, now master of Soissons, transferred his royal seat from Tournay to that city. He afterwards waged several wars, says Gregory of Tours; and in the tenth year of his reign subdued the Thuringians, meaning without all doubt, the Tongrians; for Thuringia lay on the other side of the Rhine, at a great distance from his dominions, and separated from them by the countries which the Alemans held on one side of that river,

He defeats
Syagrius, and reduces Soissons.

ⁱ Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 27.
Tur. l. ii. c. 27.

^k Idem, ibid.

^l Greg.
^m Hincmar, in vit. S. Remig.

river, and the Franks, called Ripuarians, on the other, who had a king of their own. It is therefore passed all doubt, ^{He makes} that the country, said by our historian to have been sub- ^{himself mas-} dued by Clovis, in the tenth year of his reign, was the ^{ter of the ci-} city of Tongres, and its territory, which bordered on the ^{ty and terri-} territory of Tournay, and opened a free communication ^{gry of Ton-} between his dominions, and those of Sigebert king of the Ripuarians, and his kinsman; for the Ripuarians held Cologne, and were masters of the country between the Lower Rhine, and the Lower Meuse. Tongria when reduced by Clovis, was held according to the most probable opinion, by another tribe of Franks, who had settled there some time before. The same year, Clovis married Clo- ^{He marries} thildis, or Chrothechildis, as she is called by Gregory of ^{Clothildis.} Tours, the daughter of Childeric, king of the Burgundians, who had been murdered some years before by his brother Gundebald, as we shall relate in the history of that nation. Of this marriage, Gregory of Tours gives us the following account: The ambassadors, whom Clovis had often occasion to send to the court of the king of the Burgundians, during their abode there, took particular notice of a young woman named Chrothechildis, and being charmed with her beauty, her wisdom, and her engaging behaviour, and at the same time informed that she was of the blood royal, upon their return home, they gave the king a high idea of her good qualities, which made so deep an impression on his mind, that, soon after, he sent ambassadors to king Gundebald asking her in marriage. Gundebald, afraid to disoblige the king of the Franks, granted him his request, delivering the young princess to his ambassadors, who immediately conveyed her to their master. The king was so taken with her beauty and amiable qualities, that he immediately married her, tho' he had already, by a concubine, a son named Theodoricⁿ. Thus Gregory of Tours: but the epitomiser of the history of the Franks, and the author of the Gests of the Franks, add several circumstances which seem to have been unknown to our historian. The account they give us is as follows: Clovis, desiring to marry Clothildis, often sent ambassadors to the court of the king of the Burgundians; but these finding no opportunity to speak to her, he charged a Roman by name Aurelian, to wait upon her,

S 3

and

ⁿ Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 28.

and by conversing with her, to discover her real sentiments, delivering to him one of his rings by way of credentials. Aurelian, the better to execute his commission, went in the disguise of a beggar to Geneva, where Clothildis then resided with her sister. The two young princesses, who spent most of their time in acts of charity and hospitality, entertaining all the poor who came to the place, received Aurelian among the rest, and conducted him to the place where they used to wash the feet of the poor pilgrims and beggars, according to a custom which then prevailed, as it still does in some places of Italy. This gave Aurelian an opportunity of speaking to Clothildis, and letting her know, that he had been sent by the king of the Franks, who being informed of her good qualities by his ambassadors, begged she would give him leave to ask her in marriage. At the same he delivered to her the ring as a certain token of his embassy. The young princess received the ring with great joy, and returning thanks to the king for the good opinion he entertained of her, and the honour he designed her, readily consented to the proposal; but at the same time desired Aurelian to acquaint his master, that unless the whole was concluded before the return of Aridius, who had been sent to Constantinople by her uncle Gundebald, he would leave no stone unturned to put a stop to their intended marriage. In taking her leave of the ambassador, she pulled off her ring, and delivering it to him, desired him to present it, in her name, to the king, as a token of the affection and esteem she had for so great a prince. Aurelian, returning without delay to Soissons, delivered the ring to Clovis, acquainting him at the same time with the answer Clothildis had given him. Hereupon the king immediately dispatched ambassadors to Gundebald, demanding his niece in marriage. The king of the Burgundians was not inclined to the match, but nevertheless, through fear of disobliging so powerful a prince, granted him his request; so that Clothildis was immediately betrothed to Clovis, and after that ceremony was over, delivered to the ambassadors, to be conveyed by them to their master. The ambassadors set out without loss of time; but were scarce gone, when news was brought, that Aridius was landed at Marseilles. Hereupon Clothildis, quitting her chariot, mounted on horseback, and pursuing her journey with all possible expedition, arrived at the place where Clovis waited for her. In the mean time Aridius, who, on his landing, had been informed of the marriage, marriage, flew to court, and by remonstrating to the king the dangerous consequences of such a match, viz. that Clothildis, mindful of the murder of her father and brothers, would one day or other, prevail upon her husband to revenge their death, persuaded Gundebald, by whose orders they had been assassinated, to dispatch immediately a body of troops, with orders to bring back Clothildis. But she had already reached Villers, a place in the territory of Troyes, and in that city Clovis waited for his royal bride. However, the soldiers sent by Gundebald seized on her chariot and equipage. Thus the epitomizer of the history of the Franks^a, with whom the author of the Gests of the Franks agrees in the main^o; but as Gregory of Tours, whom we may call a contemporary writer, takes no notice of the particulars related by them, we cannot help looking upon them as doubtful, if not fabulous.

A Few years after, the Alemans, one of the most powerful nations in Germany, having passed the Rhine, broke unexpectedly into Germania Secunda, held at that time by the Franks, called Ripuarians, who had Sigebert for their king. That prince drew together what forces he could; but not finding himself in a condition to make head against so numerous an army with his own troops, he had recourse to Clovis, who readily joined him, being glad to lay hold of every opportunity that offered to signalize himself, and inure his men to the fatigues and dangers of war. The two kings, after their conjunction, marched against the Alemans, and engaged them at a village called Tolbiacum, thought to be the present Zulpick, about twelve miles from Cologne. The battle proved very bloody, both parties exerting their utmost efforts; but in the end, king Sigebert receiving a wound in his leg, of which he ever after continued lame, the Franks began to give ground; which Clovis no sooner perceived, than, lifting up his eyes to heaven, says Gregory of Tours, he implored the assistance of Jesus Christ, who, Clothildis had often told him, was the son of God, and never failed to assist those in distress who put their confidence in him, promising at the same time to believe in him, and be baptized, if by granting him a victory, he convinced him of his divine power. He had scarce made this promise, when the Alemans, notwithstanding the ad-
He over throws the Alemans.
vantage

S 4

^a Hist. Fran. epit. v. 19, 20.^o Gest. Fran. c. 11.

vantage they had gained, betook themselves to a precipitous flight. In this battle their king was killed, and with him most of their chief men ; which so disheartened them that they submitted to Clovis, and acknowledged him for their king. Thus Gregory of Tours ^p ; whose words have induced some to believe, that the whole nation of the Alemans submitted to the king of the Franks. But that writer must be understood only of such of that nation as had been formerly allowed to continue in the places of Gaul which they had seized. For it is certain that numbers of them had recourse to Theodoric king of Italy, who took them under his protection, and permitted them to settle in Rhoetia, and Noricum, then subject to him. Nay, that prince wrote to the inhabitants of Noricum, enjoining them to supply such of the Alemans, as were not willing to continue there, with fresh oxen to draw their waggons, taking, in exchange, their oxen fatigued with so long a march ^q. This letter has been transmitted to us by Cassiodore, with another which Theodoric wrote to Clovis, exhorting him to give over pursuing the flying Alemans, especially those who had taken refuge in his dominions ^r. In this letter, after congratulating the king of the Franks on the victory he had gained over so numerous and warlike a nation, and entreating him to spare the remains of that unhappy people, he tells him, that he had sent embassadors to impart to him, by word of mouth, several affairs of the greatest importance, and disclose to him some secrets, which it greatly concerned him to know. These secrets perhaps related to the conditions of the treaty, which about this time the king of the Burgundians concluded with the emperor Anastasius ; and it is not improbable, that Theodoric, who was at variance with the emperor, should propose now that offensive alliance against the Burgundians, which they concluded three years after, as we shall relate anon. Clovis, it seems, at the request of Theodoric, who had married his sister Audesleda, gave over pursuing the Alemans ; of whom part settled in the provinces of Rhoetia and Noricum, and part was, by Theodoric, transplanted into Italy, as appears from the panegyric of Ennodius on that prince, where he tells us, that, under Theodoric, Italy was guarded by the Alemans, who had formerly plundered it ; and that unhappy nation, after having lost their king, and been driven from their native country, were become the subjects of a generous and good-

^p Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 30.
ep. 50.

Idem ibid ep. 51.

^q Cassiodor. var l. ii.

good-natured prince, who had given them a far better country than that which they had been forced to abandon^s. Such of the Alemans, as settled in Rhoetia and Noricum, continued subject to the kings of Italy, till the Ostrogoths yielded to the children of Clovis whatever they held out of that country. From what we have said, it appears, that the Alemans received a total overthrow at Tolbiac, since, after the battle, they were quite driven out of their country by the two confederate kings of the Franks. The Alemans in Gaul, masters of a considerable part of the present Switzerland, submitted to Clovis, as we have hinted above, and acknowledged him for their king. Some of that nation had likewise settled in Alsace, and of that country too Clovis made himself master on this occasion, and likewise of the city of Basle; for, among the bishops who subscribed to the first council of Orleans, held by order of Clovis in 511, we find the name of Adelphius bishop of Basle; and it is well known, that bishops were not allowed, in those days, to assist at councils that met in places not subject to their prince.

Clovis no sooner returned from pursuing the fugitives, than he acquainted the queen with the vow or promise he had made, acknowledging at the same time, that the victory he had acquired was owing to it. Hereupon Clothildis, without loss of time, dispatched a messenger to Remigius bishop of Rheims, acquainting him with what had happened, and entreating him to hasten to court, in order to instruct the king in the mysteries of the christian religion. Clovis received the holy prelate with the greatest marks of respect and esteem; but being informed, in the several private conferences he had with him, that he must, in the first place, renounce the worship of the gods he had till then adored, he told the bishop, that he was ready to comply with his instructions, but being afraid, lest the Franks, attached to the religion of their forefathers, might thence be prompted to revolt, he begged leave to acquaint them first with his design, and to try, whether the arguments that had convinced him, might not be of equal weight with them. Having therefore, with this view, assembled the Franks, he no sooner began to speak, then they all cried out, with one voice, We renounce the worship of the false gods, and are ready to acknowledge the God whom the bishop of Rheims preaches. Hereupon the holy prelate transported with joy, ordered every thing to be got ready for the baptizing of the king, and the ceremony was performed with the greatest

And makes himself master of the country they possessed in Gaul.

The conversion and baptism of Clovis. Year after Christ 497.

^t Ennod. in pan. Theodora greatest pomp and solemnity. When the bishop was upon the point of administering the sacrament, he addressed the king thus : ‘ Bow your head with humility, O Sicambrian ; adore what you formerly burnt, and burn what you formerly adored.’ Remigius, adds Gregory of Tours, from whom we have copied this whole account, was, by all his contemporaries, held in great veneration for the holiness of his life ; nay, he was even said to have raised one from the dead ^t. With Clovis were baptized, according to the same writer, three thousand of his subjects able to bear arms, and one of his sisters, named Albofleda. At the same time, another sister, by name Lantildis, renounced the errors of Arius, and was received into the church. Albofleda died a few days after she had been baptized ; and upon her death Remigius wrote a consolatory letter to the king, whereof the beginning has been transmitted to us by Gregory of Tours ^u, and some fragments of it gathered from other writers by Du Chesne ^w, to whom we refer the reader. Clovis was not baptized during the solemnity of Easter, as Hincmar ^x and Flodoard have written ^y ; but in that of Christmas, as is evident from the letter which Alcimius Avitus bishop of Vienne wrote to Clovis, congratulating him upon his conversion. The epitomizer of the history of the Franks tells us, that Remigius having preached to Clovis, and those who had been baptized with him, a sermon on the passion of our Saviour, the king, in hearing him, could not forbear crying out, ‘ If I had been there with my Franks, that should not have happened ^z.’ Before his conversion, he had two sons by Clothildis, of whom the eldest named Ingomer, was baptized, by the care of his pious mother, but died a few days after ; which greatly provoked the king, who ascribed his death to his being offered to the God of Clothildis, not to those of his forefathers. However, the zealous queen caused the other likewise, by name Clodomire, to be baptized, who soon after was seized with a dangerous distemper, which incensed the king anew against his consort ; but the child recovered, and the queen never ceased to preach to her husband the true God, whom she adored, till, with the miraculous assistance of Heaven, she brought ^t Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 31.

Ch. tom. i. p. 849.
hist. eccl. Rem. l. i. c. 13.

^x Hincmar. vit. Remig.

^z Hist.

^u Idem ibid.

Franc. epit. c. 22.

^w Du.

^y Flod.

brought about his conversion ^a. From the whole account of the conversion and baptism of Clovis, which we have copied from Gregory of Tours, the reader must conclude him to have been, in religious matters, a very credulous writer ; but, credulous as he is, he makes no mention of the holy phial said to have been sent from heaven, wherein ^{The holy phial.} is kept the oil with which the French kings are still anointed at their coronation. Of this phial Hincmar gives us the following account : Clovis and St. Remigius were no sooner entered into the baptistery, than all the avenues to it were so filled with the croud, that the ecclesiastic, who carried the holy oil, and was not gone in with them, could by no means find a way through the multitude. Hereupon the holy prelate, not finding the oil when he was to use it, had recourse to heaven, begging with a short, but a fervent prayer, that the want of what was necessary to accompany the ceremony might be supplied by some means or other. He had scarce done, when a dove, exceeding the very snow in whiteness, was seen carrying a phial filled with oil ; which the bishop had no sooner received, than the dove disappeared, and was never afterwards seen. With this oil Remigius anointed the king ; and the odour it spread was sweet beyond imagination or expression ^b. Of all this, not a word in Gregory of Tours, tho' a great believer of miracles ; which plainly shews, that in his time this fable was not yet invented. It is to be observed, that Clovis was at this time the only catholic prince in the Roman world. Anastasius, emperor of the east, was greatly inclined to the doctrine of Arius. Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths in Italy, Alaric, king of the Visigoths, master of almost all Spain, and of the third part of Gaul, the king of the Burgundians, and the king of the Vandals in Africa, were avowed and zealous followers of that heresiarch : as for the other kings of the Franks settled in Gaul, they were still pagans. No wonder therefore, that not only Anastasius II. then bishop of Rome, but several other bishops, though subject to different princes, wrote to the king of the Franks, congratulating him on his conversion, and testifying their joy for so happy an event ^c.

BUT

^a Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 29.

^b Hincmar. in vit. Remig.

^c Vide le Cointe ann. eccles. Franc. tom. i. p. 194. & epist. Avit. ep. 41. edit. Sermond. p. 94.

The Armorici submit to Clovis.

The end of the Roman dominion in Gaul.

Year after Christ 498

Clovis enters into an offensive alliance with Theodoric, king of Italy, against the king of the Burgundians.

BUT to return to the military achievements of Clovis : the year after his conversion, the Armorici, that is, the people dwelling on the coast of the ocean between the Loire and the Seine, who had shaken off the Roman yoke, and formed themselves into a republic, submitted of their own accord to Clovis, and became one nation with the Franks^d. Hereupon the Roman troops, that were still in Gaul, finding themselves surrounded on all sides by the enemies of the empire, and not caring to serve under the Arians, says Procopius, that is, the Burgundians and Visigoths, capitulated with the Franks and Armorici, and, surrendering to them the places they held, entered into their service. These adds Procopius, still observe both in their attire, and manner of marching and fighting, the antient customs and discipline of the Romans^e. Thus ended the dominion of the Romans in Gaul, after they had been masters of that country for the space of five hundred years and upwards, which was now held by three different nations, viz. the Franks, the Visigoths, and the Burgundians. To the above-mentioned union of the Armorici with the Franks, Procopius, who flourished soon after, ascribes the great power which the Franks had already attained in his time (H). The year after the union of the Armorici with the Franks,

^d Procop. bell. Goth. c. 12.

^e Idem ibid.

(H) The union of the Armorici with the Franks is founded chiefly on the authority of Procopius ; but, in the text of that writer, the people who submitted to the Franks, are called Arborici. However, all those, who have had occasion to speak of this event, read as we have done, Armorici instead of Arborici (1) ; except father Daniel, who, contrary to the opinion of all those who wrote before him, maintains, that in the reign of Clovis there was a people in Gaul called Arborici. But, in the first place, that nation was utterly unknown to Cluverius, who, speaking of them, expresses himself thus : Who these Arborici were, no writer has been yet able to discover (2). Father Daniel, in the map which he has prefixed to his history, places them between the Meuse, the ocean, and the Escault. But he is therein certainly mistaken ; for in none of the notitia's, or descriptions of Gaul, which have reached our times, and

(1) Vales. rer. Franc. tom. i. p. 278. & not. Gall. p. 44. Vignier ancien état de la petite Bretagne. Cluver. Germ. l. ii. c. 20. p. 226. (2) Cluver. ibid.

Franks, Theodoric, king of Italy, being resolved to make war on the Burgundians, in order to recover that part of Gaul which was held by them, and had been formerly subject to Rome, entered into an offensive alliance with Clovis, at that time the most powerful prince in Gaul. In virtue of this treaty, they were to fall upon the king of the Burgundians, at the same time, and, if attended with success, divide his dominions between them: if either of them should fail to take the field at the time appointed, and the other, by that means, be obliged to fight alone against the king of the Burgundians, he, who had not fulfilled his engagement, should pay to the other a certain sum, and not receive any share of the conquered king's dominions, till he had paid it^f. Of this war Gregory of Tours gives us the following account: At this time Gundebald and his brother Godegiselus reigned over

^f Idem ibid.

and were composed under the last emperors, mention is made of the Arborici, who must have been a very numerous people, though all the other nations inhabiting Gaul, and Belgica Secunda, are there minutely described. Apollinaris Sidonius, Salvianus, and Avitus, frequently enumerate the various nations that, in the fifth century, were settled in Gaul; but no mention is made of the Armorici by any of them. Besides, if the Arborici had dwelt in the country allotted them, by father Daniel, on the most distant borders of Belgica Secunda, how could their joining the Franks oblige, as we read in Procopius, the Roman troops, who guarded the Loire, to capitulate with Clovis? for these reasons, all those who have had occasion to speak of the Amorici, even after father Daniel published the first volume of his history, have read Armorici instead of Arborici; nay, Hertius (3), Eccard (4), and father Lobineau (5), cannot help expressing great surprise, that such an able writer as father Daniel should be guilty of so gross a mistake. Had he read Procopius, says Eccard, with more attention, he would himself have been convinced of his error. In the same passage we find, in the text of Procopius, Eridianus instead of Rhodanus, which mistake, as well as that of Arborici instead of Armorici, ought to be charged upon the transcribers, and not to the author, who had lived too long in Italy not to know, that the Po was a river of that country, and not of Gaul.

(3) Hert. notit. regn. Franc. veter. c. 3.

Franc. l. & Rip. p. 208.

p. 16.

(4) Eccard leg.

(5) Lobineau hist de Bretagne,

He defeats
Gundebald.
Year after
Christ 500.

over the Burgundians who were masters of the countries lying on the Rhône, and the Saone, and of the province of Marseilles. Both princes were Arians, as well as their subjects. However, as the two brothers were at variance, Godegiselus privately concluded an alliance with Clovis, whose troops were in great repute. The articles of this treaty were : that Godegiselus should, by some means or other, get the whole power into his hands, and thereupon pay an annual tribute to the king of the Franks. Pursuant to this agreement, Clovis took the field, and in an hostile manner entered the dominions of Gundebald, who immediately dispatched a messenger to his brother, of whom he did not entertain the least jealousy or suspicion, entreating him to march without delay to his assistance, which Godegiselus promised to do ; but, when the two armies joined battle, instead of affording him the promised assistance, he fell unexpectedly upon his brother's troops, who, finding themselves attacked at the same time in the front and the rear, betook themselves after a faint opposition, to a precipitous flight. This battle was fought at Divio, now Dijon, on the Ousche ; and from thence Gundebald, upon the defeat of his army, fled to Avenio, now Avignon, and shut himself up in that city. Upon his flight Godegiselus seized on his dominions, and caused himself to be acknowledged at Vienne, the capital of his brother's kingdom *. Clovis pursued the fugitive king to Avignon, and laid close siege to that city, with a design to take him prisoner, and afterwards dispose of him as he and Godegiselus should think proper. But in the mean time Aredius, or Aridius, one of Gundebald's ministers, a person of extraordinary parts, and greatly attached to his master's interest, pretending to have abandoned him upon some disgust, went over to Clovis, and being received by him with the greatest marks of esteem, he prevailed upon him by degrees, with arguments drawn from the uncertainty of fortune, to raise the siege of a place which he said was impregnable, and content himself with a yearly tribute, which Gundebald readily agreed to pay him. Clovis was no sooner returned to his dominions, than Gundebald, having assembled what forces he could, marched with all possible expedition to Vienne, where Godegiselus then resided, and, having got into the town, with a chosen body of men, through an aqueduct, at his first appearing, struck the king and the garrison garrison with such terror, that, believing the enemy master of the city, they only thought of saving themselves in the churches. But Godegiselus was, by his brother's orders, killed in his asylum, with a bishop who had there taken refuge with him. A small body of Franks, who had remained with Godegiselus, withdrew into a tower, with a design to defend themselves there; but being in the end forced to submit, Gundebald only disarmed them, and sent them thus disarmed to Alaric king of the Visigoths. But as for the senators, and chief men, who had declared for Godegiselus, he ordered them all to be put to death. Gundebald, continues our historian, being, by the death of his brother, become master of the whole country now known by the name of Burgundy, published a new code, containing several laws in favour of his Roman subjects, that they might be no longer oppressed by the Burgundians^h.

* Greg. tur. l. ii. c. 32.

GREGORY of Tours, in his account of this war, has omitted, as the reader must have observed, such events as belonged to the history of the Ostrogoths; and, on the other hand, Procopius takes very little notice of those that belonged to the history of the Franks. The former writer thought, perhaps, an account of what the Ostrogoths performed in, or acquired by this war, foreign to his purpose; and the latter contented himself with a detail of those events in which the Ostrogoths, were chiefly concerned; since, in this war, they made themselves masters of several cities in Gaul, which they still held, when Justinian, whose wars with them he describes, undertook to subdue them. The account he gives, after the conclusion of the above-mentioned treaty between the Franks and the Ostrogoths, is as follows: Pursuant to this treaty, the king of the Franks took the field with a numerous army, and entered the territories of the Burgundians in an hostile manner. Theodoric, on the contrary, pretending to hasten his warlike preparations, ordered them privately to be carried on slowly, with a design to wait the issue of the first engagement between his ally and the king of the Burgundians. When the troops were, in the end, ready to take the field, he gave private orders to his generals to advance with slow marches till such time as they had received certain intelligence of the success that had attended the Franks. If the Franks had defeated the Burgundians, the Ostrogoths were to advance with all possible expedition; dition ; but, to halt, and wait for further orders, if the Burgundians had gained the advantage. While the Ostrogoths, therefore, were yet on their march, the Franks alone engaged and put to flight the common enemy, pursuing them to the farthest borders of their country, where they had several strong-holds, in which they shut themselves up, abandoning the rest of their territories to the conquerors. Upon the first news of this victory, Theodoric's army marched, with all possible expedition, to join the Franks, and, alledging the badness of the roads as an excuse for their coming so late, offered to the king of the Franks the sum, which, agreeable to the treaty, they had forfeited by their delay. Clovis accepted the offer, and upon his receiving the money, divided with the Ostrogoths, pursuant to the same treaty, the country he had conquered. The conduct of Theodoric on this occasion, continues our historian, was a strong proof of his wisdom and prudence, since, without exposing the lives of his subjects, and only by paying a small sum, he acquired one half of the enemy's countryⁱ, viz. the city of Marseilles, and its territory, with all the countries lying between the Durance, the Alps, the Mediterranean, and the Lower Rhône.

^h Idem, c. 33.

SOME writers are of opinion, that Gregory of Tours and Procopius speak of different wars. Clovis, according to them, waged war with the Burgundians at two different times. In the first of these wars he had Godegiselus, the brother of Gundebald, for his ally, and in the second, Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths. But this does not at all agree with what we read in Marius Aventicensis, a contemporary writer, who, speaking of the war in the year 500, in which Gundebald was defeated in the neighbourhood of Dijon, that is, of the war described by Gregory of Tours, concludes thus : Gundebald therefore, having recovered, upon the death of his brother, his own dominions, and likewise made himself master of those that had belonged to Godegiselus, governed them with great prosperity to the day of his death^k, This we cannot persuade ourselves the bishop of Avanches would have written, had Gundebald, after his restoration in 500, been engaged in such an unsuccessful war as that of which Procopius speaks. However, we cannot help thinking it very strange, that Procopius should not mention the ⁱ Procop. bell. Goth. l. i. c. 12.

ad ann. 500.

^k Marius Aventic. chron.

the alliance of the Franks with Godegiselus, nor Gregory of Tours, that of the Ostrogoths with the Franks. 'Tis true, both historians agree in some particulars, viz. that in the very beginning of this war a decisive battle was fought, in which the Burgundians were utterly defeated by the Franks; and that, after their defeat, they took refuge in their fortified towns, situated on the most distant borders of their country. Besides, it appears, from the acts of a conference held at Lions, on religious matters, in the year 499, that Clovis, who was then preparing to make war on the Burgundians, had already entered into an alliance with a prince who was then at war with them. This ally could neither be Godegiselus nor Alaric king of the Visigoths; for the alliance of the former with the king of the Franks was kept secret till the battle of Dijon, fought, according to the bishop of Avanches¹, and the best chronologers, the following year 500. As for Alaric, he was not at war with the Burgundians; since their king sent, as we have related above, the Franks, whom he had taken at Vienne, to be kept by him. As it appears, therefore, from hence, that Clovis had Theodoric for his ally in the war which he waged with the Burgundians in 500, we may well suppose Procopius to have spoken of this war without recurring to a second. To conclude; if Gregory of Tours and Procopius speak of different wars, they are both highly to blame, the former for taking notice of the second war, and the latter for being quite silent as to the first. Clovis was so far from revenging the death of Godegiselus his friend and ally, that, on the contrary, he restored to Gundebald, no doubt in virtue of some treaty unknown to us, that part of his dominions which had fallen to his share. As for Theodoric, he kept the city of Marseilles, and some adjacent places, which Gundebald perhaps yielded to him, in virtue of a treaty marriage concluded this year between Sigismund the son of Gundebald, and Ostrogotha one of Theodoric's daughters.

CLOVIS had scarce concluded a peace with the Burgundians, when, some differences arising between him and Alaric king of the Visigoths, both princes began to prepare for war; which Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, no sooner understood, than he interposed his good offices, and offered his mediation, sending both to them, and to the Burgundians, the Heruli, the Varni, and the Thuringians, Clovis and Alaric quarrel. Theodoric interposes His letters to several princes on this subject.

¹ Idem ibid.

letters on that subject, which are still to be seen in Cassiodore^m. He advises Alaric not to be too confident on the reputation of his Visigoths, for the great things formerly achieved by them ; but bids him consider what an alteration long peace and idleness may have wrought in them : he tells him, that passion is a bad counsellor, and not only prompts men to take pernicious resolutions, but to make choice of the worst means to put them in execution ; that war ought to be looked upon as the last resource, and never ought to be entered into by princes, till all other methods of obtaining what is due to them in justice have proved unsuccessful : he therefore exhorts him to forbear all hostilities against the king of the Franks till the return of the ambassadors, whom he designed to send to that prince with an offer of his mediation, in order to prevent either of the two princes, so nearly allied to him, from aggrandizing himself at the expence of the other. He closes his letter thus : It is not to revenge the blood of your fathers, or to recover part of your dominions unjustly seized and detained by either of you, that you take arms against each other, but only on account of some unguarded words ; so that your differences may be easily composed, if not heightened by unseasonable hostilities. Give me leave, therefore, to acquaint Clovis, before you come to an open rupture, that he shall have me too for his enemy, if he makes war upon you. When justice speaks to princes with a sword in her hand, they readily hearken to her. We have therefore dispatched ambassadors to you, who will farther acquaint you, by word of mouth, with our intention. We have ordered them to repair afterwards to the courts of the king of the Burgundians, and of such other princes as you shall think proper, and to act there pursuant to the instructions they shall receive from you. Above all things, take care you be not the first in committing hostilities ; lest you should incur the hatred which all men bear to the violators of treaties. Persuade yourself, that we are so far from sowing the seeds of discord among our neighbours, in order to take advantage of their misfortunes, that we shall look upon those, who fall upon you, as a common enemy, and act accordinglyⁿ. In his letter to Luduin, for so he calls Clovis, he tells that prince, that he cannot but wonder he should be so easily provoked, and, upon so slight an occasion,

^m Cassiodor. variar. l. ii. ep. 3.

ⁿ Idem ibid. ep. 1.

cation, make war upon Alaric, being uncle to his wife Theodogotha ; that their common enemies wished for nothing so much as to see the Franks and Visigoths weakening and destroying each other : he bids him consider, they are both kings of powerful nations, and in the flower of their age ; and therefore that they ought to be upon their guard against evil counsellors, lest they should, by rashly entering into a war, bring their kingdoms to the brink of ruin. He proposes the mediation of the neighbouring princes, and advises him to sheath his sword, which he could not in honour see drawn by either of them : he concludes by threatening to make war upon the first, whether Luduin or Alaric, who should commit hostilities against the other ; and by assuring both, that the advice he gave them proceeded from the most sincere friendship, since none but a true friend, who was far from envying their prosperity, would advise them as he had done. In his letter to Gundebald, he tells that prince, that he thinks himself bound in duty to moderate the ardour of two young princes, whose conduct is condemned by all men of experience and prudence ; that they ought to hearken to those, who by their age and experience, are intitled to advise them ; that he cannot suffer two princes, who are both nearly allied to him to destroy each other, and therefore is resolved to declare against him, who shall first commit hostilities : he adds, that he has dispatched ambassadors to him, with orders to repair afterwards to the court of the king of the Franks, with the deputies of the other princes his friends and allies, to negotiate an accommodation between the contending parties. He closes his letter with advising the king of the Burgundians to act in concert with him, and do all that lies in his power to prevent a war, which, should they be remiss in their good offices, the world will believe to have been under-hand kindled by them. In these letters Theodoric pretends to stand quite neuter, and to have taken no other resolution, but that of declaring against the aggressor, whether Clovis or Alaric ; but in the letter he wrote to the three brothers, Hermanafred, Baderic, and Berthier, who at that time reigned jointly over the Heruli, the Varni, and the Thuringians, he betrays great partiality for Alaric, and no small prejudice against Clovis. It was couched in the following terms : The proud are detested by Heaven, and it is incumbent upon every man to curb their arrogance. He who seeks to oppress a people, whom every nation would be glad to have for neighbours, shews but too plainly, that he only wants an opportunity of treating all other princes in the like manner. A prince, who pays no regard to the laws of equity, thinks every thing lawful when he has been once attended with success in an unjust attempt : such a prince ought to be abhorred by all mankind. It behoves therefore you, whose valour is capable of stemming the most unbounded ambition, to prevent the execution of such iniquitous projects. Begin with joining your ambassadors to those whom king Gundebald and we have dispatched to the king of the Franks, in order to divert him from falling upon the Visigoths, and persuade him to pay due regard to the laws of equity, and right of nations. If he refuses to submit to the arbitration of so many powerful princes, let him be deemed the common enemy of mankind. And truly what else can a prince who is actuated by good principles, wish for, than to have such mediators, who readily take upon them to see justice done him, if he has been wronged ? To speak my sentiments openly ; a prince, who pays no regard to the law of nations, must necessarily be hatching dangerous projects, which may end in the ruin of other states. Let us therefore stem the torrent at its source, and cover the countries that are exposed to his ravages, lest they should feel, before they are aware, the direful effects of his fury. You remember, without all doubt, the many favours you have received at the hands of Euric, the father of Alaric, the magnificent presents he often sent you, the efforts he made, and the vast charge he was at, to prevent the neighbouring nations from making incursions into your territories. It is now time to repay to the son the good offices of the father. If the king of the Franks is suffered to aggrandize himself at the expence of his neighbours, the most distant nations will be no longer safe. These are the motives that have induced us to dispatch ambassadors to you, who will farther inform you of our sentiments by word of mouth, and to whom, after seeing their credentials, you may give intire credit. We exhort you therefore to enter into the measures we have taken to secure the publick tranquillity, and concern yourselves in what passes in the neighbouring countries, that you may not have a war in your own^e.

From

From these letters it appears, that Theodoric entertained no small jealousy of Clovis, and was greatly prejudiced against him. But the king of the Franks, not thinking it adviseable to break with the Visigoths at this juncture, forbore all hostilities till five years after, that is, till the year 507, and in the mean time, probably, consented to that interview with Alaric which Gregory of Tours speaks of : for, according to that historian, Alaric, alarmed at the conquests Clovis was daily making, dispatched ambassadors to him, inviting him to an interview. With this invitation Clovis readily complied ; so that the two princes met in an island formed by the Loire, over-against Amboise, a place in the territory of Tours. There they conferred, and having dined together, they parted, promising to live in friendship and amity with each other^p. This is all we find in Gregory of Tours concerning this interview. But to his account historians, who came after him, have added several particulars, which we look upon as fabulous, since they have not been mentioned by him ; namely, that Alaric laid snares for Clovis, which he happily escaped ; a circumstance that seems to have been invented to justify the war which Clovis made a few years after on Alaric, that is, in 507.

An interview between Clovis and Alaric

OF this war Gregory of Tours gives us the following account : In those days most people in Gaul were desirous of living under the dominion of the Franks, and, among the rest, Quintianus bishop of Rhodes ; which the Visigoths being well apprised of, they resolved to dispatch him, lest he should betray that city to them. But the holy prelate, receiving timely notice of their design, made his escape in the night, and retired into Auvergne. When Clovis heard of the treatment Quintianus had met with from the Visigoths, It grieves me, said he, turning to his people, that these Arians, should hold any thing in Gaul : let us march against them, and, with the assistance of heaven, make ourselves masters of the fine country they possess. His speech being received by all with loud acclamations, he began his march without loss of time, bending his route to Poitiers, where Alaric was. On his arrival at Vienne he found the enemy encamped on the opposite bank, and that river so swelled with the heavy rains, that had fallen for several days together, that it was not then fordable, nor could he Clovis makes war on the Visigoths.

T 3

attempt

^p Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 35. Vales. rer. Franc. l. vi. p. 291.

attempt to lay bridges over it, or convey his men in boats to the opposite bank, without exposing them to the greatest and almost inevitable dangers, the other side of the river being all along lined with the enemy's troops. This gave Clovis great uneasiness, who thereupon continued all night in prayer; and the next morning a hind of an extraordinary size was seen by the whole army to enter the river, and ford it, as if sent by Heaven on purpose to point out to the Franks the place where the Vienne, notwithstanding the depth of its waters, was fordable. The whole army followed their guide, and, having crossed the river without the loss of a man, encamped in sight of Poitiers. While he lay there, he observed, one night, a globe of fire over the church of St. Hilarius, in the city of Poitiers, darting rays towards his camp, and, as it were, inviting him to engage, without loss of time, the king of the Visigoths, who had his head-quarters in that city. Accordingly Clovis set out anew on his march, and, coming up with the enemy on plain of the Vouglé, about ten miles from Poitiers he gave them a total overthrow. In this battle most part of the enemy's troops were cut off, and the rest obliged to take refuge in their strong-holds and fortified towns. Clovis distinguished himself on this occasion in a most eminent manner and killed, as all writers agree, the king of the Visigoths with his own hand; but was himself in the utmost danger, two of Alaric's guards having attacked him while he was engaged with their king; but his breast-plate being proof against their lances, he happily escaped^a. Gregory of Tours does not mention the number of the dead; but only tells us, that the most of the inhabitants of Auvergne, who, under the conduct of Apollinaris, came to the assistance of Alaric, were cut off, and that among the dead there were many senators and persons of distinction (I). Of this battle Procopius gives us a very succinct account. That writer, after relating what we have inserted above, of the war which

Whom he defears, and kills their king.
Year after
Christ 507.

^a Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 37.

(I) Apollinaris, who commanded the troops of Auvergne, was the son of the celebrated Apollinaris Sidonius by Papianilla daughter to the emperor Avitus. Most of his men were killed in the battle of Vouglé; but he had the good luck to escape the general slaughter. He was a few years after chosen bishop of Auvergne, but lived only three months after his election.

which Clovis and Theodoric made jointly on the Burgundians in the year 500, continues thus: The power of the Franks being considerably increased, they no longer paid any regard to Theodoric, but free from all fear, made war upon Alaric king of the Visigoths. That prince was no sooner acquainted with their design, than he had recourse to Theodoric, who immediately put himself at the head of his army, and marched to the assistance of his son-in-law. In the mean time the Visigoths, upon intelligence that the enemy began to appear on the frontiers of Poitou, posted themselves under the walls of Poitiers, and kept some days within their trenches, waiting the arrival of the Ostrogoths. This highly affronted the Visigoths, who, thinking themselves a match for the Franks without the assistance of any other nation, forced Alaric in the end to engage the enemy, before he was joined by Theodoric. But the Visigoths were defeated, and great numbers of them killed on the spot, and, among the rest, their king^r. We are told by several writers, who lived in those times, or soon after, that Clovis had for his ally in this war, Gundebald king of the Burgundians^s; and from Gregory of Tours it appears that a body of Ripuarian Franks joined him before the battle, under the conduct of Chloderic, the eldest son of Sigebert king of that tribe^t. The battle of Vouglé was fought in the year 507, the emperor Anastasius being consul the third time in the east, and Venantius Decius in the west. As Clovis was chiefly prompted by his zeal for the catholic faith, to make war upon Alaric an Arian prince, no wonder that Gregory of Tours, an ecclesiastic and credulous writer, should believe and gravely relate the miracles that were said to have been wrought by Heaven in his favour, but were utterly unknown to Procopius.

CLOVIS, taking advantage of the consternation the Visigoths were in on the defeat of their army, and the death of the king, dispatched his son Theodoric, with part of his forces, to reduce the Albigeois, Rouergne, and Auvergne, which he did accordingly, making himself master of all the places in that tract between the confines of the Visigoths, and those of the Burgundians^u. Clovis with the rest

The Franks make themselves masters of several places.

T 4

^r Procop. bell. Goth. c. 12.

^s Du Ch. tom. 1. p. 231.

^t Greg. Tur. ibid.

^u Idem ibid.

They lay siege to Arles.

Which they are obliged to raise with great loss.

of the army, advanced to Carcassone, and laid close siege to that place ; but being informed, that Theodoric was drawing near at the head of his Ostrogoths, he thought it advisable to retire. However, he made himself master of that Part of Gaul which lies between the Rhône and the ocean, that is, of the two Aquitains ^w. After this he took up his winter-quarters in Bourdeaux, whither he caused great part of the treasures of Alaric to be conveyed from Toulouse. Early in the spring he took the field, and laid siege to Engouleme, which he soon reduced. Our credulous historian tells us, that the walls of that city fell as soon as Clovis appeared before them, and that thereupon the Visigoths evacuated that place, and the inhabitants with great joy took the oath of allegiance to the king of the Franks ^x. From Engouleme the Franks and the Burgundians, their allies in this war, advanced to the city of Arles, which it was of the utmost importance for them to reduce ; since, by the reduction of it, all communication would be cut off between the province which the Ostrogoths possessed in Gaul, and that part of the province of Narbonne, which was still held by the Visigoths. The Franks, upon their arrival before the place, attempted to make themselves masters of a bridge on the Rhône, and, by that means, of an island named Camargue, which is formed by the Rhône, on which Arles stands, dividing itself there into two arms. The Visigoths made a vigorous resistance, and in the end obliged the Franks to retire, who thereupon crossed the river in boats, and joined the Burgundians encamped on the opposite bank. The siege, of which we know but very few particulars, must have lasted some time ; for, from several antient records and letters, it appears, that the inhabitants suffered greatly by famine, and that the city was reduced to the utmost extremity ^y. But in the end the Franks were obliged, by the troops which Theodoric sent to the relief of the place, to abandon the enterprize, and retire. Of this event Cassiodore speaks thus : In the consulship of Venantius the younger and Celer, our sovereign Theodoric sent an army into Gaul, where the depredations of the Franks had occasioned great confusion. By this army the enemy was defeated, and put to flight, and great part ^w Procop bell. Goth l. i. c. 12.

37. ^y Du Ch. tom. i. p. 232.

^z Greg. Tur. l. ii. c.

part of the country reduced^z. From the life of Cæsarius, at that time bishop of Arles, which was written soon after the siege, it appears, that the Franks and Burgundians were closely pursued in their retreat by the Ostrogoths, who cut many of them in pieces, and took an incredible number of captives^a. In this war, Theodoric made himself master of Avignon, and some other places belonging to the Burgundians^b. But no mention is made by any of the antients of his making himself master of any town or country subject to the Franks.

THE following year 509, Hilba, one of Theodoric's general's, gained a memorable victory over the Franks, of whom thirty thousand, if Jornandes is to be credited^c, were killed upon the spot. Soon after, a peace was concluded between Theodoric and Clovis, whereof one of the articles was, that the Franks should keep the countries, which they had taken from the Visigoths^d; which inclines us to question the truth of what Jornandes writes concerning the memorable victory of the Ostrogoths over the Franks, the more as no mention is made of it by Procopius; nay, that writer tells us in express terms, that Theodoric yielded to the Franks the countries they had seized, after he had attempted in vain to drive them out of them. Amalaric, the grandson of Theodoric, was, at this time, king of the Visigoths; but, as he was yet under age, Theodoric, who was his guardian, exercised the same authority in the young prince's dominions, as he did in his own. By this peace, the power of the Visigoths was greatly impaired; for nothing now remained to them in Gaul but the city of Narbonne, and five or six other cities within the district of that metropolis. As for the Ostrogoths, they continued masters of the province they held before, lying between the Alps, the Mediterranean, the Rhone, and the Durance, and appropriated to themselves the city of Arles, for the charges they had been at in this war. A peace being thus concluded, Clovis repaired to Tours, and there received the ambassadors, who had been sent to him by the emperor Anastasius, with the ensigns and ornaments of the consulship; for that prince, hearing of his great exploits, thought it adviseable, by such a kind

The Franks defeated with great slaughter.

A peace concluded between them and the Goths.

Clovis honoured with the consulship, conferred on him by the emperor Anastasius.

^z Cassiod. fast. ad ann. 508. var. ep. 38. bell. Goth. l. i. c. 12.

^a Idem ibid.

^c Jorn. de reb. Get.

^b Idem,

^d Procop.

of empty respect, to gain his favour, the rather as Theodoric and the emperor were, at this time, at variance; for the Ostrogoths had seized on Pannonia, and the Romans, under the conduct of Romanus, were ravaging the coasts of Italy. Clovis, having received the presents sent him by the emperor, and the rescript of his election, appeared first in the great church of St. Martin, with the tunica trabeata, the chlamys, and the other ensigns of his new dignity, and from thence rode, with a diadem on his head, to the cathedral, throwing gold and silver to the populace, who, in great crouds, attended him. From that time forwards he was acknowledged, concludes Gregory of Tours, as consul and emperor^e. From which words ‘as consul,’ and from his name not being found in the fasti, some authors conclude, not the real and ordinary, but only the titular and honorary consulship to have been conferred upon him. In all the fasti, that have been transmitted to us, Boetius alone is marked as consul of the year 510. Boetius was one of Theodoric’s ministers, and is no less known by his writings, than by his misfortunes. To this objection some answer, that, in Gaul, all the public registers were kept at Arles, at that time subject to Theodoric, who, envying the king of the Franks his new dignity, would not suffer his name to be registered in the fasti. But this answer is of no weight, since the name of Boetius alone is to be found, not only in the fasti written in Gaul, but in all others. Baronius is of opinion, that only the titular or honorary consulship was offered him by Anastasius; and that he, thinking it below him to accept of such a dignity, refused the emperor’s offer. But this opinion evidently contradicts Gregory of Tours, who lived soon after Clovis, and must have been acquainted with several persons, who had seen that prince. Besides, even the honorary consulship was often conferred on the kings of the barbarians, and other very deserving and eminent persons, as is manifest from innumerable instances in history. From Tours, where Clovis had taken the ensigns of consul, he repaired to Paris, which city he chose for the usual place of his residence, and fixed the royal seat there^f. This metropolis was deemed of such importance, that the grandchildren of Clovis, in dividing his dominions among them, agreed, that it should not be comprised in any lot, but remain common

He fixes his royal seat at Paris.
Year after Christ 510.

to

^e Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 38.

^f Idem ibid.

to all ; and that none of them should enter it without the exprefs consent of the rest, on pain of forfeiting his whole share. Paris has been the seat of the French monarchy ever since the time of Clovis, who first resided there. The kingdoms, over which his grand-children reigned, after the division of his dominions, had each its particular metropolis ; but Paris still continued to be the metropolis of the whole monarchy.

CLOVIS had hitherto greatly enlarged his dominions at the expence of the Visigoths, as we have related above ; but now he formed a design of causing himself to be acknowledged king by the other tribes of the Franks, who were governed by their own princes, and, by adding their dominions and forces to his own, establish his kingdom so firmly in Gaul, that it should be out of the power of any other prince to overturn it. This he accomplished, and in the following manner, which no-ways redounds to his glory, though related by Gregory of Tours, his panegyrist rather than historian. While he resided at Paris, says that Clovis causes writer, by his emissaries he represented to Chloderic, the Sigebert and son of Sigebert, that his father was now stricken in years, his son Chlo- and moreover lame of the wound he had received at the deric to be battle of Tolbiac, assuring him at the same time, that he was resolved to espouse his cause, and maintain him on the throne after the death of his father. Chloderic, depending upon the promises of Clovis, suffered himself to be so blinded by his ambition, as to commit a parricide ; for one day, while Sigebert, who had passed the Rhine to take the air in the forest of Buchovia, was sleeping after dinner, he was dispatched by two assassins hired for that purpose by his son. A few days after, Chloderic was overtaken by the like fate ; for having acquainted Clovis with the death of his father, and desired him at the same time to send proper persons to take possession of the deceased prince's treasures, which were at his disposal, one of those, who were sent to view the treasures, (for Clovis declared he did not want them) bid Chloderic thrust down his hand, and search one of the deepest chests to the bottom ; but the prince had no sooner inclined his body, in compliance with his request, than, with his battle-ax, he gave him a blow on the head, which dashed out his brains. Clovis, upon the news of his death, flew to the place, where the murder had been committed ; and having assembled the subjects of Sigebert, he assured them, that he was no-ways privy

He is proclaimed king of the Ripu-arian Franks.

privy to the death either of the father or the son ; but that the father had been barbarously assassinated by the son, and the inhuman parricide, by a just punishment from Heaven, put to death by persons to him utterly unknown. He concluded his harangue by advising them, since they were destitute of a prince and leader, to chuse him for their king, assuring them, that he was ready to defend them against all their enemies at the expence of his own life. His speech was received with loud shouts of joy ; and he had scarce done, when he was, with one voice, proclaimed by the multitude king of their tribe^s. Thus Clovis made himself master of the dominions and treasures of Sigebert, adding the subjects of that unfortunate prince to his own. Gregory of Tours closes his account of the murder of Sigebert, and his son Chloderic, with the following words : Thus were the enemies of Clovis delivered daily up into his hands by Providence, because his intention was upright, and his conduct pleasing to Heaven^h. Some writers, to excuse Clovis, and indeed Gregory of Tours, for speaking thus of a prince guilty of such enormities, suppose Sigebert, and his son Chloderic, to have been the aggressors, and to have made some attempt upon the life of Clovis ; but of this not a word in Gregory of Tours, who would not, as we conceive, have passed over in silence such an attempt, since it might, in some degree, have extenuated, in the eyes of the world, the guilt of Clovis, in whose favour that writer was greatly prejudiced. Besides, let the provocation be ever so great, the stirring up a son to imbrue his hands in the blood of his father, must be highly criminal. We cannot therefore conceive what could induce our historian, after relating the murder of the father by the son at the instigation of Clovis, and of the son by the emissaries of that prince, to add what we have inserted above, viz. that Providence delivered his enemies into his hands, because his intention was upright, and his conduct pleasing to Heaven. By his upright intention the bishop meant perhaps his intention of gaining the Ripuarian Franks over to the christian religion ; for both they, and the two princes, were still pagans, whereas Clovis was a zealous professor of the catholic faith. This alone, as we apprehend,

^s Idem, l. ii. c. 40.

^h Idem iibid.

hend, could excuse, and, in the opinion of our historian, even sanctify, the most inhuman and unnatural murders. Be that as it will, Clovis, by the death of those two princes, became master of the whole country held by the Ripuarian Franks, which, according to the most probable opinion, extended west of the Rhine as far as the river Fuld, and on the east to the city of Chalons on the Marne, having Cologne for its metropolis. The country, lying west of the Rhine, was part of antient France, which the Ripuarians had defended against the efforts of the Thuringians, attempting to drive them from thence. Some time before the invasion of Attila, they crossed the Rhine, and, being allowed to settle in the parts of Gaul bordering on that river, they extended, by degrees, their territories to Chalons. In the life of St. Mesmin, the second abbot of Mici, in the diocese of Orleans, and contemporary with Clovis, which was written soon after his death, and likewise in a chronicle of the twelfth century, by one Hugo, we find a long account of the siege and reduction of Verdun by Clovis, which, according to the best chronologers, happened at this time, the inhabitants of that city, who were highly provoked at the treacherous murder of their princes, refusing to acknowledge him for their king, as we read in the above-mentioned chronicle. However they were in the end obliged to submit, as were several other cities, which had belonged to Sigebert, and were unwilling to receive Clovis for their king. The Ripuarian Franks seem to have been, next to the Salians, the most powerful of all the tribes of that nation settled in Gaul; for, even after they had acknowledged Clovis for their king, they continued a distinct tribe, separated from that of the Salians, had their own code of laws, and lived according to them, even under the kings of the second race. But all the other tribes, after they had submitted to Clovis, were incorporated, and became one people, with the tribe of the Salians, of which Clovis was king, no further mention being made in history of the Chatti, Chamavi, Ampsivarii, &c. whose names so often occur in the historians, who wrote before that time.

BUT to resume the thread of our history: Gregory of Tours, after relating in what manner Clovis united the dominions of Sigebert to his own, gives us an account of the tragical end of Chararic king of those Franks, who, according to the most probable opinion, had settled in the country comprising the present dioceses of Bologne, St. Omers, Bruges, and Ghent. Clovis, says our historian, marched afterwards against Chararic, who, refusing to join him against Syagrius, had waited the issue of the battle, in order to side with the conqueror. Chararic, and his son, fell into the snare, which Clovis had laid for them, who, having got them into his power, after ordering their hair to be cut, caused the father to be ordained priest, and the son deacon. As Chararic was one day bewailing his hard fate, to alleviate the grief of his disconsolate father; ‘In stripping us of our dignity, says he, and bereaving us of the ensigns of majesty, they have only stripped a green tree of its leaves, which will soon bud anew. May our enemy perish as soon as our hair will grow!’ Clovis, being informed of this discourse, and not doubting but they intended to let their hair grow, which was a mark of royalty, and, by hiring assassins to murder him, attempt the recovery of their kingdom, resolved to be before-hand with them, and accordingly ordered them both to be put to death. The two princes being thus dispatched, he seized on their treasures, made himself master of their country, and obliged their subjects, both Romans and Franks, to acknowledge him for their king k.

Clovis seized on the dominions of Chararic, king of another tribe of the Franks.

¹ Labb. bibl. tom. i. p. 87. Du Chesne, tom. i. p. 531. Spicil, tom. iii. p. 307.

He and his son are put to death by Clovis.

RAGNACHARIUS, king of Cambray, was now the only prince among the Franks, of whom Clovis entertained the least jealousy. He therefore resolved, in the next place, to fall upon him, being well apprised, that, if he were once removed, the kings of the other tribes would be no ways in a condition to make head against him, even with their united forces. Ragnacharius, as Gregory of Tours takes care to tell us, was a most wicked prince, abandoned to all manner of lewdness, not sparing his own relations, and entirely governed by a favourite minister named Faro, whom he treated rather as his equal than his servant. His debauched life, and the exorbitant power he allowed to his wicked favourite, who was the object of the public hatred, raised an universal discontent among his subjects. This Clovis resolved to improve to his advantage, and, in order to gain over the discontented party, he sent to the leading men among them bracelets of gilt brass, pretending

* Greg. Tur. l. ii. c 41.

ing they were of pure gold. When he found he could depend upon those, who had received his presents, he entered unexpectedly the dominions of Ragnacharius at the head of a powerful army ; which Ragnacharius no sooner understood, than he took the field with what troops he could assemble, in order to oppose the attempts of his rival. When Clovis drew near the place where he was encamped, he sent out some parties to reconnoitre the enemy ; but these, being gained over by Clovis, assured him on their return, that the troops he discovered at a distance were his own subjects, coming pursuant to his orders, to join him. In the mean time Clovis advanced, and, falling upon Ragnacharius before he could draw up the few troops he had with him, put him to flight. The unhappy prince attempted to make his escape ; but was taken together with his brother, Richarius, by the traitors he had about him, and both delivered up, with their hands tied behind their backs, to Clovis, who thus addressed Ragnacharius : ‘ It was base and scandalous in you to suffer one of our illustrious race to be thus bound, like a public malefactor. You ought to have avoided, at the expence of a thousand lives, such an ignominious treatment. He had scarce uttered these words, when, with a blow of his battle-ax, he cleaved his head, and laid him dead at his feet. In the same manner he treated Richarius, after upbraiding him with cowardice, for not defending his brother with that courage and resolution, which became one of his blood. In the mean time those, who had betrayed Ragnacharius, discovering that their bracelets were not of gold, complain thereof to Clovis, who is said to have returned them the following answer : ‘ You well know what you have done, and therefore ought not to complain, but deem it a great favour, that I suffer you to live.’ Clovis, continues our historian, was nearly related to Ragnacharius and Richarius, who had another brother named Regnomer, king of the Franks settled at Mans ; and him too Clovis caused to be murdered, making himself master of the dominions and treasures of the three brothers. By the murder of these, and several other princes, of whom, as they were his kinsmen, he entertained some jealousy, he extended his dominion all over Gaul. Having thus dispatched all the princes, who were any-ways related to him, he one day, in the presence of his nobles, bemoaned his condition, saying, ‘ That he was, in a manner, a stranger

He puts to death Ragnacharius, and the other kings of the Franks, and seizes on their dominions.

a stranger among his own people, having no kinsman to stand by him, in case he wanted his assistance. But this he said, not because he was concerned for their death, but to try whether any one would own himself for his relation, that he might dispatch him, as he had done the others¹. This is the account Gregory of Tours gives us of the manner, in which Clovis caused himself to be acknowledged king of all the tribes of the Franks settled in Gaul. Whether this intention could be upright, as that writer is pleased to express himself, and his conduct pleasing to Heaven, we leave our readers to judge.

He dies:
Year after
Christ 511.

CLOVIS did not long enjoy his new conquests; for he died soon after the reduction of the several tribes of Franks settled in Gaul. Clovis, says Gregory of Tours, having transacted these things, that is, having forced all the tribes of the Franks in Gaul to acknowledge him for their king, died soon after at Paris, and was buried there in the church of the holy apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, which had been built by him and queen Clothildes, or, as our historian styles her, Crothildes. He died in the forty-fifth year of his age, five years after the battle of Vouglé, having reigned thirty years. After his death, Clothildes retired into Touraine, and there passed the remaining part of her life at St. Martin's tomb^m. This is all we can find in Gregory of Tours concerning the death of Clovis. He left four sons behind him, viz. Theodoric, Clodomir, Childebert, and Clotharius. The three last he had by Clothildes, and the eldest by a concubine, before his marriage with that princess. Theodoric, at his father's death, had already a son named Theodebert, a youth of great expectationⁿ. As to the age of the other three, all we know is, that Clodomir the eldest was born before the battle of Tolbiac in 496, so that, at the time of his father's death, he must have been about seventeen. The four brothers divided their father's dominions equally among them. Theodoric reigned at Metz; Clodomir at Orleans; Clotharius at Soissons; and Childebert at Paris. Though these four kingdoms were rather members of one and the same monarchy, than four different monarchies, yet the princes were quite independent of each other, in the same manner as the kings of different tribes had been of Clovis.

S E C T.

¹ Idem ibid. c. 42.

^m Idem ibid. c. 43.

ⁿ Idem, l. iii. c. 1.

S E C T. VI.

The antient state of the Burgundians, Alemans, Heruli, Gepidæ, &c.

The origin of the Burgundians.

THE Burgundians, who, upon the decline of the empire, seized on a considerable portion of Gaul, and founded a new kingdom there, were, according to Ammianus Marcellinus^o, originally descended from the Romans. Orosius, who wrote about the year 420, was of the same opinion: We are told, says that writer, that Drusus Nero, and his brother Tiberius, the adopted sons of Cæsar Augustus, having subdued the inner parts of Germany, left several camps in the country, and part of their army, to keep the neighbouring people in subjection. From the Roman soldiers, who were on this occasion left to guard the camps, are descended the Burgundians. The castles and strong-holds, built for the defence of a country, are by the Germans called burgts; and hence the Romans who guarded them, and their descendants, were styled Burgundians. Their conquest in Gaul, continues our historian, speak them both a numerous and warlike nation. As they have embraced the catholic faith, our ecclesiastics, whose spiritual jurisdiction they acknowledge, have rendered them mild and tractable; for, in the countries where they have settled, they treat the natives, not as strangers whom they have subdued, but as brothers in Christ^p. Thus Orosius, who, had he lived thirty years longer, would not have commended the Burgundians on account of their gentle treatment of the natives; for, upon their embracing the tenets of Arius, which happened about the year 450, the natives, who professed the catholic faith, were treated by them more like slaves than brethren. But to return to their origin: Pliny the elder supposes them to be a German nation, descended from the Vindili, whom most writers take to be the same people with the Vandals^q. Valesius distinguishes ^o Ammian. l. xxviii. p. 375.

^q Plin. l. iv. c. 14. p. 86.

^p Oros. l. vii. c. 19.

The least warlike of all the German nations.

Their kings.

They think themselves honoured with the dignities of the empire.

The use of legal duels introduced by them.

guishes the Burgundians of Germany from those of the same name, who dwelt more to the east, on the banks of the Danube^r. The Burgundians of Germany were sometimes in alliance, and sometimes at war, with the empire; but never had the reputation of a warlike nation: for the writers who flourished in those times, speak of them as far inferior in courage and bravery to the other Germans, and observe, that the Burgundians dwelt in castles and fortified places, whereas the other German nations scorned any other fence but their arms: and truly most of them were mechanics, and, before they settled in Gaul, they used in great numbers to flock into that country, to earn a livelihood by their respective professions. As to their government, they were divided into several tribes, each governed by their own chief or king, whose authority was so far from being hereditary, that it was not even during life. The kings of this nation, whom we find mentioned in history, are Gundicar, Gundiak, Bilimer, Gundebald, Sigismund, and Godemar. These princes reigned after the Burgundians had entered Gaul, that is, after the year 407, but they had, without all doubt, kings or chiefs long before that time, though not named by the historians, whose works have reached us. The kings of the Burgundians, as well as those of the other barbarians, did not think it below them to serve in the Roman armies, to discharge some of the chief offices of the empire, and to receive, at the hands of the emperors, such dignities as they used to confer on their subjects. Thus Gundiak was, in the reign of Anthemius, magister militiæ, or general of the Roman armies; and Gundebald his eldest son patrician. Chilperic, the brother of Gundebald, had been likewise magister militiæ, and was afterwards created patrician^t. His son Sigismund, who succeeded him in the kingdom, received from Anastasius the same dignity of patrician, on which occasion he wrote to the emperor the following letter: My predecessors and I have been ever so attached to the Roman empire, as to think ourselves more honoured by the dignities the emperors have conferred on us, than by the titles which have been transmitted to us by our ancestors. We command at home, but think it a greater honour to serve abroad in your armies^u. The use of legal duels, or duels ordered by the magistrates ^r Vales. rer. Franc. p. 48.

^t Ennod. vit. p. 404.

^s Socrat. hist. eccles. l. vii. c.

^u Avit. ep. lxxxiii. p. 137.

magistrates or judges, to discover, from the event, the truth of contested facts, was first introduced into Gaul, where it long obtained, by the Burgundians. Gundebald was the first who established by law this maxim, that the best champion is the best man, and ought to be believed; a maxim which has so often proved fatal to innocence! This unjust and sanguinary law was couched in the following words: Being fully convinced, that many of our subjects suffer themselves to be corrupted by their avarice, or hurried on by their obstinacy, so as to attest by oath what they know not, nay, and what they know to be false; to put a stop to such scandalous practices, when two Burgundians are at law, if the defendant shall swear, that he owes not what is demanded of him, or that he is not guilty of the crime that is laid to his charge; and the plaintiff, on the other hand, not satisfied therewith, shall declare, that he is ready to maintain, sword in hand, the truth of what he advances; if the defendant does not acquiesce, it shall be lawful for them to decide the controversy by dint of sword. This is to be likewise understood of the witnesses of either party, it being just, that every man should be ready to defend with his sword the truth which he attests, and to submit himself to the judgment of Heaven. If one of the plaintiff's witnesses shall be killed, all the others shall be condemned to pay immediately three hundred solidi. If the defendant is overcome, the plaintiff shall receive three times the sum which he demanded. It is our will and pleasure, that this law be strictly observed and executed, that our subjects may conceive an utter aversion to the detestable sin of perjury. Given at Lions the twenty-seventh of June, Abienus being consul, that is, in 501^u. This law was no sooner published, than Avitus, bishop of Vienne, wrote a letter to the king, remonstrating, with equal zeal and learning, the injustice of it; but could by no means, prevail upon that prince to repeal it; nay, however unjust and sanguinary, it prevailed, by degrees, among the Franks, and all the other nations dwelling in Gaul.

As to the history of the Burgundians, we find nothing worthy of notice concerning them till the year 275, the first of the emperor Tacitus's reign, when, in conjunction with the Lugians, the Franks, and the Vandals, they crossed

The Burgundians break into Gaul; but are driven out by Probus.

Year after Christ 275.

U 2

crossed the Rhine, over-ran all Gaul, and made themselves masters of seventy cities and upwards in that country, which they held for the space of almost two years^w. But in the mean time Tacitus being murdered, Probus, who was chosen in his room, marched against them, and, having gained a complete victory over the Burgundians and Vandals on the banks of the Rhine, obliged them to sue for peace; which was granted them, upon their promising to restore the booty, and set at liberty the prisoners they had taken. But, as they did not faithfully comply with this condition, Probus fell upon them in their retreat, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and took many prisoners, whom he afterwards sent into Britain, where they proved very serviceable to the Romans in all seditions and insurrections^x. In the year 287, the fourth of the emperor Dioclesian, they broke into Gaul anew with the Heruli, the Alemans, and the Chaibons or Cavions, a people no other occasion mentioned in history, and of whom all we know is that their country, as well as that of the Heruli, lay at a great distance from Gaul^y. We are told, that the Alemans and Burgundians were destroyed by their own numbers, which occasioned a famine, that was followed by a plague; so that they were easily overcome by Maximian, whom Dioclesian had taken for his partner in the empire, and dispatched against them. We are told, that of such vast multitudes of barbarians, a very small number returned home, the rest being swept off by the plague, or cut in pieces by the Romans^z. For the advantages gained over the barbarians on this occasion, the two emperors were decreed a triumph, as appears from a medal of this year^a. Some years after, that is, in the year 291, a war broke out between the Burgundians and Alemans, in which the former seem to have gained considerable advantages over the latter; for we are told, that they reduced great part of their country, and that the Alemans were striving to recover what they had lost^b: and this is all we know of that war. In the year 370, the seventh of Valentinian I. the Burgundians appeared on the banks of the Rhine, to the number of eighty thousand defeated anew in Gaul by Maximian.

They are
Year after
Christ 287.

^w Tacit. vit. p. 227. Vales. rer. Franc. l. i. p. 7, 8. ^x Prob. vit. p. 238. Zos. l. i. p. 664. ^y Panegy. xi. p. 131. Bach. Belg. p. 221. ^z Idem ibid. p. 133. & Panegy. x. p. 125. ^a Noris. de Diocles. c. 4. p. 18. ^b Panegy. xi. p. 138.

and fighting men, being invited thither by Valentinian, who maintained a private intelligence with their chiefs, and had promised to pass the Rhine, and, in conjunction with them fall upon Macrian king of the Alemans, with whom they were then at variance. But the emperor, who was then busied in building forts on the Rhine, not caring to interrupt the work, and join them, as he had promised to do, they returned home, highly incensed against Valentinian, by whom they had been thus disappointed and deluded^c; but we do not find they committed any hostilities against the empire. In the year 407, they followed the Vandals, Sueves, and Alans, who had entered Gaul the last day of the preceding year, in order to share with them the spoils of those wealthy provinces; but they did not settle, it seems, in that country till the year 413, for in that year, Prosper tells us, they obtained that part of Gaul, which borders on the Rhine, that is, according to Bucherius, the present Alsace, and the remaining part of Germania Prima, which, in the opinion of that writer, were yielded to them by Honorius, not able, by any other means, to put a stop to their ravages^d. Such was the beginning of the kingdom of the Burgundians in Gaul. They continued quiet in the seats allotted them till the year 435, when, in conjunction with the Heruli, the Hunns, and the Franks, they entered Belgic Gaul, committing every-where dreadful ravages, though they had, upon their first settling in Gaul, promised to assist the Romans, and serve in their armies as subjects of the empire. Hereupon Aetius marched against them, and having overcome them with great slaughter in a pitched battle, reduced them to such streights, that Gundicarius their king was obliged to sue for peace; which, in the end, he obtained, but did not long enjoy, being, in the beginning of the following year 436 attacked by the Hunns, perhaps at the instigation of Aetius, and cut off with twenty thousand of his subjects^e. Secrates tells us, that the Hunns made frequent irruptions into their territories, putting all to fire and sword; that the Burgundians, no longer able to withstand them, had recourse to heaven, and, repairing to a city in Gaul, embraced there the christian religion, and received the sacrament of baptism; which ceremony was no sooner over, than, full of courage and confidence, they marched against the enemy,

The beginning of their kingdom in Gaul.
Year after
Christ, 413.

Gundicarius
their king killed by the Hunns.
Year after
Christ 436.

^c Ammian. l. xxx. p. 377. ^d Buch. Belg. p. 442
^e Idat. p. 25. Val. rer. Franc. l. iii. p. 136, 138.

They are removed to the present duchy of Savoy.

Year after Christ 438.

They make themselves masters of several cities and places in Gaul.

and, finding them without a leader, (for we are told, that Uptar their king died suddenly the night before) cut ten thousand of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to save themselves by a precipitous flight, though the Burgundians were in all but three thousand men. Thus Socrates^f. But Orosius, who wrote in 417, assures us, that they had, at that time, already embraced the christian religion^g. They continued on the banks of the Rhine till the year 438, or, as others will have it, 443, when they were removed from thence by Aetius to the present duchy of Savoy. During their abode there, Gundiac, who succeeded Gundicar, and is thought to have been his son, joining Theodoric king of the Visigoths about the year 456, against the Sueves, marched with him into Spain, and signalized himself in a battle, that was fought that very year on the banks of the Orbegua, in which the Sueves were utterly defeated, and their king Rechiarius wounded, and afterwards taken prisoner^h. Gundiac, upon his return from Spain, seized on part of Gaul, dividing, according to an antient chronologist, the lands with the Roman senatorsⁱ. Valesius is of opinion, that he made himself then master of the city of Lions^k. In 463, Gundiac wrote to Hilarius bishop of Rome concerning an affair of Die in Dauphiny^l; whence we may conclude, that he was then in possession of that city. Some are of opinion, that both Diè and Vienne were yielded to him by the emperor Avitus, whose cause he had espoused^m. Others think, that Gundiac, taking advantage of the disturbances, that were occasioned by the deposition of Avitus, enlarged his dominions, and seized on the above-mentioned citiesⁿ. It is certain, that, in the war between the Romans and Visigoths about the year 470, the Burgundians, under the conduct of their king Gundiac, and his son Chilperic, fought for the Romans; for we are told, that they defended the province of Auvergne against Euric king of the Visigoths, being jealous of the growing power of that prince^o. Besides, both Gundiac and Chilperic were at that time magistri militiæ, and commanded the Roman troops^p; whence it is probable, that the Romans either

^f Socrat. l. vii. c. 30. p. 371, 372.

c. 38, p. 219.

p. 210.

iv. p. 1043.

rer. Goth. c. 47. p. 678.

vit. p. 404.

^h Jorn. p. 676.

^k Vales. rer. Franc. p. 186.

^m Buch. p. 525.

ⁿ Vales. ibid.

^g Oros. l. vii.

ⁱ Marc. chron.

^l Concil. tom.

^o Jorn.

^p Ennod.

either yielded to them the above-mentioned countries, or suffered them to seize them, not caring to quarrel at the same time with the Visigoths and Burgundians. Before the year 490, the Burgundians were masters of all Lugdunensis Prima, which Sidonius styles Germanica Lugdunensis, saying, it was then subject to Chilperic the son of Gundiac^q. The same writer tells us elsewhere, that, when he left Lions, and retired to Auvergne, a Burgundian king resided in that city with his queen^r. Sidonius withdrew from Lions about the year 470, finding himself obnoxious to the Burgundians, who suspected him of privately favouring the Franks. Chilperic was likewise master of the country in which stood the abby of St. Claudius^s, that is, of the country of the Sequani. When Sidonius died, Aprunculus, bishop of Langres, finding the Burgundians suspected him as if he maintained a private correspondence with the Franks, made his escape from the castle of Dijon, and withdrew to Auvergne^t. In 494, Epiphanius, bishop of Pavia, went to the court of Gundebald at Lions, and to that of Godigiscles at Geneva^u; so that the Burgundians were then masters of all these places. On the other hand, we do not find they made war upon the Romans; nay, on the contrary, they assisted them against the Visigoths, and are styled, by the writers of those times, the friends and allies of the empire. We may therefore conclude, that they thus enlarged their dominion with the consent, or at least with the connivance, of the emperors, willing to yield to them, or to wink at their seizing, part of the country, which they could not maintain without them. Chilperic, who is often mentioned by Sidonius, and styled by him a victorious prince^w, was not as some have imagined, the brother, but the son, of Gundiac, and grandson of Gundicar; for Gundiac married the sister of the famous Ricimer, whom we have had frequent occasion to mention in our Roman history, and had by her Gundebald, Godegiscles, Chilperic, called also Hilperic, and Godemar^x. They divided, in all likelihood, among them the countries then subject to the Burgundians; for Chilperic is styled

U 4

^q Sid. l. v. ep. 6, 7. p. 134, 137. ^r Idem. l. vi. ep. 12. p. 168. ^s Bolland. Mart. xxi. p. 265. ^t Greg. Tur. hist. Franc. l. ii. c. 23. p. 284. ^u Ennod. vit. Epiph. p. 402, 408. ^w Sid. l. v. ep. 6. ^x Ennod. vit. p. 403. Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 28. p. 285.

Gundebald puts his brothers to death.

He joins the Romans against the Visigoths.

styled by Sidonius tetrarch ^y, and, by Jornandes king ^z. Sidonius, speaking elsewhere of these four princes, calls them tirannopæ, intimating thereby, that they acted more like tyrants than kings. Father Sirmond tells us, that Chilperic and Godemar, joining against Gundebald, drove him out, and seized on his dominions; but that Gundebald, having in the end recovered his dominions, found means to dispatch his two brothers, with their issue male ^a. But this is vouched only by the chronicle of Burgundy written by Vigner, to which we do not to give entire credit. Gundebald was in Italy in 472, and there raised by the emperor Olybrius to the rank of patrician. However, he might have returned from thence to Gaul, and there caused his brother Chilperic to be put to death, and his wife to be drowned, as we read in Gregory of Tours ^b. Sidonius styles her a Tanaquil, either on account of her prudence, or because she had a great ascendant over her husband ^c; for she is said to have tempered, with her address and engaging behaviour, the severity to which her husband was naturally inclined, and to have saved the lives of several persons unjustly accused ^d. Chilperic left two daughters behind him, who were both banished by Gundebald, or rather kept under confinement in a castle at some distance from the court ^e. Mucuruna the eldest embraced the state of virginity; the other was Clothildes, who was married to Clovis king of the Franks, as we have related in the foregoing section. In the year 473, Gundebald was at Ravenna; for he is said to have induced Glycerius, to take upon him the title of emperor in that city ^f. After the deposition of Glycerius, Gundebald espoused the cause of Nepos, who was raised to the empire in his room, joining the Romans in Gaul against the Visigoths, who, under the conduct of Euric their king attempted to make themselves masters of Auvergne ^g. In the year 480, Odoacer king of Italy having yielded Provence to the Visigoths, Gundebald, jealous of the growing power of that nation, claimed part of the country that had been granted them. This gave rise to a war between the two nations, in which the Burgundians were subdued, says

Jornandes

^y Sid. p. 55. ^z Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 44. ^a Sirmond. p. 57. ^b Greg. Tur. p. 285. ^c Sid. l. v. ep. 7. p. 137. ^d Idem ibid. ^e Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 28. p. 185. ^f Jorn. c. 45, p. 654. Onuph. p. 57. ^g Sid. car. xii. p. 368. & l. vii. ep. 3. p. 172.

Jornandes ^h, by the Visigoths, who made themselves masters of all Gaul. But that writer was certainly mistaken, since the Burgundians were, in the year 517, and 528, still masters of above twenty-eight cities, and, among the rest, of Lions, Vienne, Besancon, and Embrun, as appears from the acts of the councils of Agde and Epaune held in those times ⁱ. In the year 490, the Burgundians, under the conduct of Gundebald, entering Italy, with a design, as they pretended, to assist Odoacer against Theodoric the Ostrogoth, committed unheard-of ravages in Liguria, putting all to fire and sword, and carrying off with them, upon their return home, such numbers of captives, that, in most places, there were not left sufficient hands to till the ground. They met with no opposition, the Romans, who had always looked upon them as their friends and protectors, being no-ways upon the guard against them ^k. Gundebald afterwards declared, that he had acted as an open enemy, to be revenged on the king of Italy, who had deceived him by a false alliance ^l; but whether he meant Theodoric, or Odoacer, is uncertain. Authors observe, that, on this occasion, bishops began first to fortify their mansions, that, on any sudden irruption of barbarians, they might serve as places of refuge for those who dwelt in the country ^m. About this time Gundebald sent one Laurentius, a person of great distinction among the Burgundians, with the character of ambassador to the emperor Anastasius at Constantinople ⁿ; but with what commission he was charged, we are no-where told. Two letters have reached us, both written in 497, the one by the emperor Anastasius to Clovis, entreating him to prevail upon Gundebald, to allow one of Laurentius's sons to repair to his father at Constantinople; the other by Clovis to Gundebald who readily complied with the emperor's request and his ^o. In the history of the Franks, we have spoken of the war which Gundebald waged with Clovis, and his brother Godegiscles, whom in the end he overcame, and put to death. Being restored to his dominions, he reigned, without disturbing his neighbours, or being disturbed by them, till his death, which happened in the year 516 ^p. Some years before gurian.

Ravages Li-

He dies.
Year after
Christ 516.

^h Jorn. p. 680. ⁱ Vide Val. not. Goll. p. 105.
^k Ennod. vit. Epiph. p. 398—405. ^l Idem ibid. p. 406.
^m Bar. ad ann. 489. ⁿ Avit. ep. xli. p. 97.
^o Idem, ep. xlii. p. 98. & ep. xliv. p. 99. ^p Vales. rer Franc. l. vi. p. 328.

fore his death, he was for renouncing privately the errors of Arius ; but could, by no means, be prevailed upon, says Gregory of Tours, to acknowledge publickly the mystery of the holy trinity^a.

Sigismund

He acknowledges himself a subject of the empire.

GUNDEBALD was succeeded by his son Sigismund, who had no sooner taken possession of his father's dominions, than he dispatched ambassadors to the emperor Anastasius at Constantinople, acquainting him with his accession to the crown. In the letter he wrote on this occasion to the emperor he styles his father one of Anastasius's most faithful subjects ; and adds, that the nation, which he governed, had ever acknowledged Anastasius for their liege lord ; that he himself deemed it a greater honour to obey his commands, than to be obeyed by a whole nation ; that these sentiments were hereditary in his family ; that his ancestors had ever had a heart truly Roman, thinking themselves more honoured by the titles, which the emperors had been pleased to confer upon them, than by those, however specious, which they had received by birth ; that the country, which it was now his lot to govern, though lying at a great distance from the capital of the empire, was not, on that account, less subject to the imperial crown, than those that lay near it, &c. He closes the letter thus : The east is governed by your presence, the west under your auspices. By this letter therefore I offer my duty to the greatest of princes, and wait, with submission, your august commands^r. From this letter it is manifest, that the princes of the barbarians, who reigned in Gaul, acknowledged themselves subjects of the empire. Theodoric, king of Italy, refused a passage through his dominions to the ambassadors, who were dispatched with these letters. However, Anastasius wrote to Sigismund, without waiting till he received letters from him, confirming to him the dignities, which he had conferred upon him in his father's life-time, and adding to them the patriciate^s. Sigismund wrote a second letter to Anastasius, returning him thanks for the honours to which he had raised him, and acquainting him, that, upon his father's death, he had immediately written to him ; but that his ambassadors had been stopped on their way to Constantinople^t. In this letter, as well as in the former, and in a third, which he wrote to the emperor Justin, he owns himself a subject of the empire, and uses all along the language language of a subject to his sovereign. There was, without all doubt, at this time a misunderstanding between Theodoric and Sigismund, which however did not come to an open rupture. Sigismund, in the sixth year of his reign, caused his son Sigeric to be inhumanly murdered. Of this murder Gregory of Tours gives us the following account: Sigismund, says our historian, had to his first wife the daughter of Theodoric king of Italy, and by her a son named Sigeric. Upon the death of that princess, he married one of her household, who, looking upon Sigeric with the eyes of a step-mother, did all that lay in her power to incense his father against him. The young prince indeed, with his haughty and contemptuous behaviour, heightened the aversion, which the new queen bore him as a step-mother; for the queen having one day appeared in the robes of his mother, he publicly upbraided her for presuming to shew herself in the apparel of one, whose menial servant she had been. This bitter reproach galled her to such a degree, that transported with rage, she resolved at all events to make Sigeric pay dear for it. Accordingly as she had a great ascendant over her husband, she persuaded him, that the young prince had formed a design of assassinating him, and joining his dominions to those of his grandfather Theodoric. Sigismund gave entire credit to these false and malicious insinuations, and, without further enquiry, to be before-hand with his son, caused him to be strangled, while he was reposing after dinner. He was scarce dead, when Sigismund, stung with the remorse of so heinous a crime, threw himself upon the dead body, and, bathing it in tears, called himself of all men the most unhappy; which one of his servants hearing, You have but too much reason, said he, to bewail your own fate; but as for your son, he died free from all guilt, and is now happy. Thus Gregory of Tours*. A few days after, Sigismund retired to the monastery of St. Mauritius in Valais, to do penance for the crime he had committed, and there founded what is called by our historian laus perennis, a service to be celebrated night and day without intermission, by several ecclesiastics relieving one another. After a short stay in the abovementioned monastery, he returned to Lyons, and there married a daughter, which he had by his first wife Ostrogotha, to king Theodoric or Thierri, the eldest son of Clovis.

^a Greg Tur. I. ii. c. 34. ^r Avit. ep. xciv. p. 139. ^s Idem, ep. xliii. p. 98. ^t Idem, ep. xciv. p. 139.

* Greg. Tur. l. iii. c. 5.

War between the Franks and Burgun-dians.

Sigismund defeated and taken.

Year after
Christ 523.

vis. As the Ostrogoths, and their king Theodoric, were highly provoked against Sigismund for the murder of his son, whom they looked upon as a prince of their own blood, Clothildis thought this a favourable conjuncture to be revenged on the posterity of Gundebald, since he was no more, for the death of her father Chilperic, of her mother, and her brothers, all massacred by that prince's order. Having therefore first put the three kings her children, Clodomire, Childebert, and Clotharius, in mind of the cruel and inhuman treatment, which her father and mother had met with at the hands of Gundebald, she exhorted them not to let slip so favourable an opportunity of revenging it on his posterity. As this advice was entirely agreeable to the ambitious views of the young princes, they readily hearkened to it, and began to make the necessary preparations. They pressed Theodoric, whom their father Clovis had by a concubine, as we have related above, to join them in the enterprize; but, as he had married the daughter of Sigismund, and had not been any-ways injured either by him or his ancestors, he declared, that he would take no part in a war between his brothers and father-in-law, but observe a strict neutrality. The three princes therefore, finding they could not prevail upon him to join them, took the field without him, and, entering the dominions of Sigismund, began to lay them waste. Hereupon Sigismund, having drawn together what troops he could, marched out against them; but, in the battle that ensued, he was utterly defeated, and obliged to take refuge in a monastery, where he lay some time concealed in the habit of a monk; but his own subjects, by whom he was abhorred, on account of the murder of his son, discovered him to the Franks, who immediately seized him, and delivered him to Clodomir, who had already in his power his wife and children. Clodomir sent both the prince, and his unfortunate family, to the city of Orleans, where they were kept under close confinement. Upon the news of his captivity, the far greater part of the country, which he held, submitted to the Franks^w. This happened, according to the bishop of Avanches, in the year 523. In the consulship of Maximus, says that writer in his chronicle^x, Sigismund was by the Burgundians delivered up to the Franks, who carried him away in the habit of a monk, in which they had found him, and afterwards threw him him with his wife and children, into a deep well, where they were all drowned. Maximus was consul, as appears from all the antient chronologers, in the above-mentioned year. What our chronologer relates of the unhappy end of Sigismund, and his family, did not happen till the following year, when the Franks retiring to their own country, the Burgundians, who had submitted to them, revolting, proclaimed Godemar, the brother of Sigismund; and in order to induce the Ostrogoths to assist them, at least under-hand, yielded to them four cities, viz. Carpentras, Cavaillon, Tricastinum, now St. Paul-trois-chateaux, and Apt^y. No mention indeed is made of any succours sent them by the Ostrogoths. It is not however to be doubted, but that Theodoric, then king of that nation, and greatly alarmed at the growing power of the Franks, assisted them so far as he could, without openly declaring in their favour. News was no sooner brought to the three princes of the Franks, that Godemar had been proclaimed king of the Burgundians, and acknowledged even in those countries which had submitted to them, than they resolved to take the field anew. But Clodomir, before he set out on his march, ordered Sigismund with his wife and children, to be put to death in the city of Orleans, in the manner we have related above, notwithstanding the remonstrances and threats of Avitus, abbot of Mici, a person highly esteemed and revered all over Gaul for the sanctity of his life. Gundebald had caused the father, mother, and brother, of Clothildis to be thrown into a well, as we have related above; and in the same manner, by way of retaliation, Clodomir ordered Sigismund to be dispatched, with his wife and children. Soon after, Clodomir led his troops against Godemar; and the two armies meeting at Vesperonce in the territory of Vienne, not far from the city of Belley, a bloody battle ensued, in which the Burgundians, after a long and obstinate resistance, were in the end put to flight. But Clodomir, pursuing the enemy with more ardour than caution, was surrounded by them, and cut in pieces^z. The Burgundians, says Agathias, concluding from Clodomir's long hair, which covered his shoulders, that he was one of the kings of the Franks, struck off his head, and carrying it upon the point of a spear, returned to the charge; but were

^w Idem ibid. c. 6.

^x Avent. chron. ad ann. 523.

Godemar
king of the Burgundians.

Sigismund
put to death by Clodomir.

^y Vide Coint. annal. eccles. Franc. tom. i.
ibid.

^z Greg. Tur.

Peace between the Burgundians
and Franks.

were repulsed by the Franks, and a second time put to the rout^a. However, the Franks being destitute of a leader, (for the children of Clodomir were yet very young) they readily concluded a peace with the Burgundians, whereof one of the articles was, that they should restore to Godemar, all the countries they had seized during the war^b; which they did accordingly. Gregory of Tours writes, that Godemar, having raised a new army, pursued the war with great vigour, and in the end recovered the kingdom of his ancestors^c. According to the chronicle of the bishop of Avanches, the battle of Veforence was fought the same year, in which Godemar had been proclaimed king, that is, in 524.

A new war between these two nations.

THE peace concluded between the Franks and Burgundians lasted for the space of eight years, that is, till the year 532, when the two surviving brothers Childebert and Clotharius broke a-new into the dominions of Godemar. What gave rise to this new war, we are not told; but, so far as we can conjecture from Procopius, they were prompted merely by their ambition, and that lust of conquests, which seems hereditary to the princes of that restless nation, to invade a kingdom, which, they were well apprised, they could easily reduce; for a few years after the conquest of Burgundy by the Franks, an ambassador from the emperor Justinian to the Ostrogoths, with whom the Franks were at that time negotiating an alliance, addressed them thus, as we read in Procopius: The Franks pique themselves upon standing faithfully to their engagements; but, to say nothing at present of the manner, in which they have observed the treaties concluded with the Thuringians and Burgundians, you cannot have forgot the little account they have ever made of the most solemn engagements they have, from time to time, entered into even with you^d. Of this war, which ended in the ruin of the kingdom of the Burgundians, Gregory of Tours gives us the following account: Childebert and Clotharius, having made the necessary preparations to invade the kingdom of Burgundy, solicited their brother Theodoric to join them in the enterprize; but he openly declared, that he would take no part in that war. This gave great offence to the Franks, who were subject to him; nay, they were displeased

^a Agath. de reb. Justin. l. i. Tur. ibid. ^b Idem. ibid. ^c Greg.

^d Procop. bell. Goth. c. 28.

pleased with his conduct to such a degree, that they openly threatened to revolt from him, and acknowledge the other two princes, if he did not assist them with all his forces, and look upon their cause as the common cause of the Franks. Theodoric, to quiet his mutinous subjects, told them, that, without him, his brothers were well able to cope with the king of the Burgundians; that however he would not fail to join them, if they should stand in need of his assistance; but that, in the mean time, he designed to lead them against the inhabitants of Auvergne, who, during the war he had lately made on the Thuringians, had given strong proofs of their disaffection to his person and government; that he designed to lay waste their country; and that those, who followed him thither, should have free quarters, and be at full liberty to plunder, and carry off what slaves, cattle, money, furniture, &c. they thought fit. The subjects of Theodoric, allured by these promises, gave over all thoughts of joining the other two princes in their expedition against the Burgundians. Childebert therefore and Clotharius, hoping to compass their design without the assistance of Theodoric, took the field, and, entering the territories of the Burgundians, laid siege to Augustodunum, now Autun, obliged Godemar to save himself by flight, and made themselves masters of his kingdom^e. Thus, in a few words, Gregory of Tours gives us an account of the reduction of the kingdom of the Burgundians, one of the most remarkable events in the history of the Franks. And Marius Aventienfis is no less concise in relating the same events: In the consulship of Paulinus the younger, says that writer, Childebert, Clotharius, and Theodebert, kings of the Franks, reduced Burgundy, and, having put Godemar to flight, divided his kingdom among them^f. From this writer it appears, that the war lasted two years, that is, from 532, to 534, and that Theodoric dying in the mean time, his son Theodebert joined the other two princes. From other writers we learn, that, in this war, the Burgundians were assisted both by the Ostrogoths and Visigoths^g; that, in several encounters, the Franks were defeated by those two nations^h; but that, upon the death of Athalaric, the Ostrogoths having withdrawn their troops, the Burgundians were in the

The kingdom of the Burgundians reduced by the Franks. Year after Christ 534.

^e Greg. Tur. l. iii. c. 11. ^f Mar. Avent. chron. ad ann. 534. ^g Cassiod. var. l. xiii ep. 28. ^h Idem. ibid. lxi. ep. 1.

the end obliged to submit to the conquerors ⁱ. Procopius tells us, that Godemar was taken prisoner by the Franks, who kept him under close confinement in one of their castles; that, upon his captivity, the Burgundians agreed to serve the Franks in their wars, and to pay them a yearly tribute, with such taxes and customs, as they had paid to Godemar and his predecessors ^k. One of the conditions, on which they submitted to the Franks, was, though not mentioned by Procopius, that they should live according to their own laws; which they actually did to the reign of Lewis surnamed the Debonnair, as we shall relate in a more proper place. Thus the Franks, prompted by their boundless ambition, extended their dominions, at the expence of their neighbours, till they became masters of all Gaul.

ⁱ Idem ibid.

^k Procop. bell. Goth. l. i. c. 13.

The Alemans.

The Alemans.

Their origin

Their country.

THE Alemans, a nation, which in process of time, became so famous in history, made their first appearance about the year 214, the fourth of the emperor Caracalla's reign ^l. Agathias, upon the authority of Asinius Quadratus, a Roman historian, who wrote in the reign of the emperor Philip, about the year 247, tells us, that the Alemans were originally a motley multitude, consisting of several nations, as appears, adds that writer, from their very name ^m; so that, according to Asinius Quadratus, the Alemans were so called, because they consisted of all men, that is, of men of all nations. Some German writers, displeased with this etymology, derive the name of Alemans from the word Atelman, signifying a man of distinction ⁿ. But the other derivation is both more natural, and better grounded. The Alemans, according to the most common opinion, consisted chiefly of Sueves, who, in process of time, were joined by several other German nations, and some Gauls; for we are told by Tacitus, that a considerable number of Gauls, abandoning their own country, went to settle beyond the Rhine, in the country which had formerly belonged to the Sueves ^o. The Alemans

^l Var. p. 473.
vit. Justin. p. 501.
199, 200.

^m Agath. l. i. p. 17.

ⁿ Ludewig.

^o Vide Buch. Belg. l. vi. c. 7. p.

mans are placed by Aurelius Victor, St. Jerom ^p; and other writers, between the Danube, the Upper Rhine, and the Mein, that is, in the present duchy of Wirtemberg. They were a numerous and warlike nation, and are chiefly commended for fighting with great skill and dexterity on horseback ^q. They had such an aversion to slavery, that even their women, some of whom were taken prisoners by Caracalla, chose rather to die, than to be sold for slaves. Caracalla however ordered them to be sold; but, preferring death to slavery, they laid violent hands on themselves, some of them having first dispatched their children ^r. Their government was monarchical; for we find several of their kings mentioned in history, of whom we shall have occasion to speak anon. As to their religion, they worshipped the same deities as the other German nations. We shall now acquaint the reader with what we have been able to gather from the antients concerning this nation. In the year 214, Caracalla is said to have made war upon the Cenni, or, as some read it, the Chatti, the Alemans, and other German nations. The Alemans, it seems, had joined the Chatti or Catti; and Caracalla, under pretence of succouring another nation, with whom they were at variance, made war upon them, and is said to have defeated the Alemans on the banks of the Mein ^s. He afterwards concluded a peace with them, distributed large sums among them, lifted great numbers of them in his army, and even among his guards, chusing rather to trust his life to them, than to the Romans ^t. Aurelius Victor adds, that he often appeared in the dress peculiar to those barbarians, wearing false hair of the same colour with theirs ^u. For the victory he gained over the Alemans, he took the surname of Alemannicus ^w. In the year 234, the thirteenth of the emperor Severus Alexander, the Alemans, and other German nations, having passed the Rhine, made themselves masters of the forts built on the banks of that river, and, entering Gaul, committed dreadful ravages there. Alexander, who was just then returned from Persia, where he had gained great advantages over

Their government and religion.

They are overcome by Caracalla. Year after Christ 214.

^p Hier. vit. Hilar. p. 246. ^q Aur. Vict. ^r Dio, l. lxxvii. p. 876. ^s Caracal. vit. p. 87. Dio Val. p. 749, & l. lxxvii. p. 876. ^t Dio, l. lxxviii. p. 891. ^u Aur. Vict. de Cæsarib. ad ann. urb. 965. ^w Spart. in Caracal. c. 10. p. 731.

ver Artaxerxes the Persian king, upon the news of this irruption, hastened into Gaul, and advanced, without loss of time, to the banks of the Rhine. But the enemy having repassed that river upon the news of his approach, he ordered a bridge to be laid over it, with a design to attack them in their own country, as soon as the season would allow him to take the field. But he being in the mean time assassinated by the mutinous soldiery, Maximinus, who had stirred them up, and was chosen in his room, entered Germany early in the spring, at the head of a mighty army, ravaged the country far and wide, burnt the enemy's habitations, carried off their corn and cattle, and took an incredible number of prisoners. We are told, that several battles were fought in the woods and marshes, in each of which the emperor killed many of the enemy with his own hand^x. For the signal advantages he gained in this expedition over the Alemans, and other German nations, the senate decreed both to him and his son the title of Germanicus, which is still to be seen on several of his medals^y. The Alemans continued quiet from this time to the year 256, the fourth of Valerian's reign, when, breaking unexpectedly into Gaul, they laid waste that country, while the Juthongians, that is, the Alemans who dwelt on the banks of the Danube, made an irruption into Italy. In Gaul they were defeated, and obliged to repass the Rhine, by Posthumius, governor of those provinces. In Italy they advanced as far as Milan, destroying all with fire and sword; but their numerous army, consisting of three hundred thousand men, was defeated in the neighbourhood of that city, if Zonaras is to be credited, by Gallienus, with a body only of ten thousand men^z. But of this victory no mention is made either by Pollio or Vopiscus; and Zosimus writes, that the Alemans, and other barbarous nations, having ravaged Illyricum, and great part of Italy, returned home, without meeting with the least opposition^a. Eutropius^b, St. Jerom^c, and Orosius^d, suppose the Alemans to have first ravaged Gaul, and from thence passing through Rhætia, to have entered Italy. We find no further mention made of them till the year 268, the first of the

Their country ravaged by Maximinus.

Year after Christ 235.

They break into Gaul and Italy.

Gallienus is said to have gained a great victory over them.

^x Maximin. vit. p. 142. Herod. l. vii. p. 550, 591.

^y Goltz. p. 101, 102. Birag. p. 329.

^z Zon. l. i. p.

650.

^a Zos. l. i. p. 646.

^b Eutrop. l. ii. p. 67.

^c Hier. chron.

^d Oros. l. ii. c. 22 p. 214.

the emperor Claudius, when the Juthongians, breaking into Italy, advanced without opposition as far as the lake Benacus, now Lago di Garda near Verona. Claudius had no sooner suppressed the rebellion of Aureolus, who had assumed the purple, than he marched against them, defeated them in a pitched battle, and, having cut great numbers of them in pieces, obliged the rest to quit their booty, and save themselves by a precipitous flight into their own country^e. This victory was not known, it seems, to Pollio, since he does not mention it; but it is confirmed by several medals, on which the title of Germanicus is given to Claudius, before that of Gothicus, which he took the year after, that is, in 269^f. Notwithstanding this overthrow, they no sooner heard of the death of Claudius, than, joining the Marcomans, they resolved to invade Italy anew. But Aurelian, who succeeded Claudius, having timely notice of their march, left Pannonia, where he then was, and meeting them with the flower of his army in Vindelicia, which comprehended all the present Bavaria, and a great part of Swabia, gave them a total overthrow, and, pursuing them close, cut off great numbers of them, as they attempted to pass the Danube. Hereupon they sent embassadors to the emperor, offering to renew their antient alliance with the empire, provided they were allowed to return unmolested to their own country; for Aurelian had cut off their retreat, and detached part of his army to guard the banks of the Danube. But the emperor refusing to hearken to any terms, the Alemans, by this means reduced to despair, after various debates and consultations, resolved at length to enter Italy, since they could not return to their own country; and accordingly, finding the passes unguarded (for the emperor thought only of cutting off their retreat) they advanced as far as Placentia before Aurelian could come up with them, committing every-where unheard-of ravages. As the emperor drew near, they concealed themselves in the neighbouring woods, whence sallying out upon him in the night, they gained a complete victory; which threw all Italy, and Rome itself, into the utmost consternation. The books of the Sibyls were consulted on this occasion by the emperor's orders, and several ceremonies performed to avert the impending storm, which, they apprehended, might be attended with Great numbers of them cut off by Claudius. Year after Christ 268.

And by Aurelian.

Who is afterwards defeated by them.

^e Aur. Vict. in epit.

^f Goltz. p. 118.

But in the end cuts off their whole army.

Year after
Christ 270.

Their several irruptions into the empire.

the total ruin of the empire. But in the mean time Aurelian, having received strong reinforcements from Illyricum, came unexpectedly upon the enemy in the neighbourhood of Fanum Fortunæ, now Fano, and gave them a dreadful overthrow. Such of them as escaped from this first battle were slain in two others, one of which was fought in the neighbourhood of Placentia, and the other in the plains of Ticinum, or Pavia. Thus was the whole multitude cut off to a man^g. About four years after, the Alemans, who dwelt near the Rhine, made an irruption into Gaul; but were forced by Probus, who was afterwards emperor, and then commanded in those parts, to repass that river, and return home^h. They continued afterwards quiet, without molesting either their neighbours or the Romans, for the space of eleven years, that is, till the year 285, the third of Dioclesian's reign, when they attempted, it seems, to break into the empire; for Dioclesian is said to have made war upon them, and to have gained some advantages over themⁱ. In 287, they broke into Gaul anew, with the Burgundians, Heruli, Carians, and several other barbarous nations; but were most of them cut off by Maximian, or destroyed by famine^k. For the great advantages gained over them by Maximian, a triumph was decreed by the senate both to him and Dioclesian, as appears from a medal of this very year 287^l. The following year Maximian passed the Rhine at the head of a numerous army, and, entering the country of the Alemans, laid it waste far and near, destroying all with fire and sword. He took in this expedition an incredible number of captives, and reduced, if Mamertin his panegyrist is to be credited, great part of Germany^m. At the same time Dioclesian entered Germany through Rhætia, and is said to have extended the confines of the empire to the source of the Danube. In the year 291, the Burgundians seized on part of the country belonging to the Alemans, which gave rise to a war between those two nationsⁿ; but as to the issue of this war, we are quite in the dark. In the year 301, Constantius Chlorus, the father of Constantine the Great,

^g Aur. vit. p. 215. Vict. epit.

^h Noris de Dioc. c. 14. p. 19, 20.

Buch. Belg. p. 221.

ⁱ Panegy. x. p. 125, 126.

xi. p. 138.

^k Prob. vit. p. 237.

^l Panegy. x. p. 124.

^m Noris. de Dioc. c. 4. p. 18.

ⁿ Idem ibid.

^o Idem

Great, gained a signal victory over the Alemans, who, breaking into Gaul with a numerous army, came upon him unexpectedly, while he had but a small body of troops with him; which obliged him at first to retire, and shelter himself within the walls of Langres. But his army arriving a few hours after he had entered that city, he marched out at the head of the detachment he had with him, joined his other forces, and, engaging the enemy, gained a complete victory ^p. In this battle the Alemans lost sixty thousand men, as appears from Eutropius^q, St. Jerom^r, Orosius^s, and even from Zonaras^t, and not six thousand only, as we read it in the Greek text of Eusebius. The Alemans, disheartened with so great a loss, did not offer to disturb the peace of the empire during the remaining part of the reign of Constantius. But, in the first of his son Constantine, that is, in 306, they began anew to make inroads into Gaul; which provoked that prince to such a degree, that, having taken some of their kings prisoners, he exposed them to be devoured by the wild beasts in the magnificent shews which he exhibited^u. However, a few years after, that is, in 310, the Alemans, in conjunction with the Bructerians, Cheruscans, and Chamavians, having crossed the Rhine, laid waste the neighbouring provinces; but Constantine, marching against them, overcame them in a pitched battle, and obliged them to quit their booty, and repass the Rhine^w. For this victory he is supposed to have taken the title of Maximus, which we find on his coins of this year^x. From this time no mention is made of the Alemans till the year 355, the eighteenth of Constantius's reign, when they attempted to break into Italy; which obliged the emperor to march against them: but as he drew near the enemy, who were advanced as far as the lake of Constance, he detached Arbetio with the flower of the army against them. Arbetio, falling into an ambuscade, was defeated with great loss. But some of the officers, who commanded under him, engaging the enemy a few days after, without his orders, put the Alemans to flight; and Constantius, satisfied with this small advantage, returned to Milan^y. The 60,000 of them cut off by Constantius Chlorus Year after Christ 301.

X 3

same

^p Eutrop. p. 586. Theoph. p. 5. ^q Eutrop. l. ix. p. 587.
^r Hier. Chron. ^s Oros. l. vii. c. 25. p. 215. ^t Zonar.
p. 244. ^u Eutrop. p. 587. ^w Panegy. vii. p. 165.
^x Birag. p. 462. ^y Ammian. l. xv. p. 36, 37.

Take and plunder forty cities in Gaul.

They are driven out by Julian.

same year another body of Alemans, breaking into Gaul, with the Franks and Saxons, took and plundered above forty towns on the banks of the Rhine, and, among the rest, the city of Cologne, which they almost entirely ruined^z. Hereupon Constantius, unwilling to leave Italy, and march against the barbarians in person, raised Julian to the dignity of Cæsar, and sent him to head the Roman forces in Gaul. Julian, soon after his arrival, led what forces he had against the Alemans, who had advanced as far as Lyons, with a design to surprise that city; but the enemy retiring upon his approach, he waited for them in the passes, through which they were to return to their own country, and there cut most of them pieces. Only a small number who took their rout through the present Switzerland, had the good luck to make their escape, being suffered to pass unmolested by Barbatio, another Roman general, who was encamped at Basle, and is supposed to have had private orders from Constantius to thwart all the designs of Julian^a. Be that as it will, Julian, having thus driven the Alemans out of Gaul, undertook the rebuilding of the Tres Tabernæ, a fort near Argentoratum, now Strasburg, known at present by the name of Saverne, which the enemy had demolished. As it was so situated as to curb the nations beyond the Rhine, and prevent their irruptions into Gaul, Julian not only repaired the antient fortifications, but added new works to them, stored them with provisions for a whole year, and left a numerous garrison in the place, to keep the neighbouring country in awe^b. In the mean time a large body of Alemans, falling upon Barbatio while he was busied in laying a bridge of boats over the Rhine, cut great numbers of his men in pieces, took most of his baggage, laid waste the neighbouring country, and returned home loaded with booty. Elated with this victory, they assembled in great numbers under the banners of Chnodomarius, and six other kings, and encamped in the neighbourhood of Strasburg. Being informed there by a deserter, that Julian's army was only thirteen thousand strong, Chnodomarius had the arrogance to send a messenger to him, commanding him to quit a country, which the Alemans had acquired by their courage and valour^c. Libanius adds, that the messenger produced letters from Constantius, in which he yielded to them that country^d. Julian

^z Idem ibid. ^a Idem l. xvi. p. 73, 74. ^b Jul. p. 512, Liban. p. 273. Ammian. p. 75. ^c Ammian. l. xvi. p. 76, 77. ^d Liban. orat. xii. p. 269, 273.

lian however, paying no regard to them, detained the messenger as a spy, and pursued the works he had begun at Saverne, till he received intelligence, that the enemy having passed the Rhine, were advanced within twenty miles of his camp. Hereupon interrupting the work, he marched directly against them, and engaging the same day, though his men were tired with their long march, gained a complete victory over them. They were thirty-five thousand strong, headed by seven kings, ten princes, and several other persons of great distinction. The victory continued long doubtful; the Roman cavalry even gave way, nor could Julian, with all his oratory, prevail upon them to return to the charge, but the vigorous resistance made by the foot so disheartened the barbarians, that, despairing to be able to break them, they began to abate much of their impetuosity; which the Romans perceiving, made a last effort, and charging the barbarians, already quite spent, put them in the end to flight, and pursued them with great slaughter. Vast numbers of them were drowned in the Rhine, in attempting to cross that river. Chnodomarius himself was taken prisoner, and presented to Julian, who sent him to Constantius, by whose orders he was conveyed to Rome, where he died soon after a natural death. In this battle Julian lost only four tribunes, and two hundred and forty-three private men. Of the Alemans six, or, as some write, eight thousand men were killed in the field; but a great many dead bodies were seen floating on the river^e. Zosimus writes, that sixty thousand of the enemy were killed upon the spot, and an equal number drowned; but he must certainly have been mistaken. Julian himself styles the battle of Strasburg a successful action, which restored Gaul to its antient liberty^f. Mamertinus says, that by this single battle, the war was ended, and Germany ruined^g. It is at least certain, that the barbarians were entirely driven out of Gaul. Julian, from the field of battle, returned to Saverne, and, having finished the works there, advanced with his whole army to Mayence, where he built a bridge over the river, and, entering Germany, continued ravaging the countries of the Alemans, and their allies, till after the equinox, when the snow preventing him from advancing farther,

The battle of Strasburg, in which the Alemans were intirely defeated by Julian. Year after Christ 357.

X 4

he

^e Ammian. l. xvi. p. 75. & l. xvii. p. 86. Liban. orat. x. p. 237. & orat. xii. p. 274, 276. ^f Amm. l. xx. p. 160. ^g Pa- negyr xi. p. 223.

he returned to Gaul, after having repaired the castle of Trajan, which stood at a small distance from the present city of Francfort, and granted to the Alemans, and their allies, a truce for ten months, upon their promising to store with provisions the fort that was building in their country^b. The truce no sooner expired, than Julian, passing the Rhine on a bridge of boats, entered anew the country of the Alemans, and obliged two of their kings, Suomarius and Hortarius, to sue for peace; which he granted them, upon their sending back all the Roman captives, and furnishing timber, iron, and other materials, to repair the cities which they had ruinedⁱ. We are told by Zosimus, that, in this expedition, Julian got two thousand Romans set at liberty^k.

Julian obliges
the princes of the Alemans to sue for peace.

THE following year 359, Julian, passing unexpectedly the Rhine, advanced to the most distant borders of the Alemans and Burgundians, destroying all with fire and sword. Hereupon two of the kings of the Alemans, Marcrianus and Hariobaldus, dispatched ambassadors to him, suing for peace. At the same time Vadamarius king of the Alemans, whose country lay towards Basle, came in person to wait on Julian, who at his earnest request, restored to him his son, whom he had given as an hostage; but at the same time he declared, that he would treat him as an enemy, if he did not set at liberty the Romans, whom, to the number of three thousand, he kept in captivity. As Vadamarius put off from time to time the sending back the captives, Julian, leaving Spire, where he then was, marched directly to Basle, and, arriving unexpectedly in the neighbourhood of that city, struck Vadamarius and his people with such terror, that the captives were immediately set at liberty. Hereupon Julian received the king of the Alemans as his friend and ally, ordering his men to forbear all hostilities^l. We are told, that the emperor himself wrote to Julian in favour of Vadamarius, being induced thereunto by some Alemans, who were in great employments at court, viz. by Latinus, at that time comes domesticorum; by Agilo the tribunus stabuli, or master of the horse; and by Agilo, who had a chief command in the army^m. Soon after, three other kings

^b Ammian. p. 88. Liban. orat. xii. p. 277.

xii. p. 279.

p. 117.

^k In Julian. p. 514.

^m Idem, l. xvi. p. 75. & l. xiv. p. 24.

ⁱ Idem, orat.

^l Ammian. l. xvii.

kings of the Alemans, viz. Urias, Ursicinus, and Vestralphus, sent deputies suing for peace ; which Julian granted them, upon their setting at liberty the Roman captivesⁿ. Julian, having thus concluded a peace with the princes of the Alemans, left Germany, and, putting his troops into winter-quarters, as the season was already far advanced, retired himself to Paris^o. Two years after, that is, in 361, the Alemans, those chiefly who were subject to Vadomarius, broke anew into Gaul on the side of Rhætia, and committed dreadful ravages there. Vadomarius pretended to be much concerned for the hostilities committed by his countrymen, and to have the greatest respect imaginable for Julian. But in the mean time he wrote a letter to the emperor Constantius, filled with bitter invectives against him. Julian having intercepted the letter, found means to have him arrested at a banquet, and banished him into Spain^p. He had already sent Libano, one of his generals, with a strong detachment against the Alemans ; but he being killed, and his men put to the rout near Sanctio, thought to be the present Seckingen, in the neighbourhood of Basle, Julian advanced in person against them, passed the Rhine, and, coming upon them unexpectedly, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to restore the booty they had taken, and sue for peace ; which he granted them upon his own terms^q.

THE Alemans continued quiet the remaining part of Julian's reign ; but they no sooner heard of his death, than they renewed their ravages in Rhætia and Gaul. Hereupon Valentinian I. then emperor, dispatched Daga-lai-phus, one of his best generals against them, and, leaving Italy, hastened in person into Gaul, in order to make head against the numerous forces, which the Alemans, and other barbarous nations were said to be raising with a design to invade Gaul. The emperor advanced as far as Rheims ; but the Alemans retiring at his approach, he returned back, and took up his winter-quarters at Paris^r. In the mean time the Alemans having in the depth of winter, passed the Rhine on the ice, defeated in a pitched battle the Romans, who attempted to oppose them, took the standards of the Batavians and Heruli, ^{They defeat the Romans.} killed ⁿ Idem, l. xvi. p. 75.

^o Idem, l. xx. p. 154.

^p Liban. orat. xii. p. 286. Ammian. l. xxi. p. 181, 182.

^q Ammian. ibid.

^r Idem, l. xxvi. p. 315.

But are defeated with great slaughter by Jovinus.
Year after
Christ 366.

killed count Charietto, who commanded in both Germanies, and wounded count Severianus, who had the command of a body of troops ^s. Zosimus supposes Valentinian himself to have been present at this battle. But it is plain from Ammianus, that he was then at Paris; whence, upon the first news of the defeat of his troops, he dispatched Dagalaiphus, to prevent the evil consequences, that were likely to attend the late overthrow. Dagalaiphus, pretending he had not sufficient strength to engage the enemy, who were roving about the country in several great bodies, did not so much as offer to restrain them. Hereupon he was recalled, and Jovinus, general of the horse, sent in his room, who defeated the Alemans in three battles, whereof the first was fought at a place called Scarponna, now Charpeigne, between Toul and Metz; the second in the neighbourhood of the Moselle; and the third near Chalons on the Marne. In the last of these three engagements, the enemy fought with great resolution and intrepidity, and the Romans were once in great danger of being utterly defeated, the sudden flight of a tribune having disanimated the troops under his command. However, Jovinus, inspiring them with fresh courage, led them on to the charge, while they were ready to turn their backs; and pressing with great resolution and intrepidity upon the enemy, obliged them to give ground, and in the end to betake themselves to a precipitous flight. On the enemy's side, six thousand were killed on the spot, and four thousand wounded; and of the Romans only two hundred killed, and as many wounded ^t. The enemy withdrew in the night-time; but were intercepted in their retreat by several parties sent out by Jovinus for that purpose; inasmuch that few of them had the good luck to make their escape. One of their kings was taken prisoner, and immediately hanged by those who took him; which base action provoked Jovinus to such a degree, that he would have punished with death the tribune who commanded the party, had he not found, upon a strict enquiry, that he had done all that lay in his power to restrain the fury of the incensed soldiery ^u. Of this victory Idatius must, without all doubt, be understood, where he writes, that the Alemans were utterly defeated by Valentinian

^s Ammian. l. xxvii p. 334. Zos. l. iv. p. 740.
Amian. ibid. p. 334. 335. Zos. ibid.
ibid.

^t Am^u Zos.

tinian^w. In the close of the following year 367, the Alemans, notwithstanding the loss they had sustained the year before, passed unexpectedly the Rhine, and having taken and plundered the city of Mentz, while the emperor was employed, says Ammianus, in some other expedition, committed dreadful ravages in the neighbouring provinces, under the conduct of Rhando, one of their princes. The Romans, to be revenged on the Alemans, had recourse to treachery, and caused Vithicabius, a prince of the same nation, to be assassinated by one of his own people, whom they had gained over by their emissaries. Vithicabius was the son of Vadamarius, and a prince of great address, intrepidity, and resolution^x. Valentinian, having spent the following winter at Treves in making vast preparations, with a design to attack the Alemans in their own country, took the field on the seventeenth of June, and, having assembled all his troops, crossed the Rhine, entered the enemy's country, and advanced, without the least opposition, to a place called Solicinium, which the modern geographers take to be the city of Sultz on the Neckar. The Alemans had posted themselves there on a high and steep mountain; but the Romans, notwithstanding their advantageous situation, attacked them with great intrepidity, and, tho' several times repulsed, dislodged them in the end, and pursued them with great slaughter. Some of the enemy made their escape by favour of the night; but the far greater part were put to the sword, their retreat being cut off by count Sebastian, at the head of a strong detachment. After this battle, which was fought at a small distance from the head of the Neckar, in the present duchy of Wirtemberg, the emperor returned to Treves, as the season was already far advanced, and there gave audience to the ambassadors of the Alemans suing for peace; which, it seems, he granted them^y, but, upon what terms, we are not told. This peace however was not long-lived; for two years after, that is, in 370, there appeared on the banks of the Rhine eighty-thousand Burgundians, whom Valentinian had invited to join him against Macrianus king of the Alemans. But the emperor being then busied in fortifying the banks of the Rhine, and unwilling to interrupt that work, the Burgundians returned

The Romans cause one of their kings to be treacherously murdered.

Valentinian gains a signal victory over them.
Year after
Christ 368.

^w Idat, fast. ad ann. 366.

^x Ammian, ibid. p. 349.

^y Idem ibid, p. 350, 351, & l. xxviii. p. 352.

turned home, without offering to molest the Alemans. However, Theodosius, father to the emperor of that name, taking advantage of the consternation the Alemans were in, made an irruption into their country, and returned with a considerable number of prisoners, to whom the emperor allowed lands and settlements on the banks of the Po^z. The following year Valentinian broke unexpectedly into the country of the Alemans, hoping to surprize Macrianus their king, whom he chiefly dreaded; but Macrianus, having received timely notice of his approach, saved himself by flight; and the emperor returned to Treves, after having laid waste the country round Mentz, belonging to the Alemans called Bucinobantes, to whom he gave one of their own nation, named Fraomarius, for king. But the country being entirely ruined, Fraomarius was glad to quit his new dignity for the command of a body of his country-men then quartered in Britain^a. The following year, Valentinian, passing the Rhine in the beginning of the summer, committed some ravages in the country of the Alemans, and undertook the building of a fort in the neighbourhood of Basle, to serve as a curb upon the Alemans on that side. But in the mean time the Sarmatians and Quadians having broken into Pannonia, and cut in pieces two Roman legions there, the emperor resolved to march against them in person. As he could not leave Gaul without concluding a peace with the Alemans, who, he was well apprised, would not fail to break into those provinces upon his departure, he invited Macrianus to an interview in the neighbourhood of Mentz. The king of the Alemans readily complied with the invitation; and though at first he betrayed a great deal of haughtiness in seeing his friendship thus courted by the Roman emperor, yet, in the end, he accepted the advantageous terms that were offered him, and ever after continued a faithful friend to the Romans^b. Some years after, a war being kindled between the Alemans and Franks, Macrianus, having invaded the enemy's country, was killed in an ambuscade by Mellobaudes, a warlike prince of that nation.

He concludes a peace with Macrianus
their king.
Year after
Christ 374,

IN the year 378, the Goths, who had been admitted by Valens into the empire, having revolted, and defeated several Roman ^z Idem, p. 377.

^a Idem. l. xxix, xxx, p. 397, 398.

^b Idem, l. xxx. p. 417, 418.

Roman armies sent against them, Gratian, alarmed at the danger that threatened the eastern provinces, resolved to march in person to the assistance of his uncle, as soon as the season would permit ; and in the mean time ordered part of his forces to set out on their march from Gaul, where he then was, to Illyricum. Of this notice being immediately given to the Alemans, called Lenticenses, by a countryman of theirs, who was in some employment at the court of Gratian, without the least regard to the treaty they had concluded with Valentinian, they passed the Rhine, and began to lay waste the neighbouring provinces. They were repulsed at first by the Roman troops quartered in those parts ; but returning soon after, to the number of forty thousand fighting men, Gratian was obliged to recall the troops that were already on their march into Illyricum, and to send them, reinforced with those that were left in Gaul, under the conduct of count Nannianus, and Mellobaudes, king of the Franks, to oppose the attempts of the enemy, and to oblige them to repass the Rhine. The two generals gave them battle at a place called Argentaria, now, as is commonly believed, Colmar, and, tho' greatly inferior in number, gained a complete victory, thirty thousand of the enemy being killed on the spot, and the rest either slain in the pursuit, or taken prisoners. Their king Triarius, and several other persons of great distinction, were in the number of the dead ^d. After this victory, Gratian passed the Rhine at the head of his army, and, entering the enemy's country, obliged them to take refuge among their barren mountains, where he kept them shut up, till they were forced by famine to submit to such terms as the conqueror thought fit to impose upon them, one of which was, that they should deliver up their youth to serve in the Roman army ; which they did accordingly ^e. Of the Alemans no further mention is made in history till the year 388, when we are told by Orosius ^f, that, dreading the arms of Maximus, who had usurped the empire in Gaul, they submitted to him of their own accord, paying him a yearly tribute, and supplying his army with such quantities of corn and other provisions, as he thought fit to demand. In the reign of Honorius, which began in 395, a colony of the Alemans was allowed to settle in that part of the present Switzerland, which is separated by mount

^{They break the treaty ; but are defeated with great slaughter by Gratian. Year after Christ 378.}

^{They submit to Maximus.}

^{They settle in Helvetia.}

^c Idem, ibid.
ibid. p. 455.

^d Idem, l. xxxi. p. 453, 454.
^f Oros. l. vii. c. 35. p. 220.

^e Idem

mount Jura, from the Franche Comté, and by the lake of Geneva and the Rhône from the present Savoy and province of Vienne &. Servius, who wrote his comment upon Virgil about the year 411, tells us, that, in his time, the country bordering on the lake Lemanus, or lake of Geneva, was inhabited by the Alemans ^b. We find no farther mention made of the Alemans till the year 477, when Audoacrius king of the Saxons, and Childeric king of the Franks, marching against those of that nation who had settled among the Alps, and made frequent inroads both into Gaul and Italy, put great numbers of them to the sword, and stripped them of the booty, which they had a little before brought with them from Italy ⁱ. Upon the downfall of the western empire, the Alemans made themselves masters of that part of Gaul, which is now known by the name of Alsace, and settled there ^k. These Alemans, being joined by their countrymen in Germany, and those who dwelt between mount Jura and the lake of Geneva, in the year 496, entered Germania Secunda, which then belonged to the Ripuarian Franks, putting all to fire and sword. Hereupon Sigibert, king of the country, not able to make head against them with his own forces alone, had recourse to Clovis king of the Salian Franks; who immediately joined him. The two kings, after their conjunction, engaged the Alemans, and gained a complete victory over them at Tolbiac, thought to be the present Zulpick, about four leagues from Cologne. After this defeat, such of the Alemans as had settled in Alsace, and in the neighbourhood of the lake of Geneva, acknowledged Clovis for their king. Others took refuge in Rhætia and Noricum, being allowed to settle there by Theodoric king of Italy, as we have related above ^l. The same prince transplanted great numbers of them into Italy, and suffered the rest to settle in the countries between the Alps and the Danube, which were subject to him. From this time the Alemans had no king of their own (for their last king was killed in the above-mentioned battle); but continued, as they were dispersed in several countries, subject partly to the Ostrogoths, who were masters of Italy, and partly to the Franks, who were lords of Gaul. When the Ostrogoths yielded to the children of Clovis whatever they held out of Italy, all the

They are overcome by Clovis, and dispersed.

Year after Christ 275.

& Vales. l. v. p. 237:

p. 158.

bell. Goth. l. i. c. 12.

ⁱ Greg. Tur. l. ii. c. 19.

^l Vide supra, p. 273;

^b Serv. in not. ad 4 georg.

^k Procop.

the Alemans, except those whom Theodoric had transplanted into that country, submitted to the Franks, as we shall relate in our history of the modern nations.

The Gepidæ.

THE Gepidæ were, without all doubt, a Gothic nation. ^{The Gepidæ.} Jornandes, speaking of them, gives us the following account of their name and origin: The Goths, ^{Their origin and name.} says that writer, leaving Scandinavia under the conduct of king Berith, put to sea with three ships only. One of these, sailing slower than the other two, was thence called Gepanta, signifying in the Gothic tongue slow; and hence the name of Gepantæ and Gepidæ, which was first given to that people by way of reproach^m. Procopius likewise tells us in express terms, that the Goths, the Vandals, the Visigoths, and the Gepidæ, were originally one and the same nation; that they had the same customs, manners, religion and language; and that they only differed in names, borrowed perhaps, says he, from their different leadersⁿ: and Paulus Diaconus; the Goths, the Gepidæ, the Vandals, says he, agree in language, manners, and religion, and differ only in name^o. They entered Scythia, ^{Their country.} according to Jornandes, with the other Goths, and settled in the neighbourhood of the Tanais, and Palus Mæotis^p. There they continued till the reign of Arcadius and Honorius, when their numbers being greatly encreased, they approached the Danube, and, having some time after crossed that river, they settled in the neighbourhood of Singidunum and Sirmium, about the year 400, where they still were when Procopius wrote his history^q. They had kings of their own, and formed a separate and distinct nation both from the Ostrogoths and Visigoths; but perhaps not from the Lombards, who were afterwards masters of Italy^r. As for what we find of them in the antient writers, Jornandes tells us, that, under the conduct of their king Fastida, they gained a complete victory over the Burgundians ^{They defeat the Burgundians.} about the year 245^s. The Burgundians whom they overcame, came, and almost utterly extirpated, were, according to Valeſius, as we have obſerved above, a different nation from the Burgundians who afterwards ſettled in Gaul. Be that as it will, Faſtida, elated with his ſucceſs againſt the Burgundians, diſpatched a meſſenger to Oſtrogotha king of the Goths, acquainting him, that as the Gepidæ were greatly ſtreightened for want of room, he muſt either grant them lands, or prepare for war. Oſtrogotha answered, That he ſhould be very unwilling to make war upon his kiſmen; but was determined to part with no land. Hereupon Faſtida, entering the territories of the Goths, began to lay them waſte; which Oſtrogotha no ſooner underſtood, than, leaving Mœſia, which he was then ravaging, he haſtened back to the defence of his own country, and, meeting Faſtida, gave him a total overthrow; but, contenting himſelf with the victory, did not ſo much as purſue the flying Gepidæ, looking upon them rather as his kiſmen, than an enemy^t. The Gepidæ joined the Goths, and other northern nations, in the famous irruption which they made with their united forces into the empire in 269, the ſecond of the reign of Claudius; but they were defeated by that prince with great ſlaughter, as we have related at length elſewhere^u. In the year 279, the emperor Probus granted to them, and likewise to the Ju-thungians, Vandals, and Franks, lands in Thrace, upon their promiſing to live as the other ſubjects of the empire. But while the emperor was engaged in war with Saturninus, who had revolted in the eaſt, they laid hold of that opportunity to ravage the neighbouring provinces. Hereupon Probus, having ſucceſſfully ended his other wars, marched againſt them in perſon, and, in ſeveral encounters, cut ſuch numbers of them in pieces, that only a ſmall body of Franks had the good luck to eſcape the general ſlaughter, and return home^w. In 291, a war broke out between them and the Goths, in which the Gepidæ were aſſiſted by the Vandals; and the Goths by the Taifalæ, another Gothic nation. But all we know of this war is, that both parties were greatly weakened, and put out of a condition of diſturbing, for ſome years, the peace of the empire^x. The Gepidæ are mentioned by St. Jerom among the

^m Jorn. de reb. Goth. p. 89. ⁿ Procop. bell. Vand. l. i. c. 2. ^o Paul. Diac. misc. l. xiv. p. 429. ^p Jorn. ibid. p. 84. ^q Idem ibid. ^r Vide Grot. proleg. in hist. Goth. p. 53. ^s Jorn. l. xvii. p. 635.

But are defeated by the Goths.

Year after Chriſt 248.

Great numbers of them cut off by Probus.

Year after Chriſt 279.

^t Idem, p. 636, 637.
hiſt. vol. xv. p. 252, 253.
gyr. xi. p. 131, 138.

^u Claud. vit. p. 207. & Univerſ.
^w Prob. vit. p. 240. ^x Pane-the other nations of barbarians, that in 407, broke into Gaul, and over-ran those provinces ^y. They were afterwards subdued, with the other northern nations, by Attila, ^{They are subdued by Attila.} and in 451, served under him in his famous expedition into Gaul; on which occasion the Franks and they meeting in the dark, both parties engaged with such fury, that above fifteen thousand were left dead on the spot ^z. Upon the death of Attila, the Gepidæ shook off the yoke under the conduct of their king Ardairic; which occasioned a bloody war between them and the Hunns. But at length Ardairic having gained a complete victory over the Hunns, of whom thirty thousand were killed on the spot, with their king Ellac, the Gepidæ not only recovered their antient liberty, ^{They defeat the Hunns with great slaughter, and recover their antient liberty.} but the country whence they had been driven by Attila, that is, all antient Dacia, lying north of the Danube ^a. This memorable battle, which, in a manner, put an end ^{Year after Christ 480.} to the empire of the Hunns, was fought on the banks of the Netad in Pannonia, about the year 480 ^b. The Gepidæ, thus settled in Dacia, entered into an alliance with the Romans, who agreed to pay them an annual pension. Dacia beyond the Danube was thenceforth called, from its new inhabitants, Gepidia, as we read in Jornandes ^c. Some years after, part of Illyricum was likewise granted them, with the city of Sirmium; whence their kings are by Theophanes styled kings of Sirmium ^d. There they continued quiet till the year 537, when, joining the Heruli, they began to plunder the neighbouring provinces. Hereupon Justinian, then emperor, having ended the war in Italy with the Goths, dispatched his best generals against them, who, having overcome them in several encounters, obliged them to abandon what they held in Illyricum, ^{They are driven out of Illyricum by Justinian.} and content themselves with North Dacia, or Dacia beyond the Danube ^e. In the year 550, a contest arose ^{They quarrel with the Lombards.} between the Gepidæ, and the Lombards descended from them, says Paulus Diaconus ^f, about their confines; for the Lombards held part of Dacia beyond the Danube, having been allowed to settle there by the Roman emperors, ^y Hier. ep. xi. p. 93.

664.

^a Idem ibid. p. 133, 134.

^z Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 46. p.

^b Idem ibid.

^c Idem, p. 93, 94.

^d Theoph. ad ann. Justin. 13.

^e Procop. bell. Goth. l. iii. c. 33.
xiii. p. 429.

^f Paul. Diac. l.

rors, who indeed had abandoned that province, but claimed a right of disposing of it to whom they pleased. Both the Gepidæ and Lombards, before they came to an open rupture, dispatched ambassadors to Justinian, soliciting succours, in virtue of their alliance with the empire. The emperor, after hearing the ambassadors of both nations, declared, that, in case of a war, he was determined not to suffer the Lombards to be oppressed by their encroaching neighbours, ordering at the same time ten thousand horse, and fifteen hundred foot, to march to their assistance, under the command of Constantianus, Buzes, Aratius, and other generals; which the Gepidæ no sooner understood, than they concluded a peace with the Lombards^g. But the Roman troops were scarce returned home, when the Gepidæ refusing to stand to the articles of the treaty, took the field anew, under the conduct of their king Thorisinus. Auduinus, then king of the Lombards, having drawn together what troops he could, went out to meet the enemy; but both armies, seized with a panic while they were ready to engage, betook themselves at the same time to a precipitous flight; which both kings looking upon as a prodigy, they concluded a two years truce^h; which was no sooner expired, than the Gepidæ, calling in the Heruli to their assistance, broke unexpectedly into the territories of the Lombards, destroying all with fire and sword. But the Lombards, receiving a timely reinforcement from Justinian, fell upon the Gepidæ, and gave them a total overthrowⁱ. We are told, that Justinian had promised to observe a strict neutrality in this war; and that his promise was confirmed by the oath of twelve senators; but nevertheless, as the Gepidæ had not kept their word with him, he did not think himself bound, either by his own promise, or the oaths of the senators, who had sworn in his name^k. This defeat was followed by a peace between the two nations, which was concluded by the mediation of Justinian, unwilling that either should aggrandize themselves at the expence of the other. Thorisinus was at this time king of the Gepidæ, and Auduinus of the Lombards; but neither had any right to the crown he wore. The lawful heir to Elemund the late king of the Gepidæ was Ulftrigothus, that prince's only son; but Elemund dying while he was yet under age, Thorisinus had caused receive a great overthrow from the Lom-

The Gepidæ
bards.
Year after
Christ 552.

^g Procop. ibid. c. 34, 39.
ⁱ Idem ibid. c. 25.

^h Idem ibid. l. iv. c. 18.

^k Idem ibid.

caused himself to be acknowledged in his room. In the same manner Auduinus, king of the Lombards, had excluded Ildigesal the lawful heir from the crown, and placed it upon his own head. The above-mentioned peace between the two nations was scarce concluded, when Ildigesal took refuge among the Gepidæ, and Ustirigothus among the Lombards. Both princes were demanded with great earnestness and threats by their respective nations; but neither caring to comply with the request of the other, they both began to prepare for war. However, the two kings, or rather usurpers, before hostilities were committed on either side, agreed to dispatch each other's rival; which they did accordingly, deeming it less dishonourable to assassinate than betray those, who had put themselves under their protection¹. Not long after, the two kings dying, Thorisinus was succeeded by Cunimundus, and Auduinus by Alboinus. Cunimundus had scarce ascended the throne, when, reviving some antient claims upon the Lombards, which they refused to comply with, he took the field at the head of a very numerous army, and, entering the country of the Lombards, committed there unheard-of ravages. On the other hand, Alboinus, having drawn together a no less numerous army, resolved to put the whole to the issue of a battle; which Cunimundus not declining, the two armies engaged with a fury hardly to be expressed. The victory continued long doubtful; but in the end, the Gepidæ were put to flight, and pursued by the victorious Lombards with such slaughter, that scarce one was left alive of so numerous a multitude. Alboinus killed Cunimundus with his own hand, and, cutting off his head, turned his skull into a cup called by the Lombards, says Paulus Diaconus, schala, and by the Latins patera. This schala or cup he ever afterwards used at all public banquets and entertainments. After this victory, the Lombards seized on all Dacia, obliging the Gepidæ either to submit to them, or retire elsewhere. Thenceforth they had no king of their own, but lived in subjection either to the Lombards, who were masters of their country, or to the princes of the neighbouring nations, especially of the Hunns settled in Pannonia^m. Thus Paulus Diaconus in his history of the Lombards. Lazius adds, that, among the present Hungarians, the descendents of the Gepidæ are easily distinguished

The Gepidæ
defeated by the same nation with great slaughter.

The end of their kingdom.
Year after
Christ 572

¹ Idem ibid. c. 27.
l. i. c. 27.

^m Paul. Diag. de gest. Longibard.

flinguished from those who are sprung from the Hunnsⁿ. The ruin of the kingdom of the Gepidæ is placed by Pagi in 553, while Justinian was still living; but by others more rightly in the year 572, Justin, the successor of Justinian, being then emperor; for we are told, that the treasures of the deceased king were conveyed to Justin at Constantinople by Trassaius an Arian bishop, and by Reptilanes, the late king's grandson^o. Alboinus afterwards married Rosimund the daughter of Cunimundus; which made the Gepidæ bear the yoke more patiently^p. Theodebert, one of the kings of the Franks, reproaches the emperor Justinian for assuming the title of Gepidicus, to which he had no claim, since that nation was never overcome or conquered by him^q. Some writers think, that the king of the Franks was therein mistaken, since the surname of Gepidicus is not to be found on any of the almost innumerable monuments and coins of Justinian, which have reached our times. Others are of opinion, that Justinian took the surname of Gepidicus, not on account of his conquering that nation, but because the Gepidæ, by putting themselves as they did, under his protection, were deemed his subjects, which, say they, intitled him to the surname of Gepidicus. It is certain, that he took, and, according to the most probable opinion, on this account, the title of Francicus, before he had gained any advantages over that nation, nay, several years before he made war upon them.

ⁿ Laz. de migrat. gent. l. xi. p. 183.
¹² edit. Scalig.

^p Paul, Diac. ibid.

^o Abbas Biclari. p.
^q Agath. l. i. p. 14.

The Heruli.

The Heruli
 Their origin.
 Their different seats.

THE Heruli, by Zosimus called Eruli^r, by Syncellus Aairuli^s, but commonly Heruli, were originally, according to Jornandes and Procopius, a Gothic nation. The former writer tells us, that they first dwelt in Scandinavia, and that, being driven from thence by the Dani, they wandered eastward as far as the Palus Mœotis, and settled in that neighbourhood^t. Procopius speaks of them as inhabiting, in antient times, the countries lying beyond the Danube^u, agreeing therein with Jornandes. There they ^r Zos l. i. p. 652.

 per. Goth. c. 3. p. 613.

^s Syncel. p. 382.
^u Procop. de bell. Goth. l. ii.

^t Jorn.

they continued, making frequent irruptions into the empire, till the reign of the emperor Anastasius, who succeeded Zeno in 491, when great numbers of them were cut off by the Lombards, and the rest driven from their antient habitations. Some of them, after having long roved about from one country to another, settled in that of the Rugians, the present Pomerania, which they found uninhabited, the antient proprietors being gone with the Goths into Italy. Some time after, they removed from thence into North Dacia, or Dacia beyond the Danube, being allowed by the Gepidæ, then masters of that country, to settle among them. But being oppressed and ill used by the Gepidæ, they had recourse to the empor Anastasius, who in 511, allowed them to pass the Danube, and settle in Thrace, upon their promising to serve with fidelity in the Roman armies, when required^w. Great numbers of them, upon their being driven out of their own country by the Lombards, as we have mentioned above, under the conduct of several princes of the blood royal, took their rout westward, and passing without opposition thro' several barbarous nations, came to the ocean, and, embarking there, set sail for Thule, where they settled^x. By Thule Procopius meant, without all doubt, the peninsula of Scandinavia, which he calls ten times as big as Britain; and adds, that great part of it was destitute of inhabitants, but in that, which was inhabited, were seated thirteen populous nations, each of them being governed by their own kings and laws^y. The Heruli had kings of their own; but their kings, says Procopius, were such only by name; for they scarce had any authority, and were almost upon a level with every private man^z. Hence some think they were called Heruli, from the antient Gothic word Herrn, signifying free. But others, and, among the rest, Ablavius, as quoted by Jornandes, will have them to have been called Heruli from the Greek word Hele, signifying marshy grounds, such as those were in the neighbourhood of the Palus Mæotis, where they dwelt^a. The Heruli had some laws peculiar to themselves, and differing from those of all other nations; for, among them, when men were grown old and infirm, they were not to live, but entreat their relations to dispatch them; which they did accordingly, by placing them on a pile of wood, where Their government, manners, customs, religion.

Y 3

^w Idem ibid. c. 14. p. 42.
ibid.

^z Idem c. 14.

^x Idem ibid.
^a Jorn ubi sup.

^y Idem

where they were put to death by one, who was a stranger to them in blood, and their bodies reduced to ashes, it being the duty of the nearest relation to set fire to the pile. When the husband died, the wife was to strangle herself on her husband's tomb, on pain of being deemed infamous, and looked upon as one, who had no value for her husband. They were given to all manner of lewdness and debauchery, and not ashamed of the most unnatural practices. They adored the same gods as the other Gothic nations, and used, on some extraordinary occasions, to appease them with human sacrifices^b. They were a warlike people, and are chiefly commended by the antients for their swiftness and agility, all other nations chusing their light-armed soldiers out of them. The Heruli began first to invade the empire about the year 526, the fourth of the emperor Valerian's reign; but were soon driven back by Gallienus, the son of Valerian, and his colleague in the empire^c. Eleven years after, the Heruli, passing from the Palus Mæotis into the Euxine sea with five hundred vessels, under the conduct of one of their chiefs named Naulobat, landed at Byzantium and Chryopolis, now Scutari. At the latter place they were met and defeated by Venerianus, who was himself killed in the engagement. The Heruli somewhat discouraged with the loss they had sustained, reembarked, and began to retire to the mouth of the Euxine sea; but the very next day, the wind proving favourable, they returned anew before Byzantium, and having crossed the Bosphorus, surprised and plundered the city of Cyzicus, with great part of Asia, and the islands of Lemnos and Scyros in the Archipelago. Thence they steered their course towards Greece, and, landing there, besieged and burnt Athens, Corinth, Sparta, and Argos, without meeting with the least opposition, till the Athenians, under the conduct of Dexippus the historian, waiting for them in the streights, and falling upon them unexpectedly, cut great numbers of them in pieces. However, in their retreat they committed great devastations in Bœotia, Acarnania, Epirus, and Thrace. In the mean time Gallienus, returning from Gaul, hastened into Illyricum, hoping to meet the Heruli there on their return home. He met them accordingly, and, coming upon them unexpectedly, gave them a total overthrow, pursued them with great slaughter Great ravages committed by them in Asia and Greece.

Year after Christ 267.

They are defeated by Gallienus.

as

^b Procop. ibid.

^c Zonar. vit. Gallien p. 253.

as far as the Nessus in Mœsia, and there cut three thousand of them in pieces, as they were attempting to cross that river. Naulobat himself was taken prisoner, but treated with great humanity by Gallienus, who, to gain the affection of the Barbarians, honoured him either with the consulate, or the consular ornaments^d. The Heruli however, two years after, that is, in 269, joined the Goths, and other northern nations, against the emperor Claudius; but were defeated by that prince with great slaughter, as we have related at length elsewhere^e. In the year 287, the fourth of Dioclesian's reign, the Heruli, joining the Chaibons and Cavions, entered Gaul, and laid waste the provinces bordering on the Rhine. But Maximian, marching against them, gave them a total overthrow, and pursued them with such slaughter, that, if his panegyrist may be credited, out of so great a multitude not one was left alive to carry home the news of their defeat^f. All we know of the Chaibons and Cavions is, that their country lay at a great distance from Gaul, as well as that of the Heruli^g. In the year 366, the third of Valentinian's reign, we find a body of Heruli serving in the Roman army on the Rhine; for Ammianus Marcellinus^h and Zosimusⁱ tell us, that the Alemans, crossing that river on the ice, defeated the Romans, and took the standards of the Batavians and Heruli. About the year 370, Ermenric, whom Jornandes call Ermanaric, king of the Ostrogoths, after having subdued the neighbouring nations, fell upon the Heruli, and obliged them to submit, to pay him a yearly tribute, and to supply his army with their youth, when required^k. They were afterwards subdued, with the other northern nations, by Attila, and served in his army, when in 451, he invaded Gaul. Upon the death of Attila, they recovered their antient liberty, and, entering into an alliance with the Romans, served in their armies, under commanders of their own nation, but named by the emperors^l. In the year 456, they made a descent on the coast of Galicia; but finding the inhabitants on their guard, they reembarked, and, landing in Biscay, committed great ravages there^m.

And by Maximian.
Year after Christ 287.

Subdued by the Ostrogoths and Hunns.

Serve in the Roman Armies.

Y 4

Idatius,

^d Gallien. vit. p. 181—184. Zos. l. i. p. 651. Syncel. p. 382.

^e Univers. hist. vol. xv. p. 215, 245. ^f Panegy. x. p. 125.

^g Idem ibid. p. 124.

^h Amm. Marcel. l. xxvii. p. 334.

ⁱ Zos. l. iv. p. 740.

^k Jorn. rer. Goth. p. 645. Procop. de bell. Goth. l. i. sub. init.

^l Agath. l. i. p. 22.

^m Idat.

Idatius, who speaks of this descent, does not tell us whence these Heruli came, who, according to him, were but four hundred in number. When Odoacer made himself master of Italy in 476, such of the Heruli, as served at that time in the Roman armies, obtained of him lands in Italy, the third of that country being by him divided among the barbarians, who were in the Roman service, under the name of Fœderati, or allies, and had joined him against Orestes, and his son Augustulus, as we have related elsewhere ⁿ. In the reign of the emperor Anastasius, which began in 491, they made war on several barbarous nations, says Procopius ^o, and subdued them; but having obliged their king Rodulphus to make war upon the Lombards, without the least provocation, they were overthrown by them with great slaughter, and obliged to live either in subjection to the conquerors, or abandon their country. Most of them chose the latter, some settling in the country of the Rugians, as we have hinted above, others returning into Scandinavia, and some, with the permission of the emperor Anastasius, taking up their abode in Thrace and Illyricum ^p, where they had not been long, ere they began to oppress and abuse, in a most barbarous manner, the Romans, among whom they lived. Hereupon Anastasius ordered the troops quartered in the neighbouring provinces to march to the assistance of the oppressed Romans, who taking arms upon their arrival, fell in conjunction with them, on the Heruli, and cut most of them in pieces. Such of them as escaped the general slaughter, had recourse to the clemency of the emperor, who upon their promising to serve the empire like faithful subjects, not only ordered them to be spared, but suffered them to continue in the countries, which he had formerly granted them ^q. In the reign of the emperor Justinian which began in 526, the Heruli, having murdered their king, and no other remaining among them of the blood royal, they dispatched ambassadors into Thule or Scandinavia, with orders to bring a prince from thence of the same family, if it was not extinct likewise there. The ambassadors, pursuant to their directions, pitched upon one (for there were many of the royal race there); but he dying on the way, they went back, and chose another named Todasius, who immediately set out on his journey to Thrace, attended by the ambassadors, by his brother Aordas, and by a guard of two hundred men. But in the mean time the Heruli,

Overthrown
with great slaughter by the Lombards.

They murder
their king, and send for another from Thule.

ⁿ Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 284.
ii. c. 14. ^p Idem ibid. p. 420.
Diac. Lang. c. 20. p. 759.

^o Procop. bell. Goth. l.
^q Idem ibid. & Paul.

having long waited the return of their ambassadors, and suspecting they had met with some misfortune, had recourse to Justinian, begging he would give them a king. The emperor readily complied with their request, and appointed one Suartuas to reign over them, who was of the same nation, but had lived long at Constantinople. The Heruli received their new king with the greatest demonstrations of joy ; but a few days after his arrival, news being brought, that the ambassadors, on their return from Thule, had already reached the confines, with a prince of the blood royal, they immediately revolted from Suartuas, who was thereupon obliged to save himself by flight, and return to Constantinople. Justinian, highly provoked at their conduct, resolved to force them to acknowledge the prince he had given them ; but the Gepidæ espousing the cause of the new king, the emperor, whose troops were then employed against the Ostrogoths in Italy, did not think it adviseable to engage in a new war. But the war in Italy was no sooner ended, than, turning his arms against the Heruli, and their allies the Gepidæ, he drove both nations quite out of the empire^r. He was afterwards reconciled to the Heruli, who assisted him in his other wars, supplying his armies with numerous bodies of troops, of which one served with great reputation in Italy, and the other in Colchis^s. In the reign of Justinian, great numbers of them embraced the christian religion ; but the change of religion wrought no change in their manners, being of all nations, says Procopius, the most wicked, the most treacherous, avaricious, and the most addicted to drunkenness, and all manner of lewdness and debauchery^t. They were, soon after the death of Justinian, subdued by the Lombards, and lived partly subject to them, partly to the neighbouring nations.

They are driven out of the empire by Justinian.

^r Procop. bell. Goth. l. ii. c. 14, 15. ^s Agath. l. i. c. 22. ^t Procop. bell. Vand. l. ii. c. 4. p. 144.

The Marcomans.

THE Marcomans are, by all the antient writers, reckoned among the German nations. They dwelt originally near the springs of the Danube ; but removed from thence, under the conduct of their king Maroboduus, into the country which was then held by the Boians, and is still called from them Bohemia, as it was by the antients Boiohemia and Boioheimia, that is, the country of the Boians. The Boians were, according to Cæsar, a Gaulish nation, but from Gaul passed into Germany, and settling in the present Bohemia,

The Marcomans. Their origin, country, &c.

Bohemia, continued there till they were driven out by the Marcomans^u. The migration of the Marcomans, from their original country into that of the Boians, is mentioned by Velleius Paterculus^w. Ptolemy, in describing the country of the Marcomans, mentions a city there called Marobudum, which name it took, without all doubt, from its founder Maroboduus. This our modern geographers take to be the present city of Prague. Strabo calls the city, where Maroboduus usually resided, Boviasmum^f; but Cluverius thinks we ought to read Boioœum. The Marcomans agreed in customs, manners, religion, &c. with the other German nations, were a very numerous and warlike people, and ever ready to prefer death to slavery. Of all the German nations they alone made use of the Runic letters in their charms and incantations; whence Lazijs and Rhabanus Maurus conclude them to have come originally from Scandinavia^g; but, in every thing else, they agreed with the German nations, and are reckoned among them, as we have hinted above, by the antient writers. As for their history, in the reign of Augustus, Tiberius, having crossed the Rhine at the head of a very numerous and powerful army, gained great advantages over them, and the other German nations; which obliged them to send deputies to Augustus, and sue for peace. The emperor received the embassadors of the Marcomans with particular marks of distinction, and granted them their request; but obliged the other German nations to retire beyond the Elbe, and the Sicambrians, with such of the Sueves as were not subject to Maroboduus, to abandon their native country, and people some places in Gaul, that were destitute of inhabitants^h. In the year 17, the fourth of Tiberius, a war broke out between the Marcomans and the Cherusicans dwelling between the Elbe and the Weser. The former were commanded by Maroboduus, and the latter by the celebrated Arminius, who, a few years before, had cut off the legions of Varus. But all we know of this war is, that the Cherusicans gained considerable advantages over the Marcomansⁱ. Two years after, Tiberius having, by his emissaries, stirred up

The Marcomans obtain a peace of Augustus.

They wage war with the Cherusicans.

^u Cæsar, l. vi. c. 24. ^w Vell. Paterc. l. ii. c. 108. ^f Strabo, l. vii. p. 201. ^g Goldast, Alam. antiq. tom. ii. part. 1: ^h Suet. l. ii. c. 21. p. 178. Tacit. annal. l. ii. c. 26. p. 47. Strab. l. vii. p. 29. ⁱ Tacit. annal. c. 42. p. 53. & c. 44, 46. p. 54, 55.

the subjects of Maroboduus against him, he was driven from the throne, and obliged to pass the last eighteen years of his life at Ravenna. Maroboduus was succeeded by Catualdus, who was likewise driven out soon after, and obliged to take refuge in Gaul^k. In the year 86, the emperor Domitian, provoked against the Marcomans and Quadians, because they did not assist him in the war, which he was then waging with the Dacians, entered their country in an hostile manner. Both nations earnestly sued for peace; which Domitian was so far from granting, that he caused their ambassadors to be put to death. Hereupon the Marcomans flew to arms, and, having drawn together a considerable body of troops, they engaged the emperor, and put his army to the rout^l. However, the emperor, upon his return to Rome, triumphed both over them and the Dacians, of whom, after his defeat by the Marcomans, he had purchased a peace with large sums, which he had refused before upon most advantageous terms^m. But the triumphs of this emperor were looked upon as certain tokens of his having been defeatedⁿ. In the year 93, Domitian marched in person against the Sarmatians, who, according to some, had cut in pieces one, according to others, several Roman legions^o, and at the same time made war upon the Marcomans^p. But all we know of this war is, that Domitian pretended to have gained great advantages over both nations, and, on that account, took the title of imperator^q. We have spoken elsewhere at length of the memorable war, which, in conjunction with several other German nations, the Marcomans made on the empire^r; and therefore shall only observe here, that in one of the battles that were fought in this war, the Romans were defeated with the loss of twenty thousand men; and that, on another occasion, the emperor Aurelius was in great danger of being cut off with his whole army. Though the whole strength of the empire was employed against them, yet they held out for the space of fifteen years, and in the end obtained a peace upon very reasonable terms, one of which was, that they should not, for the future, settle within and put to flight the emperor Domitian.

They defeat
Year after Christ 86.

Their war with M. Aurelius. Year after Christ
165.

^k Idem, ann. ii. c. 62, 63. p. 61, 62. ^l Dio, l. lxxvii. p. 764.
^m Suet. in Domit. c. 6. p. 788, 789. Euseb. chron. ⁿ Suet.
ibid. ^o Stat. silv. iii. ver. 398. Suet. in Domit. c. 6. p. 788.
^p Stat. ibid. ^q Suet. ibid. p. 789. ^r Univers. hist.
vol. xv. p. 12. ^s Dio, l. lxxi. p. 807.

within six miles of the Danube. Some of the Marcomans, who submitted to the emperor, were transplanted into Italy; but these, having attempted to make themselves masters of Ravenna, were by him sent back to their own country. This war lasted from the year 165, to the year 180. In the year 214, a war was kindled between them and the Vandals, by means of the emperor Caracalla, who used to brag, that he had set at variance those two nations, which, till his time, had lived in friendship and amity^t; but what was the issue of that war, we are no-where told. In the year 256, the emperor Gallienus entered into an alliance with Attalus king of the Marcomans; and, upon the captivity of his father Valerian, taken prisoner by the Persians, he yielded to him part of Upper Pannonia for his daughter Pipa or Pipara, whom he pretended to marry; but as he was already married to Salonina, styled in the ancient inscriptions Cornelia Salonina Augusta^u, Pipa is called by the writers of those times his concubine^w. The Marcomans joined the Alemans and the Juthongians in the war, which those nations made on the emperor Aurelian about the year 270, but were in the end cut off almost to a man^x. Both Idatius and Victor^y mention a victory gained over the Marcomans in the year 299, the sixteenth of Dioclesian's reign. About the year 396, Frigil, queen of the Marcomans, having embraced the christian religion, wrote to St. Ambrose, entreating him to send her some instructions relating to the conduct of her life. The holy prelate readily complied with her request, and besides exhorted her to persuade her husband to live in peace and amity with the Romans. This she not only did, but prevailed upon the king to subject himself, and his kingdom, to the empire^z. And hence it is, that, among the many barbarous nations that broke into Gaul a few years after, that is, in 406, and 407, no mention is made of the Marcomans. They seem to have continued faithful to the Romans till the time of Attila, when, being subdued by that prince, they were obliged to serve in his army against their old friends and allies; for they are mentioned among the many different nations, of which his army was composed, when

The king of the Marcomans submitted himself, and his kingdom, to the empire.

Year after Christ 396.

^tDio. Val. p. 754, 757. en. vit. p. 184. Valer. vit. p. 174. Vict. epit. p. 541. vers. hist. vol. xv. p. 255. brof. vit. c. 36. p. 10.

^uGoltz. Birag. p. 380.

^yAur. Vict. p. 525.

^wGalli-

^xUni-

^zAm-when in the year 451, he invaded Gaul^a. Upon the death of Attila, they shook off the yoke, and, having recovered their antient liberty, submitted either to Marcian, or his successor Leo^b, and served the empire to the last with unshaken fidelity. From them, and, without all doubt, from several other nations settled among them, are descended the present inhabitants of Bohemia.

^a Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 38. p. 666, 667.
50. p. 688.

^b Idem. ibid. c.

The Quadians.

NEXT to the Marcomans dwelt the Quadians, a German nation often mentioned by the antients, especially by Eutropius and Capitolinus. Their country is at present known by the name of Moravia ; for it extended from the mountains of Bohemia to the river Marus, now the March, and consequently comprised that province. Ptolemy mentions the following cities in the country of the Quadians, viz. Eburodunum, or, as others read it, Robodunum, Eburum, Medoflanium, and Celemantia, now, according to Cluverius, Brin, Olmutz, Znaim, and Kalminz. The Quadians were a warlike people, had kings of their own, and agreed in customs, manners, and religion, with the other German nations. The Quadians joined, without all doubt, their countrymen against Lollius, Germanicus, Caius, and Galba, attempting to reduce Germany, and bring under subjection the several nations inhabiting that extensive country. The emperor Domitian, while engaged in a war with the Dacians, turned unexpectedly his arms against them ; but, before the Quadians could draw their troops together, the emperor was defeated and put to flight by the Marcomans, as we have related above. They submitted, it seems, to the emperor Titus Antoninus ; for they received and acknowledged a king named by that prince, as appears from some of Antoninus's coins, supposed to have been struck about the year 139^c. They joined the Marcomans in the memorable war, which that nation made on the empire in the reign of M. Aurelius, as we have hinted above, and related at length in our Roman history^d. The Quadians being,

The Quadians.

Their country.

Their wars with the empire.

They join the Marcomans against M. Aurelius.

^c Birag. p. 194. Spanh. l. ix. p. 831, 832.
hist. vol. xv, p. 12.

^d Univerf.

ing by that war, which had lasted fifteen years, reduced to great streights, sent in the end embassadors to sue for peace, and with them all the Roman deserters, and thirteen thousand prisoners, whom they had taken during the war. By that means they obtained a peace, upon condition that they should not traffick for the future within the Roman dominions, nor settle within six miles of the Danube. But, disliking these conditions, they renewed the war, in conjunction with the Marcomans ; and, having driven out Furtius, whom the emperor had appointed to reign over them, they appointed one Ariogeses in his room ; which M. Aurelius resented to such a degree, that tho' the Quadians promised to set at liberty fifty thousand Roman captives, upon condition that he confirmed to Ariogeses the title of king, the emperor would not hearken to the proposal ; but, on the contrary, proscribed the new prince, and set a price upon his head. Hereupon the Quadians, being joined by the Marcomans, and several other nations, attacked the Romans ; but, after a long and bloody dispute, were put to the rout, and utterly defeated. Ariogeses himself was taken prisoner ; but the emperor generously spared his life, and contented himself with confining him to the city of Alexandria, the metropolis of Egypt. After this victory, the other nations submitted, and obtained a peace ; but the Quadians seem to have continued in arms till the reign of Commodus, who granted them a peace upon the following terms : 1. They should keep at the distance of five miles from the Danube. 2. That they should deliver up their arms, and supply the Romans with a certain number of troops, when required. 3. That they should assemble but once a month in one place only, and in the presence of a Roman centurion. And lastly, That they should not make war upon the neighbouring nations, without the consent of the people of Rome ^d. This peace was concluded in the year 180, the first of the emperor Commodus's reign. In the year 214, the Quadians had one Gaiobomar for their king, who was murdered by the orders of Caracalla ; but upon what provocation, we are not told. Of this assassination the emperor used to brag, as of a glorious action ^e. In 257, the fourth of the emperor Valerian's reign, the Quadians, joining the Sarmatians, broke into Illyricum, and ravaged part of that province ;

They obtain a peace of Commodus.

^d Dio. l. lxxii. p. 806, 817.

^e Dio. Val. p. 754, 757.

province; but they were defeated by Probus, afterwards emperor, but at that time only tribune of a legion. On this occasion Probus rescued out of the hands of the Quadians Valerius Flaccus, a youth descended from an illustrious family, and nearly related to the emperor Valerian, who publicly commended Probus for so glorious an action, and presented him with a civic crown, which, in the times of the republic, was bestowed on those, who had saved the life of a citizen ^f. In 260, the seventh of the emperor Gallienus, they made a sudden irruption into Pannonia; but were obliged by Regillianus, who commanded there, to quit their booty, and return home. That commander is said to have gained several victories over them in one day ^g. Some years after, that is, about the year 283, Probus, who had kept the barbarians in awe, being dead, the Quadians, in conjunction with the Sarmatians, broke into Illyricum and Thrace, and, after having ravaged those provinces, were advancing towards Italy; but Carus, who had succeeded Probus, meeting them on the borders of Illyricum, gave them a total overthrow, killed sixteen thousand of them on the spot, and took twenty thousand prisoners ^h. In the year 355, the nineteenth of the emperor Constantius, the Quadians broke into Pannonia and Mœsia, and, having pillaged both provinces, without meeting with the least opposition, they returned home unmolested, carrying with them an immense booty ⁱ. Of this irruption, no mention is made by Ammianus. Two years after, they returned anew, and laid waste Valeria, while the Sueves committed dreadful ravages in Rhoetia, and the Sarmatians over-ran Lower Pannonia, and Upper Mœsia. Hereupon Constantius, leaving Milan, where he then was, advanced to the confines of the Quadians, and there conferred with their chiefs, who excused, in the best manner they could, the past ravages, and promised, for the future, to live in peace and amity with the empire ^k. But, notwithstanding the promises they had made, the following year 358, in conjunction with the Sarmatians, they laid waste great part of Pannonia and Mœsia; but at the approach of Constantius, who marched against them in person, they repassed the Danube, and returned home. But the emperor resolved to punish Defeated by Probus.

And by Carus, with great slaughter. Year after Christ 283.

^f Prob. vit. p. 234, 235. ^g Trig. tyr. vit. p. 188.
^h Carin. vit. p. 250. Zonar. p. 242. ⁱ Zos. p. 702.
^k Ammian. p. 72. Jul. ad Ath. p. 513.

Their king Gabinus murdered by the Romans.

They cut off two Roman legions, and commit great ravages in the empire.
Year after
Christ 374.

punish them for their treachery, and having passed the Danube on a bridge of boats, began to lay waste their country. The Quadians, not finding themselves in a condition to make head against the numerous forces Constantius had with him, sent deputies to sue for peace; which the emperor readily granted them, upon their delivering up hostages, and setting at liberty all the prisoners they had taken¹. In the year 374, their king Gabinus being treacherously murdered by Marcellianus duke of Valeria, in the manner we have related in our Roman history^m, they passed the Danube in the utmost rage, and falling upon the reapers, it being then harvest-time, cut most of them in pieces, laid waste the country to a great distance, and took an incredible number of captives. Equitius, general of the troops in Illyricum, not finding himself in a condition to stem this furious torrent, retired into Valeria; but the Quadians, looking upon him as the chief author of the murder of their king, followed him thither, committing dreadful ravages in the countries through which they passed. In their way they met two legions, the Pannonian and Mælian, who had been sent to oppose them; but the legions falling into an unreasonable contention about precedence, the barbarians, taking advantage of their disagreement, cut them both in pieces. Thus all the open country was abandoned to them, the Romans remaining masters only of the fortified placesⁿ. The Sarmatians, who had joined the Quadians in this irruption, having entered Upper Mæsia, were defeated there with great slaughter by Theodosius, afterwards emperor, but then very young, and only duke of Mæsia. Against the Quadians Valentinian I. then emperor, marched in person, and, arriving at Carnutum in Illyricum, which most geographers take to be the present city of Hainburg on the Danube in Austria, about thirty miles east of Vienna, continued there three months, making vast preparations for his intended expedition into the country of the Quadians. At length he took the field, and, having passed the Danube at Acincum, now Gran, or as others will have it, Buda in Lower Hungary, he entered the enemy's country, and laid it waste, destroying all with fire

¹ Ammian. l. xvii. p. 105.
p. 29.

^m Univers. hist. vol. xvi.
ⁿ Ammian. l. xxix. p. 408, 409. Zos. l. iv. p. 745.

fire and sword. Having thus passed the summer, and great part of the autumn, he took up his winter-quarters in Bregetio, which some take to be a village on the Danube, now called Bregnitz, and others the present city of Komare in the isle of Schut. There he gave audience to the embassadors of the Quadians, who came to sue for peace ; but, while he was speaking to them with great warmth, and threatening to extirpate their whole nation, he fell all on a sudden to the ground, as if his life and voice had failed him at once. Being immediately conveyed into his chamber, he was there seized with convulsion-fits, and violent contorsions of all his limbs, in the agonies of which he soon expired °. Socrates writes, that being offended at the mean and beggarly appearance of the embassadors of the Quadians, he asked them, If their country afforded men of no better quality to appear before him ? They answered, That the first men in the nation were in his presence. Hereupon he fell into a violent passion, upbraiding their whole nation with arrogance, for daring to insult the majesty of the Roman people. He delivered himself with so much heat and violence, that his veins bursting, he was instantly suffocated in his own blood p. Upon his death, the officers of the army proclaimed Valentinian, his second son, emperor, though he was then a child but four or five years old. At the same time they concluded a truce with the Quadians, and recalled the troops, which, under the conduct of Merobaudes, and count Sebastian, were laying waste their country. In the year 379, they broke anew into Illyricum ; but were driven out with some loss by the emperor Gratian. In the year 407, the Quadians entered Gaul with the other barbarians, and over-run those provinces, committing every-where dreadful ravages, of which we have spoken at length elsewhere q. From this time no further mention is made in history of the Quadians ; whence Lazius concludes them to have been either subdued, or utterly extirpated by the Goths, who had settled in Pannonia and Illyricum.

They enter
Gaul.
Year after
Christ 407.

° Ammian. l. xxx. p. 68.
vers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 29.

p Socrat. p. 284.

q Uni-

The Sarmatians.

The Sarmatians.

Their country,

They consisted of several different nations.

Their origin,

THE Sarmatians were a very numerous and warlike nation, divided into many tribes, each of them having their own king, and masters of a large and extensive country. Sarmatia Europæa, or Sarmatia in Europe, of which alone we design to speak here, extended from the Vistula, now the Weiffel, parting it from Germany, to the Euxine sea, the Bosphorus Cimmerius, the Palus Mæotis, and the Tanais dividing it from Asia and the Asiatic Sarmatia. In this vast tract of land, comprehending the present Poland, Russia, and great part of Tartary, dwelt the following nations; viz. the Burgiones, Cariones, Sudeni, Geloni, Hamaxobii, Agathyrsi, Borusæ, Melanchænæ, Alauni or Alani, Iazyges, Roxolani, Bastarnæ, Carpi or Carpates, Sidones, Borani, and Venedi, by Jornandes called Winidæ and Vinidi. The five last-named nations are thought to have come originally from Germany, especially the Bastarnæ; for even in the time of Tacitus, who is at a loss whether he ought to place them among the German or the Sarmatian nations, they agreed with the former in dress and language ^r. The Gelonians were, according to Herodotus ^s, of Greek extraction; but had, even in his time, adopted, in a great measure, the customs and manners of the Budini, among whom they had settled, especially the custom of painting their bodies, as we read in Virgil ^t and Claudian ^u. The Budini dwelt near mount Budinus, from which springs the Boristhenes, called by more modern writers the Danapris, and thence the Dnieper or Nieper. The other nations, which we have mentioned above, were all Gothic; and of the origin of the Gothic nations we have spoken at length in the history of the Goths. These various nations were blended by the Romans under the common name of Sarmatæ; by the Greeks under that of Sauromatæ, and sometimes by both, under the denominations of Scythæ or Scythians, and Getæ. Each of them had, it seems, their own king; for mention is made in history of the kings of the Roxolani, of the Bastarnæ, ^r Tacit. de mor. German. c. 46.

108. ^t Virg. georg. ver. 115.
ver. 315.

^s Herodot. l. iv. c.
^u Claud. l. i. in Rufin.

tarnæ, of the Iazyges, &c. Ammianus Marcellinus, speaking of the Sarmatians in general, tells us, that they were a savage people, and infamous for their lewdness^w. The Melanchlænæ are said, both by Ammianus^x and Herodotus^y, to have fed on human flesh, and are thence called by them, as well as by Mela and Pliny, Anthropophagi and Androphagi.

THE Sarmatians began first to threaten the empire in the reign of Nero, about the year of the christian æra 63 that is, about seventeen years after Thrace had been by Claudius reduced to a Roman province; for, till its reduction, it had been governed by its own princes, and served as a barrier on that side between the Sarmatians and Romans. A few years after the latter became possessed of it, the Sarmatians began to appear in great numbers on the confines, as if they intended to make themselves masters of that province, which was then guarded by a small number of troops, under the command of Plautius Silvanus Ælianus, who had sent the rest to the assistance of Corbulo, then making war in Armenia. But the Roman general having gained over the kings of the Bastarnians and Roxolani-^z. The Roxolani-However, six years after, that is, in 69, Otho being then emperor, the Roxolani-^z. The Roxolani-emperors, the Roxolani-^z. The Roxolanithe Palus Mæotis, entering Mæsia, defeated there two Roman cohorts, and having pillaged that part of the province, which bordered on the Danube, they repassed the river and returned home unmolested. Animated with this success, they appeared anew the same year with nine thousand horse. But Marcus Aponius Saturninus, governor of Mæsia, falling upon them with a legion and some auxiliaries, cut them off almost to a man^a. The same year Vespasian being proclaimed emperor by the legions quattered in the east, the Iazygians, a Sarmatic nation dwelling next to the Roxolani-^z. The Roxolanithe new emperor against Vitellius. But Vespasian returning them thanks for the troops they offered him, took with him only their chiefs, not with a design to employ them, but to prevent them from making inroads, into the Roman territories during the war^b. Tacitus calls the Iazygians the ^w Ammian. Marcel. l. xxxi. p. 443. ^x Idem ibid. ^y Herodot. l. iv. c. 102, 106. ^z Tacit. annal. xv. c. 25. p. 248. & 459. ^a Idem hist. l. i. c. 79. & l. ii. c. 85. ^b Idem ibid. l. iii. c. 7. p. 63.

Z 2

They kill the governor of that province
but in the end are most of them cut in pieces.

the allies of the Romans. But the very first year of the reign of Vespasian, whom they had offered to join a few months before, they broke into Mæsia, and having killed Fonteius Agrippa, governor of that province, who attempted to oppose them, they laid waste the country far and near. Hereupon Rubrius Gallus, marching against them with the utmost expedition, pursuant to the orders he had received from the emperor, cut great numbers of them in pieces in several encounters, obliged the rest to repass the Danube, and, with great care, fortified the banks of that river, to cover the province from their incursions^c. In the year 85, the fourth of Domitian's reign, the Iazygians, joining the Sueves, armed with a design, says Dion^d, to pass the Danube, and lay waste the Roman dominions; but whether or no they put their design in execution, that writer has not thought fit to tell us. Tacitus indeed writes in one place, that the Sarmatians and Suevians armed against the empire^e; and elsewhere that this very year, soon after the return of Agricola to Rome, the Roman armies were defeated in Pannonia^f, in all likelihood by the Iazygians and Suevians. In the year 93, the thirteenth of Domitian's reign, the Sarmatians having cut in pieces a Roman legion with their tribune, the emperor, who was then in Dacia, marched against them in person^g; but with what success, we are not told. Domitian indeed took the title of imperator, as if he had gained some great advantage over the enemy; but that prince often claimed the victory when he had been driven out of the field, and shamefully put to flight as we have hinted above. The Sarmatians are by Dion reckoned among the nations that submitted to Adrian^h while he was in Armenia, in the year 107, but that writer speaks, without all doubt, of the Asiatic Sarmatians. As for the Sarmatians in Europe, they broke into Illyricum with great fury in the year 119, the second of Adrian's reign; which obliged that prince to quit Rome, and march against them in person. Upon his arrival in Mæsia, they repassed the Danube with great precipitation, and encamped on the opposite bank; but the Roman cavalry swimming, armed as they were, cross the river, in order to attack them, the

^c Idem, l. iv. c. 54. p. 102. Joseph. bell. vii. c. 22. p. 976.

^d Dio, l. lxxvi. p. 761.

^e Tacit. l. i. c. 2. p. 4.

^f Vit.

Agr. c. 41. p. 151.

^g Suet. in Domit. c. 6. p. 788.

^h Dio,

l. lxxiii. p. 779.

the Sarmatians were struck with such terror, that they immediately submittedⁱ. The horse, to whose intrepidity and boldness was owing the submission of the enemy, were the Batavians in the Roman service, as appears from the epigraph of one of them named Soranus^k. Suidas writes, that Adrian himself passed the Danube on horseback^l; but he seems to have misunderstood the passage in Dion. The princes of the Sarmatians quarrelled afterwards among themselves, and chose Adrian for their umpire, who composed their differences to the general satisfaction of the contending parties. On this occasion, the king of the Roxolanians complaining to the emperor, that his pension had been lessened, Adrian ordered the sum, which had been formerly allowed him, to be paid without the least deduction^m. In the year 135, the Iazygians sent ambassadors to Rome, to renew their alliance with Adrian, who received them in a very obliging manner, introduced them to the senate, and having granted them their request, sent them back loaded with rich presentsⁿ. All the nations inhabiting Sarmatia conspired, with the Marcomans, against M. Aurelius; but were in the end most of them cut in pieces. Over the Iazygians in particular the emperor gained two complete victories, the one before they reached the Danube on their way home, and the other, described at length by Dion^o, as they were crossing that river on the ice. But, notwithstanding the great losses they sustained in this war, they were so far from suing for peace, that they deposed, and threw into prison, their king named Bandaspes, for no other reason but because he had sent ambassadors with proposals for concluding a peace with the empire. However, being in the end abandoned by the Marcomans, and their other allies, and reduced to great streights, their new king, named Zantichus, came in person, attended by all the chief men of the nation, to throw himself at the emperor's feet, and sue for peace; which was granted them upon the following terms, viz. That they should not settle within ten miles of the Danube; that they should set at liberty all the prisoners they had taken, and supply the emperor's army with a body of eight thousand horse. With these conditions they readily complied; and we are told, that the prisoners, whom they dismissed on this occasion, were in number, at least, one

They submit to Adrian. Year after Christ 119.

They join the Marcomans against M. Aurelius. Year after Christ 165.

They obtain a peace.

Z 3

hundred

ⁱ Idem, l. lxix. p. 792.
p. 87.

^k Ger. nov, p. 12.

^l Suid

^m Adrian. vit. p. 4.

ⁿ Dio, p. 794.

^o Idem, l. lxxi. p. 804, 805.

hundred thousand, though they had sold to other nations many of those they had taken during the war. The eight thousand Iazygian horse were, by the emperor, sent into Britain. To the other Sarmatic nations lands were allotted in Pannonia, Mæsia, Germany, and even in Italy^p. The Iazygians lived, it seems, some time in peace and amity with the Romans; for in 180, one of the articles of the peace concluded by the emperor Commodus and the Alemans was, that they should not make war upon the Iazygians, Burians, or Vandals^q. Besides, no mention is made by historians, either of them, or the other Sarmatic nations till the year 215, when the emperor Caracalla is said to have gained some advantage over the Sarmatians, and to have taken, on that account, the surname of Sarmaticus^r. In the year 228, the Carpi, a people of Sarmatia dwelling near the Carpatian mountains, which part Hungary and Transylvania from Poland, being informed, that the Roman emperors paid a yearly pension to the Goths, sent deputies to Menophilus, governor of Mœsia, demanding that the same sum which the Goths received should be paid to them, since their friendship deserved to be no less courted than that of the Goths. The deputies found Menophilus exercising his troops, according to his daily custom; and, as he well knew on what errand they were come, to humble their pride, he made them wait several days before he gave them audience, allowing them in the mean time to assist at the military exercises performed by his troops. At length he received them seated on a high tribunal, and attended by all the officers of the army, to whom he pretended to give his orders while the ambassadors were speaking, as if nothing they said deserved his attention. The ambassadors, mortified and amazed at this conduct, only asked, why money was given to the Goths, and not to them? Because the emperor, answered Menophilus, bestows his favours on whom he pleases. We hope then, replied the ambassadors, that he will be pleased to shew himself as generous to us, as to the Goths: we are a more brave and deserving nation. The Roman general answered with a smile, That the emperor would do what he thought fit; and that if they met him in four months time, at a place which he appointed, he would acquaint them with the emperor's will and pleasure.

The Carpi demand an annual pension.

^p Idem ibid. p. 808., 809.

^r Get. vit. p. 92.

^q Idem, l. lxxii. p. 817.

sure. The ambassadors met him accordingly, and found him, as they had done before, wholly intent upon exercising his troops. Menophilus, having made them wait some days, as if he had affairs of greater importance on his hands than to give audience to them, received them in the same manner as he had done the first time, and ordered them to return in three months, appointing the place where they should find him. The answer he then gave them was, That the emperor would enter into no engagements with them; but, if they stood in need of present relief, the emperor would, in all likelihood, out of his good-nature, allow them some, provided they went and threw themselves at his feet. They were highly provoked at this answer, and departed in a great rage; but nevertheless, awed by Menophilus, they continued quiet so long as he commanded in that province^s. The emperor Maximinus made, it seems, war upon the Sarmatians, and gained considerable advantages over them; for it appears from several inscriptions found in France and Spain, that both he and his son took the surname of Sarmatians^t. However, Capitolinus only writes, that Maximinus, having quelled the Germans, resolved to make war upon the Sarmatians, and, with that design, passed the winter in 236, at Sirmium, in Pannonia^u. Maximinus, speaking of himself, in Herodian, only says, that he overcame, on several occasions, the Germans; insomuch that they were afraid to stir, as were likewise the Sarmatians, who, by their deputies, were constantly suing for peace^w. In the year 238, Menophilus, of whom we have spoken above, being recalled, the Carpi, who had been awed by his presence, broke into Moesia, and having ravaged that province, and utterly destroyed the city of Istria or Istropolis, on the most southern mouth of the Danube in Lower Moesia, or rather Little Scythia, they returned home unmolested, the Romans being then engaged in a civil war between Maximinus, Maximus, and Balbinus^x. In 242, the fourth of the emperor Gordian's reign, that prince in passing through Thrace on his march into the east to make war there on the Persians, overcame the Goths and Sarmatians, and obliged them to abandon that province, and retire beyond the Danube^y. In the year 260, the Sarmatians

Their demand rejected.

They make several irruptions into the empire.

Z 4

^s Legat. excerpt. p. 24.

^t Grut. p. 151, 156. Spon.

p. 186, 187.

^u Maximin. vit. p. 143.

^w Herod. l.

vii. p. 592, 600.

^x Maxim. & Balb. vit. p. 171.

^y Gord.

vit p. 165

tians and Quadians seized on great part of Dacia and Pannonia ; but were driven out by Regillianus, who commanded in Illyricum, and is said to have gained several victories over them in one day ^z. He soon after caused himself to be proclaimed emperor ; but he was scarce seated on the throne, when the Roxolani, who served under him, revolted ; and their example being followed by the rest of the army, he was murdered by some of his own men ^a. Aurelian, who was afterwards emperor, is said to have gained a signal victory over the Sarmatians and Sueves, in the reign of Claudius, about the year 268 ^b. But of this victory no mention is made by any other writer. In the year 278, the emperor Probus marched against them in person ; but, at his approach, they retired from Thrace, where they had committed great ravages, abandoned the booty they had taken, and, awed by the fame of his name, sent deputies to sue for peace ; which the emperor granted them, upon their promising to keep beyond the Danube, and supply the Roman armies with a certain number of troops, when required ^c. They continued quiet during the remaining part of Probus's reign, but no sooner heard of his death, than they broke into Illyricum, destroying all with fire and sword. But Carus, then emperor, marching against them, cut sixteen thousand of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to repass the Danube, and sue for peace ^d.

And defeated with great slaughter by Carus.

About seven years after, they returned with a very numerous army, and committed great ravages in Thrace and Illyricum ; but Dioclesian hastening to the relief of the oppressed provinces, defeated the barbarians with great slaughter. Eumenes writes, that, on this occasion, almost the whole nation was cut off ^e : but he speaks more like a panegyrist than an historian ; for some years after, the Sarmatians dwelling near the Palus Mæotis, under the conduct of Crisco king of Bosphorus, broke into the country of the Lazians in Colchis, and having pillaged great part of Pontus, advanced as far as the Halys, a river of Paphlagonia. Constantius, then only tribune, but soon after declared Cæsar, was sent by Dioclesian to put a stop to their ravages ; but his army being far inferior in number to that of ^z Trig. tyr. vi. c. 9. p. 188.

^a Idem ibid.

^b Aur.

vit. p. 213.

^c Prob. vit. p. 239.

^d Car. vit. p. 250.

^e Panegyr. xi. p. 133. & viii. p. 105, 107.

of the barbarians, he contented himself with encamping on the opposite bank of the Halys, and by that means preventing them from passing that river. But in the mean time Chrestus, king of the Chersonesus, and vassal of the empire, having, at the instigation of Dioclesian, broken into Sarmatia, and even taken by stratagem the city of Bosphorus, Crisco immediately dispatched ambassadors to Constantius, suing for peace ; which was granted him, upon his restoring the booty, and setting at liberty all the prisoners he had taken. Chrestus at the same time restored to him the booty he had taken, and the prisoners, among whom were his wife, and his concubines. For this eminent piece of service, Dioclesian sent rich presents to the inhabitants of the Chersonesus, declared them free, and exempted them from all tribute, customs and taxes. This account we have copied from a piece, intituled, Of the government of the empire, published by Meursius in 1611, and ascribed to Constantine Porphyrogenitus, who reigned in the east in 950. The emperor Galerius made war, it seems, on the Sarmatians : for both Zonaras and Ammianus Marcellinus tell us, that seeking the destruction of Constantine, whose extraordinary qualities gave him great umbrage, he ordered him, in the Sarmatian war, to engage a barbarian, who surpassed all others in stature, and the fierceness of his looks ; which Constantine did accordingly, and, having overcome him, and thrown him to the ground, he dragged him by the hair to the emperor's presence, and laid him at his feet. In the same war, having ordered him to cross a marsh at the head of some troops, he entered it the first on horseback, and being followed by his men, put great numbers of the enemy to the sword, and gained a complete victory^f. This is supposed to have happened about the year 305. About the same time the whole nation of the Carpi submitted to the Romans, being several times overcome, and reduced to great streights, by Galerius. Dioclesian transplanted the whole nation into the Roman territories, especially into Pannonia, where great numbers of them had been allowed to settle in the reign of Aurelian^g. Constantine the Great, in the year 322, the seventeenth of his reign, gained a great victory over the Sarmatic nations^h. Optatianus writes, that they were overcome in several battles in the neighbourhood of Campana,

The Carpi transplanted into the empire.
The Sarmatians defeated in several battles by Constantine. Year after Christ 322.

^f Zonar. vit. Dioc. p. 246. Ammian. p. 471.
^l xxviii. p. 357. Aur. Vict. p. 525.
p. 680.

^g Amm.
^h Zos. l. ii.

pana, Marga, and Bononia, all three cities of Illyricum on the Danube^l. Raufimodes, one of the Sarmatian kings, had, as we read in Zosimus, besieged a city, which that writer does not name; but Constantine, hastening to the relief of the place, put the enemy to flight, and, having obliged those, who had made their escape, to repass the Danube, he pursued them cross that river, defeated them a second time, killed their king Raufimodes, laid waste their country, and returned with an incredible number of captives^k. The Sarmatian sports, which were yearly celebrated about the latter end of November, as appears from an antient calender of the year 534, probably took their rise from this victory.

Constantine espouses their cause against
the Goths,

IN the year 332, a war being kindled between the Goths and Sarmatians, the latter had recourse to Constantine, who immediately sent a considerable body of troops to their assistance. These, engaging the Goths on the twentieth of April of this year, gained a complete victory over them. We are told, that, in this war, near an hundred thousand Goths perished either by the sword, or by famine. At length they concluded a peace, both with the Romans and the Sarmatians, Ariaric or Araric their king delivering up his son as an hostage^l, and supplying the Roman armies with a body of forty thousand Goths; which corps was, for some ages, kept entire and complete, and served under the name of foederati, or allies^m. The Sarmatians, finding they had nothing now to fear, from the Goths, with the utmost ingratitude, turned their arms against their friends and benefactors, making frequent inroads into the territories of the Romans, to whom they owed their deliverance. Constantine, highly provoked at their conduct, marched against them at the head of a powerful army, and, having put them to flight, entered their country, destroying all with fire and sword. However, upon their submitting, and promising to serve the empire with fidelity, the emperor put a stop to all hostilities, and, quitting their country, repassed the Danubeⁿ. Two years after, the Sarmatians were attacked anew by the Goths, under the conduct of their king Geberic, the successor of Araric. The war lasted some years; but in the end the Sarmatians were utterly defeated on the banks of the Marisus in Dacia.

Punished by him for their ingratitude.

In

^l Optat. c. 23.

^k Idem ibid.

^l Ammian. p. 472.

^m Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 21. p. 640.
Socrat p. 58.

ⁿ Amm. anonym. p. 476.

In this battle, the Sarmatians lost their king Wisimar, and with him the flower of their nobility, and such numbers of men, that they were obliged to arm their slaves, who defeated indeed the Goths; but then turning their arms against their masters, drove them quite out of their native country, and seized on their lands and possessions^o. These slaves are by Ammianus ^p and St. Jerom ^q styled Limigantes: the former tells us, that the free-born among the Sarmatians were distinguished by the name of Acaragantes^r. The Sarmatians, thus driven out by their slaves, had recourse to Constantine, who received three hundred thousand of them within the empire, incorporated some among his troops, and to the others allowed lands in the provinces bordering on the Danube, and in Italy itself^s. Some of them took refuge amongst other barbarians, by Ammianus called Victobales^t, and by most writers thought to be the same people with the Quadi Ultramontani, or the Quadians beyond the mountains Sudeti or Suditi parting the country of the Quadi from that of the Marcomans, at present the mountains of Bohemia. The Sarmatians, who took refuge among the Quadians, in the year 355, made an irruption into Pannonia, in conjunction with the Quadians, and, having pillaged both that province and Upper Mœsia, returned home unmolested, with an immense booty^u. Thus Zosimus. But of this irruption no mention is made by Ammianus. Two years after, they returned anew, and laid waste the same provinces, while the Sueves committed dreadful ravages in Rhætia, and the Quadians in Valeria, a province of Illyricum. Constantius, who was then at Rome, and, as Ammianus tells us^w, mightily taken with the curiosities and diversions of that city, set out in great haste to stop the progress of the barbarians, who threatened Italy itself; but they were no sooner informed of his arrival at Milan, than they retired of their own accord^x. However, the emperor advanced as far as Sirmium, and there had several conferences with the chiefs of the nations dwelling in the neighbourhood of the Danube, who all promised to live in peace and amity with the empire^y.
But

They are driven out of their country by their slaves.
Year after Christ 334.

^o Ammian. anonym. ibid. & Ammian. l. xvii. p. 107.
^p Idem ibid. ^q Hier. chron. ^r Ammian. ibid.
^s Euseb. p. 529. Ammian. anonym. p. 476. ^t Ammian. l. xvii. p. 106.
^u Zof. p. 702. ^w Ammian. p. 72.
^x Idem ibid. ^y Idem ibid. & Jul. ad Athen. p. 513.

But the following winter, while the Danube was frozen, unmindful of their promises, they laid hold of that opportunity, and, entering Moesia and Pannonia, pillaged those provinces, while the Alemans, notwithstanding the peace they had lately concluded with the empire, laid waste Rhætia. Against the Alemans Constantius dispatched Barbatio; but against the Sarmatians, who had been joined by the Quadians, he marched in person, leaving Sirmium, where he had passed the winter, after the spring equinox². The barbarians retired at his approach; but the emperor, having passed the Danube on a bridge of boats, entered their country, and laid it waste far and near. The Sarmatians came in great numbers to Constantius, pretending to sue for peace; but their real design was to attack the Romans unawares. Of this the emperor had timely notice, and therefore ordered his troops to fall upon them as they drew near; which they did accordingly, and cut them in pieces to a man. The rest, disheartened with this loss, submitted to Constantius, who concluded a peace with them, upon their setting at liberty all the prisoners they had taken, and delivering up hostages as a surety for their future conduct³. The Sarmatians reaped in the end great advantages from this war. They had been driven out of their own country by their slaves in 334, as we have hinted above, and obliged to take refuge among the Quadians, who treated them as their subjects. From this subjection they were delivered by Constantius, who declared them free, appointed one Zizais, a prince of their own nation, to reign over them, and re-established them in their antient country; for the slaves, by whom they had been driven out, having ravaged the neighbouring provinces, Constantius, made war upon them, and reduced them to great streights. Hereupon the Limigantes (for so those slaves were called) came in great numbers to the emperor, suing for peace; but resolved at the same time to fall unexpectedly upon the Romans, if they could not obtain it upon honourable terms. This Constantius suspected, and therefore ordered his troops to surround them insensibly while they were yet speaking. When they had done, Constantius told them upon what terms he was willing to grant them a peace; which they no-ways relishing, began to handle their arms. This the Romans, who watched them narrowly, no sooner er observed, than they fell upon them sword in hand, and cut most of them in pieces, not one, out of so great a multitude, calling for quarter, or offering to submit ^b. After this, the Romans entering their country on one side, and the Sarmatians, their antient masters, on the other, a dreadful havock was made of the inhabitants, without distinction of sex or age. Thus the Limigantes were obliged at length to submit, and accept the terms, however hard, that were offered them. These were, that they should quit the country, which they had seized on, and held with the utmost injustice, and retire to another at a great distance from the empire. The country, which they abandoned, was, by Constantius, restored to the antient proprietors, who settled there anew twenty-four years ^{But restored by Constantius.} after they had been driven out by their rebellious slaves ^{Year after} ^{Christ 358.} For these atchievements Constantius took the surname of Sarmaticus ^d. The Sarmatians, notwithstanding the great obligations they owed the Romans, a few years after, that is, in 364, broke into Pannonia, and laid waste that province, while the Roman troops were employed against the Alemans in Rhætia ^e. In 374, they joined the Quadians, and, in conjunction with them, committed dreadful ravages in Pannonia, and from thence advanced into Upper Moesia; but were there defeated with great slaughter by Theodosius, afterwards emperor, as we have related above. In the year 376, Athanaric, one of the chiefs of the Goths being forced by the Hunns to abandon his own country, retired, with his people, to a place called Calanda, driving from thence the Sarmatians, to whom it belonged ^f. In 378, the Sarmatians, informed that the Goths, who had been admitted by Valens into the empire, had taken up arms against the Romans, resolved to pass the Danube, and join them. But Theodosius, afterwards emperor, meeting them in Thrace, gave them a total overthrow. Incredible numbers of the barbarians were cut in pieces, and the victory Theodosius gained over them is said to have been so complete, that Gratian, then emperor, could not believe the account, which Theodosius himself gave him of it upon his return to court, till he was informed of the truth by persons sent on purpose to view the field of battle ^g. In the year 407, they entered Gaul,

² Ammian. l. xvii. p. 104.

³ Idem, p. 105.

^b Idem, p. 109.

^c Idem, p. 110, 111.

^d Idem,

p. 112.

^e Idem, l. xxvi. p. 315.

^f Idem, p. 453.

^g Theodoret. l. v. c. 5. p. 710.

Gaul, with the Vandals, Sueves, Franks, Burgundians, and other barbarians, and committed dreadful ravages there. Those who remained in Sarmatia, were afterwards subdued by Attila, and served, with their princes, in his army, when he invaded Gaul in 451^b. Upon that prince's death, they shook off the yoke, and, having recovered their antient liberty, submitted to Marcian, then emperor, who allowed them to settle in Pannonia, Mœsia, and the other provinces bordering on the Danube, where they continued quiet, till they were reduced by the Goths, the most powerful nation in those parts. Such of them as resided among the Goths, became, in process of time, one nation with them. From those, who remained in Sarmatia, the present Poles and Tartars are thought to have sprung.

^b Jorn. p. 685—688.

The Dacians.

The Dacians. Their origin. THE Dacians were, according to Jornandesⁱ, a Gothic nation, came originally out of Scandinavia, and, settling in the neighbourhood of the Palus Mæotis, made themselves masters of Scythia, Mœsia, Thrace, and Dacia, driving out the antient inhabitants. This seems agreeable to what we read in Herodotus, viz. that the antient Scythians, who, coming out of Syria, had crossed the Araxes, and settled in the country which was afterwards called Scythia, were, in process of time, driven from their seats by the Cimmerians, that is, by the Goths, who, according to Jornandes, settled first in Cimmeria. Dion observes, that the same people were called Dacians by the Romans, and Getes by the Greeks^k; and Justin, the compiler of Trogus Pompeius, tells us in express terms, that the Dacians were the offspring of the Getes^l. Now, that the Getes and Goths were one and the same people, we have sufficiently proved above, in our history of the Goths. Some writers derive the Dacians from the Dæ, a people, dwelling, according to Strabo, near Hyrcania in Asiatic Scythia. But this opinion is entirely founded on the similitude of the names Daci and Dæ. The Dacians, in more antient ⁱ Jorn. rer. Get. l. v.

^l Justin. l. xxxii.

^k Dio, l. lxxvii. p. 761.

antient times, were known by the name of Davi ; for the termination dava was common to most of their towns and cities, as Comidava, Sergidava, Decidava, Marcidava, &c. and the names of Geta and Davus were, among the Athenians, peculiar to slaves, who usually bore the name of the nation to which they belonged. As to the antient country of the Dacians, it comprised the present Moldavia, Valachia, and part of Transylvania. The whole nation was afterwards transplanted into Illyricum by the emperor Aurelian, and the country they held there is the Dacia, of which the authors speak, who wrote in the fourth or fifth centuries, the Goths being then masters of antient Dacia. The Dacians were deemed the most warlike and formidable of all the barbarous nations, not only on account of their natural courage, and great strength, which enabled them to endure the toils of war, but because they looked upon death, not as the end of the present, but as the beginning of a more happy life ; whence they were as ready, says the emperor Julian, to expose themselves to the greatest dangers, as to undertake a journey ^m. This doctrine they learnt of one Xamolxis, a great philosopher, whom Jordanes supposes to have been king of the Getes or Goths dwelling in Thrace, Dacia, and Mœsia ; but other writers speak of him only as a disciple, and some as a slave, of the celebrated Pythagoras ⁿ. Suidas thinks he flourished long before Pythagoras ^o. He was by birth a Gete or Goth, and is said to have been held in great veneration among his countrymen during his life, and, after his death, to have been worshipped by them with divine honours ^p. The Dacians were governed by their own kings, and agreed in customs, manners, laws, and religion, with the other Gothic nations, of whom we have spoken above. The first of their kings we find mentioned in history is Oroles, in whose reign they made war upon the Basternæ ; but not having behaved on a certain occasion with their usual courage, the king, by way of punishment, ordered them to lay their heads, when they slept, where their feet should lie, and to perform the same offices about their wives, which it was customary for their wives to perform about them, till such time as, by a more gallant behaviour they had retrieved their lost reputation ^q. In the reign of Augustus they broke first

Their country.

Their customs, manners, &c.

Their irruptions into the empire.

^m Jul. Cæs. p. 39, 40.

ⁿ Phot. c. 166: p. 360. Strab.

l. vii. p. 297, 298:

^o Suid. p. 1121.

^p Idem, ibid.

^q Justin. l. xxxii.

into the empire; but in what place, we are not told. All we know is, that, at the approach of Drusus, sent against them by Augustus then in Gaul, they retired to their own country^r. In the year of the christian æra 69, the legions quartered in Mœsia being by Otho ordered into Italy, to make head against Vitellius there, the Dacians, who dwelt beyond the Danube, and never allowed the Romans, says Tacitus, any respite, but when they did not think it safe to attack them, laying hold of that opportunity, crossed the Danube, and, entering Mœsia, made themselves masters of part of that province. But Mucianus passing soon after through Mœsia on his march from the east into Italy, obliged them to abandon the country they had seized, leaving there Fonteius Agrippa, formerly proconsul of Asia, with a body of troops to awe the barbarians^s. But the following year, Agrippa being killed by the Sarmatians, the Dacians broke into Pannonia, and, having plundered that province, advanced into Mœsia, where they joined the Sarmatians; but were soon after driven out with great slaughter by Rubrius Gallus, whom Vespasian, then emperor, had dispatched against them^t. About the year 86, the Dacians having anew ravaged the neighbouring provinces, and committed every where great cruelties, Domitian, the emperor, resolved to march against them in person. Duras was at that time king of the Dacians; but he, by an instance of moderation seldom to be met with in history, of his own accord yielded the sovereignty to Decebalus, because he thought him better qualified for it than himself: and truly Decebalus was, according to Dion^u, one of the best commanders of his time, knew what was proper to be done, and how it ought to be put in execution; was very dextrous both in attacking and retiring, in laying ambuscades, and engaging in the open field; was never at a loss how to improve a victory, or how to support himself when conquered^w. Either Duras or Decebalus, but more likely the latter, is by Orosius^x and Jornandes^y called Diurpanens. As for the issue of this war in general, Tacitus tells us, that, soon after the return of Agricola to Rome, several Roman armies were destroyed in Mœsia and Dacia, some through the cowardice, others by the the rashness, of their leaders ; that the legions and the troops of the allies were taken prisoners even in the fortified towns ; insomuch that the Romans had reason to apprehend the loss, not only of the country bordering on the Danube, but of entire provinces. News was daily brought of some new misfortune, and every year distinguished by some remarkable defeat ^p. Our historian did not think it safe to give us a more particular account of these misfortunes, or to mention the number of the slain on the side of the Romans in so many engagements, imitating therein the reserve of Sallust, and some other historians, on like occasions ^q. Every true Roman, says Tacitus, wished then to see the command of the armies vested in Agricola. He was even proposed to the emperor by several of his freed-men, some of them hoping by that means to hasten his ruin, while others had nothing in view but the reputation of their master, and the welfare of the state ; but that jealous prince dreaded nothing so much as to trust a man of courage with the command of his armies ^r. As for the particulars of this war, we have related them in the history of Domitian's reign ; and therefore shall only observe here, that the Dacians, in the first battle they fought, utterly defeated Appius or Oppius Sabinus, governor of Mœsia, who was killed in the engagement ; that, upon his death, and the defeat of his army, they laid waste, without controul, all Mœsia, and made themselves masters of several castles and strong holds ; that Domitian, to put a stop to their ravages, hastened into Illyricum, with almost all the forces of the empire ; that thereupon Decebalus sent deputies to sue for peace ; but the emperor, rejecting his proposals, dispatched Cornelius Fuscus, then præfectus prætorio, against him, with the flower of his army, who, having passed the Danube, and engaged the Dacians was by them cut off, with almost his whole army. This overthrow obliged Domitian, who was already returned to Rome, to hasten back into Illyricum, whence he detached one of his generals, named Julian, against the enemy, not caring to expose his own person. Julian gained a complete victory, and put such numbers of the Dacians to the sword, that Decebalus, no longer able to keep the field, dispatched ambassadors anew to sue for peace ; which Domitian upon no terms would grant him. But in the

^r Dio, l. liv. p. 546.^s Tacit. l. iii. c. 46. p. 73, 74.^t Joseph. bell. l. vii. c. 22. p. 976. Tacit. l. iv. c. 54. p. 102.^u Dio. Val. p. 709.^w Idem. p. 761.^x Oros. l. vii. c. 10.^y P. 212.^y Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 13. p. 629.

They cut off Appius Sabinus, with his army.
Year after Christ 86.

^p Tacit. vit. Agr. c. 41. p. 151.
^{bid.}

^q Oros. ibid.

^r Tacit.

Domitian concludes a shameful peace with them. Year after Christ 90.

the mean time, instead of improving his late victory, and pressing Decebalus, already reduced to great straits, he turned his arms against the Marcomans and Quadians, and, being by the former defeated and put to flight, he was glad to come to an agreement with Decebalus; and accordingly dispatched ambassadors to him, with more advantageous proposals than he could have asked or expected. Decebalus, reflecting on the bad situation of his affairs, thought it advisable to accept the emperor's offers; but instead of waiting upon him in person, as Domitian desired, he appointed his brother Diegis to supply his room. Diegis delivered up to the emperor some arms, and a small number of prisoners, and received, at his hands, the diadem in his brother's name. The emperor besides agreed to pay to Decebalus a yearly sum, and sent him, at his request, a great number of artificers of all professions, such artificers especially as were well versed in the art of contriving and making military engines. This yearly pension, or, as we may call it, tribute, was punctually paid, so long as Domitian lived; and nevertheless after this shameful peace, he wrote to the senate boasting letters, as if he had obliged Decebalus to submit to what terms he thought proper to prescribe; nay, he dispatched to the senate the ambassadors of Decebalus, with a letter of submission, which he pretended to have been written to him by that prince, but others deemed supposititious. The senate decreed him a triumph, and he triumphed accordingly over the Dacians, and at the same time, according to Eusebius, over the Marcomans, by whom he had been defeated. The sycophants of those days, especially the poets, extolled these pretended victories, comparing, nay, and preferring them to the victories of Alexander and Cæsar. But they were, or hoped to be, paid for their lying encomiums and flatteries. The war with the Dacians lasted, according to Eusebius, from the year 86, to 90, and Domitian is supposed to have triumphed in 91. After the conclusion of the peace, he caused a magnificent monument to be erected in the country of the Dacians in honour of Fuscus, who was killed there.

THE

* Idem. ibid. Suet. in Dom. c. 6. p. 788. Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 13. p. 629. Petr. legat. p. 23, 24. Juv. sat. iv. ver. 111. Dio, l. lxxviii. p. 773. & l. lxxvii. p. 764. Mart. l. v. epig. 3. p. 392. † Dio, l. lxxvii. p. 764. ‡ Idem ibid. p. 762. & Suet. c. 6. p. 788, 789. Mart. l. vi. epig. 76. p. 83.

THE yearly sum, which Domitian had agreed to pay to Decebalus, was punctually transmitted to him during the reign of that prince, and likewise the reign of his successor Nerva; but Trajan, who succeeded Nerva, would by no means submit to that shameful tribute, as he called it, alledging, that he had not been conquered by Decebalus. Hereupon the Dacians began to prepare for war, soliciting the neighbouring nations to join them, especially the Iazygians, at that time a powerful and warlike people; but they declining, under various pretences, to break with the empire, Decebalus made war first upon them, and seized a considerable part of their country, which Trajan, after he had conquered the Dacians, refused to restore them, tho' they had lost it for their fidelity to the Romans*. Dion, who relates this, does not tell us, that Trajan alledged, or had, any reason for not complying with the just demand of the Iazygians. Decebalus soon after turned his arms against the Romans, and, passing the Danube, began to plunder the neighbouring provinces. With this Trajan was no ways displeased; for he wanted only a pretence to make war on the Dacians, whose growing power gave him no small umbrage. Besides, he was informed, that Decebalus maintained a friendly correspondence with Pacorus king of the Parthians, whom he had presented with one Callidromus taken in Mæsia by one of his lieutenants during the war with Domitian. The good understanding between these two powers gave Trajan no small jealousy. He therefore no sooner heard, that Decebalus had crossed the Danube, and committed some hostilities in the Roman territories, than drawing together a mighty army, he marched, with incredible expedition, to the banks of the Danube, passed that river without opposition, Decebalus not being apprised of his arrival, and, entering Dacia, laid waste the country far and near. Decebalus however, not in the least dismayed, having armed the youth of the country, marched boldly to meet Trajan; whereupon a bloody engagement ensued, in which great numbers fell on both sides; but the Romans in the end gained the victory. It was on this occasion, that, linen being wanted to bind the wounds of the Romans, Trajan tore his own robes to supply that want. The emperor, pursuing the advantages of his victory, followed the enemy close,

They seize on part of the Iazygi-ans.

Their war with Trajan
Year after Christ 101.

A a 2

* Dio, l. lxxviii. p. 774.

close, and, not allowing them time to levy new forces, he harrassed them without intermission to such a degree, that Decebalus was in the end obliged to send deputies with proposals for an accommodation. Trajan appointed Lucinius Sura, and Claudius Libianus, to treat with them; but the deputies not agreeing, Trajan pursued his ravages, advancing from hill to hill, not without great danger, till he arrived in the neighbourhood of Zermizegethusa, the metropolis of Dacia. On the other hand, Maximus, one of the emperor's generals reduced several places, in one of which he took the sister of Decebalus prisoner, and recovered a Roman standard, which had been lost when Fuscus was defeated and killed in the reign of Domitian. Thus Decebalus was obliged at last to submit, and comply with the hard terms, which Trajan thought fit to prescribe, and we have related elsewhere^y. However, three years after, he renewed the war; but, being overcome by Trajan in several encounters, and stripped of his dominions, he chose rather to put an end to his life, than to live in subjection. His head was immediately brought to Trajan, and by him sent to Rome. Upon the death of Decebalus, Dacia was entirely subdued, and reduced to a Roman province. The emperor caused several castles to be built in the country, and placed garrisons in them, to keep the inhabitants in awe. He likewise planted a great number of colonies, distributing lands among the poor citizens of Rome, and of the other cities of Italy, who were willing to settle in Dacia. The Hungarian writers mention several cities in their country, and likewise in Transylvania, which on this occasion were, as they endeavour to prove, built or peopled by the Romans. But of Trajan's war with the Dacians, and the entire reduction of their country, we have spoken at length in our Roman history^z; and therefore have only hinted here at some of the chief events. Dacia, thus reduced to a province, was governed by a Roman magistrate, with the title of proprætor, as appears from some antient inscriptions^a. The emperor Adrian, who succeeded Trajan in 117, was for abandoning Dacia; but the regard he had for the Roman citizens, who had settled there in great numbers, made him alter the resolution he had taken. However,

Dacia reduced by Trajan to a Roman province.
Year after
Christ 105.

^y Univers. hist. vol. xiv. p. 573. ^z Idem ibid. p. 575, 576.
^a Gruter. p. 354.

However, to prevent the barbarians dwelling on the other side the Danube from invading the Roman territories, he caused the famous bridge to be broken down, which his predecessor had built over that river, and we have described in our Roman history ^b. In the year 138, the first of the reign of Antoninus Pius, the Dacians attempted to shake off the yoke; but the rebellion was soon quelled by the generals, whom the emperor dispatched against them ^c. In 168, they joined the Alemans, Marcomans, Quadians, and Sarmatians, against the empire; but the two emperors M. Aurelius and L. Verus marching against them, they submitted anew. However, a battle, it seems, was fought, and the victory gained by the Romans; for in this very year, the two emperors took the title of imperator the fifth time ^d; which they never did but on occasion of some victory. In 180, twelve thousand Dacians being driven out of their country by other barbarians, Sabinianus, governor of that province, prevailed upon them to settle in another part of Dacia, while they were in full march to join the Alemans, then at war with the Romans ^e. In the reign of Caracalla, the Dacians seem to have revolted anew; for we are told, that some skirmishes were fought between them and that prince, and that they gave hostages, as a pledge of their future fidelity ^f. Upon the reduction of Dacia in 105, great numbers of the natives, abandoning their antient country, settled among the neighbouring barbarians. These made frequent inroads into the empire, with the Sarmatians, Quadians, Alemans, &c. and their descendents, in the reign of Maximinus, joining the Sarmatians, committed dreadful ravages in the Roman provinces bordering on the Danube; but were, in all likelihood, repulsed with great loss by the emperor, since the year after they broke into the empire Macrinus took the titles of Sarmaticus and Dacicus, as appears from several inscriptions found in France and Spain ^g. In the year 265, the thirteenth of Gallienus's reign, the Goths, and other barbarous nations, made themselves masters of Dacia; for the loss of that province is reckoned among the many misfortunes of that prince's unhappy reign ^h. About nine

A a 3 years

^b Univerf. vol. xiv. p. 576.

^a Occo. p. 285, 306.

^c Dio, l. lxxii. p. 818.

151. & 158. Spon. p. 186.

^d vii. c. 22. p. 214. Felt. p. 670.

^e Tit. Anton. vit. p. 19.

Goltz. p. 77. Birag. p. 220, 237.

^f Get. vit. p. 92.

^g Grut. p.

^h Aur. vit. Eutrop. Ores.

years after, it was in great part recovered by Aurelian; but he, finding he could not maintain it in the midst of so many barbarous nations without an immense charge, withdrew the troops appointed to defend it, and with them the inhabitants and their families, allotting them lands in Moesia and Dardania, which he made a new province, called likewise Dacia, and by Lactantius New Dacia. This province lay on the Roman side of the Danube, and is placed by Vopiscus between the two Moesias. It comprised, according to Sanfon, part of the present Bulgaria and Servia, and had Sardica for its metropolis. The Goths seem to have seized on the antient Dacia abandoned by Aurelian. Thus were the antient Dacians either transplanted into the Roman territories, or dispersed among the neighbouring barbarians beyond the Danube, with whom they became one nation.

Dacia beyond
the Danube abandoned by Aurelian.
Year after Christ 274.

The Lombards.

The Lom-
bards

THE Longobards, Langobards or Lombards, who, in process of time made themselves masters of Italy, and from whom part of that country, formerly known by the name of Cisalpine Gaul, is still called Lombardy, are first mentioned in history by Prosper Aquitanus, bishop of Rhegium, in the year 379. That writer, beginning a chronicle of his own in the said year, after having copied till then the chronicle of St. Jerom, tells us, that the Lombards, abandoning the most distant coasts of the ocean, and their native country Scandinavia, and seeking new settlements, as they were overstocked with people at home, attacked first, and overcame, about this time, the Vandals then in Germany. They were headed by two chiefs, named Iboreus and Aionus, upon whose death, which happened about ten years after, they created Agilmund, son to the latter, their first king, who reigned thirty-three yearsⁱ. It is to be observed, that, long before Prosper's time, mention is made of a people named Longobards; for that name occurs in Ptolemy, Tacitus, and Strabo; nay, Maroboduus, who was contemporary with Augustus, is by Tacitus styled king of the Sueves, Marcomans, and Longobards^k. In the time of Tiberius they entered into an alliance ⁱ Prosp. chron. Grot. proleg. in. hist. Goth. p. 53.

Hist. c. 44. 46. p. 54, 55.

^k Tacit.

alliance with the Cheruscans, under the conduct of the celebrated Arminius, and made war upon Maroboduus, from whom they had revolted¹. In the year 170, the ninth of M. Aurelius's reign, six thousand of them, who had passed the Danube, and, in conjunction with the Marcomans, invaded the Roman dominions, were defeated by Vindex and Candidus, and obliged to sue for peace^m. But these Longobards, by most geographers placed between the Elbe and the Oder, were, according to Grotius, a German nation, and a quite different people from the Longobards, who are mentioned by Prosper, and afterwards settled in Italyⁿ. The latter were, according to Paul Warnefrid deacon of Aquileia, commonly known by the name of Paulus Diaconus, and the most credible writers, originally a Gothic nation, and the same with the Gepidæ, of whom we have spoken above. The Gepidæ coming, with the other Goths, out of Scandinavia in three ships, as we have related above, stopped at the mouth of the Vistula or the Wieffer. From thence they advanced to the banks of the Danube, and, settling there, infested, as we read in Vopiscus, the Roman territories with frequent incursions. In process of time, the Gepidæ fell out among themselves; and from this division sprung the Longobards, who are therefore, as Salmasius^o and Constantine Porphyrogenitus^p observe, called sometimes Gepidæ, and sometimes Longobards. They wandered from place to place, often shifting their seats, and were thence called Winili, that is, wanderers; which denomination has induced some writers to think, that the Lombards and Vandals, named also Winili, were one and the same people. As these two nations were constantly changing their habitations, they were thence called Winili, or wanderers; but, tho' agreeing in name, they continued to be two distinct nations. The learned Sherringham is of opinion, that the Longobards mentioned by Strabo, Tacitus, and Ptolemy, were of Gothic extraction; and that they were left in Germany by the celebrated Woden on his march through that country from Scythia into Scandinavia; but at the same time that writer allows the Lombards, who afterwards made themselves masters of Italy, to have been a different nation, come

The Lombards in Italy and the Lombards in Germany two distinct nations.

A a 4

several

¹ Idem, annal. xi. c. 16. 18. p. 159, 160. ^m Pet. legat. p. 24. ⁿ Grot. ibid. p. 27. ^o Salmas. ap. Grot. ibid. ^p Constant. Porphy. de admin. imper. x. c. 25.

The origin of their name.

several ages after out of Scandinavia, their common country ¹. As for the name of Longobards, some derive it from the word lack or lache, signifying in the German language water, because the Lombards, while in Scandinavia, lived in marshes, or near the sea ^r. Others think it comes from the two German Words langen barden, or hellebarden, that is from the long halberds, which they suppose to have been used by them. But Paulus Diaconus, who was himself a Lombard, though born in Italy, tells us, that they were called Longobards from the length of their beards; and with him agree Constantine Porphyrogenitus ^s, Otho Frisingensis ^t, Gunterus ^u, and Grotius ^w. After they had wandered through several countries, shifting their seats, they settled at length in Pannonia, which they held for the space of forty-two years, and then marching into Italy, under the conduct of their king Alboinus, made themselves masters of the greatest part of that country. We have observed above, that, upon the death of their leaders Iboreus and Aion, they appointed Agilmund their first king. He was succeeded by the following princes, Lamiscus, Leta, Ildeock, Gudeoc, Claffus, Tatura, Wachus, Walterius, Audonius, and Alboinus, the first of that nation who reigned in Italy. As for the manners of the Lombards, Paulus Diaconus tells us, that no violence or oppression, no treachery or compulsion, was practised among them; and that every man enjoyed his property undisturbed, and followed his profession without the least apprehension of danger. But that writer was perhaps somewhat prejudiced in favour of his countrymen; for Procopius writes, that those Lombards, who had served under Narſes against the Goths in Italy, were sent back to their own country, on account of the disorders they committed; and Pope Gregory, surnamed the Great, who was but too well acquainted with the Lombards, calls them, in several parts of his works, a most wicked nation. Perhaps they neither deserved the encomiums of Paulus, nor the reproaches of Gregory; at least it does not appear from their conduct, while masters of Italy, that they did. Paulus Diaconus, speaking of their dress, tells us, that their cloaths were loose, loose, and for the most part of linen, such as the Anglo-Saxons wore, being interwoven with various colours ; that their shoes were open to the end of their foot, and that they used to button or lace them *. From some antient paintings it appears, that they shaved the back part of their heads ; but that their hair was long before, their locks being parted, and laid on each side their foreheads. As for their history, we shall here relate what we find in Paulus Diaconus ; but will not take upon us to vouch the truth of what that author writes.

Their kings

Their dress.

¹ Sherringh. de Angl. gent. orig. c. 15. p. 352. ^r Rud. beck. Atlant. part. i. c. 24. ^s Const. Porphy. de Them. ^t Otho Frising. l. ii. c. 13. de gest. Frid. imper. ^u Gunther. ^w Grot. ibid.

THE Goths in Scandinavia, overstocked with people at home, sent out frequent colonies in quest of new settlements. One, among the rest, leaving their native country, put to sea in three ships : one of these sailed slower than the other two, and stopped in the end at Vistula. The Goths on board this ship were called, as we have observed above, Gepidæ, from a word in their language signifying slow. These Gepidæ, unwilling to proceed farther, settled in an island formed by the Vistula, and continued there, till their numbers were so encreased, that the island could no longer support them. They then began to roam about the neighbouring countries in quest of new seats ; and thence were called Winili, or wanderers. They quarrelled at length among themselves, and agreed to part. Paulus Diaconus writes, that the country, where they had settled, being no longer able to maintain them, they divided themselves into three parts, one whereof, on whom the lot should fall, was to go in quest of new habitations. But most other writers suppose the Longobards to have sprung from the division of the Gepidæ quarrelling among themselves. Be that as it will, those who went out, chose for their leaders Iboreus and Aion, the sons of one Gambara, a woman universally respected on account of her wisdom. Under their conduct they first settled in a country, by Paulus Diaconus called Scoringa, bordering on that which was held by the Vandals, who, soon after their arrival, gave them to understand, that they must either pay tribute, or prepare for war. The two leaders, by advice of their mother, returned answer, That, though they were few in number, they preferred war to servitude and subjection. Hereupon a bloody engagement ensued, in which the Vandals were utterly defeated. Their several migrations.
They defeat the Vandals.
But

Agilmund their first king.
Lamiffio succeeds him, and defeats the Bulga-rians.

But the Gepidæ, whom we shall henceforth call Lombards, though that name was perhaps given them afterwards, being sorely distressed with famine, resolved to abandon Scoringa, and settle in a more fruitful country. They set out accordingly for Mauringa; but the Assipitti denying them a passage through their territories, they resolved to attempt it by force. In order to strike terror into the enemy, who were far superior to them in number, they gave out, that they had among them Cynocephali, or men with dogs heads; which report so terrified the Assipitti, that, not caring to engage so dreadful an enemy, and having one among them of extraordinary strength and courage, they resolved to put the whole to the issue of a single combat; which they no sooner proposed to the Lombards, than the proposal was accepted, the two nations agreeing, that, if the champion of the Assipitti should overcome, the passage should be denied; but, if the Lombard proved victorious, the rest should be allowed to pass unmolested. The two champions engaged in the fight of both armies; and the Lombard having gained the victory, a passage was granted to the whole nation, pursuant to the agreement. Upon their arrival in Mauringa, to increase the number of their warriors, they set all their slaves at liberty, who, though of different countries, became one nation with them. From Mauringa, where they staid but a short time, they proceeded to Gothland, and there made themselves masters of Anthabet, Bathaib, and Urgundiah, which our historian conjectures to be names of towns. In Gothland died their two leaders Iboreus and Aion, upon whose death the Lombards resolved to chuse a king after the manner of other nations; and accordingly conferred that dignity on Agilmund the son of Aion, who is said to have been killed by the Bulgarians, after he had reigned thirty-three years. He was succeeded by Lamiffus or Lamiffio, so called from the word lama, signifying in their language a fish-pond; for his mother, by profession a harlot, is said to have thrown him, with six other males, of whom she was delivered at the same time, into a fish-pond. Lamiffio was luckily saved by Agilmund, who, passing that way, and observing the children, stopped his horse, and stretching out his spear to them, one of them took hold of it, and was by that means saved. The king, not doubting but he would one day prove a great man, ordered him to be brought up with great care, calling him him Lamis-shon, that is the son of a fish-pond. He is said to have gained a victory over the Amazons, and to have behaved, on several other occasions, with such resolution and intrepidity, that, upon the death of Agil-mund, the Lombards with one voice, proclaimed him king. He no sooner found himself invested with this dignity, than, bent upon revenging the death of his predecessor, he marched against the Bulgarians ; and though his men gave way at first, yet in the end, being animated by the words and example of their new king, they gained a complete victory. Lamissio was succeeded by Leta or Lechu, and he, after a reign of near forty years, by Ildeock or Hildehoc, as was Ildeock by Gudeock. In the reign of the latter, Odoacer king of Italy having killed Feletheus, king of the Rugians dwelling beyond the Danube, and either put to the sword, or carried into captivity, the whole nation, the Lombards came and settled in their country, then destitute of inhabitants. During their stay in Rugiland (for so the country of the Rugians is called by our historian) their king, Gudeock died, and was succeeded by his son Claffus, after whom reigned Tatus, in whose time the Lombards, leaving Rugiland, settled in the champaign country bordering on the Danube, where a war breaking out between them and the Heruli, the latter were defeated with great slaughter, their king Rodulphus being slain, with the flower of their nation. Their king Tatus gains a great victory over Heruli. The victorious Lombards divided the rich plunder ; but Tatus their king took for his share only the standard of Rodulphus, called bandum, with the helmet he used to wear in battle. Not long after, Tatus was slain by Wacho, son to his brother Zuchilo. Aildichus, the son of Tatus, endeavoured to revenge his father's death, and make good the just claim he had to the crown ; but was in several encounters defeated by Wacho, and in the end obliged to take refuge among the neighbouring Gepidæ. Wacho is said to have subdued the Sueves. He had three wives, viz. Ranicunda, daughter to the king of the Thuringians ; Austrigosa, daughter of the king of the Gepidæ ; and Salinga, daughter of the king of the Heruli. By the latter he had Walterius, who succeeded him in the kingdom, and reigned about seven years. After Walterius came Audoinus, in whose reign a war being kindled between the Lombards, and the Gepidæ, a bloody battle was fought, in which the latter was defeated. Audoinus defeats the Gepidæ. The signal victory gained on this occasion by the Lombards, was chiefly owing to Alboinus, the king's son ;

for

for the young prince having engaged and killed with his own hand Thorismund, the son of Turisind king of the Gepidæ, the enemy, who had fought till then with great resolution and intrepidity, hearing the king's son was killed, betook themselves to a precipitous flight. The victorious Lombards, upon their return home, begged their king to indulge his son, by way of reward for his gallant behaviour, the honour of dining with him, which was deemed no less honourable among the Lombards, than a triumph was among the Romans. The king answered, That, by an antient and immemorial custom among the Lombards, that honour and mark of distinction was not to be granted, even to the princes of the blood royal, till they had publicly appeared in the armour of some foreign prince killed in battle with their own hand. Hereupon Alboinus, attended only by forty resolute young men, repaired to the court of Turisind, to demand the armour of that prince's son, whom he had killed in the above-mentioned battle, being resolved, if any violence was offered him, to sell his life dear. The king received him in a most obliging manner, entertained him at his table, and, admiring his courage and intrepidity, complied with his demand, and dismissed him not only unmolested, but loaded with rich presents. Upon his return home, after he had publicly appeared in the armour of Thorismund, he was, at a grand entertainment, allowed to sit at table with the king his father. In the reign of Audoinus, the Lombards were, by the emperor Justinian, allowed to settle in Pannonia^y. Thus far Paulus Diaconus of the various migrations, wars, and conquests, of the Lombards, from their first leaving Scandinavia, to their settling in Pannonia. His account is, as the reader must have observed, interwoven with some fables; but, in the main, he agrees with Prosper Aquitanus, who wrote before his time; with Erchempertus, who flourished after; and likewise with Procopius, who lived in the reign of the emperor Justinian, whose secretary he was, and consequently well acquainted with the Lombards. The latter writer, in speaking of the above-mentioned war between the Lombards and the Heruli, tells us, that the Lombards had been formerly obliged to pay tribute to the Heruli^z, of which no notice is taken by our historian. The names of the various countries, in which the Lombards are said by Paulus Diaconus to have settled, have occasioned great debates among

The Lombards, under the conduct of Audoinus, settle in Pannonia. Year after Christ 526.

^y Paul. Diac. de gest. Longob. l. i. & ii.
^z Both. l. ii. c. 14.

^z Procop. bell.

mong the latter historians and geographers, and several conjectures have been offered ; but all we know with any foundation is, that the countries mentioned by that writer, lay between the mouth of the Vistula, where the Lombards coming from Scandinavia are supposed to have stopped, and Pannonia, where they settled in Justinian's time.

AUDOINUS dying, the brave Alboinus was by the Lombards proclaimed king. Upon his accession to the crown, he married Clodisvinta, daughter to Clotharius king of the Franks, by whom he had but one daughter, named by some Alpifunda, and by others Albisvincla. About the same time died Turisind king of the Gepidæ, and was succeeded by his son Cunimund, who, to revenge the death of his brother Thorismund, made war upon the Lombards. Hereupon Alboinus, entering into an alliance with the Hunns, then known by the name of Avars, took the field, and, in the first battle that was fought killed the king of the Gepidæ with his own hand, put their army to the rout, and, pursuing his victory, cut such numbers of them in pieces, that they ceased to be a nation, as we have related above. Alboinus, having caused the deceased king's head to be cut off, made a cup of his skull, called, in the language of the Lombards, schala, which he made use of in all public entertainments. However, having taken, among many other captives of great distinction, the late king's daughter, by name Rosimunda, he married her upon the death of his former wife Clodisvinta^a. By this victory Alboinus gained great fame and reputation, not only among the Gothic nations, whose bards celebrated his prowess and valour in their poems, but likewise among the Romans ; insomuch that Narses, who had been sent by Justinian to drive the Goths out of Italy, courted his friendship, and, entering into an alliance with him, solicited his assistance to put in execution the commission he had received. Alboinus sent him a choice body of men, who crossing the Adriatic gulf, landed in Italy, and, joining the Romans, distinguished themselves in that battle, in which Totila was killed. The war being ended, they were sent home loaded with rich presents, continuing faithful allies to the Romans, whom they assisted on all occasions, so long as they inhabited Pannonia^b. Thus Paulus Diaconus. But Procopius writes, that the Lombards, who came to the assistance of Narses, committed everywhere unheard-of disorders, pillaging the open country, burning Alboinus kills the king of the Gepidæ with his own hand.

Sends a body of Lombards to the assistance of Narses against the Goths. Year after Christ 553.

^a Paul. Diac. ibid. c. 27.

^b Idem, ibid. c. 2.

burning the villages, and not sparing even the holy virgins; infomuch that the Roman general was obliged to send them home before the war was ended, charging the two generals Valerianus and Damianus to accompany them, with a body of troops, to the confines of the empire, in order to restrain them from plundering the countries through which they passed^c. Be that as it will, it is certain, that Narses, whom we may justly style the deliverer of Italy, maintained, so long as he governed that country, a strict friendship and correspondence with Alboinus king of the Lombards; so that it was no difficult matter for him to persuade that warlike and ambitious prince to attempt the conquest of Italy.

The Lombards invited into Italy.

Of this memorable event Paulus Diaconus, the author who deserves most credit in what concerns the Lombards, gives us the following account: Narses having, with the assistance of the Lombards, delivered Italy from the yoke of the Goths, sent back into Pannonia his victorious auxiliaries, loaded with rich presents. There they continued faithful to their engagements with the Romans, whom they were ready to assist on all occasions. In the mean time Justinian dying, Narses, who governed Italy with an absolute sway, and had acquired immense wealth, was by the Italians accused to the emperor Justin II. the successor of Justinian, and to the empress Sophia, as if he aspired at the sovereignty of the country. Hereupon he was recalled, and Longinus was sent to succeed him; nay, as he was an eunuch, the empress is reported to have said, that his employment at Constantinople should be to distribute, in the apartment of her women, the portion of wool, which each of them was to spin. Narses, enraged at this severe and insolent reflection, 'I will begin, said he, such a web, as she shall never be able to finish;' and immediately dispatched messengers to the Lombards, inviting them into Italy. With the messengers he sent several presents to Alboinus, with whom he was well acquainted, and some of the best fruits Italy afforded, as baits to allure him and his subjects to attempt the conquest of so fertile a country^d. Thus Paulus Diaconus. But Baronius^e, and some other writers, reject this account as fabulous, alledging, that Narses had been recalled the year before by Justin, at whose inauguration he assisted, and continued in great credit

Whether Narses betrayed Italy to the Lombards.

^c Procop. bell. Goth. l. iv. c. 33.
Longob. l. ii. c. 1, 5, 6, & seq.

^d Paul. Diac. de gest.
^e Baron. ad. ann. 568.

credit at Constantinople. This they assert upon the authority of Chorippus, a poet and grammarian of Africa, who flourished at that time, and was then at Constantinople, where he saw Narses present at the emperor Justin's coronation, and attending him soon after, when he gave audience to the ambassadors of the Avars. But this objection the learned Petavius has entirely removed, shewing, that Chorippus speaks of another Narses, much younger than the celebrated commander; and that there were three of that name living at the same time, viz. the renowned deliverer of Italy, who died at Rome some time after he had called in the Lombards; the brother of Aratius; and the Narses whom Chorippus mentions in his poem, commending him on account of his tall stature, comely countenance, graceful person, and beautiful hair. (K) It is surprizing Baronius should think, that such a description suited an old eunuch. The Narses, of whom Chorippus speaks, was burnt alive in the year 605, by the command of Phocas. Baronius adds, that, according to our historian, Narses dying at Rome, his body was put into a leaden coffin, and conveyed from Rome to Constantinople, where it was honourably interred^f. Now, it is not by any means probable, says Baronius, that the emperor would have suffered any honours to be paid him after his death, had he treacherously delivered up Italy to the Lombards. To this Petavius answers, that his treachery was not known either to the Greeks or Latins, till some time after his death, when it was discovered by the Lombards themselves owning, that they had been invited into Italy by Narses. That brave commander was, according to Paulus Diaconus, a man of great piety, and
had

^f Paul. Diac. ibid.

(K) The words of the poet are:

Armiger interea, domini vestigia lustrans,

Eminet excelsus super omnia vertice Narses

Agmina, & augustum cultu præfulserat aulam,

Comptus cæsarie, formaque insignis & ore (1).

It is surprizing that Baronius should think the celebrated Narses to be described by these verses, who was an eunuch, and at this time, that is, at the beginning of Justin's reign, stricken in years.

(1) Chorip. l. iii. ver. 230.

had, as we are told by Evagrius^s and Nicephorus^h, a particular veneration for the virgin Mary, imploring her assistance before he entered upon any enterprize, and ascribing the success that attended his arms to her protection; and, this is what induced Baronius to write in his favour, and endeavour to clear him from the treachery, with which he is charged by our historian.

BUT to resume the thread of our history: Alboinus, highly pleased with the opportunity that offered of invading Italy, a country with which his Lombards were already well acquainted, began, without loss of time, to make the necessary preparations for his intended expedition. In the first place, he solicited the assistance of the Saxons, his old friends and allies, promising to share with them his future conquests. The Saxons readily closed with his proposals, and sent him twenty thousand men, with their wives and childrenⁱ. He likewise received powerful succours from other nations, namely from the Gepidæ, then his subjects, from the Bulgarians, Sarmatians, Pannonians, Sueves, Noricans, &c.^k. Having thus drawn together a numerous and powerful army, before he set out, he entered into a strict alliance with the Hunns, the most powerful of his neighbours, leaving Pannonia to them, upon this condition, that, if the expedition, he was going upon should not succeed, the Lombards should be allowed to re-enter upon their former possessions. Having

The Lombards set out for Italy.
Year after
Christ 568.

concerted such other measures as he thought necessary for so great an undertaking, he set out with his whole nation, their wives and children, carrying with them all their moveables, and whatever they had of value, and leaving Pannonia after a stay of forty-two years there, took their rout towards Italy. They began their march in the month of April, just after Easter, which fell that year on the first day of the month, in the first indiction, in the third year of Justin II. the ninth of John III. bishop of Rome, and in the year of the christian æra 568. Alboinus, with his army, and the promiscuous multitude that followed it, arrived, by the way of Istria, on the borders of Italy, which he entered without the least opposition, and, advancing through the province of Venetia to the city of Aquileia, found the whole country abandoned, the inhabitants

Enter Italy, and make themselves masters of several cities.

^s Evagr. l. iv. c. 23.
Diac. ibid.

^h Niceph. l. xvii. c. 13.

ⁱ Paul

^k Anonym. apud. Camil. Pel. l. ii. c. 12.

bitants being fled to the neighbouring islands in the Adriatic. He no sooner appeared before Aquileia, than the gates were opened to him by the few inhabitants who had the courage to stay, the rest having upon the news of his approach, fled with their most valuable effects, following therein the example of their patriarch Paulinus, who, carrying with him all the utensils of his church, had taken refuge in an island. From Aquileia Alboinus advanced to Forum Julii, now Friuli, which likewise surrendered. In this city he passed the winter, dispersing his troops among the neighbouring villages, where they were plentifully supplied by the natives with all sorts of provisions. During the winter, Alboinus reduced the city of Friuli, and its territory to a dukedom, conferring the title of duke on his nephew Gisulphus, whom he appointed to guard and govern those territories, which were, in a manner, the gates of Italy, through which every invader must first force his passage. Thus Friuli was erected into a duchy, and such it has continued ever since. The following year 569, Alboinus, as soon as the season allowed him to take the field, moved forward with his army, and without the least opposition, made himself master of Trivigi and Oderzo. From thence he marched to Monte Selce, Vicenza, Verona, and Trent, which surrendered to him upon the first summons. In each of these cities he left a strong garrison of Lombards, under the command of an officer, whom he distinguished with the title of duke; but these dukes were only officers and governors of cities, and bore that title no longer than the prince thought fit to continue them in their command or government. Such likewise were the first dukes in Gaul, as Paulus Æmilius well observes¹. Alboinus left Padua, and several other cities behind him, either because they lay too much out of his way, or because they were well garrisoned, and it would take up too much of his time to besiege them. Thus ended the second campaign of the Lombards in Italy. The third proved no less successful; for entering Liguria upon the return of the spring, the inhabitants were so terrified at his approach, that leaving their habitations, they fled, with such of their effects as they could carry off, to the most remote and inaccessible parts of the mountains; so that the cities of Brescia, Bergamo, Lodi, Como, and the other towns

of Alboinus

proclaimed
king of Italy.
Year after
Christ 570.

of Liguria, quite to the Alps, being almost destitute of inhabitants, received him, without attempting to make the least resistance. He then advanced to Milan the capital of Liguria, which, after a short siege, surrendered, most of the inhabitants, seeing there were not forces in the place sufficient for its defence, being retired, with Honoratus their bishop, to Genoa. Upon the reduction of Milan, the Lombards with joyful acclamations, proclaimed and saluted Alboinus king of Italy, lifting him up upon a shield in the midst of the army, according to the custom of their nation, and presenting him with a lance, which, among them was the ensign of royalty. From this time historians date the beginning of the kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, which lasted for the space of two hundred years, and upwards.

Pavia surrenders.

ALBOINUS, now vested with royal authority, marched from Milan to Pavia; but meeting there with a vigorous resistance, as the place was well garrisoned, and furnished with great plenty of provisions, he left part of his army to push on the siege, and with the rest reduced Piacenza, Parma, Modena, and the other inland cities both in Æmilia and Tuscany. He then marched into Umbria, and there made himself master of Spoleto, which he made the metropolis of Umbria; and, erecting the city and its territory into a dukedom, appointed Feroaldus, whom he dignified with the title of duke, governor of that district. The governors of the other cities of note were honoured with the same title, as were the cities with that of duchies, which title most of them retain to this day^m. From Umbria Alboinus returned to the siege of Pavia, which at length surrendered, after it had held out with great resolution for three years, and some months. The king, highly incensed against the inhabitants, had vowed to put them all to the sword; but we are told, that, as he was entering the city on horseback, his horse fell under him in the middle of the gate, and could not by any means be raised, till, at the persuasion of one of his followers, he revoked the cruel vow he had made; when his horse starting up of himself, he proceeded to the palace built by Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths, whither the people, to whom he had promised indemnity, crowded to see him, and to swear allegiance to their new princeⁿ. As Pavia was a city of great strength, and conveniently situated, Alboinus and his successors chose it

And becomes the metropolis of the kingdom of the Lom-
bards.

^m Paul, Diac, l. iii. c. 7.

ⁿ Idem ibid.

it for the place of their residence ; whence it became the metropolis of the kingdom of the Lombards, and was raised above all the other cities subject to them. Alboinus, now master of great part of Italy, that is of all Venetia, Liguria, Æmilia, Hetruria, and Umbria, resolved to establish peace and good order throughout the countries he had already reduced, before he made any further conquests. But he was in the mean time slain by the treachery of his wife, in the fourth year of his reign. This princess, called Rosamund, was the daughter of Cunimund, king of the Gepidæ, whom Alboinus had killed with his own hand in battle, and made a cup of his skull, as we have related above. Our historian assures us, that he himself had seen this cup°. Though Alboinus thus insulted the memory of his conquered enemy, yet upon the death of his first wife, he married his daughter, and was, by her contrivance, murdered on the following occasion : As the king was one day feasting at Verona with his chief favourites, and principal officers, in the height of mirth he sent for the queen, and, filling the detested cup, commanded her to drink merrily with her father. Rosamund, struck with horror, hurried out of the room, and highly incensed against her husband for thus barbarously triumphing over the misfortunes of her family, resolved at all events, to make him pay dear for such an inhuman and affronting conduct. Accordingly she immediately discovered her intention to Helmichild, the king's schilpor, as the Lombards called him, that is, shield-bearer, a youth of great boldness and intrepidity. Helmichild peremptorily refused to imbrue his hands in the blood of his sovereign, or to be any-ways accessory to his death ; and in this resolution he persisted, till he was, by a shameful stratagem, forced by the queen to a compliance ; for she knowing that he carried on an intrigue with one of her ladies, placed herself one night in her bed, and, receiving the youth, indulged him, as if she had been his own mistress, in his amorous desires ; which she had no sooner done, than, discovering herself to the deceived lover, she told him, that he must now either put the king to death, or be put to death by him. Helmichild, well apprised that, after what he had done, his safety depended upon the death of the king, engaged in the treason, which he other-

B b 2

Alboinus
murdered.
Year after
Christ 575.

otherwise abhorred. One day therefore, while Alboinus was reposing in his chamber after dinner, Helmichild, with some others, whom he had made privy to his design, breaking in unexpectedly, fell upon the king with their daggers. Alboinus, starting up at their first coming in, laid hold of his sword, which he had always by him; but having attempted in vain to draw it, the queen having before-hand fastened it in the scabbard, he defended himself for some time with a footstool; but was in the end overpowered, and dispatched with many wounds. Such was the end of Alboinus, the first king of the Lombards in Italy, and one of the greatest princes of the age in which he lived. He was both a warlike and prudent prince, being, according to the character the antients give him, no less skilled in the arts of government, than in those of war. His friendship was courted by all the princes of those times, especially by the emperor Justinian, who was glad to enter into an alliance with him while he was still in Pannonia. Accordingly he assisted Narfes as we have hinted above, in his wars with the Goths, and, so long as that great man continued in favour at court, was ready to serve the Romans on all occasions. The little opposition he met with in the reduction of Italy, was, in a great measure, owing to the new form of government, of which hereafter, introduced by the exarch Longinus, sent by Justin the younger to succeed Narfes, who had driven the Goths quite out of Italy, and had governed those provinces with great reputation, as the emperor's lieutenant, for the space of thirteen years. Baronius supposes Alboinus to have led the Lombards out of Scandinavia, to have brought them into Pannonia, and from thence, after they had continued forty-two years in that country, into Italy. But what that annalist writes on this head is scarce worthy of notice, since he can only alledge a few groundless conjectures to support his opinion; and, on the other hand, Paulus Diaconus, the only author who has given us a tolerable account of the affairs of the Lombards, writes, that Alboinus was the tenth king of the Lombards; that, under the conduct not of Alboinus, but of Iboreus and Aion, they left Scandinavia, or at least the countries at the mouth of the Vistula; that, upon the death of these two leaders, they chose Agilmund for their first king; and lastly, that, after having often changed their seats, they they settled at last in Pannonia, under the conduct of Audoinus, the father of Alboinus.

BUT to return to Rosamund : she had promised to marry Helmichild as soon as he had dispatched the king her husband, and to bestow upon him, with her person, the kingdom of the Lombards. She married him accordingly ; but was so far from being able to bestow on him the crown, ^{Rosamund} that they were both obliged to save themselves by flight, ^{flies to the} the Lombards being highly provoked against them for the ^{exarch with} death of a prince, whom, in a manner, they adored, and ^{the treasure} unalterably determined to bring to condign punishment ^{of the Lom-} the authors of so barbarous a murder. Rosamund therefore, with her new husband, and her daughter Albisvinda, withdrew in the night-time, and fled to Longinus the exarch, residing at Ravenna, taking with her all the jewels and treasure of her late husband. Longinus received her with the greatest marks of friendship and kindness, and assured her of his protection. She had not been long in Ravenna, when the exarch, judging a favourable opportunity now offered to make himself king of Italy by means of Rosamund and her treasure, imparted his design to her, and declared his intention to marry her, provided, by some means or other, she dispatched Helmichild. Rosamund, highly pleased with the proposal, to satisfy her ambition, resolved to get rid of the person, whom she married for the sake of her revenge. Accordingly, having prepared a strong poison, she mixed it with wine, and gave it to her husband, as he came thirsty out of the bath, and called for drink, according to his custom. Helmichild had not half emptied the cup, when, by the sudden and strange operation he felt in his bowels, he concluded what it was, and, with his sword pointed at the queen's breast, compelled her to drink the rest. The poison had the same effect on her as on her husband ; for, in a ^{Her deserved} few hours, they both died. Longinus, laying aside, upon ^{end.} her death, all thoughts of making himself king of Italy, sent the treasure of the Lombards to Constantinople, together with Albisvinda, the queen's daughter by Alboinus. In the mean time the Lombards, having paid the last duties to their deceased king, assembled in Pavia, the metropolis of their kingdom, and there proceeded to the election of a new prince, which fell on Clephis, a man of great ^{Clephis} distinction among them. He rebuilt Imola, which had ^{chosen in his} been ruined by Narses, made himself master of Rimini, ^{room, and} and ^{soon after} murdered,

The Lom-
bards governed by dukes.

and extended his conquests to the very gates of Rome. But as he treated not only the Romans, but his own subjects, with great cruelty, he was murdered, with his wife Messana, by one of his people, after a short reign of eighteen months. His cruelty gave the Lombards such an aversion to royal power, that, upon his death, they resolved to change their form of government; and accordingly, for the space of ten years, they chose no king, but lived subject to their dukes, that is, to the governors of the cities; for each city of note, as we have hinted above, was governed by some person of distinction, dignified with the title of duke. These dukes had hitherto acknowledged the royal authority, and were by the kings appointed and removed at pleasure; but upon the abolishing of kingly power, each of them became sovereign in his own city and its district. This division of the countries they had conquered in Italy into so many petty kingdoms, as we may call them, put a stop, for the present, to their conquests, prevented them from ever making themselves masters of all Italy, and in the end occasioned their total ruin; for though the royal authority was afterwards restored among them, yet, as they had been free for some time, they proved less obedient, and more liable to quarrel among themselves ^a.

WE cannot dismiss this subject, without taking notice of a mistake, which most modern writers have been led into by Sigonius. That writer supposes the Lombards, upon the death of Clephis, to have created thirty dukes, and to have divided their conquests in Italy among them. But from the words of Paulus Diaconus, where he speaks of that change ^b, it plainly appears, that the Lombards dreading the authority, or rather tyranny, of a king, chose to live under their dukes, who were not then first appointed, but had been chosen before by Alboinus and Clephis. The only innovation that happened among the Lombards, upon their abolishing the royal authority, was this, that the dukes, who had been hitherto subordinate to the kings, as their ministers and officers, now governed each his dukedom with absolute power, acknowledging no superior authority. Besides, the number of the dukes amounted not to thirty only, as is commonly believed, but but to thirty-six; for Paulus Diaconus, after having told us, that Pavia, Milan, Bergamo, Brescia, Trent, and Friuli, were governed by the following dukes, Zaban, Alboinus, Walaris, Alachis, Evin, and Gifulphus, adds, that the other cities were governed by thirty dukes^c. Tho' the Lombards, during the inter-regnum, were attended with success in their wars with the Romans, for they made themselves masters of several cities, namely of Sutri, Bomarzo, Orta, Todi, Amelia, Perugia, Luceoli, &c. yet they soon perceived, that their kingdom thus divided, could not long subsist; and therefore assembling in Pavia, they resolved to submit anew to the authority of one man, and accordingly chose Autharis the son of Clephus for their king in the year 585. This prince, with his valour and prudence, (for he is said to have excelled in both Alboinus himself) so established the kingdom of the Lombards, that, in spite of the utmost efforts of the Roman emperors, it lasted for near the space of two hundred years. But of the exploits of the dukes during the inter-regnum, and the wars of Autharis and his successors, till the utter destruction of their kingdom by Charlemagne in 774, we shall speak at length in a more proper place.

^a Paul. Diac. l. i. c. 14.

^b Idem, l. ii. c. ult.

The royal authority restored among them. Year after Christ 585.

^c Idem, ibid. Vide Camill. Pellegrin. in diss. de duc. Benevent. diss. i.

The Bulgarians.

THE name of the Bulgarians began to be first heard and dreaded by the Romans in the reign of the emperor Zeno, about the year 485. Ennodius, the most ancient writer who mentions them, tells us in the panegyric, which he wrote on Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths, that they were a warlike and numerous nation, inured to the toils of war, ever ready to prefer death to slavery, and never known to have been put to flight, till they engaged this hero^d. They dwelt, in ancient times, near the Volga, on the north side of the Caspian sea; whence their country was called Volgaria, and they Volgari, which names, in process of time, were changed into Bulgaria and Bulgari^e. Paulus Diaconus calls those countries Bulgaria Magha,

The Bulgarians.

Their ancient seats, language, origin, &c.

B b 4

which

^d Ennod. in panegyric. Theodor. p. 296, 297. ^e Vide Diogenes Laertius. de regn. Slavor. p. 288.

which are known at present by the names of Astracan and Casan^f. Some writers will have them to be of Gothic, and some of German extraction; but as their language differs widely from the languages of both these nations, others, with far greater appearance of truth, conclude them descended from neither. They spoke antiently, says Dio- cleates in his history of the kingdom of the Sclavi, the Scla- vonian language, as they still do, with some variation in the dialect^g. As therefore the Goths, Alans, Vandals, Gepi- dæ, &c. are thought to have been originally one and the same people, because the same language was common to all, these nations must, on the contrary, be allowed to be dif- ferent, whose languages differ. Now, no two languages, says Rudbeckius, can be conceived more unlike than the Slavonian spoken by the Bulgarians, and the German and Gothic. The Bulgarians therefore were not sprung either from the Goths or the Germans, but ought to be reckoned among the nations inhabiting Asiatic Scythia; for they came first from thence; and to trace them farther back would be a vain and fruitless attempt. From Asiatic Scythia, and the countries lying north of the Caspian sea, they advan- ced, in quest of a more fertile country, to the Tanais, and from thence, in the reign of the emperor Zeno, to the banks of the Danube, having at that time one Bladi- nus for their king. They were not stopped by that river, but, passing it, broke into Thrace, with a design to settle there. But Theodoric the Ostrogoth, afterwards king of Italy, and at this time general of the Roman troops quar- tered in that province, marching against them, put them to flight, and obliged them to repass the Danube^h. Those who broke into Thrace had one Libertem for their leader, who was wounded in the engagementⁱ. Ennodius, to en- hance the glory of his hero, pretends, as we have hinted above, that the Bulgarians had never been overcome before^k. Some years after, that is, in 499, the eighth of the empe- ror Anastasius's reign, they broke anew into Thrace, com- mitting every-where dreadful ravages. Against them, the emperor dispatched Aristus, commander of the troops in Il- lyricum, at the head of fifteen thousand men, attended by five hundred and twenty waggons, loaded with arms and pro-

They break
into Thrace.
Year after
Christ 485.

^f Paul. Diac. misc. l. xix. p. 616, 617.

288.

^h Ennod. Theodor, paneg. p. 296.

^k Idem, p. 297.

^g Dioc. ibid. p.

ⁱ Idem ibid.

provisions. Aristus, confiding in his own strength, engaged the barbarians on the banks of the Zarta or Zurta; but was by them utterly defeated, with the loss of all his baggage, and four thousand men, among whom fell the counts Nicostratus, Innocentius, and Aquilinus, with some of the most experienced officers of the army¹. Of this victory Zonaras, without all doubt, speaks, where he tells us, that the Bulgarians, in the second irruption they made into the empire, gained by magical incantations, a complete victory. He adds, that, about the time of this invasion, a comet appeared, and several prodigies happened^m. We are not told what the barbarians did after this victory; but, in all likelihood, they returned home with the rich booty they had acquired. Three years after, they invaded Thrace anew, and, having plundered that province, and great part of Illyricum, they carried off an immense booty, without meeting with the least opposition, the Roman troops being employed against the Saracens, who, under the conduct of one Badicarim, committed unheard-of cruelties in Palestine, Arabia, and Phœniceⁿ. They seem to have continued quiet, perhaps by some agreement with the empire, from this time to the year 539, the twelfth of the emperor Justinian the Great, when, under the conduct of two kings, Vulger and Droggo, they passed the Danube, and laid waste all Mœsia. The commanders of the Roman troops quartered in that and the neighbouring provinces, having drawn together their forces, marched against them; but were defeated with great slaughter, and put to flight. Hereupon the barbarians, roving about uncontrouled, took an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives, destroying with fire and sword what they could not carry off. But in the meantime one Acum, by nation a Hunn, an officer of great experience, whom Justinian had sent against them, having cut off their retreat, obliged them to venture a battle in a very disadvantageous situation. The Bulgarians fought with great resolution and intrepidity; but great numbers of their men being cut in pieces, and both their kings killed, they were in the end forced to quit their booty, and betake themselves to a precipitous flight. Acum, having thus delivered the Roman provinces from the barbarians, by whom they

They defeat the Romans with great slaughter. Year after Christ 499.

They are defeated by them, and their two kings killed. Year after Christ 539.

¹ Marc. chron. xv. p. 449. Theoph. p. 153. ^m Zonar. p. 47. ⁿ Marc. chron.

they had been strangely harassed, set out on his return to Constantinople with Constantine, who had commanded under him; but, in passing through Thrace, both generals were unexpectedly surrounded by a party of Bulgarians, and taken prisoners; so that Justinian was obliged to ransom them with an immense sum*. The following year 540, the Bulgarians, not in the least discouraged by the losses they had sustained, returned anew, and, entering Thrace, plundered and laid waste the open country far and near. But Mundus, by nation a Gepid, whom Justinian had appointed governor of Illyricum, coming upon them unexpectedly, gave them a total overthrow, cut most of them in pieces, and, having taken a great number of prisoners, sent them to the emperor at Constantinople, who incorporated some of them among his troops, and ordered the rest to be transplanted into Armenia and Lazica^p. For this and the above-mentioned victory, the emperor took the surname of Bulgaricus, which, among his other titles, is still to be seen on his coins.

No further mention is made in history of the Bulgarians, till the reign of Constantine III. surnamed Pogonatus, which began in 668. In his time they passed the Danube, and, entering the Roman territories, committed great ravages in the provinces bordering on that river. Constantine, having raised a powerful army, dispatched it against them; but as the Romans, confiding too much in their own strength, and despising the barbarians as an undisciplined multitude, were marching carelessly, the Bulgarians fell upon them with such vigour, that, after a feint resistance, they betook themselves to flight, and, retiring into the fortified places, left the enemy at full liberty to ravage at pleasure the open country. Hereupon the emperor, preferring a shameful peace to an expensive and doubtful war, agreed to pay them a yearly pension, upon condition that they should not, for the future, infest the Roman territories, but join, when required, the emperor's forces against all other barbarians, who should attempt to disturb the peace of the empire^q. About this time Alczecus, one of the princes or chiefs of the Bulgarians, abandoning his own country, for what reason we are not told, entered Italy with

They defeat
the Romans.

Constantine
III. agrees to pay them an annual pension.

Year after
Christ 678.

* Theoph. p. 184. Paul. Diac. miscel. l. xvi. p. 480.
^p Theoph. ad ann. Justinian. 13. ^q Cedren. ad ann. Const.
 20. Niceph. c. 3.

with a body of his countrymen, and arriving at Pavia, without offering the least violence to the people in the countries through which he passed, offered his service to Grimoaldus king of the Lombards, declaring at the same time, that he was willing to live, with his people, in what part soever of his dominions he should be pleased to allot him. Grimoaldus received him in a most obliging manner; and thinking he might prove very serviceable to his son Romualdus duke of Benevento, threatened at that time by the Greeks, who were masters of Naples, he sent Alczecus and his Bulgarians to him, requiring him to allow them settlements in the dukedom of Benevento. Romualdus, in compliance with his father's request, allotted them several cities, and, among the rest, Sepinum, Bajanum, and Isernia; but at the same time obliged Alczecus to relinquish the title of duke, which, it seems, he had before, and, content himself with that of gastaldus, either to shew, that he had not given him those places in seignory and property, or because he did not think it fit, that one of his subjects should be distinguished with the title of duke, since he had no other himself. The dukedom of Benevento being thus divided into several counties, all subject to the duke of Benevento, those who were appointed to govern them, had no other title than that of gastaldi, which is the same with the title of comes or count^r. Thus the Bulgarians came to settle in the dukedom of Benevento, where, for several ages, they inhabited the country now known by the name of Contado di Molise. Paulus Diaconus, who wrote above an hundred and fifty years after they had settled there, tells us, that though, in his time, they had learnt the Italian language, nevertheless they had not yet lost the use of their own (L). To return to the Bulgarians who remained

Some Bulgarians settle in the dukedom of Benevento.

^r Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 11. Cujac. l. i. de feud. tit. 1. paragraph. 3.

(L) What Paulus Diaconus writes on this head is worthy of observation: The Bulgarians, says he, retained their own language, tho' at the same time they spoke the Latin, quamvis etiam Latine loquerentur (2). By the Latin tongue our historian did not mean, as some have imagined (3), the language of remained on the banks of the Danube: Constantine, as we have hinted above, had concluded a peace with them, and of the antient Romans, but another then current in Italy, and commonly called Italian; for the antient Latin, about the end of the ninth century, when Paulus Diaconus flourished, was only made use of in writings, another, called Italian, being then commonly spoken, to which the mixture, variety, and confusion of several languages with the Latin, had given rise. The Latin tongue, even in the time of the emperor Justinian, who died in 566, began to be strangely corrupted, and to bear a great resemblance to the Italian; for Fornerius tells us, that he had perused a public instrument, which had been drawn up in Ravenna, in the reign of Justinian, and was written in a kind of Latin, which bore a great affinity to the Italian (4). In the tenth century, the Italian alone was spoken in Italy; but Italian came much nearer the Latin, than the language which is used now by the Italians, both in common speech, and in writing; but tho' the current language was then very different, from the Latin, yet it was called Latin by the writers of that and the two following centuries, because it was spoken by the antient inhabitants, who were styled Latins or Romans, and by that name distinguished from the Greeks, the Lombards, and the other nations settled in Italy. Hence not only Paulus Diaconus, but authors who flourished long after his time, by the Latin meant the Italian, as the learned Camillo Pellegrino rightly observes (5). Thus, where Otho Frisingensis commends the Lombards of his time, who were then become Italians, for the elegancy with which they spoke the Latin tongue, that writer must be understood, not of the antient Latin, but the Italian; and in the same sense we must understand all the authors who flourished after the ninth century, and call the language used in their time Latin. There is in no country so great a variety of dialects as in Italy, which, as Camillo Pellegrino observes, is owing to the many different nations that settled there, viz. the Goths, the Lombards, the Bulgarians, the Greeks, the Saracens, the Normans, the Sueves, &c. for tho' these foreign nations forgot, in process of time, their native language, and spoke that of the country in which they dwelt, yet they kept many of their own words, and, with their words, a foreign accent; and hence the many different accents and dialects chiefly in the present kingdom of Naples, where all the above-mentioned nations continued some time.

{2} Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 11: {3} Vide Ciarlant. in Samnio.

(4) Forn. in not. ad Cass. l. x. c. 7.
in diff. de duc. de Benevent.

(5) Camill. Pell.

and agreed to pay them an annual pension ; nay, most authors are of opinion, that he allowed them to settle in Lower Mæsia, from them afterwards called Bulgaria, which name that country still retains. Other writers indeed suppose them to have settled there several years before Constantine's reign, tho' they will not take upon them to fix the precise time. However that be, Justinian, Justinian II. II. not only refused to stand to the articles of the treaty, ^{invades their} which his father had concluded with the Bulgarians, but, ^{country ; but} entering their country in an hostile manner, laid it waste ^{is defeated} far and near, made himself master of several forts, and ^{Year after} obliged the inhabitants either to submit to him, and pay ^{Christ 687.} unreasonable contributions, or to abandon their dwellings, and take refuge in the woods and marshes. The Bulgarians, finding themselves reduced to great streights, dispatched embassadors to the emperor, suing for peace ; but he refusing to hearken to any terms but those of an entire submission, animated with despair, they resolved to make a last effort in defence of their liberties. Accordingly, having drawn together all their forces, they fell unexpectedly upon the emperor, put his army to flight, and, having seized on all the passes, obliged him to restore the prisoners and booty he had taken, and confirm the treaty his father had made with them, to purchase a retreat *. In the year 713, Philippicus being then emperor, the Bulgarians, upon what provocation we know not, breaking unexpectedly into Thrace, advanced to the very gates of Constantinople, and having laid waste the country, taken an incredible number of captives, and put more to the sword, returned home unmolested, carrying with them an immense booty. Six years after, that is, in 719, Anastasius II. who had been deposed and confined to Thessalonica by Theodosius III, having made his escape from thence, fled to Tribelin king of the Bulgarians ; and, having prevailed upon that prince to espouse his cause, he obtained of him a considerable army, with which he marched into Thrace, and approached the imperial city. Anastasius believed himself, and had assured the Bulgarians, that the inhabitants, at his approach, would open the gates, and receive him ; but the citizens making a vigorous resistance, and the emperor Leo, raising at the same time a numerous army, the Bulgarians, highly provoked against Anastasius, seized seized him, and delivered him up to Leo, by whom he was put to death ^v.

* Theoph. Cedren. ibid.

† Theoph. ad ann. Phil. 2.

Constantine
Copronymus put to flight
by them.
Year after
Christ 750.

FROM this time the Bulgarians continued quiet till the year 750, the ninth of the reign of Constantine surnamed Copronymus, who caused some forts to be built on the borders of the provinces, which joined the country of the Bulgarians. Of this they sent ambassadors to complain to the emperor, and to demand a confirmation of the former treaties. The emperor received the ambassadors in a manner altogether unsuitable to their character, and dismissed them with a disdainful answer; which so incensed the Bulgarians, that they made a sudden irruption, into the Roman territories, and, penetrating without opposition as far as the long wall, laid waste the country, and returned home loaded with booty. Hereupon the emperor, upon the arrival of his troops out of the east, marched against them in person, and, entering their country, began to lay it waste, destroying all with fire and sword. But the Bulgarians, who carefully watched all his motions, falling upon him as he was marching through a narrow pass named Beregaba, put him to flight, and pursued him with great slaughter to the very gates of Constantinople ^w. In the year 763, a new war was kindled between the same emperor and the Bulgarians, the occasion of which is variously related by authors; but the most probable opinion is, that Constantine, wanting a pretence to quarrel with them, pretended to be highly provoked against them for putting to death in a sedition all the princes of the blood royal among them, and raising to the throne, one Telefis, a person of a mean descent. What gave rise to this rebellion, we are not told; but Constantine, pretending to revenge it, raised a powerful army, and, marching into the country of the Bulgarians, gave them battle on the borders of Thrace. The engagement lasted eight hours; but in the end the Romans gained a complete victory: after which the emperor, instead of improving it, returned to Constantinople, with the booty and prisoners he had taken, and entered the city in triumph. The Bulgarians, upon the retreat of the emperor, put their new king to death, either mistrusting him,

He gains a great victory over them.
Year after
Christ 763.

^v Theoph. Cedren. ad ann. Leon. 5.
Const. 19.

^w Theoph. ad ann.

as if he entertained a private correspondence with the Romans, or because his behaviour in the battle was such, as shewed him unworthy of the dignity to which he had been raised*. The Bulgarians, discouraged with the loss of the battle in which the flower of their youth was cut off, sent embassadors to Constantinople to sue for peace; which was granted them; but upon such disadvantageous terms, that they resolved to observe them no longer than a favourable opportunity offered of renewing the war. Accordingly two years after, great part of the emperor's forces being employed in the east against the Saracens, they broke into the Roman dominions with a body of twelve thousand men; but Constantine marching in person against them, and coming up with them when least expected, cut Cuts 12,000 them all off to a man, and then returned in triumph to of them in Constantinople. This the emperor styled his noble war, be- pieces. cause not one christian was killed in it; but the victory was Year after obtained, it seems, by treachery, the emperor being pri- Christ, 775. vately informed by some Bulgarians of the designs, and all the motions of their countrymen. These Elerich, king of the country, discovered by the following device: He wrote to Constantine, pretending a desire to resign the crown, and lead a private life at Constantinople; for which purpose he begged the emperor to send him a safe conduct, and at the same time to let him know what friends the Romans had among the Bulgarians, that he might repair with them to Constantinople, being unwilling to trust his person or design to others. Hereupon Constantine, not suspecting any deceit, sent him a list of the names of those, who maintained a private correspondence with him; which Elerich no sooner received than he caused them all to be put to death. The emperor, finding himself thus deluded, tore his garments, and his hair, in the height of his passion, and, vowing revenge at all events, spent the winter in warlike preparations, and early in the spring took the field, with a design to cut off the whole nation of the Bulgarians root and branch; but being seized on his march with a violent fever, he was obliged to return to Achadiopolis, whence he was conveyed to Strongylum, where he died†. He was succeeded by his son Leo III, who, upon his accession to the throne, concluded a peace with the king of the

* Idem ad ann. Const. 22.

† Idem ad ann. Const. 34.

Elerich king of the Bulgarians, being driven from the throne, embraces the christian religion.

The Bulgarians gain a great victory over Constantine IV. Year after Christ 792.

the Bulgarians, whose daughter Irene he had married. In the third year of his reign, Elerich being driven from the throne by his own subjects, fled to Constantinople, where he was received by the emperor with extraordinary marks of kindness and esteem. During his stay in that metropolis, he was, at his own request instructed in the principles of the christian religion; which he no sooner embraced, than he was by Leo created a patrician, and married to a relation of the empress^z. Constantine Porphyrogenitus, the son and successor of Leo, in the year 791, the eleventh of his reign, made war upon the Bulgarians, who, according to their custom, had broken into the Roman provinces; but with what success the emperor was attended in this war, is uncertain; for Cedrenus writes, that he gained a signal victory; Zonaras, that it was a drawn battle; and some, that the Romans were worsted, and lost the flower of their army. Be that as it will, the following year 792, he marched anew against the Bulgarians, encouraged thereunto by some mathematicians, who promised him certain victory; but while, depending upon their promises, he omitted the proper means to obtain it, he was utterly defeated. In the battle, besides a great number of common soldiers, fell some of the best officers of the army, and the most considerable men in the empire, with Pancratius the mathematician, who, by his lying predictions, had given occasion to the overthrow^a. Two years after, Cardanes king of the Bulgarians sent ambassadors to the emperor, demanding a tribute, and threatening, if it was refused him, to come as far as the Golden-gate of Constantinople, and take it by force: to such a low ebb was the empire then reduced! Constantine however, exerting himself on this occasion, returned answer, That, as the king of the Bulgarians was stricken in years, he would save him the trouble of so long a journey, by coming in person to wait upon him. Accordingly he marched against him at the head of a considerable army, at the sight of which the barbarians, struck with a panic, fled in the utmost confusion; but Constantine, instead of pursuing them, and taking advantage of the consternation they were in, returned to Constantinople^b. In the year 806, the seventh of the emperor Nicephorus, the Bulgarians, falling upon a party of Romans, put them ^z Idem ad ann. Leon. 2.

^a Cedren. in Const. ann. 2.

^b Theoph. & Cedren, ad ann. Const. 5.

them all to the sword, and seized eleven hundred pounds weight of gold, which they were escorting to Strogmon for the payment of the army. Soon after, they made an irruption into the Roman provinces, under the conduct of Crumus their king, and, having surprised Sardica, put the whole garrison, consisting of six thousand men, to the sword. Nicephorus marched against them in person; but the barbarians retreating at his approach, he returned to Constantinople. However, the following year, having drawn together all the forces of the east and west, he marched at the head of them into Bulgaria, destroying all with fire and sword. Crumus, alarmed at the approach of so formidable an army, sent ambassadors to sue for peace, which he offered to conclude upon terms highly honourable to the empire. But Nicephorus, rejecting them with scorn and indignation, pursued his ravages, burning the towns and villages, and putting such of the inhabitants to the sword as fell into his hands, without distinction of sex, age, or condition. He not only raged against the living, but likewise against the dead, not suffering those who were slain to be buried, but ordering their bodies to be exposed to the dogs and wild beasts. But in the mean time Byzantius, his chief favourite, forsaking him, fled with the imperial robe, and an hundred pounds weight of gold, to the enemy; which was looked upon by the superstitious multitude as an unlucky omen. Crumus, sensibly affected with the calamities of his subjects, sent anew ambassadors to the emperor, offering to agree to any terms, on condition he would put an end to the ravages, and quit the country. But Nicephorus, deaf to all proposals, received the ambassadors with great haughtiness, and dismissed them with scorn. Hereupon Crumus, pushed on by despair, and the thirst of revenge, in the first place, secured and fortified all the passes thro' which the emperor was to retire; and then, animating his men to revenge the blood of their wives and children inhumanly massacred by the emperor's orders, he attacked unexpectedly the Roman camp, and, having forced it in spite of all opposition, cut off almost the whole army, with the emperor himself, a great number of patricians, and almost all the chief officers of the army. Saturatius, the emperor's son, was dangerously wounded; but escaped in a litter to Adrianople. All the arms and baggage fell into the enemies hands; and the body of Nicephorus being found among the slain,

The Bulgarians surprise the city of Sardica.

The emperor Nicephorus killed by them, and his whole army cut off. Year after Christ 811.

Crumus ordered his head to be struck off, and, after having kept it for some time exposed to publick view, enclosed the skull in silver, and used it ever after in all grand entertainments, instead of a cup. In the beginning of the reign of Michael, who succeeded Nicephorus, a peace was concluded between the Romans and Bulgarians, nay, some of the latter were allowed to settle in the Roman provinces. But the good harmony that passed between the two nations was short-lived; for in the second year of Michael's reign, they came to an open rupture on the following occasion: Some Romans, who had been taken prisoners by the Bulgarians in the late war, having found means to make their escape returned home. These Crumus demanded, threatening the empire with war, if his just demand was not immediately complied with. The emperor, who was naturally averse to war, and several persons of distinction at court, were for granting the king of the Bulgarians his request, the empire not being at that time in a condition to carry on the war with success. But Nicephorus the patriarch, and Theoctistus, a person in great esteem at court for his virtue and wisdom, urging, that they ought to trust to the assistance of heaven, and not gratify the pride and insolence of the barbarians, the emperor, following their advice, received the Bulgarian embassadors in the most obliging manner; but at the same time told them, that he could not by any means, comply with their request, and deliver up into captivity such of his subjects, as, having once escaped that deplorable condition, had fled to him for protection. Hereupon Crumus, having drawn together a considerable army, entered the Roman territories, and not only ravaged the open country, but laid siege to, and made himself master of, several fortified places, being assisted therein by an Arabian, well skilled in the art of framing military engines, who had been formerly employed by the emperor Nicephorus, but, being ill used by him, had fled to the Bulgarians, and taught them the use of all sorts of battering engines. Besides several other cities, he made himself master of Mesembria, a place of great importance in the neighbourhood of mount Hæmus, and put the garrison to the sword. In the mean time the emperor, having assembled a very numerous army, leaving Constantinople, put himself at the head of it, and marching into Thrace, came up with the enemy in the neighbourhood of Adrianople. After several skirmishes

They take Mesembria.

skirmishes, in which the Romans had the advantage, the emperor was, in a manner, forced by the soldiery to venture a battle. Both armies engaged with the utmost fury, and the victory continued long doubtful; but in the end the Romans were utterly defeated. Michael was so sensibly affected with this misfortune, that, resigning the purple to Leo, he retired to the monastery of Pharus, and there took the monastic habit. Thus Theophanes^d, who lived at that time, and was an eye-witness of what he wrote. But Cedrenus writes, that the Romans had the advantage in the engagement: that great numbers of the Bulgarians were cut in pieces; and that Crumus with much-ado kept his men from betaking themselves to a precipitous flight, till Leo, who aspired at the empire, drew off the forces under his command; which so disheartened the Romans, that they fled in the utmost confusion^e. Be that as it will, it is certain, that the Bulgarians gained a complete victory, and that the emperor, with great difficulty, escaped to Adrianople, and from thence, with a small attendance, to Constantinople, where he abdicated soon after. The Bulgarians, elated with the great victory they had gained, pursued their ravages without controul, advancing almost to the gates of Constantinople, and destroying all with fire and sword. Leo, who had succeeded Michael, endeavoured at first to restrain them by fair means, and for that purpose sent ambassadors to Crumus, with proposals for an accommodation; but Crumus, deaf to all overtures, sent them back without so much as granting them an audience. Leo, who was an active and warlike prince, highly provoked at the arrogance of the barbarian, drew together all the forces of the empire, and, marching into Thrace, offered the enemy battle; which Crumus not declining, a bloody battle ensued. Great numbers fell on both sides; but in the end the Romans, after a most obstinate resistance, were put to the rout. The Bulgarians, instead of pursuing the enemy, fell upon the baggage, and began to plunder the camp in great disorder; which being observed by Leo from a neighbouring eminence, where he had kept during the battle with a body of reserve, he came down unexpectedly upon the enemy, renewed the fight, and, having rallied his other troops, obtained in the end an entire victory. Great numbers of the enemy were slain, and more taken prisoners. Among the former some reckon the king himself; and add,

And gain a complete victory over the emperor Michael.
Year after Christ 813.

Leo gains a great victory over them.
Year after Christ 814.

C c 2

that

^d Theoph. ad ann. Mis. 2.

^e Cedren. in Leon. p. 173.

that the emperor slew him with his own hand ; but others say, that he was only wounded, and that, falling from his horse, he had been either killed or taken prisoner by the Romans, who had already surrounded him, had not his guards, with unparalleled valour, rescued him out of their hands ^f. The Bulgarians were so disheartened with this overthrow, that they made no inroads into the empire for some years after. Crumus was succeeded by Mortagon, in whose time Thomas, of whom we have spoken in our Roman history ^g, revolting from Michael II. who had succeeded Leo, and keeping him closely blocked up in Constantinople, the king of the Bulgarians, pitying his condition, resolved to march to his assistance, and, lest he should in the mean time come to any agreement with the rebels, he privately acquainted him with his design. The emperor either to prevent the ravages and disorders, which he was well apprised the barbarians would commit, or suspecting the sincerity of the king, or, what the writers of those times think most probable, apprehending that a reward, answerable to such a friendly and seasonable assistance, would too much exhaust his treasury, in the improving of which he at least equalled the most covetous of his predecessors, returned the king of the Bulgarians thanks for his generous offer ; but declined accepting it. Mortagon however, accustomed to war and depredations, undertook the expedition, and, entering Thrace, encamped at a place called Cedoctus, at a small distance from Constantinople. Thomas, hearing of the approach of the Bulgarians, broke up the siege, and marched with all his forces to meet the enemy. Hereupon a battle ensued, in which the rebels were put to flight with great slaughter. But Mortagon, instead of pursuing the fugitives, returned home, with the booty he found in the enemy's camp ^h.

The Bulgarians assist the emperor Michael II.

THE Bulgarians continued quiet, no doubt in virtue of some treaty between them and the Romans, from this time to the year 893, the eighth of Leo V. when a war broke out between them and the Romans on the following occasion : A great trade had been carried on for some time between the two nations, and the public mart was kept at Constantinople, whence by the interest of Zantzas, father to Zoe the emperor's concubine, it was removed

to ^f Zonar. p. 632. Cedren. ibid.

xvi. p. 384. ^h Cedren. p. 189.

^g Univers. hist. vol.

to Theſſalonica. This removal was procured by Zantzas, at the requeſt of the Conſtantinopolitan merchants, and thoſe very merchants were, by the great ſway he bore at court, appointed officers and receivers of the cuſtoms ; which put it in their power to give great trouble to the Bulgarian merchants, whom they oppreſſed with new and unlawful impoſitions. Of this Simeon, king of the Bulgarians, complained by his embaſſadors to the emperor ; but he, who was in all things governed by Zantzas, reſuſing to redreſs the grievances complained of, Simeon, who wanted only a pretence for a rupture, without any further declaration of war, entered the Roman territories at the head of a powerful army, and advanced as far as Macedon, deſtroying all with fire and ſword. On the borders of that province he was met by the army, which Leo had ſent againſt him, under the conduct of Procopius Crenites, and one Curticius an Armenian. The two armies no ſooner came in ſight of each other, than they engaged. The Romans ſtood their ground ſome time ; but both their generals being ſlain, they were in the end utterly defeated. In the purſuit great numbers of them were taken priſoners, and treated in a moſt barbarous manner by the insolent conqueror, who firſt led them in triumph round his camp, and then, having cauſed their noſes to be cut off, ſent them, thus deformed, to Conſtantinople. Leo, highly provoked at this outrage, prevailed upon the Ungri or Hungarians, to break into the country of the Bulgarians on one ſide, while he invaded it on the other. Simeon marched firſt againſt the Hungarians, who committed every-where dreadful ravages ; but, in the battle that enſued, the flower of his army was cut off, he himſelf having, with great difficulty, made his eſcape, and taken refuge in a ſtrong-hold named Drifta ; ſo that the Hungarians purſued their ravages without controul, laid waſte the country far and near, and took an incredible number of priſoners, whom they ſold to the emperor. Leo, before the Hungarians began hoſtilities, or his own troops took the field, had ſent to Simeon one Conſtantinacius, with propoſals for an accommodation ; but the king of the Bulgarians, imagining that the emperor had therein no other view but to deceive and amuſe him, had thrown the embaſſador into priſon ; but finding his army cut off by the Hungarians, and being informed at the ſame time, that the Roman army, under the conduct

Under the conduct of their king Simeon, they cut off a Roman army
Year after Chriſt 893.

Simeon defeated by the Bulgarians.

He gains a victory over them, and revages their country.

of Nicephorus Phocas, was in full march to enter his country, he not only set Constantinacius at liberty, but dispatched ambassadors to Leo suing for peace in a most submissive manner. The emperor not thinking it adviseable to reduce so warlike a nation to despair, readily granted him his request, ordering Phocas, who was then upon the point of entering Bulgaria, to return home, with the forces under his command¹. But Simeon no sooner found the danger removed, than he threw Leo's ambassadors into prison, and falling unexpectedly upon the Hungarians, gave them a total overthrow. He then entered their country, and committed there unheard-of cruelties, putting all to the sword who fell into his hands, without distinction of sex, age, or condition. Leo, not able to march to the assistance of his allies, at so short a warning, dispatched ambassadors to the king of the Bulgarians, complaining of the breach of the treaty just concluded, and requiring him to withdraw his troops forthwith out of the country of the Hungarians. Simeon elated with his success, returned answer, That he would hearken to no terms, till all the Bulgarians, who had been taken in the late war, were set at liberty. To this the emperor consented, unwilling to engage in a new war. But the prisoners were no sooner returned him, than Simeon made new demands, still more unreasonable than the former; which provoked the emperor to such a degree, that he resolved to fall upon the Bulgarians with the whole strength of the empire, and utterly extirpate, if possible, that perfidious nation. A powerful army was accordingly raised, and sent into Bulgaria, under the command of Catacalon, and Theodosius a patrician. But Simeon, falling upon them unexpectedly, cut most of them in pieces, with Theodosius, and a great number of officers of distinction. This obliged the emperor to consent to a peace upon the best terms he could obtain²; which the Bulgarians seem to have observed during the remaining part of Leo's reign.

He puts the Romans to flight with great slaughter.
Year after Chr. 897.

UPON that prince's death, they dispatched ambassadors to Alexander, his brother and successor, to renew the treaty concluded in the late reign. But Alexander, instead of cultivating the friendship of that warlike nation, dismissed the ambassadors in an ignominious manner; at which Simeon justly provoked, invaded the Roman dominions with a mighty a mighty army, and, meeting with no opposition, after having ravaged Thrace, advanced to the very gates of Constantinople, which he hoped to surprise ; but the inhabitants making a vigorous resistance, after several unsuccessful attempts, Simeon was obliged to drop the enterprize, and retire to Hebdomon, at a small distance from the imperial city. From thence he sent ambassadors to Constantine, who had succeeded Alexander, with proposals for an accommodation ; which were received with great joy by the governors of the young prince, who was then under age. While the negotiations were carrying on, Simeon was admitted to dine with the emperor in the palace of Blachernæ, and, when the entertainment was over, dismissed with rich presents. Cedrenus supposes a peace to have been concluded ; but Zonaras writes, that Simeon would not agree to the terms that were offered him. Be that as it will, the following year, 914, the king of the Bulgarians broke anew into Thrace, and, advancing as far as Adrianople, laid siege to that city. In the mean time the empress Zoe, mother to the young prince, having got the whole power into her own hands, and, by the advice of the senate, concluded a peace with the Saracens, who had invaded the eastern provinces, resolved to employ the whole strength of the empire against the Bulgarians, and utterly extirpate, if possible, that nation. With this view she assembled a mighty army, and having first distributed large sums among the soldiers, she ordered them to march against the enemy, under the command of Leo Phocas, captain of the imperial guards. Under Leo commanded the following generals, Grapson, Merula, Romanus, Melius and Constantinus Africanus, who had all distinguished themselves in former wars. The army was mustered in a spacious plain called Diabesis, where the chief chaplain of the palace, called the Protopapa, made them all kneel down, and swear they would fight to the last. After this he gave them his blessing with the usual ceremonies ; which were no sooner over, than Leo, led them against the Bulgarians, who had made themselves masters of Adrianople, betrayed to them by one Pancratius an Armenian. Simeon met the Romans at a castle called Achelous, whereupon a bloody battle ensued on the sixth of August of the present year 917, in which the Bulgarians, after a most obstinate dispute, were in the end put to flight. The victory however was snatched out of flight.

¹ Idem ibid.

² Curopalat. in Leon, p. 168.

A mighty army sent against the Bulgarians.

Who are at first put to of flight.

But in the end gain a complete victo y.
Year after
Christ 917.

of the hands of the Romans by the following unlucky accident : Leo, the Roman general, alighting at a fountain to quench his drought during the pursuit, his horse broke loose while he stooped down to drink. The soldiers, who knew him, seeing him without a rider, concluded that their general was killed, and thereupon turned the pursuit into a flight. Simeon quickly perceived the disorder the Romans were in, though not acquainted with the cause of it, and rallying his men, returned to the charge, put such of the enemy to flight as offered to oppose him, and pursued them, till the day was far spent, with great slaughter. Vast numbers of common soldiers were killed on this occasion, and several officers of distinction, among whom were Constantius Africanus, and Grapson. As for Leo, who commanded in chief, having narrowly escaped falling into the enemy's hands, he got safe in the end to Mesembria^k. To this mistake some ascribe the dreadful overthrow, which the Romans received on this occasion ; but others tell us, that while Leo was busy in the pursuit of the enemy, news was brought to him, that Romanus Lacapenus, who commanded the fleet, was returned to Constantinople, with a design to usurp the sovereignty, while most of the nobility and officers were absent ; that, upon this intelligence, Leo, who had the same ambitious views, returned in great haste to the camp, the better to be informed of the truth ; and that the soldiers, imagining he retired out of fear, betook themselves to flight^l. Be that as it will, the flower of the Roman army was cut off ; and Simeon, elated with this unexpected success resolved to return before Constantinople ; but two strong detachments from his army being met and defeated at a place called Catasyrtes by the imperial troops, he thought it adviseable to drop the enterprize, and return home with the immense booty which he had already got. Even in this encounter or skirmish the Romans lost a considerable number of men, and some officers of great reputation, among whom was Nicolas, the son of Constantine Ducas, who on this occasion, commanded in chief, and to whose valour the success of the day was chiefly owing. Five years after, Simeon, taking advantage of the intestine broils and factions into which the empire was rent by the usurpation of Romanus, began to make new inroads into the Roman territories.

^k Cedren. Zonar. Leo Grammat. in Constan. Porphyroglycas. in Const. p. 87.

territories. One of his parties advanced as far as Catsbyrtes, in the neighbourhood of Constantinople, where they were met by Leo, son-in-law to Romanus and put to flight. In this encounter Michael, a Roman officer, who had signalized himself on several occasions, received a wound, of which he died. A few months after, Simeon sent into Thrace a numerous army, commanded by Chaganus and Minicius, with orders to march strait to Constantinople. Romanus, receiving timely notice of their design, dispatched Leo, his brother Pothus Argyrus, and one John, against them, with all the troops he could assemble. The two armies met in the plains of Pegæ, at a small distance from Constantinople, and thereupon a bloody battle ensued, in which the Romans frightened with the sudden flight of John, one of their generals, gave way, and were pursued with great slaughter by the Bulgarians. Leo and Pothus took refuge in the neighbouring castle; John saved himself on board a small vessel; but most of the other officers and soldiers were either cut in pieces, taken prisoners, or drowned in striving to get on board the fleet, which was riding at a small distance from the field of battle. Among the latter was Alexius the admiral, and several other officers of the navy. The Bulgarians, now masters of the field, laid waste the country without controul, burnt the imperial palace of Pegæ, and closely besieged Adrianople. Leo, surnamed Moroleon, from his rash and inconsiderate boldness, defended the place with great gallantry, and made several successful sallies; but the inhabitants being in the end obliged by famine to surrender, Simeon basely caused Leo to be tortured to death^m.

They gain another victory, and take Adrianople. Year after Christ 922.

THE king of the Bulgarians, encouraged with this success, made vast preparations during the following winter, and early in the spring took the field, with a design to besiege Constantinople itself. In his march he laid waste Macedon and Thrace, and made himself master of most of the strong-holds in those provinces, leaving garrisons in some, and levelling others with the ground. At length he approached the imperial city, and encamped at Blachernæ, whence he dispatched a messenger to the emperor, requiring, that the patriarch, and some other person of distinction, might be sent to treat with him of an accommodation,

They besiege Constantinople.

^m Glycas. in Constant. p. 142. Zonar. Cedren. ubi supra.

An interview between the emperor and king of the Bulga-rians.

A peace concluded.

Simeon is overthrown by the Chro-bati, and dies.
Year after
Christ 928.

modation, since he was willing, he said, to put an end to such a destructive and expensive war. The emperor readily complied with his request, and, upon the delivery of hostages, the conferences were opened. But some time after Simeon desired an interview with the emperor himself, that is, with Romanus, who had caused himself to be acknowledged the colleague of Constantine. Romanus well pleased with this proposal, went first to the place appointed, attended by his guards, and the chief nobility. Simeon came soon after, and the two princes met on the ninth of December of the present year 923. Romanus, in a pathetic speech, put the king of the Bulgarians in mind of the account he was one day to give to the Eternal Judge for the christian blood he had already shed ; expostulated with him, that being a christian, he should delight in the slaughter of those, who professed the same religion ; exhorted him to join those, with whom he was already united by the same faith, and putting an end to such unnatural wars, turn his arms against their common enemy the Saracens. He told him in the end, that, if he was prompted by the desire of riches to commit every-where such devastations, the treasures of the empire should be opened to him, and leave granted him to take from thence what wealth he pleased, provided he sheathed his sword, and put an end to the shedding of christian blood. Simeon was so affected with this speech, that he accepted the terms offered him by the emperor, signed the treaty, and, having received many rich presents from Romanus, he returned home, not suffering his men to commit the least disorder in the provinces through which they passedⁿ. Simeon, having thus concluded a peace with the Romans, turned his arms against the Chrobati, a neighbouring nation ; but he was by them overthrown with the loss of his whole army. He did not long outlive this misfortune, but died of grief a few days after. He left three sons behind him, viz. Michael, whom he had by his first wife, Peter and John, his children by his second wife. He had obliged his eldest son, whom he disliked, to take the monastick habit some years before his death. He was therefore succeeded by Peter, to whom, as he was yet under age, George Sufurbulus, his mother's brother, was appointed guardian. The neighbouring nations no sooner heard of the death of Simeon, than they they resolved to fall jointly upon the Bulgarians, by whom they had been incessantly harrassed during the late king's reign. At the same time a dreadful famine raged in Bulgaria, the corn having been consumed by incredible multitudes of locusts. Sufurbulus therefore, fearing the Romans, encouraged by their present calamities, might join the neighbouring nations against them, advised the young prince to invade their dominions first with the whole strength of his kingdom, which, he said, would make way for an advantageous treaty, and prevent them from joining their other enemies. Pursuant to this advice, Peter broke into Macedon at the head of a powerful army, destroying all with fire and sword; but when he heard, that Romanus was marching against him, he dispatched a monk to the emperor, with proposals for a peace, which he desired might be strengthened and confirmed by a more strict alliance, if the emperor thought fit to give him his grand-daughter in marriage. This overture was very acceptable to Romanus; so that, after several negotiations and conferences between the ministers of the two princes in the city of Mesembria, not only a peace, but a marriage, was concluded between the young king of the Bulgarians, and Mary the daughter of Christopher, the emperor's son. The articles being agreed on, Peter repaired to Constantinople, where he was splendidly entertained by Romanus, and with great solemnity, married to his grand-daughter by Stephen the patriarch. The king of the Bulgarians was scarce returned home, when a conspiracy was discovered, carried on against him by John his brother, and several other persons of distinction. All who were privy to it, were put to death; but the king contented himself with confining his brother to a castle, whence, with the assistance of the emperor's ambassadors, he made his escape to Constantinople. Soon after, Michael his brother, quitting the monastic habit, laid claim to the crown, and was joined by a great number of Bulgarians; but he dying, his followers abandoning their native country, broke into the Roman dominions, and, ravaging Macedon and Greece, advanced as far as Nicopolis; which city they took, and settled there°. Upon the death of Romanus, the king of the Bulgarians sent ambassadors to Constantinople, to renew with his successor Nicephorus Phocas his alliance with the empire, delivering up his two sons

Peter his son and successor, marries the grand-daughter of the emperor Romanus.

Bulgaria subdued by the Roffi.
Year after
Christ 971.

sons Borises and Romanus as hostages; but the king dying soon after, they were sent home, where with much difficulty, they got the better of a powerful faction, headed by the four sons of one of the chief lords of that country. In the year 970, the Ruffi or Roffi, who inhabited the present Podolia, broke into Bulgaria, under the conduct of their king Spendosthlabus, and, having ravaged the country, and burnt several towns, they returned home loaded with booty. The ensuing year they pursued their ravages, and, having put the Bulgarians to flight who attempted to oppose them, and, in the pursuit, taken Borises and Romanus, the two sons of Peter, prisoners, they resolved to settle in Bulgaria, finding it a country far more pleasant and fertile than their own. In this resolution they were confirmed by one Calocyrus, a Roman fugitive, who engaged to resign Bulgaria to them, to enter into a strict alliance with their nation, and to pay them annually a considerable sum, provided they raised him to the imperial throne. The Ruffi, well acquainted with the late revolutions of the empire, and the low ebb to which the Roman power was reduced, thought it would be no difficult matter to effectuate what Calocyrus proposed. Accordingly, having drawn to their assistance the Patzinacæ a Sarmatic nation, with the Hunns or Hungarians, and armed such of the conquered Bulgarians, as they thought they might safely trust, they entered Thrace with an army of three hundred and eight thousand men, and, having ravaged that province, sat down before Adrianople, where they were soon after defeated, and most of them cut in pieces, by Bardas Sclerus with a body of twelve thousand Romans, as we have related elsewhere ^p. Such of the Roffi as escaped the general slaughter, returned into Bulgaria; whence they were afterwards driven back to their antient seats by John Zimisces, then emperor. But of the war which that prince made on the Roffi, till they consented to abandon Bulgaria, we have spoken at length in our Roman history, to which we refer the reader ^q.

Who are driven out by John Zimisces emperor, to whom the Bulgarians submit.

They revolt, and are governed by four brothers.

THE Bulgarians, being thus delivered from the yoke under which they had groined some years, readily submitted to Zimisces their deliverer. But their submission lasted no longer than his life; for no sooner did they receive the news of the emperor's death, than, revolting from the Romans, they invested with supreme power four brothers, David, Moses, Aaron, and Samuel, called Cometopoli, because they were the children of an eminent count among them.

^p Univers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 424.

^q Ibid. p. 426.

them. Of the family of Peter none was left, whom they could prefer. His two sons Borises and Romanus had been taken prisoners by Zimisces in his war with the Rossi, and brought by him to Constantinople, whence they both made their escape upon that prince's death. But Borises, in passing through a wood in a Roman dress, was killed by a Bulgarian, who mistook him for a Roman. Romanus indeed was alive, but an eunuch, and consequently incapable of ascending the throne. Of the four brothers, whom we have just mentioned, David died soon after he was invested with the sovereign power; Moses was killed in the siege of a place called Serræ; and Aaron, being suspected of favouring the Romans, and keeping a private correspondence with them, was murdered by Samuel, with all his children, Blackhothlabus excepted, who was saved by Kadomer the son of Samuel. Samuel, who was a warlike prince, and a man of a restless temper, having thus got the whole power into his own hands, made frequent inroads into the Roman territories, returning home with an immense booty, and an incredible number of captives; nay, while Basilus, the successor of Zimisces, was engaged in a civil war with Bardas Sclerus, who had assumed the purple, Samuel, laying hold of that opportunity, over-ran not only Thrace and Macedon, but likewise Thessaly, Greece, and Peloponnesus, in which provinces he committed unheard-of ravages, burnt several cities, took others, and among the rest Larissa, the inhabitants whereof he transplanted, with their whole families, into Bulgaria, incorporated such of them as were able to bear arms among his troops, and employed them against the Romans. Basilus therefore, highly provoked against the Bulgarians, had no sooner put an end to the civil war, than he resolved to employ the whole strength of the empire against them. Pursuant to this resolution, having drawn together all his forces, he left Constantinople, without acquainting even his own generals with his design; and, putting himself at the head of his army, he entered Bulgaria through the country lying near Rhodoptes and the river Eurus, leaving Leo Melissenus behind him to secure the streights, while he, by a short cut through woods and marshes, advanced to Sardica, by the Bulgarians called Triaditza, with a design to lay siege to that important place; but as he was making the necessary preparations for the attack, Stephen, the commander of the western forces, and an irreconcilable enemy to Leo Melissenus, coming to him in the dead of the night, assured him, that Leo intended

They commit great ravages in the Roman provinces.

The emperor Basilus invades their country.

But is obliged to return with great loss. Year after Christ 987.

intended to usurp the sovereign power, and with that design was marching, with all the troops under his command, to the imperial city. The emperor, alarmed at this account, and at the same time apprehending the enemy might seize on the passes abandoned by Leo, and cut off his retreat, immediately ordered the army to march. They no sooner began to move, than Samuel, rushing down from the neighbouring mountains, where he had kept the whole time, fell with great fury upon them in their retreat, and turned it into a precipitous and disorderly flight. All their baggage was taken, with the imperial robes and diadem; great numbers of soldiers, and some officers of distinction, were cut in pieces; but the emperor with much-ado escaped to Philippopolis, where he found Leo carefully attending his duty, and guarding the post, which had been committed to his care. The emperor, though highly provoked, and indeed with a great deal of reason, against Stephen, the author of so much mischief, contented himself with reviling him only in words, till he began to defend what he had done; and then Basilus, no longer able to command his temper, leaped from his seat, and taking hold of him by his locks and beard, pulled him down to the ground^r.

The Bulgarians make new inroads into the empire.

THE two following years, the emperor was diverted, by intestine broils, from pursuing the war against the Bulgarians; and Samuel their king, taking advantage of these disturbances, harraressed, with daily incursions, the neighbouring provinces. But tranquillity was no sooner restored to the empire, than Basilus began to make vast preparations both by sea and land, with a design entirely to subdue, or utterly extirpate, that restless and turbulent nation. In the first place, he took a progress into Thrace and Macedon, and, having visited the frontiers on that side, and left a strong garrison in Thessalonica, under the command of Gregorius Taronitas, to restrain the Bulgarians, he returned to Constantinople, to hasten the military preparations. In the mean time Samuel, approaching Thessalonica at the head of a numerous army, made himself master of the place, after having, by a stratagem, killed the governor, and taken his son prisoner. Elated with this success, he crossed the Peneus, and, having over-run all Thessaly, Boeotia, and Attica, he penetrated into the very heart of Peloponnesus, destroying all all with fire and sword in the provinces through which he passed. Hereupon the emperor dispatched Nicephorus Uranius against him, with the flower of the army, who, leaving his heavy baggage at Larissa, passed with incredible expedition the Pharsalian plains, and the river Apidanus, arrived at the Spercheius, and encamped on the banks of that river opposite to Samuel. The river was then so swelled, that Samuel, believing the Romans could not pass it, lay with great security on the other side. However, Uranius, having sought with indefatigable pains, and at length found out, a ford, passed the river in the dead of the night, and, falling upon the Bulgarians while they lay asleep, without the least apprehension of danger, made a dreadful havock of them before they had time to repair to their arms. Samuel, and his son Romanus, were dangerously wounded, and must unavoidably have fallen into the conqueror's hands, had they not kept themselves concealed the whole day among the dead bodies, and in the night stolen away to the mountains of Ætolia, and, keeping the tops of those mountains, to mount Pindus, and thence into Bulgaria. Upon his return home, he found his daughter enamoured to such a degree of Asotes the son of Gregory, late governor of Thessalonica, who had been taken prisoner, as we have related above, that she declared she was determined to destroy herself, unless she was allowed to marry him. Samuel complied with her desire, and, as soon as the nuptial solemnity was over, sent his new son-in-law, with his wife, to reside at Dyrrhachium, appointing him governor of that important place; but he had not been long there, when, hearing that the emperor's galleys were cruizing on the coast, he laid hold of that opportunity to return to Constantinople, where both he and his wife, whom he had easily persuaded to accompany him, were kindly received and preferred by the emperor, he to the dignity of magister, and she to that of zofa, whose province it was to take care of the imperial wardrobe. Asotes brought letters with him to the emperor from Chryselius, one of the chief officers in Dyrrhachium, wherein he promised to deliver the city into the hands of the Romans, on condition the emperor conferred the dignity of patrician on him, and his two sons; but, so far as we can conjecture from Cedrenus, whose text is strangely maimed in this place, the delivering up the city was prevented by the death of Chryselius. However, the emperor became master of the place

Basilus invades their country, and takes several strong-holds.

place not long after ; but in what manner, we are not told^s. The following year the emperor entered Bulgaria in person by the way of Philippopolis, and, having taken there several castles and strong-holds, he detached from Mosynopolis part of his army, under the command of Theodorocranus a patrician, and Nicephorus Xiphias protospatharian, against the Bulgarian cities beyond mount Hæmus. By these were reduced the great and little Persthlaba, with Pliscoba, and several other fortified places. The ensuing year, Basilus in person made a second inroad into Bulgaria, by the way of Thessalonica, took some cities, burnt a great number of villages, and laid the country waste far and near. The city of Beræa was delivered up to him by Dobromerus, governor of the place, whom the emperor honoured with the title and rank of proconsul. The city of Servia, which was defended by a numerous garrison, under the command of Nicolas, made a long and vigorous resistance ; but was taken in the end by storm. From Servia the emperor returned to Constantinople, carrying with him a great number of captives, and among the rest Nicolas, governor of the place, whom, for his gallant behaviour, he generously raised to the rank of a patrician. But Nicolas, preferring the service of his master to all the honours the emperor could confer upon him, made his escape soon after to Samuel, and with him laid siege to Servia ; which the emperor no sooner understood, than he hastened thither in person, obliged the Bulgarians to retire, and, falling upon them in their retreat, took Nicolas a second time prisoner, and sent him to Constantinople, where he was, by the emperor's orders, kept under close confinement. From Servia Basilus led his army into Thessaly, and there repaired such castles, as had been dismantled by the Bulgarians, recovered those that were still held by them, and reunited that province, after it had been some time in their hands, to the empire. The year after, Basilus, early in the spring, entered Bulgaria anew, and laid siege to Bodyna, which held out for the space of eight months ; but was in the end taken by storm. As the autumn was already far spent, the emperor, having left a strong garrison in Bodyna, marched back with the rest of his troops to Constantinople. When he came, on his return home, to the river Axius, he found Samuel, with all the forces he had been able

^s Idem, p. 198.

able to assemble, encamped on the opposite bank. But Basilus, having discovered a ford, and passed the river in the dead of the night, fell early next morning on the enemy, before they could put themselves in a posture of defence, and gave them a total overthrow. Simeon's army being thus defeated and dispersed, Romanus, the son of the late king Peter, and brother to Borises, delivered up to the emperor the city of Scopiæ, of which he was governor, and was on that account rewarded with the dignity of patrician. Samuel, no longer able to keep the field, placed strong guards in all the passes, to prevent the emperor from penetrating farther into Bulgaria. However, Basilus, bent upon the entire reduction of the country, forced, not without great loss of men, several passes; but, in the streights of Cimba Longus, he had been cut off with his whole army, had not Nicephorus Xiphias, governor of Philippopolis, marching with a strong detachment through by-ways, and over a steep mountain, fallen unexpectedly on the enemy's rear, and by that means obliged them to abandon their post. Hereupon Basilus, entering the streights without opposition, pursued them with great slaughter, though they retired in good order, and, often facing about, skirmished with the Romans. In one of these skirmishes the king narrowly escaped falling into the hands of the Romans by the valour and conduct of his son, who rescued him when he was already surrounded on all sides, and conveyed him safe to the castle of Prilapus, though closely pursued by a body of Roman horse. On this occasion the emperor is said to have taken fifteen thousand prisoners, whom, contrary to his custom, he treated with great inhumanity; for he caused their eyes to be put out, and, to every hundred assigning a guide, who had one eye left, sent them in that condition to Samuel. The king of the Bulgarians, already broken with age, and worn out with misfortunes, was so shocked at this dismal spectacle, that he fell into a swoon; and though he returned to himself again, yet, not able to bear up against so great a calamity, he died two years after^u.

Their army utterly defeated.

They are defeated anew.

Samuel,
king of the Bulgarians,
dies of grief.

SAMUEL was succeeded by his son Gabriel, whom he had by a captive of Larissa. In the beginning of his reign, the emperor, pursuing the conquest of Bulgaria, made himself

^u Idem, p. 203, & seq. Zonar. p. 341.

The Bulgarians, under the conduct of Gabriel their new king, cut off part of the Roman army.

Gabriel murdered by Bladisthlabus who succeeds him.

Basilus reduces several strong holds.

self master of a strong castle named Matzucius, and then sat down before Strumpitza, a place of great strength. During the siege, he detached Theophylact, one of his generals, with a body of chosen men, to reduce the strongholds among the mountains, and open a way through the woods. Theophylact made himself master of several places; but being in the end surprised by the Bulgarians in a narrow pass, where he could not draw up his men, he was cut off, with the whole body under his command. The emperor, to whom Strumpitza had submitted after a vigorous resistance, hearing of this misfortune, thought it advisable to retreat; and accordingly marched back to Mosynopolis, and thence to Thessalonica. On his route, he took the castles of Prilapus, Stypeius, Melencius, and Budena, and burnt Buteliana, the royal palace of the Bulgarian kings. During the winter, Gabriel was killed, while he was hunting, by Bladisthlabus, the son of Aaron, whose life he had formerly preserved, as we have related above. Bladisthlabus, being acknowledged king by the Bulgarians, immediately acquainted the emperor with the death of Gabriel, and his own promotion, acknowledging himself at the same time a subject and vassal of the empire. But Basilus, suspecting his sincerity, returned early in the spring into Bulgaria, and there made himself master of several strong castles, and fortified towns, in one of which he took some of the principal men among the Bulgarians. In the mean time Bladisthlabus sent a new deputation to the emperor, offering to submit upon what terms he should think proper to prescribe. At the same time the emperor received letters from the Bulgarians, owning themselves his subjects and vassals. But Basilus, being informed, that neither the king nor his subjects were sincere in their declarations, and that they had made an attempt upon Dyrrhachium, hoping to surprize that important place, entered Bulgaria anew, and, having laid waste the countries of Ostrobus, Gosens, and Pelagonia, advanced to Achris, the place where the Bulgarian kings usually resided, which he reduced; and then, leaving part of his army in Pelagonia, to awe the Bulgarians, he marched out with the rest to reduce the neighbouring provinces. But he was scarce gone, when Ibatzes, a man of great distinction among the Bulgarians, and remarkable for his valour, and experience in war, having drawn the Romans left by the emperor into an ambuscade, cut them off, with their commanders, all to a man. Hereupon Basilus, marching back in great rage, laid several cities in ashes, ravaged the open country with fire and sword, and, having taken a great number of prisoners, ordered their eyes to be put out, and, in that condition, sent them to Bladisthlabus. On the other hand, the Bulgarians, making frequent sallies from the woods, cut great numbers of his men in pieces; insomuch that, his army being greatly diminished, he thought it adviseable to return earlier than usual to Constantinople. On his march, he laid siege to the castle of Pernicus; but the garrison, making a vigorous resistance, he lay before it eighty days, assaulting it almost every day with his whole army; but, being constantly repulsed with great loss of men, he was in the end obliged to drop the enterprize, and retire. However, thinking he could not, without forfeiting his reputation, drop the war, till he had entirely subdued Bulgaria, after having so often invaded it in person, he allowed his army but a short respite; and then, taking the field again, he laid siege to Castoria, a fortified town in Pelagonia. But in the mean time the king of the Bulgarians, having drawn together all the forces he could muster, began to march towards the frontiers of the empire, in order to oblige the emperor to abandon Bulgaria, and hasten back to the defence of his own dominions. Basilus accordingly, breaking up the siege of Castoria, marched against Bladisthlabus, who, not caring to put the whole to the issue of an engagement, retired at his approach. Basilus detached Constantine Diogenes in pursuit of the enemy, who put many of them to the sword, took the horses and baggage of the king, with one of his kinsmen, and returned loaded with booty. After this, the emperor took by storm the castle of Sataena, where he found a great quantity of corn, which he caused to be removed, and then set fire to the place. Having ended the campaign, he returned, according to his custom, to Constantinople. He was no sooner gone, than the king of the Bulgarians laid siege to Dyrrhachium; but the garrison making a vigorous resistance, he was slain in an assault. The Bulgarians, who had hitherto defended their country with an unparalleled valour, and maintained their liberties against the whole strength of the empire, in a war which had lasted twenty years and upwards, being now quite disheartened by the loss of their king, sent deputies to the emperor,

And puts their king to flight, who is killed soon after.

The chief men among the Bulgarians submit.

with offers of a total and unfeigned submission. Basilus received them in the most obliging manner, and, hastening into Bulgaria, was met on the confines by the governors of thirty-six castles, which they delivered up to him. Their example was followed by most of the chief men of Bulgaria, and even by the wife of the deceased king, who, coming to the emperor, with three of her sons, and her six daughters, renounced all claim to the kingdom of Bulgaria. She had three other sons by the king; but they had taken refuge on the tops of the Ceraunic mountains, whence they were soon after obliged by famine, the emperor having ordered all the passes to be carefully guarded, to come down, and surrender themselves. Basilus received them in the most obliging manner imaginable, raised Profranus, who seems to have been the eldest, to the dignity of magister, and the other five to that of patrician. To the mother, and the daughters he allowed a maintenance suitable to their rank, and ever treated them with the utmost respect. At Achris, where the Bulgarian kings usually resided; he was received by his new subjects with loud acclamations. There he seized on the immense treasure of the Bulgarian princes, and found, among other things of great value, several crowns enriched with pearl, and a great quantity of gold, which he bestowed as a donative upon his soldiers^w. There remained now but one man in the whole country capable of raising disturbances, who had not submitted to the emperor. This was Ibatzes, a person nearly allied to the royal family, and one who, during the course of the war, had given several instances of his courage, and implacable hatred to the Romans. He refusing to comply with the present posture of affairs, seized on a castle standing on the top of a mountain most difficult of access, and, having fortified himself there, declared, that he was resolved to hold out to the last extremity. But in what manner he was seized in his castle, and brought to the emperor, we have related at length in our Roman history^x, to which we refer the reader. And now Basilus, absolute master of all Bulgaria, took a progress through the country, receiving every-where the submissions of his new subjects, and causing several castles to be demolished,

Bulgaria entirely subdued.
Year after Christ 1019.

left

^w Cedren. p. 207, &c. Zonar. p. 350.
hist. vol. xvi. p. 437.

^x Univers.

lest the Bulgarians seizing on them, should attempt to shake off the yoke. Then, leaving Bulgaria, he repaired to Athens, and, ascribing the success that had attended his arms to the protection of the virgin Mary, he enriched her church in that city with many presents of great value. From Athens he returned to Constantinople, which he entered in triumph through the Golden gate, amidst the loud acclamations of the multitude, the widow of the late king of the Bulgarians, with all the princes and princesses of the blood royal, walking before him. This conquest and final reduction of Bulgaria, which had been often attempted in vain by other emperors, was effected by Basilus in the forty-fourth year of his reign, and of the christian æra 1019.

THE Bulgarians bore the yoke patiently for the space of seventeen years, that is, till the year 1036, the second of Michael IV. when they revolted on the following occasion: One Deleanus, as we read in Cedrenus, or Dorianus, as Zonaras calls him, by birth a Bulgarian, but slave or servant to a citizen of Constantinople, escaping from his master, fled into Bulgaria, and there gave out, that he was the son of Gabriel, and grandson of Samuel, kings of that country. This he affirmed with such confidence, that the Bulgarians giving entire credit to all he said, and, being already weary of the yoke, to which they had lately submitted, received him every-where with joyful acclamations, and proclaimed him king of Bulgaria, sacrificing to this new idol all the Romans, who had the misfortune to fall into their hands. Basilus Synademos, governor of Dyrrhachium, no sooner heard of this insurrection, than he marched out against the rebels, with all the troops under his command; but an unseasonable quarrel arising between him and a tribune in the army, named Michael Democaitas, the contention was carried to such a height, that the tribune accused Synademos at court of high treason; who was thereupon, by the emperor's orders, seized, and sent to Thessalonica, to be confined there to close prison. The accuser was preferred to the government of Dyrrhachium in his room; but in that command he behaved with such insolence, that the people, no longer able to bear his tyrannical temper, and cruel exactions, rose against him, and drove him out of the town. This they were well apprised the emperor would highly resent, and therefore, despairing of pardon, they

The inhabitants of Dyrrhachium shake off the yoke, and choose Tei-chomer for their king.

Who is stoned to death by the followers of Deleanus.

Dyrrhaehium, and the province of Nicopolis, submit to Deleanus.

openly revolted, and chose for their king one Teichomer, a soldier of great reputation among them. This unexpected election very much surprised Deleanus, and his adherents ; for there were now two powerful factions in Bulgaria, the city and territory of Dyrrhachium acknowledging Teichomir, and the rest of the country Deleanus. This Deleanus was well apprised, would occasion the ruin of both, and therefore resolved, by some means or other, to get rid of this new rival ; but, as that could not be well affected by force, he had recourse to artifice ; and, pretending to be highly pleased with the election of Teichomer, he wrote obliging letters to him, congratulating him, upon his new dignity, expressed great joy in having him for his colleague, and earnestly intreated him to come and share the sovereignty with him. Teichomer, believing him sincere in his professions, went and joined him with all his forces. Deleanus, having thus got him, as he thought, into his power, watched his opportunity ; and, having, called the soldiers together, he told them, that Bulgaria could not, in his opinion, admit of two kings ; and that therefore they ought either to confirm his election, who was descended from Samuel, and remove Teichomer, or, if they thought fit, to depose him, and vest Teichomer with the whole power. This speech occasioned, at first, a great contest in the army, which ended in the choice of Deleanus, and the death of Teichomer, who was stoned by the soldiery. Deleanus, having thus got the whole power into his hands, led his army, without loss of time, towards Thessalonica, where Michael then was ; but, upon the first news of his approach, the emperor fled to Constantinople, leaving all his baggage and treasure behind him, under the care of Manuel Ibatza, who was ordered to convey it to the imperial city. But Ibatza, betraying his trust carried it over to Deleanus, whose party being strengthened by some new accession almost every day, he sent a strong body of troops, under the conduct of one Caucanus, against Dyrrhachium, which was soon reduced ; and dispatched another, commanded by one Anthemius, into Greece, at whose approach the province of Nicopolis, revolting from the emperor cut in pieces his officers, by whom they had been most grievously oppressed, and submitted to the rebels. In the mean time Alufianus, the second son of Aaron, and brother to Bladisthlabus the last king of Bulgaria, who, submitting with the rest of his countrymen to Basilus, had been raised by him to the rank rank of patrician, retiring privately from Constantinople, returned into his native country. He had been accused of some illegal proceedings by the inhabitants of Theodosiopolis, of which city he had been appointed governor by Basilius. Hereupon John, the emperor's brother, who ruled with an absolute sway, and bore an irreconcilable hatred to Alufianus, not only prevailed upon Michael to forbid him the court, but obliged him, before his cause was heard, to pay a great sum of gold, and, what provoked him most, forced a beautiful woman from him, for whom he had a great passion. Alufianus, not knowing how far the emperor, at the instigation of his brother, might carry his resentment, retired privately from Constantinople, and, in the disguise of an Armenian, got safe to Ostrobus, where Deleanus lay encamped with his army. Both the soldiery and people received him with the greatest demonstrations of joy; which did not a little alarm Deleanus. However, dissembling his fears, and pretending to be no less pleased with his arrival than the rest, he offered to share with him the sovereignty. Alufianus readily accepted the offer, and, being by all acknowledged as his colleague, in order to gain the affections of the people and soldiery, he immediately marched, at the head of forty-thousand men, to besiege Thessalonica. But Constantine the patrician, a person nearly related to the emperor, making a very gallant and vigorous resistance, Alufianus, after having for six days together, battered the walls with all sorts of engines, and attempted, with repeated assaults, to make himself master of the place, was in the end obliged to turn the siege into a blockade, hoping the garrison would be soon forced by famine to submit. But the besieged, making a general and unexpected sally, cut fifteen thousand of the Bulgarians in pieces, and obliged the rest to break up the siege, and save themselves by a precipitous flight. This defeat increased the jealousies, which the two competitors had already conceived of each other, Deleanus ascribing the overthrow to treachery, and Alufianus, upon the sense of his late misfortune, apprehending that his rival would lay hold of the first opportunity to stir up the people and soldiery against him: thus each in private began to meditate the ruin and destruction of the other. But Alufianus was in the end before-hand with his colleague; for, having invited him to an entertainment, he encouraged him to

He takes Alufianus for his colleague.

Who is put to flight with great slaughter by the Romans.

Deleanus deposed by Alufianus, who submits to the emperor.

drink till he was quite intoxicated, and then caused his eyes to be put out. After this, distrustful of his own interest, and well acquainted with the fickle temper of the Bulgarians, he wrote to the emperor, offering to submit, and return to his duty, provided Michael would grant him his pardon, and such a reward as his service might be thought to deserve. The emperor readily complied with his request, conferred on him the dignity of magister, and sent him to Constantinople. Michael had already resolved to march in person into Bulgaria, and employ the whole strength of the empire against the rebels, saying it was a shame for him, who had added nothing to the empire, to suffer any part of it to be lost. Upon the submission therefore of Alufianus he led his army, without loss of time, into Bulgaria, though he was then so ill of a dropfy, that all about him thought every day would prove his last. However being resolved not to let slip so favourable an opportunity of attacking the Bulgarians, while destitute of a leader, he could by no means be prevailed upon to drop the enterprise. Upon his first entering Bulgaria, Deleanus fell into his hands, whom he immediately sent to Thessalonica; then, penetrating farther into the country, he dispersed some Bulgarians, who began to assemble, received the allegiance of the chief men of the country, and, having taken Manuel Ibatzes, of whom we have spoken above, he returned with him and Deleanus in triumph to Constantinople^y. From this time the Bulgarians continued subject to the emperors of Constantinople, whom they powerfully assisted both against the Latins and the Turks, and were on that account allowed to chuse a king of their own nation, who nevertheless owned himself a vassal of the empire. In 1206. John, king of Bulgaria, marching against Baldwin, the first emperor of the Latins in Constantinople, while he was besieging Adrianople, defeated his army with great slaughter, relieved the city, and, having taken the emperor himself prisoner, carried him to Ternova, at that time the capital of Bulgaria. There he caused his hands and feet to be cut off, and then ordered him, thus maimed, to be thrown into a neighbouring valley, where he lay in the utmost agony for three days, and then expiring, was devoured by the wild beasts and birds of prey. In 1275, Stephen, the fourth king of Hungary, overcame in a great battle Cea prince Bulgaria reduced anew.

Year after

Christ 1041.

^y Cedren. p. 210—214: Zonar. p. 353—360.

prince of Bulgaria, and, having cut his whole army in pieces, obliged the Bulgarians to acknowledge him for their king. Hence Stephen and his successors were styled kings of Hungary and Bulgaria, which title passed, with the kingdom of Hungary, to the princes of the house of Austria, as we shall hereafter relate more at length. With the assistance of the Greek emperors they shook off the Hungarian yoke, and in 1369, under the conduct of Sasmenos their king, they attempted the recovery of Adrianople, taken by the Turks; but were utterly defeated by Amurath I. who had no sooner settled his affairs in Asia, than, provoked against the Bulgarians for their late attempt, he turned his arms against them, and, entering Bulgaria with a numerous army, made himself master of several strong holds, and obliged Sasmenos to purchase a peace, by yielding to him the far greater part of his kingdom, and promising to hold the rest as his vassal and tributary. But Bajazet, who succeeded Amurath, invading Bulgaria without the least provocation, made an absolute conquest of the whole country in 1396, and reduced it to a province of the Turkish empire, in which state it has continued ever since. We shall now, in compliance with our plan, proceed to the history of the Ostrogoths in Italy, from Theodoric to their expulsion by Narses; of the exarchs of Ravenna, till driven out by the Lombards; and of the Lombards in Italy, to Desiderius their last king, taken prisoner by Charlemagne. These three different histories will afford us matter for the following chapter, and with them we shall close the antient history, or the history of the antient nations.

Bulgaria reduced to a province of the Turkish empire. Year after Christ 1396.

C H A P. XV.

The history of the Ostrogoths in Italy, the exarchs of Ravenna, and the Lombards in Italy.

S E C T. I.

The history of the Ostrogoths in Italy, to their expulsion by Narfes.

Theodoric lawful king of Italy, and acknowledged as such by the em-perors Leo and Anastasius.

IN the foregoing chapter, we brought Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths into Italy, and there placed him on the throne of Odoacer. We shall now give the reader a succinct account of this excellent prince's reign, whom we must not look upon as an intruder or usurper, but as the lawful sovereign of the countries he held, especially of the kingdom of Italy; for when he first imparted to Zeno his design of invading that country, the emperor not only approved of the undertaking, but encouraged him to it, and, recommending to his protection the senate and people of Rome, dismissed him loaded with rich presents. During the course of the war, Theodoric sent distinct accounts of all that passed to the emperor, who was highly pleased with the success that attended his arms; nay, when he was informed, that Theodoric only wanted Ravenna to be intire master of Italy, he advised him to lay aside the Gothic dress, and assume the royal diadem, mantle, and other ensigns of majesty; which was acknowledging him king of Italy^a. Upon the reduction of Ravenna, which happened in the second year of the reign of Anastasius, the successor of Zeno, he was by the new emperor acknowledged for a just and lawful prince; for though the Goths, as we read in the anonymous of Valesius^b, upon the death of Odoacer, proclaimed him anew king of all Italy, without the consent and approbation of the de consulib. p. 300.

^a Jorn. de reb. Get. p. 698.

^b Pagi in dissert. hypat.

the emperor, yet Anastasius approved of what they had done, as is manifest from the letters he wrote to him, and from Theodoric's answer to them, which have been transmitted to us by Cassiodore. Besides, when Theodoric undertook the conquest of Italy, the western empire was at an end ; Spain was held by the Vandals, the Visigoths, and the Sueves ; Gaul by the Franks and Burgundians ; Britain by the Saxons ; and Italy left a prey to the Heruli, the Rugians, and other barbarous nations. While the last-mentioned country, which, for so many ages, had given law to the world, was thus groaning under the yoke of the barbarians, the emperors of the east being no ways in a condition to afford it the least relief, Theodoric, with their consent and approbation, undertook the great work, and having, at his own charges, and with troops of his own nation, driven out the tyrant, he was, with loud acclamations, received by the people as their king and deliverer. The only person, who had then any claim to Italy, was the emperor of the east, and both Zeno, and his successor Anastasius, acknowledged Theodoric king of that country, not only allowing him to wear the royal ensigns, but transferring to him all their claims and rights, as we read in Procopius, a writer no-ways favourable to the Goths, not to mention Jornandes, or Ennodius the holy bishop of Pavia, who affirm the same thing, but may perhaps be thought biased in favour of Theodoric, the former being a Goth by nation, and the latter a great admirer of Theodoric, on account of his eminent virtues, which he celebrated in a panegyric, that has reached our times. Hence, when the Goths, upon their being attacked by the emperor Justinian, had recourse to the Franks, they told them, among other things, that they might expect the same treatment from the emperors, which the Goths now met with, since they made war upon them, alledging, that Theodoric had invaded Italy, which belonged to the Romans ; whereas he had not taken that country from them, but from Odoacer, and had been, even by them, owned lawful king of Italy, till the power of the Goths being at a low ebb, the emperor thought himself in a condition to strip them of what had been yielded to them by his predecessors ^c. But to return to Theodoric : Tho' he was master of all Italy and Sicily, and likewise of Rhætia, Noricum, Dalmatia, Liburnia, Istria, and great part of Suevia, Pannonia, and Gaul, and governed Spain, as guardian

^c Agath. l. i. p. 48.

He retains the same laws and magistrates.

dian to his young nephew Amalaric, yet he did not assume the title of emperor, but contented himself with that of king, either out of respect to the emperors of the east ; or because he reckoned the title of king, denoting an independant authority, more honourable than that of emperor ; or perhaps because Odoacer, whom he succeeded, had taken no other. Be that as it will, Theodoric having no enemy to contend with after the death of Odoacer, sheathed his sword, and applied himself wholly to the establishing of good order throughout his new dominions. He retained the same laws, the same magistrates, the same polity, and the same distribution of provinces. Military honours, for the most part, he conferred on the Goths, but preferred the Romans alone to civil employments. Hence the Romans, that is, the antient inhabitants of Italy, were highly pleased with his government ; and Gelasius, bishop of Rome, wrote a letter to him, congratulating him upon his happy administration. He distributed the Goths among the fortified places, with their captains, who, in time of war, commanded them, and governed them in time of peace. As for the Romans, they were governed by the same magistrates, as they had been under the emperors ; but with this difference, that by the emperors was sent a consularis, a præses, a corrector, into each province, to whom, in all suits, recourse was to be had from the most remote parts ; whereas the Goths sent, besides the abovementioned magistrates, others of an inferior rank to every small village, who, by administering justice there, delivered the people from the great trouble, and vast expences, they had been at, in the Roman times, when the power of deciding controversies was vested in the supreme magistrate alone. The Goths were, as appears from Cassiodore, no less scrupulous in the choice of these inferior magistrates, than of the greater officers, employing only persons of known integrity, and acceptable to the people, and allowing no appeals to other tribunals, but in cases of manifest injustice. Of these inferior magistrates some were called cancellarii, others canonicarii, comites referendarii, &c. Petrus Pontinus wrote a book of the dignities of the Gothic court ^d ; but, as Grotius well observes ^e, he might have saved himself that trouble, since they are minutely described in the sixth and seventh books of Cassiodore.

As

^d Peter Pontin. de dignit. Goth. aulæ.
ad hist. Goth. p. 46.

^e Grot. in proleg.

As Theodoric made no alteration in the laws, magistrates, or form of government, except that which we have just mentioned, so he contented himself with the same ^{He contents himself with} tributes and taxes, which had been levied by the em- ^{the taxes paid} perors; but was far more ready than they had ever been ^{to the em-} to remit them on occasion of any public calamity. Thus, he remitted to the inhabitants of Campania the tribute they usually paid, upon their representing to him, that they had suffered much by an irruption of mount Vesuvius. The letter or order which he sent on this occasion to Faustus, consularis or governor of Campania, has been transmitted to us by Cassiodore. In that letter he tells Faustus, that the inhabitants of Campania, having suffered greatly, had petitioned him for relief; that he was ready to grant them their request, provided he were rightly informed of the misfortune, and knew how to judge of the damage they had sustained. He commands him to send some person of known integrity into the territories of Nola and Naples, to view the lands, and take an estimate of the loss, that he might know how to make a proportionable allowance out of the tribute^f. It was probably on this occasion that the Neapolitans erected, in their great forum or market-place, a statue to Theodoric, which is said to have afterwards prefigured the end of the government of the Goths in Italy (M). In like manner Theodoric exempted the inhabitants

of ^f Cassiod. var. l. iv. ep. 50.

(M) This statue was made of small pebbles of various colours, and so artfully joined together, that they represented Theodoric to the life. While he was still alive, the head of the statue fell, and broke to pieces; and soon after Theodoric died. He was succeeded by Athalaric his grandson, in the eighth year of whose reign, the belly of the statue, all on a sudden, fell of itself; and a few days after news was brought to Naples of the death of Athalaric. Not long, after the genitals dropped off; and an account was brought of the unhappy and undeserved end of Amalasuntha, the daughter of Theodoric, and mother of the late king. But when Justinian declared war against the Goths, the thighs and feet of the statue fell to the ground; from which event the Romans concluded, that the empire of the Goths in Italy was at an end, and that they would be soon driven out, as it happened. This presage, says Procopius, of Sipontum in Puglia from all taxes for the space of two years, upon their representing to him, that their lands had been laid waste by the Vandals of Africa, who were constantly making descents on the coasts of Italy &c.

HE not only forgave, but preferred to the first employments, several Italians, or, as they were still called in his time, Romans, who had stood by Odoacer to the last^a; but such as had once declared for him, and afterwards revolted to the enemy, he punished according to the Roman law, taking from them the power of making testaments. But, in the third year of his reign, he was prevailed upon by Laurentius and Epiphanius, the one bishop of Milan, the other of Pavia, to forgive them, and publish a general pardon. Upon his becoming master of Italy, he did not treat the natives as those of the other Roman provinces were treated by the barbarians, who conquered them. These stripped the antient proprietors of their lands, estates, and possessions, dividing them among their chiefs, and giving to one, as it happened in Gaul, conquered by the Franks, a province, with the title of duke; to another a frontier country, with the title of marquis; to some a city, and the title of count; to others a castle or village, with the title of baronⁱ. But Theodoric, who piqued himself upon governing after the Roman manner, and observing the Roman laws and institutions, left every one in the full enjoyment of his antient property; for the feudal tenures, dukedoms, counties, &c. were not introduced into Italy by the Goths, but by the Lombards, as we shall relate hereafter. As to religion, Theodoric held, as all the Goths did, the tenets of Arius, but allowed his subjects to profess, without molestation, the faith of the council of Nice; nay, he gave free liberty to the Goths themselves to renounce, if they pleased, the doctrine of Arius, and embrace the catholic faith. He suffered none to be chosen for

He allows the natives to enjoy their estates and possessions

His religion and piety.

^a Idem. l. ii. ep. 37. ^b Idem ibid. ep. 16. ⁱ Loyseau de sign. c. 3. Cod. de agric. & cens. l. ii. Connan. in com. jur. civ. l. ii. tit. c. Leo Ostiens. in chron. Cossin. glossat. in notis, c. 6. num. 532.

copius, from whom we have borrowed the whole account, greatly encouraged the emperor's troops, and gave them certain hopes of victory (1).

for the government of the church but persons of known probity^k. A great schism arising in his time, he used his utmost endeavours to restore the church to its former tranquillity, which in the end he effected, by causing a council to be assembled. Several edicts, both of Theodoric and his successor Athalaric, have been transmitted to us by Cassiodore, prohibiting and annulling all simoniacal elections and ordinations of bishops^l. Thus the ecclesiastic polity was never better observed, nor more deserving men preferred to the government of the church, than in the time of Theodoric, and the Gothic kings his successors, though they all held the tenets of Arius, their nation having been first instructed in the christian religion by Arian teachers, sent them by the emperor Valens. Theodoric, though an Arian, is highly commended for his piety by Ennodius bishop of Pavia, a most zealous stickler for the faith of Nice, as are the Goths in general by Salvianus, the catholic bishop of Marseilles, who ascribes their errors, not to them, but to those who first instructed them^m. His equity Theodoric is no less commended by all the writers of those and justice, times for his equity, moderation, and the tender regard he had for the welfare of his subjects, than for his piety and religion. He made good what he promised to the natives of Italy when he first took upon him the title of king, viz. that his conduct and behaviour should be such, that they should all wish they had come sooner under the government of the Goths. He not only appointed persons of great learning, known integrity, and unblemished characters to administer justice, but often heard causes himself, pronouncing sentence according to the strictest rules of justice and equity. He took upon himself the trouble of settling the prices of all necessary commodities, and affixing weights and measures: in imposing tributes, he had a particular regard to the condition and circumstances of those, who wereto pay them, and was ever ready to remit them upon any remonstrance, that to him seemed reasonable. If his soldiers at any time wronged the country-people on their march, he never failed to send money to the bishops to make good the losses they had sustained. He paid ready money not only for the necessary provisions of the army, but for the materials which he

^k Cassiod. l. viii. ep. 14.
^l Salvian. de gubern. Dei, l. v.

^m Idem, l. ix. ep. 15.

His moderation, temperance, &c.

he employed in building ships, fortifying his camps, &c. To the poor he was most liberal and generous, and, in a manner, made it his chief study, as Cassiodore assures us, to relieve the widows and orphans ⁿ. His moderation, temperance, chastity, called by Ennodius sacerdotal modesty, and other eminent virtues, are celebrated both by that writer and by Cassiodore, with such encomiums, that, if they were not greatly prejudiced in his favour, we must conclude him to have been one of the best and greatest princes, that ever swayed a sceptre. Procopius himself, though by nation a Greek, and secretary to the emperor Justinian, who made war upon the Goths, and in the end drove them out of Italy, could not forbear admiring and extolling the royal virtues of Theodoric ^o.

His generosity in ransoming his captive subjects.

As to the history of his reign, his first care, after he became sole master of Italy, was to repeople Liguria, in some places quite destitute of inhabitants, who had been carried into captivity by the Burgundians, as we have related in the history of that people ^p. As the other provinces of Italy, exhausted by long wars, and frequent irruptions of the barbarous nations, could not spare any of their inhabitants, Theodoric resolved to ransom, at his own expence, all the Ligurians, who were kept captives among the Burgundians. Accordingly he dispatched Epiphanius to Gundebald their king, by whom, he well knew, that prelate was held in the greatest veneration, with a sufficient sum for the redemption of the captives. But Epiphanius, with his christian eloquence, and pious exhortations, persuaded Gundebald to set at liberty, without ransom, such of the Ligurians, as, through fear or famine, had delivered themselves up to the Burgundians; but for those who had been taken in battle, the king insisted upon a small sum, by way of ransom, lest he should disoblige his soldiers, by remitting what was their due, and taking from them the price of their lives and fortunes. This Epiphanius readily paid, Avitus bishop of Vienne, and Syagria, a lady of great piety, generously contributing towards it. The holy prelate, on his way home, passed with his captives through Geneva, where he prevailed upon king Godigiscles to follow the example of his brother Gundebald, ⁿ Idem ibid.

^o Procop. bell. Goth. p. 67.

^p Uni-

vers. hist. vol. xvi. p. 225.

bald, and set at liberty, without ransom, all the captives belonging to him, and to the royal family. With this numerous multitude Epiphanius returned in a kind of triumph to Theodoric, who generously relieved the most indigent, and sent them all back to their respective homes¹. Thus Ennodius, who attended Epiphanius on this occasion.

WHILE Theodoric was thus wholly intent upon the establishing of good order throughout his dominions, and promoting the welfare of his new subjects, a war broke out between him and the emperor Anastasius on the following occasion: One Mundo, by nation a Goth, flying from the Gepidæ, says Jornandes, withdrew to the deserts beyond the Danube, and, having assembled there a considerable number of robbers and others, who, for their crimes, had been obliged to abandon their native soil, he made himself master of a tower, named Heita, on the Danube. From thence he made frequent incursions into the neighbouring countries, and the rich booty he carried off drawing great numbers of abandoned people to him, he assumed the title of king, and caused himself to be acknowledged as such by his followers. His arrogant conduct highly provoked the emperor, who thereupon ordered Sabinianus, son to the great commander of that name, and general of the troops in Illyricum, to march against him. Mundo had either submitted to, or entered into an alliance with Theodoric, then master of Pannonia, and great part of Illyricum. Hearing therefore, that Sabinianus was marching against him with ten thousand men, and a great number of waggons, loaded with arms and provisions, he had recourse to Pitzia, one of Theodoric's generals, then residing at Sirmium. Pitzia, without loss of time, marched in person to his assistance, at the head of two thousand foot, and five hundred horse, and, joining Mundo's forces, engaged the Romans in the neighbourhood of Margus, now Galombecz, in Servia, according to Sanfon, cut most of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to take refuge, with their general, in the castle of Nato². Mundo, owning himself indebted to Theodoric for his preservation, submitted to him, says Jornandes, and became his subject³. Anastasius, to be revenged on Theodoric, sent the following year a fleet, with him and Anastasius.

War between
Year after Christ 493.

The Romans
defeated.

¹ Ennod. in vit Epiph. p. 366—369. ² Jorn. rer. Goth. c. 58. p. 599. Marc. chron. Ennod. de Theod. p. 309 ³ Jorn. iid.

with eight thousand men on board, under the command of Romanus, to ravage the coasts of Italy. These, landing in the neighbourhood of Tarentum, were soon driven on board their ships by the Goths ; but nevertheless they carried off a considerable booty, and returned with it to Anastasius, who, in this war, acted, says Jornandes, more like a pirate than a prince ^t. But Theodoric, who had formed a design of conquering Gaul, held by the Franks and Burgundians, and reuniting it to the empire of Italy, being well apprised, that he could not put this project in execution so long as he was at variance with the emperor, wrote letters to Anastasius, wherein he expresses, without betraying the least fear or meanness, his desire of renewing the peace, and living in friendship with the empire ^u. He soon after dispatched ambassadors to Constantinople, by whose means a peace was concluded between the two princes. However, Theodoric was, for some time, diverted from pursuing his favourite scheme by the troubles and divisions that arose in Rome about the election of a bishop to that see ; for, upon the death of pope Anastasius, two persons were chosen by two different factions to succeed him, viz. Symmachus, supported by Faustus, and Laurentius by Festus. As the patrons of the two competitors were persons of great authority in the senate, and interest among the people, their division and obstinacy occasioned a kind of civil war in Rome, and several on both sides lost their lives in the quarrel. At length both parties had recourse to Theodoric, who, following the example of the late emperors, had fixed his residence at Ravenna. That prince, after having heard with great patience and attention the contending parties, prudently ordained, that he should be acknowledged as lawful bishop, who had been first elected, and had the greatest number of voices. Hereupon Symmachus, who had been first chosen, and by a great majority, was confirmed in his see. But some of the partizans of Laurentius not acquiescing to such an equitable decision, Theodoric, to heal the divisions of the church, was in the end obliged to summon a council, and, to appease the troubles in Rome, to take a journey thither in person ; which he readily did, having a great desire to see that once celebrated metropolis of the world. He made his entry with such pomp and magnificence, as had not been been seen for many ages, and was received by the senate and people with the greatest demonstrations of joy imaginable. He was welcomed in the senate by the celebrated Boetius, who, on that occasion, made an eloquent speech, setting forth the eminent virtues of Theodoric. To which the king answered in a most obliging manner, declaring, that he should ever have the greatest respect for that august body, and omit nothing that could contribute to their grandeur. From the senate he proceeded to the circus, and there made a speech to the people, wherein he expressed his sincere desire of their welfare and prosperity, confirmed to them all the privileges they had enjoyed under the emperors his predecessors, and assured them of his protection. He spent several days in viewing the antiquities of the city, which he could not sufficiently admire. He declared, that, tho' he expected to see wonderful things, the stateliness and magnificence of the public buildings had far surpassed his expectation. He was grieved to see the walls in some places quite ruined, and contributed large sums for the repairing of them, and of some other decayed buildings. On the day of his entry, he made a grand entertainment for the senate, and gave a largess of corn to the people. Before he left Rome, he composed the affairs both of the church and state in the best manner he could, and declared, upon his departure, that he was sorry he could not fix his residence in such an august city, the safety of the state obliging him to reside, as his predecessors had done, at Ravenna, where he was near at hand, and ready to put a stop to the irruptions of the barbarians, who, on that side broke into Italy. He was scarce returned, when news was brought him, that the Bulgarians had made an irruption into Pannonia, and, advancing as far as Sirmium, had surprised that city. Hereupon he dispatched Petza with a considerable army against them, who, in one campaign, recovered Sirmium, and drove them quite out of Pannonia. To the government of that province Theodoric raised one Colosseus, a comes or count. From the copy of his commissior., which has been transmitted to us by Cassiodore, it appears, that the power of those governors extended both to civil and military affairs, and that the prince conferred that power on them, by girding them with a sword ^w.

A peace concluded between Anastasius and Theodoric.

Theodoric goes to Rome

^t Idem de reg. c. 48. p. 655.

^u Cassiod. l. i. ep. 1.

In the same writer is a letter written by Theodoric, and directed to all the barbarians and Romans inhabiting Pannonia, wherein he acquaints them, that he had appointed Clodoveus to be their governor, and requires them to obey him as such.

His war with the Burgun-dians.

THEODORIC, having thus settled his affairs at home, resolved to attempt the execution of the project, which he had formed from the very beginning of his reign, which was, as we have hinted above, to drive the Burgundians and Franks out of Gaul, and reunite that country to Italy. His design was to begin with the Burgundians, and, after having reduced them, to fall upon the Franks. But as the Burgundians were then a powerful nation, and masters of all the passes in the Alps, Theodoric, entering into an alliance with Clovis king of the Franks, prevailed upon him to attack the Burgundians on one side, while he attempted to enter their country on the other. Of the conduct of Theodoric in this war, we have spoken above ^x, and therefore shall only add here, that he acquired on this occasion the city of Marseilles, and its territory, with all the countries lying between the Durance, the Alps, the Mediterranean, and the Lower Rhône.

And Clovis
king of the Franks.

Some years after, a war breaking out between Clovis and Alaric king of the Visigoths in Gaul, Theodoric, putting himself at the head of his army, marched to the assistance of the latter; but Clovis having in the mean time killed Alaric in battle, and defeated his army, the king of the Ostrogoths, jealous of the growing power of the Franks, ordered his troops to join him from all parts, and, entering Gaul, obliged the Franks, who had laid siege to Carcassonne, to abandon the enterprize, and retire. The following year, the Franks besieged the city of Arles; but the siege was raised, and the Franks defeated with great slaughter, by the army which Theodoric had sent to the assistance of his countrymen, under the conduct of one Hibba, distinguished with the title of count. A peace was soon after concluded between Theodoric and Clovis, whereof one of the articles was, that the Franks should keep the countries which they had taken from the Visigoths, Theodoric having attempted in vain, as we read in Procopius, to recover them ^y. Amalaric, the grandson of Theodoric, was, at this time, king of the Visigoths; but but as he was yet under age, Theodoric, who was his guardian, exercised the same authority in the young prince's dominions, as he did in his own. In virtue of this peace, the Ostrogoths continued masters of the province they held before, lying between the Alps, the Mediterranean, the Rhône, and the Durance, and appropriated to themselves the city of Arles for the charges they had been at in this war. These countries Theodoric transmitted to his posterity ; but could make no farther conquests in Gaul, being opposed by the Franks, who were become very powerful in that country.

AMALARIC, the grandson of Theodoric by his daughter Theodegotha, had succeeded his father Alaric in the kingdom of the Visigoths ; but as he was only five years old when his father was killed by Clovis, as we have hinted above, his subjects, scorning to be governed by an infant, revolted from him, and raised to the throne Gaselic, the son of Alaric by a concubine. Hereupon Theodoric, who was guardian to the young prince, dispatched Hibba, or, as some call him, Ilba, into Gaul with a numerous army, to drive out the usurper, and restore Amalaric to the throne. Upon his approach, Gaselic fled into Spain, and from thence hearing that Hibba was marching after him, he crossed the Streights, and took refuge in the court of Thrasimund, king of the Vandals in Africa, who, either pitying his condition, or thinking it high time to give a check to the overgrown power of the Ostrogoths, received him in a friendly manner, though he had married the sister of Theodoric. After he had continued some time in Africa, he passed from thence privately into Gaul, and, having gained over some of the leading men among the Visigoths, he in the end discovered himself, and, being supplied with money by Thrasimund, he levied an army, and re-entered Spain ; but, being met and overcome in battle by Hibba twelve miles from Barcelona, he fled back into Gaul, and there died of grief, four years after he had been declared king. Some authors write, that upon his death Theodoric caused himself to be acknowledged king of the Visigoths in Spain, and that he went into that country. It is true, that to all the synods, which were held at this time in Spain, the name of Theodoric is prefixed, and the years of his reign. But nevertheless the best and most credible authors suppose Amalaric to have been king, and that Theodoric governed only as his guardian. As for Theodoric's expedition into Spain, we cannot persuade ourselves, that such a remarkable event would have been passed over in silence by Cassiodore, and the other

He is guardian to Amalaric king of the Visigoths.

Whom he restores to the throne writers, who have so minutely described that prince's actions, Some Spanish writers add, that, at Toledo, Theodoric married a woman of the race of the antient Spaniards; that he was prevailed upon by her to restore to the natives their liberty; and that of this marriage was born Severianus, the father of Leander and Isidore^z; a story no less repugnant to truth than chronology. Theodoric, according to the best writers, did not go himself into Spain, as we have observed above, but appointed one Theudas to govern that country during the minority of his grandson Amalaric.

He forces the Alemans to pay tribute.

THE king of the Ostrogoths, having settled the affairs of his grandson in Spain, turned his arms against the Alemans; but all we know of this war is, that he in the end obliged them to submit to an annual tribute^a, and subdued the inhabitants of Suevia; for, in one of his letters directed to them, he acquaints them, that he had appointed one Fridelad to be their governor, and strictly enjoined him to restrain thefts and robberies, which were very frequent among them. Hitherto Theodoric had governed with such prudence, equity, and moderation, that he deserved to be proposed as a pattern to all princes; but some think, that these, and his other eminent virtues, were sullied by his putting to death the celebrated Boetius, and his father-in-law Symmachus. Boetius was a patrician, had been at least twice consul, and was descended from one of the most antient and illustrious families of Rome; for some derive his pedigree from the celebrated Manlius Torquatus. His family had been ennobled in latter times by his great-grandfather Anicius, and by several other persons, who had discharged, with great applause, the first employments both civil and military. We are told, that strangers came to Rome from distant countries on purpose to behold the splendor and magnificence of the Anician family, which had ingrossed, if Zosimus is to be credited, the whole wealth of Rome^b. But Boetius was still more remarkable for his morals and learning, than for the splendor and antiquity of his family. In his younger years he studied at Athens, where the study of philosophy had been restored, and spent in that university near eighteen years. He examined there, with great application, the grounds of the different sects and opinions, and, to all the rest preferred the sect of the Peripatetics, to which he entirely addicted himself. Till his time, the name of Aristotle, the founder of that sect, was scarce known to the Latins; but the works

^z Lucas Tudens. p. 68,

^a Agath, p. 302.

^b Zos. p. 245.

works of that great philosopher being translated by him, and illustrated with learned comments in the Latin tongue, the Peripatetic philosophy began to be, and has been ever since, in great vogue. Besides Aristotle, Boetius translated into the Latin tongue several other Greek writers, viz. Pythagoras, Ptolemy the astronomer, Nicomachus, Euclid, Plato, Archimedes, &c. He not only excelled all his contemporaries in profane learning, but likewise in the knowledge of the holy scriptures, and was, as we read in Cassiodore^c, the greatest divine, as well as the greatest philosopher, of his time. The book he wrote of the Trinity against Nestorius and Eutyches sufficiently shews how well he was versed in the scriptures. As for his morals, he is highly commended on that score by all the writers of those times. He was impartial in the administration of justice, and employed the great power he had at court in protecting the innocent, relieving the needy, and procuring the redress of such grievances, as gave just occasion of complaint. His espousing, against the great men at court, the cause of those who were unjustly accused or oppressed, gained him many enemies, who, in the end, compassed his ruin, by suborning three infamous men to accuse him of high treason. These were Basilus, Opilio, and Gudentius, of whom the former had been, for his misdemeanour, dismissed the king's service, and the other two, for their crimes, condemned to banishment. They accused Boetius of attempting to raise the power of the senate above that of the king, and preventing an informer from bringing an impeachment of treason against the senators. Theodoric, though well acquainted with the infamous characters of the accusers, yet upon their deposition, which is very surprising, ordered, without further enquiry, the person, of whom he had hitherto entertained the highest opinion, to be put under arrest, and soon after confiscated his estate, and banished him to Pavia, where he wrote his wonderful book de consolatione. Symmachus, father-in-law to Boetius, a man of extraordinary parts and learning, and who had, with an unblemished character discharged the first employments, was likewise banished to Pavia, as privy to the supposed treason of Boetius. They had not been long there, when, to the great surprize of all, an order came from Ravenna for their execution, their enemies at court having persuaded the king, who was stricken in years, and grown jealous of his power, that he would never be safe so long as they were alive. They were accordingly both

E e 4

Symmachus and Boetius beheaded at Pavia.

Theodoric repents.

both beheaded in Pavia ; and of the head of Boetius no less wonderful things are related by Martianus, who wrote his life, than those which every one must have read or heard of the famous St. Dennis. The cruel and unjust sentence was scarce put in execution, when Theodoric, returning, in a manner, to himself, and reflecting on his rash conduct in an affair, that required the utmost circumspection, was affected with such sorrow, that his grief may be said to have equalled if not exceeded, the injustice of the sentence. Not long after, the head of a large fish being served up while he was one night at supper, the injustice of the sentence he had lately pronounced occurring to his mind, he fancied the head of the fish to be the head of Symmachus, threatening him in a ghastly manner. Hereupon, seized with horror and amazement, he was carried from the table to his bed-chamber, where, reflecting anew on his cruelty and injustice to two such eminent and deserving men, he died a few days after of grief, this being the first and last wrong any of his subjects ever received at his hands^d. Thus Procopius, condemning Theodoric for the injustice of the sentence pronounced against those two great men, and at the same time commending him for the equity by which he had been governed on every occasion, during the whole course of his long reign. His putting them to death, without making the necessary enquiries in a matter, that required the greatest circumspection, favours, without doubt, both of rashness and cruelty ; but his sincere sorrow, and unfeigned repentance, are undeniable testimonies of his mercy and good-nature. However that be, it is certain, that Italy never enjoyed more happy days than under his government, not even in the height of its greatness. He is perhaps the only prince, who, having obtained a kingdom by force and violence, preserved it with mildness and moderation ; which two virtues eminently appeared in all his actions and councils, and rendered him no less dear to his new subjects, than if he had been of their own race, and born among them. Tho' he was himself an Arian, and had the power in his hands, yet he was so far from persecuting the orthodox, that, on the contrary, he favoured them no less than those of his own persuasion, extending his protection to both parties, and allowing to all full liberty to profess which of the two religions they pleased. Those therefore are greatly mistaken, who imagine, that Boetius was put to death on account of the book he wrote on the Trinity, and inscribed to his father-in-law Symmachus. Jornandes takes no

no notice of what we have related above of the head of the fish, upon the authority of Procopius; but supposes Theodoric, stricken in years, to have died quietly. His death happened on the second of September in the year 526, the thirty-fourth of his reign, and seventy-second of his age. He had three daughters by Adeffleda the sister of Clovis, viz. Ostrogotha, Theodogotha, and Amalasuntha. Ostrogotha was married to Sigismund king of the Burgundians, by whom she had Sigeric, who after his mother's decease, was put to death by his father Sigismund in the year 522. as we have related in the history of the Burgundians §. Theodogotha was married to Alaric II. king of the Visigoths, who, in 507. was killed in the battle of Vouglê, as we have related else where^b; but he left a son behind him by Theodogotha, viz. Amalaric, whose dominions Theodoric governed to the day of his death, as guardian to the young prince his grandson. Amalasuntha, the youngest of the three princesses, was married in 515, to Eutharic Cillicaⁱ. Eutharic was the son of Viteric, and grandson of Beremund, descended from the family of the Amali, who, leaving Scythia, as we read in Jornandes, came into Gaul, and being honourably entertained by Vallia king of the Visigoths, he settled there. His grandson Eutharic, from Gaul, removed into Spain, where he became well known to the officers of Theodoric, who governed that kingdom during the minority of Amalaric. Theodoric, hearing him much commended, expressed a great desire to see him; which satisfaction he no sooner had, than being taken with his engaging behaviour and extraordinary qualifications, he resolved to give him in marriage his daughter Amalasuntha, the more as he was of Theodoric's own family, viz. that of the Amali, and consequently by his birth not unworthy of such a match. The nuptials were accordingly celebrated with the utmost magnificence, and two years after he was raised to the consulship by his father-in-law, on which occasion the emperor Anastasius presented him with the tunica palmata, and adopted him for his son; an honour which the late emperors used to confer on persons of distinguished merit. Eutharic went to Rome, to enter there upon his office, and was received by the senate and people with the greatest demonstrations of joy imaginable, every rank

He dies:

Year after Christ 526.

His issue.

§ Vide p. 315.
ann. 515.

^b Vide p. 294.

ⁱ Fast. Cassiod. ad rank and degree of people in that great metropolis striving to outdo each other in honouring one, whom they expected to see in a short time on the throne. On the other hand, Eutharic made it his chief study to oblige both the senate and people, discharging his office with great care, and diverting the city with most magnificent shews, having, for that effect, procured out of Africa such wild beasts, as had never before been seen at Rome. From Rome Eutharic returned to his father-in-law at Ravenna, where, by his generosity, condescension and obliging behaviour, he gained the affections both of the Romans and Goths. Every one expected to find in Eutharic a second Theodoric; but, to the great grief of all, Eutharic died before his father-in-law, leaving behind him a son, named Athalaric, ten years old; so that Theodoric had at his death two grandsons, the children of two of his daughters, viz. Amalaric king of the Visigoths, and Athalaric the son of Amalasuntha. To the former Theodoric, at his death, delivered up all the countries in Gaul and Spain belonging to the Visigoths, which he had governed with no less absolute sway than his own, ever since the death of Alaric II. The latter, though the son of the younger daughter, he appointed to succeed him in the kingdom of Italy, and in all his other dominions. Theodoric, says Jornandes, being stricken in years, and near his end, assembled the chief men among the Goths, and, in their presence, declared Athalaric, the son of Eutharic by his daughter Amalasuntha, his successor, charging them to obey him as such, to respect the senate and people of Rome, and, above all, to cultivate the friendship of the emperor of the east^k. Theodoric died soon after; but as Athalaric was then only eight years old, as we read in Procopius^l, or ten, as Jornandes will have it^m, his mother Amalasuntha took upon her the administration, a princess highly commended by all the writers of those times, for her piety, religion, wisdom, and learning. Theodotus, who succeeded Athalaric, and by whom she was afterwards put to death, in a letter which he wrote in her behalf to the Roman state, styles her the glory of princes, the flower and ornament of his family, the Solomon of women, a princess endued with every good quality becoming her sex, well versed in the Latin, in the Greek

He declares Athalaric his heir.

Amalasun-tha takes upon her the administration.

^k Jorn. de reb. Get. p. 143:
c. 1.

^m Jorn. ibid.

^l Procop. bell Goth. l. 5

Greek, and in many other languages, and thoroughly acquainted with every branch of learningⁿ. However, she was not free from ambition ; but strove by all means to maintain, even after her son's death, that power, which she had exercised during his life as we shall see anon.

THEODORIC was no sooner dead, than Amalasuntha, mindful of his last advice, wrote in the young prince's name, both to Justin then emperor, and to the Roman senate, acquainting them with his accession to the throne. She writes in her son's name to the emperor, and to the senate and people of Rome. In the letter to the emperor, the young prince, after telling him that his grandfather had, before his death, appointed him his heir and successor, goes on thus : “ You formerly honoured in your august city my grandfather with the dignity of consul ; you sent into Italy to my father the tunica palmata, and, to attach him the more to you, you adopted him for your son, tho’ he was almost of the same age with yourself. The name of son will suit me better than it did him. I shall acknowledge so great a favour, by causing your name to be no less respected, and your authority to be no less obeyed, in my dominions, than they are in your own. With this view I have dispatched ambassadors to you, hoping you will honour me with your friendship, upon the same conditions upon which your glorious ancestors granted theirs to my grandfather^o”. From this letter it is manifest, that the kings of the Ostrogoths acknowledged in the emperors of the east a superiority of rank, but not of jurisdiction ; and consequently that Zeno, when he sent Theodoric to drive Odoacer out of Italy, renounced in his behalf whatever claim the empire of the east had to that country. At the same time Amalasuntha dispatched ambassadors to Rome with letters from the young prince, both to the senate and people, acquainting them, that his grandfather was dead ; that on his death-bed, he had declared him his heir and successor, and that, as such, he had been acknowledged both by the Goths and Romans, that is, the Italians, who had sworn obedience to him. He desires them to follow the example of his other subjects, telling them, that he had sent count Sigismer, and others, to receive their oath of allegiance, and at the same time to bind himself by the like tie to maintain sacred and inviolable all the rights, privileges and immunities, which had been granted them by his grandfather. He closes his letter to the senate, by ⁿ Cassiod. l. x, ep. 4.

^o Idem, viii. ep. 1.

encouraging them to ask boldly whatever they thought might any-ways contribute to the safety and splendour of their illustrious and venerable body. In his letter to the people, he promises to cherish the Goths and Romans alike, and to maintain them equally in the possession of their rights and privileges, making no other distinction, than that the Goths should undergo the toils and dangers of war, while the Romans enjoyed a profound peace within the walls of their own city. In the end of this letter he tells them, that, by the mutual oaths of the prince and people, the memory of Trajan's excellent government was renewed, who, at his entering upon the consulship, swore himself, and received the oaths of the senate and people^p. He wrote two other letters, the one to Tiberius præfectus prætorio of Gaul, wherein he exhorts him, and his other subjects in that country, to pay the same respect and obedience to him, which they had paid to Theodoric, promising on his side, upon oath, to protect them in the full enjoyment of all their antient rights and privileges (N).
The

^p Idem ibid. ep. 2, 3.

(N) The provinces in Gaul, belonging to the Gothic nation, were thus divided by Theodoric between Athalaric and Amalaric: the former had that part, which lay beyond the Rhone next to Italy; and the latter the countries lying on the opposite side of that river, and extending to the confines of the Franks, which we have described in the history of that people. Athalaric kept the city of Arles, which had belonged to the kingdom of Alaric II. and consequently ought to have been yielded to Amalaric. The other places which he retained, had been taken by his grandfather Theodoric, at different times, from the Burgundians. Whether he gave the Visigoths an equivalent for that important place, formerly the seat of the præfectus prætorio of Gaul, we are not told. The Rhône being fixed as the boundary between the two nations, it was agreed that such of the Ostrogoths, as had settled in the countries that were to be held by the Visigoths, and such of the Visigoths as had settled in the provinces that were to be kept by the Ostrogoths, should have full liberty, either to continue where they were, or to retire into the countries subject to their respective princes (1). Hence it appears that the Visigoths and Ostrogoths, who were originally

(1) Procop. bell. Goth. l. i. c. 13.

The other letter he wrote to Victorinus their bishop, entreating him to maintain, with his example and precepts, peace and tranquility among those, whom Providence had committed to his care. He ends the letter with begging his prayers, that the heavenly King would be pleased to confirm to him his earthly kingdoms, to humble his enemies, to forgive his sins, and to preserve and maintain what he had so bountifully and liberally bestowed upon his ancestors. Such was the beginning of the reign of Athalaric, or rather of Amalasuntha. She retained the same form of government, the same laws, the same magistrates, and the same disposition of provinces, not suffering the least alteration to be made during the minority of her son, and governing with such prudence, that Theodoric was scarce missed, either by the Goths or Romans. Her chief care was to bring up her son after the Roman manner, and to have him, from his tender years, instructed by the ablest men of those times in religion, virtue, and learning. She was herself, as we have hinted above, well versed in all the branches of literature, and consequently a great encourager of learned men; as appears from the letters she wrote to the senate in the king's name, expostulating with them for neglecting to pay the public professors their salaries in due time, and commanding them to be paid punctually for the future. 'Arts, says she in her letter, are nourished and maintained by rewards, and it is a heinous crime to defraud the teachers of youth of any thing due to them, who ought rather to be further encouraged by an augmentation of their stipend.' She orders them to be paid every half year, adding, that men of learning must not depend upon the humours of others; that they must not be diverted from their studies by solicitous thought; and that it is a shame, that players, whose business is only to please and amuse, should be so amply rewarded, and those neglected,

She governs with great prudence.

Her care for the education of her son.

She encourages learning.

Idem ibid. ep. 4, 5, &c.

originally but two tribes of one and the same nation, were not yet blended together, though they had, for the space of twenty years and upwards, promiscuously inhabited the same country. It was in virtue of a particular convention, that they were to be deemed citizens of the tribe to which they did not originally belong, though they dwelt with their wives and families in the same country.

Her justice and equity.

glected, who form the manners of youth, instruct them in the liberal sciences, and render them capable of serving their country^r. Amalasuntha was so far from invading the rights and properties of her subjects, that, on the contrary, she restored to the children of Boetius and Symmachus the estates, which had been confiscated in the preceding reign. She took great care to secure the Romans against the avarice and rapaciousness of the great men among the Goths, who, looking upon Italy as a conquered country, were for enriching themselves at the expence of the natives. To her nephew Amalaric she gave up that part of Gaul, which, with respect to Italy, lay beyond the Rhône; but retained what lay on the other side of that river. To the Visigoths she remitted the impositions, which had been laid on them by Theodoric, and restored the treasure of the kings of the Visigoths, which, by her father's order, had been conveyed from Carcassone to Ravenna^s. In the mean time Justin having taken his nephew Justinian for his partner in the empire, Amalasuntha no sooner heard of his promotion, than she dispatched ambassadors to the new emperor, congratulating him upon his accession to the imperial dignity, and begging a continuance of that friendship and alliance, which had long subsisted between the two nations^t. What she desired was readily granted, as is manifest from the good understanding that passed between the two princes so long as Athalaric lived, and from the coins stamped at this time by the Ostrogoths, on one side of which is to be seen the image of Justinian, and on the other the name of Athalaric^u.

The Goths
dissatisfied with Amalasuntha.

WHILE Amalasuntha was thus governing with the greatest justice, equity, and prudence, and taking all the necessary precautions for the safety of her son, and the welfare of his dominions, the great men among the Goths, not able to bear, that their young prince should be brought up after the Roman manner, began to exclaim against learning, as an enemy to valour; only fit for soft and effeminate princes, and no-ways becoming the king and leader of such an active and warlike nation as theirs. The princess took no notice of these groundless complaints; but having one day chastised her son, and he happening to go, with the tears yet in his eyes, into a room, where some Gothic lords were af-

^r Idem, l. ix. ep. 1.

^t Cassiod. l. viii. ep. 1.

^s Procop. bell. l. c. 13.

^u Vide Baron. ad ann. 527.

assembled, they took from thence occasion to complain more loudly of the queen, (so she is called by most writers) as if she designed to remove her son, and reign in her own right; they exclaimed, with more boldness than ever, against the learned education of the young prince; alledged the example of his grandfather, who, tho' utterly ignorant of letters (O), was a warlike and victorious prince; and concluded, that his grandson must be brought up in the same manner, if he would be attended with the same fortune. They desired Amalasuntha to dismiss the pedants her son had about him, and give him such companions of his own age, as might, by their conversation, make the customs of his nation familiar to him, and incline him to govern according to their own laws. This they demanded with so much warmth and importunity, that, apprehending greater evils, she thought it adviseable to comply with their request. And now the youth, free from all restraint, and seduced by wicked companions, abandoned himself to all manner of lewdness and debauchery, adding to his other vices that of undutifulness to the best of mothers, and unnaturally abandoning

(O) We are told by some writers, that Theodoric was quite illiterate, nay, and incapable of learning either to read or write; that, notwithstanding the great pains he took, he could never learn to write the four first letters of his name, which he therefore caused to be cut on a thin plate of gold. This plate he placed on the paper, and his hand being directed by the letters, which were cut quite thro', signed his name (2). But this is no-ways consistent with what we read in Ennodius, viz. that Theodoric was brought up, not among the barbarians, but in the heart of Greece, which, in return for the pains she had taken to instruct him, promised herself his protection; that she was overjoyed to see the progress he made when yet a child; that his predecessors had preferred ignorance to learning; but that he, agreeable to his polite education, had shewed himself the patron and encourager of letters; that, under him, ingenuity flourished in all its branches; and that he not only admired and rewarded it in others, but thought it an ornament worthy of himself. Thus Ennodius, in the panegyric he pronounced before Theodoric (3), which would have been deemed a satire, rather than a panegyric, had Theodoric been that illiterate prince he is described in the abstract of Valesius.

(2) Vales. excerpt. p. 669. (3) Ennod. in paegeyr. Theod. p. 290.

doning her in a faction, which had the arrogance to command her to retire from court; but the queen, exerting her authority, picked out three of the ringleaders of the party, and confined them to the most remote parts of Italy. These, maintaining a private correspondence with their friends and relations, never ceased, by their means, to stir up the people against her; insomuch that Amalasuntha, apprehending the faction might in the end prevail, wrote to the emperor Justinian, begging leave to take refuge in his dominions. The emperor readily complied with her request, offering her a noble palace at Epidamnus, now Durazzo, for her habitation; but the princess having in the mean time caused the three ringleaders of the faction, whom she had banished, to be put to death, and no new disturbances arising thereupon, she did not accept of the emperor's offer, but remained at Ravenna, governing the dominions of her son with her usual prudence and equity.

She causes some of them to be put to death.

She designs to deliver up Italy to Ju-stinian.

Athalaric
dies.
Year after Christ 533.

Amalasun-tha takes Theodatus
for her colleague.

IN the mean time Athalaric having, by his debaucheries and riotous life, contracted a lingering distemper, Amalasuntha, apprehending that, upon his death, she would be in great danger, most of the chief men among the Goths being highly incensed against her, resolved to save herself, by delivering Italy into the hands of the emperor; and accordingly began to treat with his ambassadors about the manner of putting her design in execution. But her measures were all defeated by the untimely death of her son, which happened in the eighth year of his reign, and threw her into new difficulties. Her design for delivering up Italy to Justinian was not yet ripe for execution; on the other hand, she was well apprised, that the Goths would not suffer her to reign after the death of her son, but would chuse a new king in his room. Having therefore long deliberated with herself how she should act at so critical a conjuncture, she resolved in the end to raise one to the throne herself, hoping that the person, so advanced by her favour, would be contented with the title, and, out of gratitude, suffer her to enjoy the supreme power without controul. With this view, she cast her eyes on Theodatus her cousin, the son of Amalafrida, sister to king Theodoric, and consequently descended from the illustrious family of the Amali. He was a man of great learning, as appears from the letter which Amalasuntha wrote to the senate, acquainting them with his accession to the throne, well skilled in the doctrine of Plato, thoroughly versed in ecclesiastic learning, and a perfect perfect master of the Latin tongue^w; but utterly unacquainted both with civil and military matters, timorous, indolent, covetous to the greatest degree, destitute of all honour and probity, and capable of committing the vilest actions, when pushed on by his own passions, or by those of others. He had lived hitherto in Tuscany, where he had large possessions; but, not satisfied with them, he had not only encroached upon his neighbours, but seized on some lands belonging to the crown. These Amalasuntha had obliged him to restore, and likewise restrained him, by her authority, from injuring his neighbours, which had rendered him her implacable enemy; insomuch that he privately agreed with the ambassadors, who had been sent from Constantinople to the bishop of Rome, to betray Tuscany to the emperor, upon his paying him a certain sum, and raising him to the dignity of a senator. However, Amalasuntha, imagining that so signal a favour, as her advancing him to the throne, would reconcile him to her, offered to take him for her colleague, on condition he suffered her to enjoy and exercise her former power. This Theodatus promised upon oath to do, and was thereupon declared by the queen her colleague^x. The letters, that were written on this occasion to the Roman senate by the queen, in commendation of Theodatus, and by Theodatus, in commendation of the queen, are still to be seen in Cassiodore^y. He acknowledges himself entirely indebted to her for his new dignity, and, extolling her kindness to him, adds, that he is at a loss how to make a suitable return for such a high and undeserved favour. But the unhappy princess was soon sensible of her mistake in assuming for her colleague a person, who had been formerly her declared enemy, and was destitute, as she must have known, of all honour and probity. For he had scarce mounted the throne, when, unmindful of the honours she had done him, and the promises he had made, and solemnly confirmed with an oath, he suffered himself to be wholly governed by the friends, and relations of those, who, by the princess had been put to death for ^w Cassiodor. l. x. ep. 3.

Procop. l. i. c. 4.

^x Jorn. rer. Get. p. 143.
^y Cassiodor. l. x. ep. 3. & 4.

She is confined for their crimes; and, because she took the liberty to remind him of what he had promised, he caused her to be conveyed from Ravenna into Tuscany, and there confined her to an island in the middle of the lake Bolsena.

As he had reason to believe, that the emperor, who had a great value and regard for Amalasuntha, would resent this treatment, he obliged her to write to him, that no injury or injustice had been done her. This letter he sent to Constantinople, with one which he wrote himself filled with heavy complaints against Amalasuntha. The emperor was so far from giving credit to what Theodatus urged against her, that he openly espoused her cause, and wrote a most affectionate letter to her, comforting her in her distress, and assuring her of his protection. But, before the letter reached her, the unhappy princess was, with the consent, if not by the order, of Theodatus, barbarously strangled in the bath by the friends of those, whom in the reign of her son, she had deservedly put to death for raising disturbances in the state. Some writers tell us, that the unhappy queen was dispatched by Theodatus at the instigation of the empress Theodora, who, jealous of the love the emperor shewed her, began to apprehend he might one day forsake her for the queen of the Goths². Be that as it will, Justinian, highly provoked against Theodatus for the murder of a person for whom he had the greatest esteem and veneration, and being at the same time desirous of reuniting Italy to the empire, resolved to make war upon the Goths, his troops being just then returned from Africa, which they had reduced by driving from thence the Vandals.

And there
put to death.
Year after
Christ 534.

Justinian resolves to make war on
the Goths.

JUSTINIAN, to facilitate the enterprize, used his utmost endeavours to induce the Franks to join him, acquainting them with the motives that had prompted him to undertake that war. The Goths, says he in his letter which he wrote to their princes, have not only seized on Italy, which belongs to us, but without the least provocation, offered us such insults as we cannot in honour dissemble. This is what induces us to take arms against them; and it is but just, that you should lend us what assistance you can against a nation that bears as great enmity to you as to us, the more as we are both of the same persuasion,
and

and equally abhor they doctrine of Arius, which they profess^a. To the letter the emperor added, says Procopius, a large sum, promising to the princes of the Franks, especially to Theodebert, a considerable subsidy, to be paid them as soon as they should begin hostilities^b. The Franks received the money, and, entering into an alliance with the emperor, promised to assist him to the utmost of their power; but, instead of performing their promise, while Justinian's arms were employed against the Goths, Theodebert, who was deemed the head of the royal family of the Franks, being the son of Theodoric, or, as they call him, Thierry, the eldest son of Clovis, seized on several cities in Liguria, on the Alpes Cottiae, and great part of the province of Venice, for himself. Of this treachery Justinian afterwards complained by his ambassador Leontius to Theodebald, the son and successor of Theodebert^c (P). But to leave that treacherous nation, and return

The treachery of the Franks.

^a Idem ibid. l. i. c. 5.
iv. c. 24.

^b Idem ibid.

^c Idem l.

(P) Justinian, says Procopius, no sooner received news of the death of Theodebald, who, without any regard to his alliance with the Romans, had seized on several towns in Tuscany, on the Alpes Cottiae, and on part of Liguria, than he dispatched the senator Leontius to Theodebert, the son and successor of the deceased king, to persuade him to join the Romans against the Ostrogoths, and to evacuate the places in Italy, which the Franks had taken, and still held in defiance of the treaty concluded between them and the emperor. Leontius, in the audience he had of that prince, addressed him thus: There is no prince to whom unforeseen misfortunes have not happened, and disappointments, which he did not expect; but the conduct of the Franks towards the Romans is perhaps surprising beyond any thing that ever happened before. It is well known, that the emperor no sooner resolved to make war on the Goths, than he imparted his resolution to your nation. He did not take the field till he had entered into an alliance with your predecessor, and engaged him by a large sum, which was paid before-hand, to act, in concert with him, against the Goths, as a common enemy. But he, instead of fulfilling his engagements, acted, to the great surprize of the emperor, more like

Sicily reduced by Belisarius.
Year after
Christ 535.

turn to Justinian : Having resolved to make war upon the Goths, and drive them, if possible, out of Italy, he named Mundus and Belisarius for his generals. Mundus, then commander of the troops in Illyricum, was ordered to march into Dalmatia, which was subject to the Goths, and attempt the reduction of Salonæ, the better to open a passage into Italy. Belisarius was to make a descent upon Sicily ; for which purpose a fleet was equipped, on board of which were four thousand legionaries, three thousand Isaurians, three hundred Mauritanians, and two hundred Hunns. Belisarius was vested with the supreme command, and an absolute authority. His instructions were to pretend a voyage to Carthage, but to make an attempt upon Sicily, and, if he thought he could succeed in the attempt, to land there, otherwise to sail directly for Africa, without discovering his intentions. Mundus, without much ado, made himself master of Salonæ ; and Belisarius, landing without opposition in Sicily, reduced that island with more expedition than he himself expected. Palermo held out for some time, the Goths, who depended upon the strength of the place, which was deemed impregnable by land, defending it with great resolution ; but Belisarius attacking it by sea, the garrison was forced to surrender upon articles ; so that Belisarius entered the city on the last of December of the present year 535. Belisarius, now master of Sicily, from Messina, without loss of time, passed over to Reggio, which opened its gates to him. From Reggio he pursued his march to Rome, the province of Abrutium, Lucania, Puglia, Calabria, and Samnium, readily submitting to him. The city of Naples endured a siege ; but an enemy than an ally, seizing on several countries belonging to the empire, to which he had not the least claim. I do not mention this, added the ambassador, to reproach your nation with what is past, but to the end that, by a quite contrary conduct, you may, for the future, deserve to be ranked amongst our true friends and allies (1): Justinian had but too much reason to complain of the Franks, but perhaps not more than other princes, who, since his time, have relied on their friendship.
Belisarius's

(1) Procop. bell. Goth. l. iv. c. 24.

Belisarius's men having entered it through an aqueduct, it was in the end taken and plundered ^d (Q)

THEODATUS,

^d Idem ibid.

(Q) The city of Naples held out, as we read in Procopius, twenty days. The castle in the suburbs submitted upon terms, as soon as Belisarius appeared with his army before it. But Theodatus having taken care to put a strong garrison into the city, and they appearing resolved to defend it to the utmost, Belisarius, apprehending the difficulty of the enterprize, attempted first to gain them by the offer of most advantageous and honourable terms. They sent out one Stephanus to treat with the Roman general, who returning into the city, acquainted the city with the conditions offered them by Belisarius, and, with many arguments, endeavoured to persuade them not to reject such offers. But Pastor and Asclepiodotus, two orators greatly attached to, and perhaps well paid by, the Goths, in order to cross and defeat the treaty, advised the inhabitants to demand such terms, as they imagined Belisarius would never grant. But the general, contrary to their expectation, complying with their request, and the citizens being thereupon ready to open their gates to the Romans, the two orators, with their deluding eloquence, persuaded them to change their resolution, since it was uncertain, said they, which side might in the end prevail; and Belisarius could not blame them for their fidelity, but, on the contrary, if they thus tamely submitted, would despise them as traitors and cowards, for abandoning and betraying their old friends. Belisarius, finding he could by no offers prevail upon them to submit, began to batter the city, and made several assaults; but was constantly repulsed with great loss. In order to oblige them by other means to surrender, he cut the great aqueduct which supplied the city with water; but this inconvenience was easily remedied by the wells within, which sufficiently furnished them water. Hereupon Belisarius, finding the siege would continue longer than he expected, and oblige him to attack Rome in the winter, resolved to abandon the enterprize, and had already ordered his army to begin their march; when an Isaurian, curiously viewing the structure of an aqueduct, observed, that if a passage, which was cut through a rock, were but a little enlarged, some soldiers might easily get through it, and surprize the city. He acquainted the general with his observation, who, being highly pleased with it, ordered some Isaurians to widen the passage; which they did by filing the rock, to avoid by that means all noise. When every thing was ready, Belisarius sent for Step-

Theodatus
proposes terms for an accommodation.

THEODATUS, who was an utter stranger to military affairs, and had a great aversion to war, alarmed at the unexpected success of the emperor's arms, began under-hand to treat of a peace with an ambassador sent by the emperor for that purpose. In a private conference with him, the king agreed to renounce all pretensions to the island of Sicily, to send the emperor yearly a crown of gold weighing three hundred pounds, to supply him with three thousand men when required, to put no senator or ecclesiastic to nus, whom we have mentioned above, told him, that he was sure he should, in a very short time, be master of the city, and therefore advised him to persuade his fellow-citizens to prevent, by a timely submission, the impending evils. But the inhabitants giving no ear to what Stephanus said, and defying the Romans from the walls, Belisarius ordered Magnus, general of the horse, and Ennes, commander of the Isaurians, to enter the aqueduct in the dead of the night with about six hundred men, some lights, and two trumpets, to strike terror into the city, and give the general notice of their success. These, having got into the city, in spite of the many difficulties they met with, advanced silently to the walls; and having killed the guards on the north side, where Belisarius stood with his men ready for the attack, they gave the signal with their trumpets; which Belisarius hearing, ordered part of his men to scale the walls, and the rest to approach the gates, which being opened to them by those who got over the walls, the whole army entered, and made themselves masters of the city. Great slaughter was made at first of the unhappy inhabitants by the Massegetes, who, without regard to sex, age or condition, put all to the sword they met with, not sparing even those, who had taken sanctuary in the churches; but Belisarius, riding about, restrained their rage, giving them leave to seize on the effects, but commanding them to spare the lives of the inhabitants. He caused all those, who had been taken prisoners, to be set at liberty; and taking the Gothic garrison, consisting of eight hundred men, into the emperor's pay, he incorporated them among his own troops (2). Belisarius is highly commended by Procopius for his clemency towards the citizens, though others, but writers of no great authority, tell us, that he put most of the citizens to the sword; that he neither spared churches, priests, nor holy virgins; and that he was severely reprimanded for his cruelty by Sylverius bishop of Rome (3).

(2) Idem, l. i. c. 10.
& 536.

(3) Vide Baron. ad. ann. 534.

to death, or confiscate their estates, without the emperor's consent, nor to advance any to the dignity of senator or patrician, but to petition him to confer such honours on those who deserved them. In all acclamations, Justinian's name was to be first mentioned. Whenever a statue was erected to Theodatus, a statue was to be likewise erected to the emperor, and placed on the right-hand. No coin was to be stamped with the image of Theodatus alone, but that also of Justinian, which was always to hold the most honourable place. These proposals, which plainly betrayed the meanness of his spirit, were sent by Theodatus to Constantinople. But apprehending the emperor, not satisfied with them, might pursue the war, he dispatched an express to the ambassador, now as far on his journey as Albania, recalling him for farther orders and instructions. These were to resign the kingdom to Justinian, and content himself with a pension suitable to his quality; but he obliged both the emperor's ambassador, and Agapetus bishop of Rome, whom he sent on his own behalf, to bind themselves by a solemn oath not to mention this proposal, till they found the emperor would not accept of the former. The emperor rejected, as was expected, the first proposals with scorn; whereupon the ambassadors shewed him the second signed by the king, who, in his letter to the emperor, told him, among other things, that, being unacquainted with war, and addicted to the study of philosophy, he preferred his quiet to a kingdom. Justinian, transported with joy, and imagining the war already ended, answered the king in a most obliging manner, extolling his wisdom, and adding to what he demanded the greatest honours of the empire. The agreement being confirmed by mutual oaths, lands were assigned to Theodatus out of the emperor's domain, and orders dispatched to Belisarius to take possession of Italy in his name. In the mean time a body of Goths entering Dalmatia, with a design to recover Salonæ, Mundus sent out his son, with a small party, to observe their motions; but the youth, unadvisedly engaging a detachment from their army far superior in number to his own, was slain, and most of his men cut in pieces. To revenge the death of his son, Mundus marched against the enemy with all the forces under his command, engaged them, and put them to flight; but his men falling into confusion in the pursuit, the Goths, facing unexpectedly about, renewed the fight, killed Mundus himself, and in their turn

He offers to resign the kingdom to Justinian.

The Romans defeated, and Dalmatia recovered by the Goths.

put the Romans to flight, disheartened with the death of their leader. Upon this defeat, the Romans, abandoning Salonæ, and all Dalmatia, returned home; which Theodatus no sooner understood, than, elated with so small an advantage, he refused with great haughtiness to comply with the articles of the treaty, which he had lately signed; nay, because the emperor's ambassador, by name Peter, a man of great address and experience, expostulated with him for his breach of faith, he told him, that it was not an unusual thing to put even ambassadors to death, when they did not shew that respect, which is due to crowned heads. The ambassador answered, That it was his duty to execute his master's orders, and that he would utter what he had been enjoined to say, [whether pleasing or displeasing. Hereupon Theodatus put a strict guard upon the ambassador; at which Justinian being highly provoked, he dispatched Constantianus, an officer of great valour and experience, into Illyricum, with orders to raise forces there, and enter Dalmatia. At the same time he wrote to Belisarius, commanding him to pursue the war with the utmost vigour. Constantianus, having, pursuant to his orders, raised an army with great expedition in Illyricum, entered Dalmatia, made himself master of Salonæ, and obliged the Goths, with their general, by name Grypus, to abandon that province. As for Belisarius, he now drew near to Rome, having reduced all the provinces that compose the present kingdom of Naples. Hereupon the chief men among the Goths, finding their king took no one step to avert the impending ruin of their nation, assembled without his consent; and not despairing of being able to conclude a peace with Belisarius, they dispatched ambassadors to him, representing the injustice of the war, the just claim they had to Italy, and the moderation and equity with which they had hitherto governed that country. As the ambassadors laid great stress on Theodoric's taking Italy, not from the Romans, but from the barbarians, to whom it was become a prey, and on their king's being prompted and encouraged to that enterprize by the emperor himself, Belisarius, disliking the conditions they offered, answered surlily, That Theodoric had been sent indeed by Zeno to rescue Italy out of the hands of the barbarians, not to keep it for himself, since it was the same thing to the emperor, so long as it was not restored to the empire, whether it was held by the Goths or the Heruli: that who-

The Goths
anew driven out of Dalmatia.

ever

ever detains the goods, that are not his own, against the will of the owner, is no less guilty, than he who takes them by force. He concluded, that he would hearken to no terms, nor sheath his sword, till Italy was reunited to the empire, to which it belonged^e.

THE Goths, finding Belisarius unalterably bent upon driving them out of Italy, and, on the other hand, amazed at the cowardice and stupidity of their prince, who made no warlike preparations, as if he either intended to betray Italy to the emperor, or, despairing of success, had laid aside all thoughts of defending it, assembled at Regeta, a place about thirty-five miles from Rome, and having there, with one consent, deposed Theodatus, chose and proclaimed Vitiges king in his room. ^{Theodatus deposed, and Vitiges chosen in his room.} Vitiges was not descended from an illustrious family among the Goths; but had distinguished himself by his valour in several wars, especially in that, which Theodoric had waged with the Gepidæ. Jornandes writes, that he had been formerly armour-bearer to Theodoric^f. Upon his accession to the throne, he married Matefuenta, the daughter of Amalasuntha, and grand-daughter of Theodoric, who, despising him on account of his birth, though in every other respect worthy of the crown, is said to have maintained a private correspondence with the Romans, and was even suspected of attempting to betray him into their hands^g; for she had been averse to the match from the very beginning, and was, in a manner, forced by the king to give her consent. Theodatus, who was then at Rome, hearing the Goths had chosen a new king, fled from thence towards Ravenna. But Vitiges dispatched one Optaris after him, with orders to bring him back dead or alive. Optaris had been highly disobliged by him, and therefore, pursuing him with great expedition, he soon overtook him, and, putting him to death, brought back his head to the new king^h. ^{Theodatus murdered. Year after Christ 537.} Such was the end of this cowardly, ungrateful, and covetous prince, after he had reigned about three years. Several of his coins have reached our times, on which he is called Theodatus, Theudatus, and Theodahathusⁱ. He left a son, by name Theadegisclus, whom Vitiges caused to be first imprisoned, and afterwards to be put to death. And now ^e Procop. l. i. c. 7, 8, 9. ^f Jorn. p. 144. ^g Procop. l. ii. c. 10. ^h Idem, l. i. c. 11. ⁱ Vide Baron. ad ann. 534, 537. Bandur. p. 404.

now the new king, having no competitor, applied himself wholly to the re-establishing of the affairs of the Goths. He began with writing a circular letter, wherein he exhorted his country-men to exert their antient courage, and defend with their usual bravery, against all unjust invaders, the countries which belonged to them by right of conquest. From the place where he was chosen, he marched to Rome; but not thinking himself strong enough to defend that city against Belisarius, who was marching towards it, he resolved to remove to Ravenna, where he might, with more ease, reinforce his army, and make the necessary preparations for taking the field. Upon his departure, he obliged the pope, the senate, and the people, to take an oath of fidelity; and then, leaving four thousand Goths for the defence of the city, he set out for Ravenna with several senators, whom he took with him as hostages for the rest. Being arrived at Ravenna, he assembled the Goths from all parts, and, having raised a considerable army, he encamped under the walls of that city. In the mean time Belisarius, having garrisoned Naples, Cumæ, and the other strong places in Campania, approached Rome. As he drew near, the inhabitants, dreading the treatment which the Neapolitans were said to have met with, and awed by the reputation of so renowned a general, resolved, notwithstanding the oath they had so lately taken, to open their gates to the emperor's army. Accordingly, they dispatched one Fidelius to invite Belisarius to come and take possession of their city, assuring him, that he should meet with no opposition. Belisarius no sooner received this invitation, than he advanced to the gates of the city; which being opened to him, he entered Rome on the ninth or tenth of December of the year 537, and taking possession of it in the emperor's name, reunited it to the empire, sixty years after it had been taken by Odoacer, and thirty-four after it had submitted to Theodoric. The Gothic garrison, finding they could not make head at the same time against the emperor's army and the citizens, retired by the Porta Flaminia, while Belisarius entered by the Porta Asinaria. Leudaris, governor of the city, who staid behind, was sent, together with the keys, to the emperor. Belisarius, now master of the city, applied himself to the repairing of the walls and other fortifications, filled the granaries with corn, which he caused to be brought from Sicily, and stored the place with all manner of provisions, as if he were preparing

Belisarius enters Rome;

against against a siege ; which gave no small uneasiness to the inhabitants, who chose rather, that their city should lie open to every invader than be liable to the many miseries and calamities attending a siege. While Belisarius was thus employed at Rome, Pitzas, governor of Samnium, submitting to him, delivered up great part of that country, with the city of Benevento. Other cities, viz. Narnia, Spoleto, and Perugia, revolting from the Goths, received Roman garrisons, as did most cities in Tuscany ^{Several other cities submit to him.} ^{k.}

IN the mean time Vitiges lay not idle at Ravenna, but, ^{Vitiges raises a powerful army.} having raised an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men, resolved to march directly to Rome, and engage Belisarius, or, if he declined engaging, to lay siege to the city. But apprehending that the Franks, who were in confederacy with the emperor, might fall upon him at the same time, with the consent and approbation of the great men among the Goths, he dispatched ambassadors to their three kings, Theodebert, Childebert, and Clotarius, offering to yield to them whatever the Ostrogoths held in Gaul, and besides to pay them a considerable sum provided they joined him against the emperor. The Franks, notwithstanding ^{He gains over the Franks.} their alliance with Justinian, hearkened with their usual treachery to the proposal, and signed the treaty, the articles whereof were immediately executed by Vitiges, who paid them the sum agreed on, and ordered Martias, who commanded a chosen body of Ostrogoths in Gaul, to deliver up to the Franks the cities he held there, and return with the forces under his command into Italy. The three princes divided equally among them both the money and the cities yielded to them by the Ostrogoths. But when they were to execute on their side the articles of the agreement, they declared, that the engagements they had lately entered into with Justinian, not allowing them to make open war upon the Romans, they could not, by any means, send an army of Franks to the assistance of the Ostrogoths ; but they would cause a body of troops, raised in the countries which they had subdued, to join them. Accordingly they sent, not immediately, but the following year, ten thousand Burgundians, subdued by them a few years before, who, upon their entering Italy, declared, pursuant to their private instructions, that they came of their own accord, without so much as asking leave of the kings of the Franks, to whom they paid no regard^l. Thus early the Franks began to sport with the most solemn treaties, and elude them with quibbles

^k Procop. l. i. c. 15.

^l Idem, l. iii. c. 13. & l. ii. c. 12.

Vitiges
marches to Rome.

quibbles and equivocations, as their descendents are well known to do to this day. Vitiges was no sooner joined by Martias, and the troops returned from Gaul, than he began his march to Rome, and pursued it with great expedition, not attempting to reduce any of the towns on the road, which, he knew, were well provided and fortified. Belisarius, being informed of his march, dispatched messengers to Constantianus in Tuscany, and to Bessas, by nation a Goth, but of the emperor's party, in Umbria, ordering them to join him with all possible expedition, with the troops under their command; for his army consisted only of five thousand men, the rest being employed in garrisoning the many towns that had submitted. At the same time he wrote to the emperor, acquainting him with the danger he was in, and pressing him to send into Italy, without loss of time, the necessary supplies (R). Constantianus joined him, pursuant

to

(R) His letter to the emperor was couched in the following terms: "I have left Sicily, and, landing in Italy, pursuant to your orders, with the army under my command, have reduced great part of that country and reunited Rome itself to your empire. But as I have been obliged to leave numerous garrisons in the many strong places that have submitted to your arms, the army is reduced to five thousand; whereas the enemy is advancing full march against us with an army an hundred and fifty thousand strong. I therefore earnestly intreat you to cause, with all convenient speed, such supplies of men and arms to be sent to us, as may enable us to face so powerful an enemy. If they prevail, we must abandon Italy to them, and the city of Rome, which, above all others, has exerted its zeal for your majesty's service. At the approach of your army, the citizens, with great joy, returned to their duty, at the risque of their lives and fortunes. To abandon them therefore to the mercy of a provoked enemy, would be highly ungrateful; and, on the other hand, it is a difficult task, if not altogether impossible, to defend so large a city against such a powerful army without a numerous garrison. As for myself, I am indebted to your majesty for my life, and therefore shall not suffer myself to be driven from hence while alive; but the death of Belisarius will no-ways redound to your glory." Upon the receipt of this letter, the emperor ordered Valerianus and Martinus to assemble, with all possible expedition, a body of troops to be transported into Italy; and, in his answer to Belisarius, assured him, that he should, in a short time, receive the necessary supplies (4).

to his orders, and soon after Bessas, who, falling in with part of the enemy's vanguard, killed a considerable number of them, and put the rest to flight. Belisarius had built a fort upon a bridge about a mile from Rome, and placed a strong garrison in it, to dispute the passage with the enemy ; but the garrison, seized with a panic at the approach of so numerous an army, abandoned their post in the night, and fled into Campania ; so that Vitiges early next morning passed over great part of his army, and marched on, without opposition, till he was met by Belisarius, who, knowing nothing of what had happened, came very early, attended by a thousand horse, to view the ground near the bridge. He was greatly surprised, when he beheld the enemy marching up against him. However, lest he should heighten their courage by his flight or retreat, he stood his ground, and received the enemy at the head of his small body, exposing himself, without his usual prudence and discretion, to the greatest dangers. Had he been killed, Rome must have fallen ; and therefore he is deservedly blamed for thus exposing his own person, since on him the safety of all depended ; but this perhaps is the only occasion, on which his conduct favoured of rashness and temerity. Being known by some fugitives, and discovered to the enemy, they all aimed at him alone, and directed their whole force against him ; which made his own men the more solicitous to defend him ; so that the whole contest was, for some time, about his person. In the end the Goths were driven back to their camp, which the Romans attempted to force ; but they met there with such a vigorous resistance, that they soon abandoned the enterprize, and retired with precipitation to a neighbouring eminence, whence they were forced down by the enemy, put to flight, and pursued to the very gates of the city. Here they were in greater danger than ever ; for those within, fearing the enemy should, in that confusion, enter with them, refused to admit them. The general himself cried out earnestly to them, telling them who he was, and commanding them to open the gates ; but as they had been informed by those who first fled, that he was slain, and they could not distinguish him, his face being covered with blood and dust, they gave no ear to what he said. In this extremity, having encouraged his men, who were now driven into a narrow compass, to make a last effort, he put himself at their head, and attacked the enemy with such fury, that the Goths, imagining fresh troops encounter between him and Belisarius.

A bloody

Rome besieged by Vitiges.

troops were falling out upon them, began to give ground, and, being vigorously pushed by Belisarius, retired in the end to their camp. Upon their retreat, Belisarius, not thinking it adviseable to pursue them, entered the city, where he was received with loud acclamations of joy. A few days after, Vitiges, approaching the city, invested it on all sides, and, in order to distress the garrison and inhabitants for want of water, ordered the aqueducts, which had been built by the Roman emperors at an immense charge, to be broken down. On the other hand, Belisarius omitted nothing for the defence of the city: the useless multitude he sent out; he took care to have those, who remained, supplied with all necessaries; to prevent tumults, lifted a great number of artificers, who, together with his soldiers, were to watch night and day on the ramparts; placed Moors in the night, with dogs, round the ditch, to give the alarm when the enemy approached; fortified the aqueducts where they opened into the city, &c. The citizens of Rome, concluding from thence, that Belisarius was resolved to hold out to the last extremity, began to assemble in a tumultuous manner, and rail at the general as one, who, without the least regard to the public calamities, was obstinately bent upon defending a place no-ways tenable. Vitiges, being acquainted with the discontent and complaints of the citizens, to heighten them, and drive the inhabitants, if possible, to an open rebellion, dispatched ambassadors to the senate, assuring them of his favour and protection, and at the same time offering a safe retreat to Belisarius, whom the ambassadors in the presence of the senate, upbraided with temerity and presumption. The senate and people would have willingly hearkened to the king's proposals; but, being awed by the presence of Belisarius, they dared not express their real sentiments; so that the ambassadors were dismissed without an answer. Hereupon Vitiges resolved to pursue the siege with the utmost vigour; which he did accordingly, shewing himself an able commander, both in the contriving of his military engines, and his disposing the attacks. Belisarius made no less vigorous defence, repelling the enemy in their repeated attacks and falling frequently out upon them with such success, that, in seven months time, Vitiges is said to have lost above forty thousand men; which provoked and incensed him to such a degree, that he caused the Roman senators to be put to death, whom, in the beginning of the war, he had carried with him to Ravenna. In the mean time a small, but seasonable supply of sixteen hundred horse arrived from the emperor, consisting of Hunns, Slavonians, and Antæ dwelling beyond the Danube. As these were all archers on horseback, they did great execution; for we are told, that, in three sallies, under the conduct of Belisarius and their two leaders Martinus and Valerianus, they killed about four thousand Goths. The Romans, elated with this success, were for putting the whole to the issue of a general engagement. This Belisarius opposed with all the arguments his reason and long experience could suggest; but he was in the end obliged, by the importunities both of the soldiers and citizens, to gratify them, and venture a battle. Having therefore exhorted them to render successful, by their valour, that scheme, which he had been put upon by their forwardness, he marched out with his small army, and fell upon the Goths with such resolution, that the Romans at first promised themselves certain victory; but being in the end overpowered with numbers, they were obliged to betake themselves to a precipitous flight. The Romans lost on this occasion several brave officers, and among the rest Principius and Tarmutus, of whom the former was killed in the field of battle; and the latter being rescued out of the enemy's hands by his brother Ennes, and carried by his men into the city on a target, died two days after of his wounds. The Romans, now satisfied by their own experience, that it was not safe to engage the enemy's whole army, contented themselves with sallying out upon them in small parties, in which sallies they were generally attended with success, cutting in pieces great numbers of the aggressors. In the mean time Belisarius received advice, that a supply of money to pay the army was already landed in Italy. In order therefore to get it conveyed safe into the city, he marched out at the head of his army, as if he designed to try the fortune of a second battle. Hereupon the Goths uniting into one body, abandoned the place, through which he had appointed the treasure and its convoy to pass; by which means it got safe into the city. By this stratagem one evil was successfully removed; but the besieged laboured under others more fatal and pernicious, a famine and plague, which made a dreadful havock in the city; insomuch that the citizens, no longer able to bear their calamities and misfortunes, would have forced the Roman general to venture a second battle, had
the

The Romans having obliged Belisarius to give the enemy battle are defeated.

Rome afflicted by a famine and plague.

Belisarius receives supplies from the emperor.

The deplorable condition of the Goths had he not, with great confidence, assured them, that he daily expected great supplies from the emperor ; that a vast army was on full march to join him ; that a mighty fleet was already arrived, such a fleet as no Roman eye had ever beheld ; for it covered the shores of Campania, and the Ionian gulf. To give weight and authority to what he said, he dispatched Procopius the historian to Naples, with orders to head the troops, which he pretended to be already arrived in that city : and truly a considerable supply did at length arrive at Naples, at Otranto, and other ports, viz. three thousand Isaurians, eight hundred Thracian horse, and thirteen hundred horse of other nations. These, in their march through Campania, were joined by five hundred men newly raised in that country, and, marching close to the shore, arrived at Ostia, whence they marched to Rome, which they entered by the Ostian gate, while the enemy's forces were employed against Belisarius, who had sallied out with the greatest part of the garrison at the Flaminian gate on the opposite side of the city, to give his supplies an opportunity of entering without loss or opposition. The Goths hearing of the arrival of these troops, and their numbers being said to be far greater than they really were, as is usual on such occasions, they began to despair of ever being able to master the city, the more as they laboured under as great hardships as the besieged themselves, the famine and plague making a dreadful havock in their army, which was now greatly reduced. They therefore began now to think of abandoning the enterprize, and retreating upon the best terms they could obtain. Accordingly, they sent three deputies into the city to treat with Belisarius ; but the only thing they could obtain, was a cessation of arms for three months, during which time they might send ambassadors to the emperor, who should be allowed to return home unmolested, even after the expiration of the truce. No further mention is made of the ambassadors ; but, as the siege was continued after the expiration of the truce, it is plain from thence, that they did not succeed in their negotiations at Constantinople. During the truce, Belisarius sent out of Rome as many of his forces as he could spare, under the command of one John, an officer of great experience, with orders to intercept the enemy's convoys as soon as the truce was expired, and attempt such places as they thought they could reduce without great loss. These, entering Picenum, which supplied the army before Rome with provisions, laid waste that province far and near, and approaching Rimini, ^{Rimini taken by the Romans.} killed Ulitheus, uncle to Vitiges, attempting to oppose them, and made themselves masters of that city. Vitiges had, in the mean time, made several attempts upon Rome; but tho' all his efforts, and the many stratagems he made use of to get into the city, were defeated by Belisarius, he still pursued the siege with great obstinacy, till news was brought him of the taking of Rimini; which alarmed him to such a degree, as that city was but a day's journey from Ravenna, that he immediately broke up the siege, ^{The Goths raise the siege of Rome.} after it had lasted a year and nine days, and by day-break retired in good order. Belisarius did not let slip so favourable an opportunity of annoying the enemy, but ^{Year after Christ 538.} falling upon their rear, as they were passing the bridge on the Tiber, cut great numbers of them in pieces, while others, struck with a panic, threw themselves into the river, and were drowned ^m.

that

FROM Rome Vitiges marched strait to Rimini, being resolved, at all events, to force that important place out of the enemy's hands, Belisarius, not doubting but that was his design, took care to have such supplies put into the city as could be spared, dispatching Ildegar and Martinus with a thousand horse, and ordering them to draw the foot out of Ancona, and march with them to Rimini. His orders were executed with such expedition, that Vitiges, on his arrival before the town, found it in a condition to hold out for a long time. However, he invested it on ^{Vitiges besieges Rimini} all sides, and began to batter it with a great number of engines; but being repulsed with great loss in several attacks, he resolved to reduce it by famine. Belisarius to make a powerful diversion, and oblige the king to raise the siege, sent a strong detachment under the conduct of Mundilas, to surprise Milan; which he took without op- ^{The Romans take Milan.} position, and in a short time made himself master of all Liguria, the enemy's forces being all employed before Rimini. Vitiges, hearing that Milan was fallen into the enemy's hands, dispatched Uraia, his sister's son, at the head of a strong detachment, to recover that important place, and the rest of Liguria. Uraia, being joined by the ten thousand Burgundians, of whom we have spoken above, sent ^m Procop. bell, Goth. l. i. c. 17—29. & l. ii. c. 1—10. Jorn. p. 144.

Narſes arrives in Italy with freſh ſupplies.

ſent by Theodebert, king of the Franks, laid cloſe ſiege to Milan, and in a ſhort time, reduced it to the laſt extremity. While Vitiges was thus buſied in the ſiege of Rimini, and Uraia in that of Milan, Belifarius, leaving a ſmall garrifon in Rome, marched towards the former place, with a deſign to cut off the communication between the Goths before Rimini and thoſe in Auximum, now Ofimo, a ſtrong town held by them. On his march, he made himſelf maſter of Tudera and Cluſium, and, at the latter place, received intelligence, that the celebrated Narſes was arrived from Conſtantinople in Picenum with freſh ſupplies, viz. with five thouſand Romans, and two thouſand Heruli. They were all commanded in chief by Narſes, and under him, the Romans by Juſtin, the general of Illyricum, and by Narſes the Armenian. The Heruli were headed by three of their countrymen, Viſigandus, Aloethes, and Phanetheus. Upon this intelligence, Belifarius marched into Picenum, and the two armies joined at Firmum, now Fermo, where a council of war was held, wherein they deliberated, whether it was moſt expedient for the emperor's ſervice to beſiege Auximum, or relieve Rimini. If they marched to Rimini, Belifarius apprehended, that the enemy from Auximum would harraſs and lay waſte the neighbouring country, which had ſubmitted to the Romans. On the other hand, it was thought unreaſonable to ſuffer the beſieged to periſh for want of aſſiſtance. As Narſes had a great kindneſs for John, who was ſhut up in the place, he earneſtly preſſed Belifarius to deliver him from the eminent danger both he and the garrifon were in. Belifarius at firſt reſuſed to comply with his requeſt; but a meſſenger ſeaſonably arriving with letters from John, wherein he declared, that, unleſs he was relieved in ſeven days, he muſt deliver up the town, Belifarius agreed to march to his relief. Having therefore left a thouſand men at Firmum, under the command of Aratius, to awe the garrifon of Auximum, he divided his army into three bodies, whereof one was embarked on a great number of veſſels, another marched along the ſhore under the conduct of Martinus, and the third was led by Belifarius himſelf, and by Narſes over the mountains. This diviſion of the forces had the deſired effect; for Vitiges, ſeeing a great fleet appear, and at the ſame time two armies, which, from the many fires they made in the night, he concluded to be very numerous, broke up the ſiege, siege, and fled in such haste, that the greatest part of the ^{Rimini re-} baggage was left behind. The confusion of the Goths ^{lieved.} was so great, that, had not the garrison been extremely feeble, for want of sustenance, they might easily have cut them off in their disorderly retreat, and at once put an end to the war ^a. After this success, jealousies began to ^{Misunder-} arise between Belisarius and Narses, which were carried to ^{standing be-} such a height, that the latter, refusing to obey the former, re- ^{tween Beli-} quired, that the army might be divided, that each of ^{farius and} them might command a separate body, and act independ- ^{Narse} dently of one another, it being reasonable, that they should both have their share in the glory of conquering Italy, and reuniting it to the empire. This gave great uneasiness to Belisarius, who, apprehending that the dividing of the army might prove highly prejudicial to the emperor's service, alledged many reasons against it; but finding Narses ob- stinate, he produced the emperor's letter to him, wherein Justinian declared, that he had not sent Narses into Italy to command the army, but to serve under Belisarius, and, with the rest of the officers, to obey and execute his orders in all things relating to his service, and the welfare of the state. Narses, laying hold of the last words of the letter, endeavoured to prove, that what Belisarius proposed was repugnant to the good of the state, and consequently that he was not obliged to obey him. This animosity and misun- derstanding between the two generals bred such a division in the army, that Belisarius having undertaken the siege of Urbinum, John, with several of the chief officers, and great part of the forces encamped at a distance from him, and, before he began to batter the place, withdrew with Narses in the night, and returned to Rimini. However, Belisarius thinking he could master the place without them, prepared for an assault; but as he was marching up to the walls, the besieged, to the great surprize of the Romans, desired to capitulate, and, upon promise of indemnity, opened their gates, and submitted. This unexpected sub- ^{Belisarius} mission was owing to their want of water; for the only ^{takes Urbi-} fountain the Goths had in the city failed all on a sudden, ^{num.} which unforeseen accident obliged them to submit to the best terms they could obtain. Narses, who lay idle at Rimini, greatly surprised at this sudden success, and looking upon

G g 2

^a Procop. l. ii. c. 10—13.

And Narſes reduces Imola.

upon the reduction of the place as a reflection upon himſelf, (for he had been perſuaded by John that it was impregnable) to redeem his reputation, diſpatched John with part of the forces that followed him, againſt the city of Ceſena; but, the garrifon making a vigorous reſiſtance, John retiring from before it in the night, ſurprized Forum Cornelii, now Imola, and, by degrees, reduced all Æmilia, the Goths, diſheartened with ſo many loſſes, not daring to venture an engagement. As for Belifarius, from Urbinum he marched to Urbiventum, at a ſmall diſtance from Rome. As the place was well fortified, and defended by a numerous garrifon, under the command of Albilas, an officer of great reputation among the Goths, Belifarius, after ſeveral unſucceſſful attacks, ſat down before it, with a deſign to reduce it by famine; which he did accordingly, after the beſieged had for ſome time fed upon graſs, and ſkins ſoaked in water. And now the ſeaſon being far advanced, both Belifarius and Narſes retired with their reſpective corps to winter-quarters °.

Urbiventum
ſubmits to Belifarius.

ALL this while Milan was cloſely beſieged by the Goths and Burgundians. Mundilas, who commanded in the town, acquainted Belifarius with the deplorable condition to which the city was reduced, who thereupon ordered Martinus and Uliaris to march with a conſiderable body to their relief; but theſe two generals advancing as far as the Po, encamped on the banks of that river, and tho' earneſtly ſollicitated by their diſtreſſed friends, to haſten to their aſſiſtance, they continued there, excuſing themſelves to Belifarius, and pretending in the letter they wrote to him, that the Goths and Burgundians in Liguria, being too ſtrong for them, they did not think it adviſeable to proceed farther, till they were joined by more forces. Upon the receipt of this letter, Belifarius ordered John and Juſtin, to join them with all expedition; which they reſuſed to do, till they received the like orders from Narſes, to whom Belifarius immediately wrote on that ſubject, deſiring that the publick might not ſuffer by their unſeaſonable emulation. Narſes, convinced of the reaſonableneſs of this remonſtance, wrote to John, commanding him to obey the general's orders; but, during theſe delays, the Romans in Milan being reduced by famine to the laſt extremity, Mundilas was forced by his own men to accept the terms offered him by the Goths, who promiſed to let the garrifon retire unmoleſted.

Thus

Thus was Milan surrendered to the enemy, who, in breach of the articles agreed on, made Mundilas, and the garrison prisoners of war, demolished the city, put all those to the sword who were able to bear arms, to the number of three hundred thousand, and, making the women slaves, gave them as a reward to the Burgundians. Reparatus, a prefect, and officer of great distinction, was cut in pieces, and his mangled body thrown to the dogs. Bergantinus, with a few more, escaped, and passing through Venetia and Dalmatia, brought the melancholy news of this disaster to the emperor at Constantinople. Martinus and Uliaris returned with shame and disgrace to Rome, while the Goths, encouraged by this success, pursued their good fortune, and reduced all Liguria. Belisarius acquainted the emperor with what had passed, who, ascribing the loss of Milan to the disagreement between him and Narses, recalled the latter, and confirmed the former in the supreme command, which he had conferred upon him in the beginning of the war^p. The recalling of Narses was a great disappointment to Vitiges, who had promised himself many advantages from the disagreement of the generals; but finding his hopes defeated, and concluding, from the preparations Belisarius was making during the winter, that he intended to march against him early in the spring with all his forces, and besiege him in Ravenna itself, he was greatly perplexed what measures he should take to avert the impending storm, or to whom he should recur for assistance. He knew there was no depending upon the Franks, by whom he had been lately deceived, and who, he was well apprised, would, under some pretence or other, elude the most solemn treaties, and engagements. He therefore had recourse to Vacis or Varis king of the Lombards, whom he endeavoured to draw to his assistance with the offer of a large sum; but finding him unalterably steady to the alliance he had lately concluded with the emperor, he was advised to send ambassadors to Chosroes king of Persia, to try whether he could persuade that prince to invade the Roman territories; for such an enemy, said his counsellors, would make a powerful diversion, oblige the emperor to recal Belisarius, and make him lay aside all thoughts of extending his dominions in the west, since

Milan taken by the Goths and the citizens massacred.

Vitiges engages Chof-roes in his quarrel.

Auximum besieged by Belisarius, and Fesulæ
by Cyprian.

the security and defence of the eastern provinces were of far greater consequence both to his interest and reputation. Vitiges, highly pleased with this advice, found two Ligurian priests, who undertook the journey to the Persian court, and, arriving safe there, persuaded Chosroes to make war upon the empire, by remonstrating to him, that, if he continued unactive, and suffered the Goths to be destroyed, and Italy reunited to the empire, the Romans, by that accession, would recover their antient power, which they would not fail to employ against him, being still prompted by the same ambition, which had proved so fatal to his predecessors⁹. Vitiges was overjoyed, when, upon the return of the ambassadors, he understood that Chosroes was resolved upon a rupture. However, he received no great advantage from it; for, though it put a stop to the progress of the emperor's arms in Italy, and obliged him to recal Belisarius, this did not happen till the unhappy Vitiges was taken prisoner, and almost all Italy brought under subjection to the emperor; for Belisarius, pursuing the war with great vigour while the ambassadors of Vitiges were negotiating at the Persian court, sat down with eleven thousand men before Auximum, the metropolis of Picenum, and at the same time sent a strong detachment, under the command of Cyprian, one of his lieutenants, to reduce Fesulæ, which, together with Auximum, opened a passage to Ravenna, whither he intended to follow Vitiges, who, from Rimini, had retired to that city. As Auximum was strong by its situation on a high and steep hill, and defended by a numerous garrison, it made a vigorous defence; but Belisarius allowing the besieged no respite, they were, after some time, reduced to such streights, that they dispatched messengers to Vitiges, threatening to surrender, unless they were speedily relieved. Hereupon the king dispatched Uraia, with a strong body of Goths, to their assistance, assuring them, that, in a short time, he himself would follow with his whole army. Uraia, having passed the Po, advanced into the neighbourhood of Auximum; but finding all the avenues to the city well guarded, he encamped at the distance of seven miles from the Romans.

The Franks
invade Italy.
Year after
Christ 539.

In the mean time the treacherous Franks, thinking both nations sufficiently weakened by their mutual hostilities, resolved to attack both, and decide the dispute, by seizing on the country for which they disputed. Accordingly The odebert

odebert, unmindful of the oaths he had taken both to the Romans and Goths, passed the Alps at the head of an hundred and fifty thousand, as we read in Procopius, or, as Jornandes will have it, two hundred thousand men, and entered Liguria. As no hostilities were committed by them on their march through that country, the Goths concluded that they were coming to their assistance, and therefore took care to supply them with what provisions they could spare. Thus they passed the Po without opposition, and, having secured the bridge, marched strait to the place where a body of Goths were encamped, who, looking upon them as friends, admitted them into the camp. But they were soon convinced of their mistake; for the Franks, falling unexpectedly upon them, drove them with great slaughter from their camp, and seized on their baggage and provisions. A body of Romans, that lay at a small distance from the Goths, under the command of John and Martinus, observing the sudden flight of the Goths, and concluding that they had been defeated by Belisarius, flew to join him, when the Franks, falling unawares upon them, treated them as they had done the Goths. As the Romans were not able, in that confusion, to recover their camp, they fled into Tuscany, and thence dispatched a messenger to Belisarius, with an account of their misfortune. The Franks, thus become masters of both camps, found in them good store of provisions, and a considerable booty; but the provisions being soon consumed by their numerous army, and the country round about quite exhausted, they were obliged, by the famine that began to rage among them, and the diseases that were occasioned by their unwholesome food, and are said to have swept off one third of their army, to give over all thoughts of advancing farther into the country, or making any conquests in Italy, which thus early became, as it is now styled, the tomb of the French. At the same time Belisarius, fearing the Franks might in the end be persuaded by the Goths to join them, wrote to Theodebert, expostulating with him in a friendly manner for his breach of faith, and telling him, that the emperor's affairs were not in such a desperate condition, as to render him incapable of resenting in due time, as he ought, affronts of this nature. Theodebert, moved with this letter, but more with the opprobrious language of his men, openly reviling him for suffering them to starve in a barren and impoverished country,

And fall both upon the Goths and Romans.

They return home loaded with booty.

Auximum holds out with great obstinacy.

decamped with such as were able to march, and, passing through Liguria, where he destroyed Genoa, and several other places, he returned home loaded with booty^r.

ALL this time the two garrisons of Auximum and Fesulæ held out with incredible resolution. The former, being reduced to the utmost extremity, resolved once more to solicit the king for relief; but, not being able to send any messenger out of the town, which was closely blocked up on all sides, they corrupted with a large sum a soldier in the Roman army, who was placed near the walls, to prevent the inhabitants from cutting the grass that grew there, the only food they now had, to carry a letter to the king, wherein they acquainted him with the condition to which they were reduced. The king returned answer, That, without fail, they should be relieved in a few days, and, with friendly words, encouraged them to bear but a little while longer their hardships, which he might call his own, since he felt them no less than they. The besieged were so encouraged with this answer, that they rejected all the offers made them by Belisarius. But, finding the king did not come to their relief, they dispatched the same soldier to him a second time, acquainting him, that, unless they were relieved in five days, they should be obliged to surrender. The king replied as he had done before, giving them hopes of a speedy relief. Belisarius in the mean time, who was well acquainted with the streights to which they were reduced, in order to discover what encouraged them to hold out with so much obstinacy, appointed some of his men to watch those who came out of the town to gather grass, and to take if possible, some of them prisoners. They had the good luck to surprise one, who, being brought before the general, owned to him, that, by means of one of his men, they had corresponded with the king, who had assured them, that they should be speedily relieved. Hereupon the soldier, by name Barcensiris, by nation a Bessian, was seized, and upon his confessing the fact, delivered up to be punished by his countrymen, who condemned him to be burnt alive. Belisarius, finding them still obstinate, marched in person, at the head of a strong detachment, to demolish an aqueduct, which was near the walls, and supplied them with water. The besieged sallied out to defend it, though quite spent with famine

^r Procop. l. ii. c. 25. Greg. Tur. hist. l. iii. c. 32. Mar. Avent. chron, ad ann. 539.

famine and hardships, made a great havock of his men ; but were in the end, after a most obstinate dispute, driven back into the city. On this occasion Belisarius was in imminent danger of his life ; but one of his guards saved him with the loss of his own hand. After all, the Romans found the aqueduct so strongly built, that they could not by any means demolish it ; but Belisarius caused all the springs to be poisoned, hoping thereby to oblige them to surrender^e. The garrison in Fesulæ held out against Cyprian with no less obstinacy ; but in the end, despairing of relief, they surrendered upon terms. Hereupon Cyprian, leaving part of his army in the town, with the rest brought the inhabitants before Auximum, where Belisarius shewed them to the besieged, who, concluding from the surrender of that place, that the king was incapable of relieving them, desired to capitulate, offering to deliver up the town, on condition they might enjoy their lives and effects. This the general was inclined to grant ; but the soldiers opposed it, declaring, that the wealth of the city was the due reward of their wounds, and the many toils and dangers they had undergone in the siege. At length it was agreed on both sides, that the soldiers should have one half, and that the other should remain to the inhabitants, who were to take an oath of allegiance to the emperor. Upon these terms the gates were opened to the Romans, who took possession of the city in the emperor's name^f.

Fesulæ surrenders.

And at last Auximum.

BELISARIUS did not continue long at Auximum, but marched from thence with his whole army to Ravenna, which he invested on all sides, both by sea and land, to prevent the importation of provisions. The place was defended by a very numerous garrison, commanded by the king in person, who exerted all his courage and bravery in the defence of the metropolis of his kingdom ; but Belisarius pursuing the siege with incredible vigour, and great success, the kings of the Franks, especially Theodebert, alarmed at the progress of the emperor's arms, and not doubting but, if Italy were united anew to the empire, he would fall next upon them, dispatched ambassadors to Vitiges, offering to assist him with an army of five hundred thousand men, on condition he would share the country with them. Belisarius, informed of this negotiation, Ravenna besieged by Belisarius.

^e Procop. l. ii, c. 27.

^f Idem ibid.

tion, in order to defeat the ambitious views of the Franks, sent ambassadors to Vitiges, to put him in mind of the perfidy of the Franks, of which he had but a very fresh instance, and to assure him, that the emperor, on whom he might depend, was ready to grant him very honourable terms. The king, by the advice of the great men about him, rejected the proposals of the Franks, and shewed himself inclined to come to an agreement with the emperor. In the mean time Belisarius, to bring the king to his own terms, bribed with a large sum a citizen of Ravenna to set fire to a magazine of corn, which was the chief dependence of the besieged. This was done with such secrecy, that they knew not whether they ought to impute it to chance, or to design. They began to distrust each other, and some to conclude, that Heaven itself fought against them. At the same time Belisarius detached one Thomas with a body of troops against the Goths inhabiting the Alpes Cottiae, who, at his approach, submitted, with Sifigis their leader. Of this Uraia receiving intelligence while on his march to the relief of Ravenna with four thousand men, he changed his resolution, and went to attack Thomas, hoping to surprise him; but John and Martinus, who lay encamped on the banks of the Po, suspecting his design, marched against him, and obliged him to retire into Liguria, where he continued, expecting better fortune. Vitiges, upon his rejecting the offers of the Franks, had dispatched ambassadors to Constantinople, to conclude a peace with the emperor upon the best terms they could obtain. These now returned, and with them two senators, Dominicus and Maximinus, sent by Justinian to conclude a peace upon the following terms, viz. that the country beyond the Po, with respect to Rome, should remain to the Goths; but that the rest of Italy should be yielded to the emperor; and the royal treasure of the Goths should be equally divided between him and the king. These conditions Vitiges and the Goths embraced with great joy; for they were already reduced to great straits. But Belisarius, not able to bear, that he should be thus bereft of the glory of ending the war, and carrying Vitiges, as he had lately done Gelimer king of the Vandals, captive to Constantinople, peremptorily refused to sign the treaty, and pursued the siege with more vigour than ever, without hearkening to the complaints of his officers and soldiers, who were quite tired with the length of the siege:

Terms proposed by the emperor.

Belisarius refuses to sign them.

he only obliged such of the officers as were of opinion, that the town could not be taken, to express what they said in writing, that they might not deny it afterwards. The great men among the Goths, finding that Belisarius refused to obey the instructions he had received from Constantinople, and to sign the treaty, concluded from thence, that he designed to revolt from the emperor, and conquer Italy for himself. On the other hand, being weary of Vitiges, and unwilling to submit to Justinian, who, they apprehended, would transplant them into Thrace, or some other barren country, they privately agreed among themselves to declare Belisarius emperor of the west, and accordingly dispatched a messenger to him, assuring him, that they were ready to swear allegiance to him. Belisarius abhorred in his heart the name of usurper; but nevertheless, to forward the surrender of the city, and put an end to the war, he pretended to accept of the offer, after having acquainted the chief officers of the army with all that passed, lest they should imagine, that he really designed to usurp the kingdom of Italy, and thereupon revolt from him. In the mean time Vitiges, having discovered the plot, and finding himself no-ways in a condition to defeat it, commended the resolution of the Goths, and even wrote to Belisarius, encouraging him to take upon him the title of king, and assuring him of his assistance. Hereupon Belisarius pressing the Goths to perform their promise, ambassadors were dispatched to him from the chief men of the Gothic nation, requiring him, before they acknowledged him for their king, to swear, that he would treat the Goths with humanity, and maintain them in the enjoyment of all their antient rights and privileges. This oath Belisarius took, and was thereupon by the Goths proclaimed king of Italy, and admitted into Ravenna. He behaved with great moderation towards the Goths in the city, not suffering his soldiers to do them any injury; but seized on the royal treasure, and secured the person of the king. The Roman army, when it entered Ravenna, appeared so inconsiderable, that the Gothic women, in beholding it, could not forbear spitting in their husbands faces, and reviling them as cowards. Procopius, from whom we have copied this account, and who was an eye-witness of the triumphal ingress of Belisarius into Ravenna, tells us, that he was thence convinced, that, in human affairs, success does not depend on multitudes of men, or their valour or strength,

He is by the Goths declared emperor of the west.

He is admitted into Ravenna. Year after Christ 540.

strength, but that some higher and greater power steers, governs and directs all things to the pre-ordained ends^u.

IN the mean time Chosroes invading with a mighty army the Roman dominions in the east, Justinian, looking upon the Persian war as of far greater consequence than the Gothic, recalled Belisarius to take upon him the management of it. It was believed by some, that the jealousy, which, at the instigation of the court sycophants, the emperor, say they, began to entertain of Belisarius, prompted him to recal this general. Procopius writes, that he was accused to the emperor by the other generals, as if he aspired at the sovereignty of Italy; that the emperor gave no credit to such calumnies; but nevertheless recalled him, because he wanted a general of his abilities to conduct the Persian war^w. Be that as it will, Belisarius, in compliance with the emperor's orders, began, as soon as he received them, to prepare for his departure, to the great surprize of the Goths, who could not persuade themselves, that, to obey the emperor, he would relinquish a crown. They did all that lay in their power to divert him from his resolution and intended journey, but to no purpose; for Belisarius, inviolably attached to the service of his master, having settled affairs in the best manner he could, set out for Constantinople, carrying with him Vitiges, and his wife Matefuenta, several of the Gothic nobility, and the royal treasure. He was received by the emperor without the least tokens of distrust, who nevertheless did not ordain him a triumph, as he had done on his return from the conquest of Africa. Vitiges the emperor treated with all the respect due to his rank, and conferred on him the dignity of patrician. The king died two years after, and, upon his death, Justinian married Matefuenta to Germanus his own nephew. The other great men among the Goths, whom Belisarius brought with him to Constantinople, attended that general to the Persian war. It is remarkable, that the emperor caused the royal treasure of the Goths to be exposed to the view of the senate; but would not shew it, as he had done that which Belisarius had brought out of Africa, to the people, fearing perhaps to heighten his reputation among the multitude, by whom he was already almost adored^x. Upon the departure of Belisarius, the chief men among the Goths

He is recalled
by Justinian.

He returns to Constantinople, with the king and the royal treasure.

^u Idem, l. ii. c. 29. ^w Idem ibid. c. 30. ^x Procop. l. ii. c. 1. Jorn. de reb. Get. p. 95: Marcell. ad ann. 540.

Goths dwelling beyond the Po, in a great assembly, resolved to raise one of their own nation to the throne, in the room of Belisarius. Accordingly, they applied themselves first to Uraia, the nephew of Vitiges; but he, out of respect to his uncle, not caring to take upon him the title of king during his life-time, declined the burden; but at the same time advised them to make choice of Ildebald, at that time governor of Verona, a man of great address, and experience in affairs both civil and military, and nephew to Theudis king of the Visigoths, who, in all likelihood, would espouse his cause. The Goths, pleased with the advice of Uraia, sent immediately for Ildebald, and proclaimed him king. ^{Ildebald chosen king.} The new prince undertook, and not without success, the re-establishing of the Gothic affairs in Italy. He had at first no more than a thousand men; but the Goths flocking to him from all parts, and with them great numbers of discontented Romans, his army in a short time grew very considerable. The Romans were highly displeased with the conduct of Alexander, who, from his clipping the coin, was nicknamed Forficula. He had been sent into Italy by the emperor, to state the accounts of the army, in which office he disoblige both the soldiers and officers to such a degree, that they became very ill affected to the emperor, and great numbers of them, finding themselves defrauded, not only of the rewards they expected, but even of the pay that was due to them, abandoned the emperor's service, and fled over to the Goths. Besides, Bessas, John, and Constantianus, whom Belisarius had appointed to command the troops in Italy, disagreeing among themselves, nothing of any moment was undertaken by them. However, Vitalis, governor of Venetia, having drawn together what troops he could, and taken into the emperor's pay a considerable body of Heruli, took the field, and, marching against Ildebald, met him in the neighbourhood of Tarvisium, where, in the battle that ensued, most of Vitalis's men were cut to pieces, and he, with the few that escaped, obliged to save himself, by a precipitous flight. ^{He gains a victory over the Romans.} After this victory, Ildebald made himself master of the whole province of Venetia: but he did not live long enough to improve his victory farther; for a contest arising between his queen and the wife of Uraia, the king, giving ear to the complaints of his wife, first accused Uraia of maintaining a private correspondence with the emperor, and afterwards, with the utmost treachery and ingratitude, ^{He causes Uraia to be murdered.} caused

And is murdered himself.

Year after
Christ 541.

Eraric chosen King.

caused him to be murdered. As, by the murder of so worthy a man, he incurred the displeasure of the whole nation, one of his guards, by name Vilas, a Gepid by nation, whom he had disoblged, by giving in marriage to another a woman whom he passionately loved, resolved to lay hold of this opportunity to revenge the injury. Accordingly, while the king was one day feasting the nobility, attended by his guards, Vilas gave him such a blow on the neck with his sword, that his head dropped on the table while he yet held the meat between his fingers^y.

ILDEBALD being thus dispatched, the leading men among the Goths, without loss of time, chose Eraric, by birth a Rugian, to succeed him. The Rugians were a Gothic nation; but their tribe differed in manners and customs from that of the Ostrogoths, whence the people and soldiery were, with much-ado, brought to acknowledge him for king, though they knew him to be a man of great valour, and experience in war. In the beginning of his reign, with the consent and approbation of the Goths, he dispatched ambassadors to the emperor, to sue, as he pretended, for a peace, upon the same terms that had been formerly offered to Vitiges, viz. that the Goths should hold all the provinces beyond the Po, and the Romans the rest of Italy. But the ambassadors had private instructions to acquaint the emperor, that Eraric was ready to deliver up Italy to him, upon condition he paid him a certain sum, and raised him to the dignity of a patrician^z. This private negotiation was not known till after the king's death. However, the Goths, generally discontented with the government of their new king, began to think of deposing him, and raising another to the throne. They cast their eyes on Totila, nephew to Ildebald, a person of extraordinary merit, and one who had eminently distinguished himself in war. He commanded at that time the Goths in Tarvisium, and, upon the news of his uncle's death, had sent to Constantianus, who governed for the emperor in Ravenna, offering, upon assurance of indemnity, to deliver up to him both the place and the garrison. Constantianus readily accepted the offer, and, having promised upon oath to perform the articles, a day was appointed for the surrender of the place. But in the mean time a messenger from ^y Procop. l. ii, c. 30.

^z Idem, l. iii. c. 2.

from the chief men among the Goths arriving at Tarvisium, acquainted Totila with the design they had formed of deposing Eraric, and raising him to the throne. Totila frankly discovered to them the agreement he had made with Constantianus ; but told them at the same time, that he was willing to accept of their offer, provided they dispatched Eraric before the day appointed for the surrender of the place. Upon the return of the messenger, the Goths fell immediately upon Eraric, and, having murdered him after a short reign of five months, with one voice declared Totila king^a.

He is murdered, and Totila proclaimed king
Year after Christ 542.

THE emperor, informed of the death of Eraric, of the promotion of Totila, and of the distracted state of affairs in Italy, sharply reprimanded his officers, who commanded there, ascribing the whole to their indolence and bad conduct. Hereupon they assembled at Ravenna, where it was agreed in a council of war, that siege should be laid forthwith to Verona, at that time the chief city of the Goths, and, upon the reduction of that place, the whole army should march against Totila, who was at the head of a small body in Picenum. Pursuant to this plan, the army, consisting of about twelve thousand men, marched under the command of eleven generals, of whom Constantianus and Alexander were the chief, and, arriving in the neighbourhood of Verona, encamped within seven miles of that city. Marcianus, a man of great interest in the country, and well affected to the emperor's service, had engaged a citizen of Verona to betray the place. A sentinel, privy to the plot, was to open one of the gates in the night, and admit a party of Romans, who were to secure the gate, till the rest of the army came up. This was a dangerous undertaking, there being a strong garrison in the town, and the safety of those, who were to be sent on the party, depending entirely on the fidelity of the sentinel. The service was therefore, to the great disgrace of the Roman name, declined by all the Romans, but with great joy undertaken by one Artabanes an Armenian, who, advancing at the head of one hundred men, was admitted within the gate, which he secured with some of them, while others killed the sentinels on the walls, and made themselves masters of the adjoining houses. Artabanes immediately acquainted the generals with

The Romans make an attempt upon Verona :

^a Idem, ibid.

But are disappointed.

with his success, requiring them to hasten the march of the army; but the commanders, being advanced within five miles of the place, ordered the army to halt, till they had settled among themselves in what manner the plunder of so wealthy a city was to be divided. In the meantime the Goths, who, hearing that the Romans were masters of one gate, had fled out at another, and retired to a high rock not far from the city, discovering from thence the small number of the Romans in the town, and the army yet at a distance, returned into the city by the same gate they had gone out, and, falling upon the Romans, obliged them to abandon the gate, and fly to the battlements, where they defended themselves with unparalleled valour. By this time the commanders, having agreed about the plunder of the city, approached the gates; but, finding them shut, they shamefully retired, though their companions, over-powered with numbers, earnestly called out for their assistance. Artabanus therefore, and such of his men as were still alive, seeing themselves thus basely abandoned, and despairing of succour, leaped down from the walls. Those who fell on the stones were killed by the fall, or rendered incapable of saving themselves by flight; but Artabanus, with a few more, having the good luck to pitch upon the ground, got safe to the camp, where he upbraided the commanders with their ill conduct, and want of courage. The Romans, after this disappointment, having passed the Po, marched to Faventia, now Faenza, where they were met by Totila at the head of his small army, consisting only of five thousand men. Hereupon the Roman generals having called a council of war, Artabanus advised them not to despise the enemy, though far inferior to them in number, but to fall upon them before the whole body had passed the river Lamone, on which stands the town of Faventia. But the commanders disagreeing among themselves, as it generally happens when they are equal in power, Totila passed the river without opposition; so that the two armies approached each other in order of battle. While they stood thus drawn up, waiting the signal, one Valiaris, a Goth of a gigantic size, and proportionable strength, advancing before the ranks, challenged any Roman to a single combat. Artabanus accepted the challenge, and, at the first encounter, ran him through the right-side with his lance; but imagining, as the Goth did not fall immediately, that the wound was not mortal, he gave him a second wound in the belly, when the head of

A single combat.

Valiaris's

Valiaris's lance, which stood upright, falling upon Artabanes's neck, unfortunately cut one of the arteries. The brave champion however, not apprehending any danger, rode back to the army ; but, as the blood could not be stopped, he died three days after, to the great grief of all the emperor's true friends, who, from his experience, courage, and prudence, promised themselves great things. He had served first with great reputation in the Persian army ; but, being taken prisoner by Belisarius in the castle of Sisaurium, with all the Persians under his command, and sent to Constantinople, he offered his service to the emperor, who sent him, with the Persians he had formerly commanded, to his army in Italy, where he distinguished himself, as we have related, in an eminent manner. The single combat was succeeded by a general engagement, in which the Romans, confiding in their numbers, behaved at first with great bravery. But three hundred Goths, who had been ordered by Totila to pass the river at some distance, falling unexpectedly upon their rear, pursuant to their orders, they began to give ground, imagining that body to be far more numerous than it really was. Hereupon Totila charging them in front with new vigour, they first fell into great confusion, and then betook themselves to a precipitous flight. The Goths pursued them with great slaughter, took a great number of prisoners, and all their ensigns, and obliged the few, who had the good luck to make their escape, to take refuge, with their commanders, in the neighbouring towns ^b.

The death of Artabanes a valiant officer.

The Romans defeated.

TOTILA, to improve this victory, marched without loss of time to Florence, and invested that city ; but a considerable army being sent from Ravenna to the relief of the place, Totila thought it adviseable to raise the siege, and retire to Micole, a town about a day's journey from Florence. The Romans, leaving a small garrison in the town, pursued them with the rest of their forces ; and it was agreed, that one of the commanders, marching with all possible expedition after them, should keep them in play till the others came up. The lot fell upon John ; but unreasonable disputes arising among the commanders, and a report being spread, that John was killed by one of his own men, the army halted ; and in the mean time John being ^b Idem, l. iii. c. 9.

The Romans defeated anew.

Tuscany, and several other provinces, recovered by
the Goths.
Year after
Christ 543.

being forced to engage the enemy with his own troops only, he was utterly defeated. When news of this defeat was brought to the army, seized with a sudden panic, they all dispersed, every one shifting for himself in the best manner he could. Totila treated the prisoners he took in this and the former engagement with so much humanity, that most of them entering into his service, his army was by that means considerably encreased*. The following year, the eighth of the Gothic war, Totila, taking the field early in the spring, made himself master of all the strong places in Tuscany, and, marching from thence into Campania and Samnium, reduced and dismantled the strong town of Beneventum, and laid siege to Naples; during which several detachments from his army took Cumæ, and recovered all Brutia, Lucania, Apulia, and Calabria, where they found considerable sums, which had been gathered for the emperor. The Goths having thus seized on the tributes, and the money that had been levied to pay the army, the emperor's troops were reduced to great streights, and thereupon began to mutiny, and refuse to take the field; so that Constantianus lay idle at Ravenna, John at Rome, Bessas at Spoleto, Justin at Florence, and Cyprian at Perugia, the places to which they had fled after the late defeat. The emperor, informed of the bad situation of his affairs in Italy, ordered a considerable fleet to be equipped, and a great number of forces to be raised, committing both to the conduct of Maximinus, whom he honoured with the title of præfectus prætorio of Italy; but as he was a man quite unacquainted with military affairs, naturally timorous, and indolent, Justinian appointed Demetrius to command under him, who had formerly served under Belisarius as general of the foot. Demetrius, to retrieve the reputation of the Roman arms in Italy, resolved to attempt the relief of Naples, already reduced to great streights. With this view, leaving Maximinus on the coasts of Epirus, he sailed with part of the fleet to Sicily; and there, as he had but a small number of forces with him, he assembled a great many vessels, with a design to terrify the enemy, who would conclude, that so considerable a fleet had a proportionable army on board; but his heart failing him after he had put to sea, instead of sailing directly to Naples, he steered his course to Rome, in order

* Idem, ibid c. 10.

order to raise soldiers, and then return to Naples ; but the Romans refusing to serve against the victorious king of the Goths, he was obliged either to lie idle, or to attempt the relief of Naples with the few troops he had brought with him. The latter expedient he chose ; but Totila, having timely notice of his design, manned with incredible expedition a great number of light vessels, which, unexpectedly falling upon him as he was riding at anchor on the coast of Naples, took or sunk every ship of his fleet, ^{The Romans} and made all on board prisoners, except a few who be-^{defeated by} took themselves to their boats, among whom was De-^{sea.} metrius himself. The besieged being greatly disheartened by this loss, Conon, who commanded in Naples, dispatched a messenger to Maximinus, acquainting him with the deplorable condition to which the city was reduced, and earnestly pressing him to hasten to their relief. Maximinus was already advanced as far as Syracuse ; but could not be persuaded to stir from thence for some time. At length, being threatened with the emperor's displeasure, importuned by repeated messages from the besieged, and openly reviled for cowardice by the soldiers, he sent the fleet to Naples under the command of others ; but, indulging his natural timidity, staid himself behind. As the fleet put to sea in the depth of winter, it was, by a violent storm, driven ashore near the enemy's camp, who sunk the ships, and, without resistance, made what slaughter they pleased ^{Another Ro-} of the seamen and soldiers. Few of them escaped being ^{man fleet de-} either taken or killed. Among the prisoners was Deme-^{stroyed,} trius, who, after the loss of his own fleet, had gone aboard that of Maximinus. Totila ordered him to be led, with a rope about his neck, to the town wall, and there obliged him to exhort the inhabitants to surrender, by assuring them, that they were to expect no further succours, and that all hopes of relief were lost with the navy. At the same time Totila offered them honourable terms, upon condition they submitted immediately ; which they did accordingly, and were treated by him with the utmost ^{Naples sur-} humanity. As they had been pinched with a long fa-^{renders.} mine, Totila, apprehending they might endanger their lives by indulging at first their ravenous appetites, placed guards at the gates to prevent their going out, taking care at the same time to supply them sparingly with provisions, but increasing their allowance every day. Being thus, by degrees, restored to their former strength, he ordered the gates to be set open, and gave every one full liberty to stay or retire to what place he thought fit. He treated Conon and the garrison in a most friendly and obliging manner ; for, upon their pretending to return to Constantinople, he supplied them with ships ; and having discovered that their real design was to sail to Rome, and reinforce the garrison of that city, which he intended in the next place to besiege, he was so far from punishing them as they expected, or even upbraiding them for thus imposing upon him, that, on the contrary, the winds not proving favourable for a long time, he furnished them with horses, waggons, and provisions, and ordered a body of Goths to escorte them to Rome. He dismantled Naples, as he had done Beneventum, not caring to weaken his army by garrisoning the many strong-holds that submitted to him^d.

Totila writes to the Roman senate.

TOTILA, now master of Naples, and most of the fortresses in those parts, began to turn his thoughts upon Rome. In the first place, he wrote a letter to the senate, whom he earnestly desired to draw over to his party, taxing them in gentle terms with the ingratitude they had shewn to the family and nation of the great Theodoric and Amalasuntha. He advised and entreated them to return to their duty ; put them in mind of the treatment they had met with from the emperor and his officers ; and concluded by assuring both them and the people of his favour and protection, provided they returned to their allegiance. John who commanded in Rome, would not suffer the senate to answer this, or receive more letters from Totila, who nevertheless found means to convey other papers into the city, which were posted up by night in the most frequented places. The Arian priests were suspected of holding a private correspondence with the Goths and their king, who professed the same doctrine, and on that account were banished Rome. Totila finding his letters and manifestoes had no effect on the senate and people of Rome, resolved to pursue other methods ; and accordingly having sent a detachment into Calabria to reduce Otranto, which had not yet submitted, he marched, with the rest of his forces, against the towns in the neighbourhood of Rome. The city of Tibur, now Tivoli, about eighteen miles from Rome, was betrayed to him by one of the inhabitants ; and, upon his entering it, he put all

^d Idem l. iii. c. 9. Continuat. Marcell. ad ann. 543.

all the citizens to the sword, together with their bishop. Several other strong-holds in that neighbourhood he took by storm ; so that Rome was, in a manner, blocked up by land, all communication with the neighbouring country being cut off. The emperor, greatly perplexed at the bad news he received daily out of Italy, and unwilling to lose Rome, which was now in imminent danger of falling anew into the enemy's hands, resolved to call Belisarius out of Persia, notwithstanding the success that had attended him there, and send him again into Italy. Accordingly he wrote to Belisarius, ordering him to repair forthwith to Italy, and to take upon him the command of his armies in that country. Belisarius no sooner received this order, than leaving Comagene, where he then was, he set out for the west. In his way through Thrace, he raised above four thousand men at his own expence, and, arriving with them at Salonæ, he dispatched from thence Vitalius, general of Illyricum, with a body of troops to the relief of Otranto, at whose approach the Goths retired ; so that the town was reinforced with fresh supplies both of men and provisions. As for Belisarius himself he embarked in Dalmatia, and came by sea to Ravenna, whence he sent several parties against the cities of Æmilia ; but without success, though they defeated a small body of troops dispatched by Totila to drive them out of that province. After this, they threw themselves into Auximum, then besieged by the Goths ; but finding there were not sufficient provisions in the place to maintain so numerous a garrison, they resolved to sally out, and march to Pisaurus, now Pesaro, which stood at a small distance, and was still held by the Romans. In their retreat, two hundred of them were slain by the besiegers ; but the rest reached Pisaurus, whither Totila pursued them, hoping to take the place by storm ; but, being vigorously repulsed by the garrison, he returned to the siege of Auximum ; and at the same time, finding that Belisarius was not in a condition to take the field, he sent out detachments to besiege Firmum and Asculum, two places of great importance in the province of Picenum. Belisarius, chiefly concerned for Rome, appointed Bessas governor of that city, and sent Artasiris a Persian, and Barbation a Thracian, men of valour and great experience in war, to command under Bessas, strictly enjoining them to make no sallies, in case the town was besieged. Being himself utterly unable to relieve the besieged towns, or put Belisarius sent again into Italy.

Auximum, Firmum, and Asculum, besieged by the Goths.

Rome besieged by Totila.

A great famine in Rome.

a stop to the progress of the Goths, he dispatched John to Constantinople, with a letter to the emperor, wherein he acquainted him with the situation of his affairs in Italy, telling him at the same time, that, being destitute of men, arms, and money, it was impossible for him to prosecute the war. Justinian, upon the receipt of this letter, ordered new levies to be made, the veterans being all employed against the Persians. But in the mean time Totila, pursuing his good fortune, took several strong-holds and cities of great consequence, viz. Firmum, Asculum, Auximum, Spoletum, &c. and at length approached Rome, which he invested on all sides. As he drew near the city, Artasiris and Barbation, contrary to the express command of Belisarius, made a sally, thinking they should surprise the Goths; but they were themselves taken in an ambuscade, and, most of their men being cut in pieces, they narrowly escaped falling into the enemy's hands. The town had not been long besieged, when Belisarius was informed, that a considerable number of troops, sent by the emperor, were in full march to join him. Hereupon Belisarius, committing the care of Ravenna to Justin, marched with a small body of forces to Epidamnus, where he met them. Soon after, Narses the eunuch arrived with some auxiliary troops raised among the Heruli, and commanded by Philimuth, and other leaders of their own nation. With part of this reinforcement Belisarius sailed to the port of Rome, which he was mighty desirous of relieving; and sent the rest, under the command of John, into Calabria, with orders to drive the Goths out of those parts, and then join him in the neighbourhood of Rome. John took some places; but, being afraid to pass by the city of Capua, or to make any attempt upon it, though defended only by three hundred Goths, he did not, pursuant to his orders, join Belisarius at the time appointed. In the mean time Rome being so closely blocked up, that no provisions could be imported either by land or water, a dreadful famine began to rage in the city. The unhappy citizens, having consumed every thing that could give them any nourishment, and even the grass that grew near the walls, were in the end obliged to feed on their excrements. Several, to avoid the calamities they groaned under, laid violent hands on themselves. In this extremity they flocked in great multitudes to Bessas their governor, earnestly entreating him to supply them with food, and if that was not not in his power, either to give them leave to go out of the town, or to deliver them from their miseries by putting them to death. Bessas replied, That to supply them with food, was impossible; to let them go, unsafe; and to kill them, impious. To raise their drooping spirits, he assured them, that an army was hourly expected from Constantinople, which, under the command of Belisarius, would oblige the Goths to abandon the siege, and retire^f. Vigilius, bishop of Rome, sent from Sicily, where he then was, several ships laden with corn, to relieve the city; but they were all intercepted by the enemy, who, after the reduction of Naples, kept a great number of vessels constantly cruizing between Sicily and Rome. In the end, Bessas suffered such of the citizens as were willing to retire, to go out of the city, upon their paying him a sum of money; but most of them either died on the road, or, falling into the enemy's hands, were by them cut in pieces. Belisarius, well apprised of the miserable condition to which the besieged were reduced, used all possible means to relieve them; but fortune, or rather Providence, seemed to fight against him; for his attempts, however well concerted, proved all unsuccessful; which gave him so much uneasiness, that he fell into a fever, and was thought for some time, to be in great danger. In the mean time the besieged, no longer able to bear the miseries with which they were afflicted, and despairing of relief, began to mutiny, and press Bessas to come to an agreement with Totila; which he refusing to do, four of the Isaurians, who guarded the Porta Asinaria, letting themselves down from the wall by ropes fastened to the battlements in the dead of the night, while their companions were asleep, went to Totila, and undertook to receive his army into the city. The king with great joy embraced the overture, and, sending four Goths of great strength, intrepidity, and resolution, into the city with the Isaurians, he silently approached the gates with his whole army; which being opened by the Isaurians, with the assistance of the four Goths within, he entered the city at the head of his troops. Upon the first alarm, Bessas, with the other commanders, and most of the soldiers, fled out at another gate. Such as remained behind, took sanctuary in the churches, whither the inhabitants likewise fled. Totila, who had kept his men under arms all night, and united in a body,

^f Idem ibid. c. 17,

Rome betrayed to Totila. Year after Christ 547.

He spares the inhabitants ;
but plunders
the city.

a body, through fear of an ambuscade, finding he had nothing to apprehend, went early in the morning to St. Peter's church, to return thanks for the success of the enterprize. His men, in their way, killed six-and-twenty soldiers, with about sixty of the inhabitants ; and this is all the blood that was shed ; for Pelagius the deacon, throwing himself at his feet when he entered the church, with the book of the gospels in his hand, earnestly entreated him to spare the inhabitants. Totila, highly provoked against the inhabitants, refused at first to comply with his demand ; but was in the end prevailed upon to forbid his Goths, under the severest penalties, to put any, either of the citizens or soldiers, to death. However, he gave them full liberty to plunder the city, which they did for several days together, stripping the inhabitants of all their wealth, and leaving nothing in their houses but the naked walls. Thus many persons of great distinction, and among the rest Rusticiana, the widow of Boetius, and daughter of Symmachus, a matron of exemplary piety, were reduced to beg from door to door. In the house of Bessas they found an immense treasure, which he had scandalously amassed during the siege, by selling to the people, at an exorbitant price, the corn that had been stored up for the use of the garrison. The Goths were for putting Rusticiana to death, because she had persuaded, as they pretended, the Romans to pull down the images, and destroy the statues, of Theodoric, to revenge, by that means, the death of her father and husband. But Totila, taking her and all the women under his protection, secured them against the cruelty and insolence of the soldiery &c. Thus was Rome recovered by the Goths in the year of the christian æra 547, the twentieth of Justinian's reign, and the twelfth of the war. Totila, according to the most probable opinion, entered Rome on the seventeenth of January.

He upbraids
the senate ;
but spares
them.

TOTILA, now master of the capital of Italy, sent for the senate, and putting them in mind of the favours they had received from the Goths, and the severe treatment they had met with from the emperor and his officers, he bitterly reproached them for behaving so ungratefully to their benefactors, and, in the transport of his passion, threatened to make them all slaves ; but his anger soon asswaging, he pardoned them at the intercession of Pelagius, and dismissed missed them untouched. Soon after, he dispatched Pelagius, and one Theodorus a Roman orator, as his ambassadors to Justinian, with letters full of respect, in which he desired to live in peace and amity with him, as Theodoric had done with Anastasius, promising, in that case, to respect him as his father, and to assist him, when wanted, with all his forces, against any other nation whatsoever. On the contrary, if the emperor rejected his offers, he threatened to level Rome with the ground, to put the whole senate to the sword, and carry the war into Illyricum. The emperor returned no other answer, than that he referred the whole to Belisarius, who had full power to manage all things of that nature as he pleased. Totila, provoked at this answer, and at the defeat of a body of troops, which he had sent to open a passage into Lucania, resolved to demolish Rome, so as not to leave one stone upon another. Accordingly he began with the wall, of which he threw down a third part, and was ready to set fire to the most stately and beautiful buildings of the city, when he received a letter from Belisarius, dissuading him from the resolution he had taken. Belisarius laid great stress on the grandeur and majesty of that antient city, which being raised to such a height of fame and greatness by the industry and valour of so many celebrated and eminent men, posterity would look upon him, who destroyed it, as an enemy to mankind, since he deprived them of so many monuments of the worth and merit of their ancestors. He added, that if, in the end, the Goths should prove victorious, he would never forgive himself for destroying the most beautiful city in his dominions, nay, the most beautiful and magnificent in the whole world. On the other hand, if, in the course of the war, fortune should happen to abandon him, he would, by preserving so favourite a city, highly oblige the conqueror, who would not fail to make him a suitable return; whereas by demolishing it, he would preclude himself from all favour. Totila, having seriously considered the contents of this letter, and weighed, with attention, the arguments alledged by Belisarius, resolved to follow his advice, and, laying aside all thoughts of destroying Rome, he marched with his army into Lucania. The senate he carried with him, and the rest of the inhabitants, with their wives and children, he sent, under a strong guard, into Lucania before him, not leaving a single inhabitant in Rome. Being arrived in Lucania, he reduced all that country,

He is diverted by Belisarius from destroying the city; but carries with him all the inhabitants.

Rome regained and fortified by Belisarius.

Totila returns against it.

But is vigorously repulsed by Belisarius.

try, and then marched with his army towards Ravenna^b. Upon his departure, John seized on Tarentum, which he fortified with a ditch cut through the isthmus. The city of Spoletum was likewise recovered by the Romans, being betrayed to them by one Martianus, a Roman soldier, who pretended to be a deserter. Belisarius had continued all this time at Portus, about ten miles from Rome; but being informed, that Totila had bent his march towards Ravenna, and being mighty desirous of recovering once more the capital of Italy, he led his small army thither; and, finding the city quite destitute of inhabitants, and a third part of the walls levelled with the ground, he undertook the repeopling of the place, and began to repair the walls. He cleared the ditch round the city, which had been filled up by Totila, and, for the present, contented himself with heaping huge stones, one upon another, in the many breaches, which he had made in the wall. The whole work being finished in the space of twenty-five days, and the city supplied with great store of provisions, which Belisarius took care to have imported by water, the antient inhabitants, who had been dispersed up and down Italy, returned in flocks, and were kindly received by Belisarius, who restored to every one his own house and possessions, and promised an immunity from taxes to such as were willing to settle there. Upon this news, Totila hastened back to Rome, not doubting but, at his approach, Belisarius would abandon the place, and return to Portus, which was strongly fortified; but finding, contrary to his expectation, that the Roman general was determined not to quit the city, but defend it to the last, he encamped at a small distance from the walls, and early next morning advanced in battle-array, and began the attack with incredible fury. The Romans, animated by the example of their general, defended themselves with no less valour and intrepidity; so that the fight lasted from morning to night, when the Goths, who had lost a great number of men, returned to their camp. The assault was renewed the three following days; but Totila, being constantly repulsed with great loss, abandoned the enterprize, and retired to Tibur, where he continued for some time, leaving Belisarius at full leisure to complete the fortifications of Rome; which he did accordingly, and once more sent the keys of the city to the emperor.

^b Procop. l. iii. c. 22.

peror. But the Goths, who had hitherto extolled their king, and, equalling him to the greatest heroes of antiquity, had accounted themselves happy in the choice, began to complain loudly of his conduct, and, with great liberty, to blame him for not having either entirely demolished Rome, or left a strong garrison in it, to prevent its falling anew into the enemy's hands. The whole army grew so discontented, that when he prepared to march to the siege of Perugia, they betrayed a great reluctance to follow him thither, till, in a set speech, he made an apology for his late conduct, ascribing his bad success, not to any want of foresight or neglect on his side, but to the inconstancy of fortune, which in all human affairs, but more especially in matters of war, bears a chief sway. Having thus regained the esteem and affection of his soldiers, he left Tibur, and, marching with his whole army to Perugia, he set down before that city. Upon his departure, John, who had continued in those parts, being master of Otranto, hastened into Campania, and there set at liberty the Roman senators and their wives, after having routed a strong party of Goths, that had been left by Totila to guard them. Hereupon Totila, to be revenged on John, rising from before Perugia, hastened, over mountains, and, through by-ways, into Apulia, where he then was; but, falling unadvisedly upon him in the night, the Romans, by favour of the darkness, made their escape, with the loss of no more than an hundred men, and got safe into Tarento. This was a great oversight in Totila; for, as his army was ten times their number, had he waited with patience till day-light, he might have surrounded them, and cut them off to a man. In the meantime Belisarius, having received from Constantinople a supply of twelve hundred men, sailed with them for Sicily, being informed, that Totila designed to pass over into that island, which was then quite unguarded. But Totila, instead of making any attempt upon Sicily, invested with his whole army Rusciana, a city of great strength in Calabria. Hereupon Belisarius, leaving Sicily, sailed to Otranto, where he received a second supply from Constantinople of two thousand foot, under the command of Valerianus. He then ordered John to join him with the body he commanded; and, having assembled a great number of transports, he set sail for Rusciana, with a design to relieve that place; but, finding the Goths drawn up on the shore,

John put to flight by Totila.

Who besieges and takes Rusciana.

and

and ready to receive him, he abandoned the enterprize, and returned to Rome, sending John and Valerian, with part of the forces, to lay waste Picenum, and by that means oblige Totila to raise the siege of Rusciana. But the king of the Goths, pursuing the siege with more vigour than ever, detached two thousand horse into Picenum, who, being joined by the Goths in that province, obliged the Romans sent by Belisarius to retire. In the mean while the garrison of Rusciana, being reduced to great streights, and despairing of relief, submitted to Totila, who, notwithstanding the vigorous resistance they made, treated them with great humanity, receiving such of them as were willing to serve under him into his army, and suffering the rest to retire unmolested whither they pleased. Only Chalazar, who had formerly broken his word to him, he put to death, after having caused his hands and privy parts to be cut of ⁱ.

Belisarius recalled.

DURING these transactions in Italy, the Persians having gained considerable advantages over the Romans, Justinian was easily persuaded by Antonia, the wife of Belisarius, to recal her husband, and employ him anew against that nation. Belisarius therefore left Italy, having rather lost the reputation he had gained by his former expedition, than acquired a greater; for, during the five years he commanded against Totila, he scarce performed any thing worthy of notice, being, as it were, in a perpetual flight, and sailing from one sea-port to another ^k. Procopius, in his books of the Gothic war, which were published while Justinian and Belisarius were yet alive, lays the whole blame on fortune; but, in the anecdota or secret history, he, or some other writer, charges him with several mistakes, and besides accuses him of levying vast sums on the inhabitants of Ravenna, of Sicily, and of all the places that had submitted to the Romans, on pretence of punishing them for having once sided with the Goths. He adds, that Herodian, governor of Spoleto, not being able to supply him with the money he required, renounced his allegiance to the emperor, and delivered up the place to the Goths, having no other means to redeem himself from the importunity of the avaricious and ever-craving commander. The same writer ascribes the misunderstanding between him and John, which greatly retarded the emperor's service, to Antonia, the general's wife, who, to ingratiate herself with the empress Theodora, the declared enemy of John, pressed her husband to dispatch

ⁱ Idem ibid. c. 23, 24.

^k Idem ibid. c. 24, 25.

patch him by some means or other ; which John being apprised of, declined, as much as he could, joining or assisting him. But to return to Totila : Upon the departure of Belisarius, he returned before Perugia, which he took by storm ; but, according to his custom, spared both the inhabitants and the garrison. And now the Franks, who had long continued quiet, concluding the Goths, as well as the Romans, to be greatly weakened by such a long and destructive war, thought it high time to lay hold of the opportunity, and, breaking into Italy, to seize, without distinction, on the countries belonging to both. In the very beginning of the war, the Ostrogoths, as we have related above, not able to make head at the same time against the Romans and the Franks, attempted to gain over the latter to their party, by yielding to them the provinces they held in Gaul. This Justinian was so far from opposing, that, on the contrary, carefully avoiding to give the Franks the least pretence of making war upon him, he solemnly confirmed them in the possession of the countries the Goths had yielded to them, renouncing in their behalf all claims to the said countries. Thus, adds our historian, the kings of the Franks, whom he commonly styles Germans, became masters of Marseilles, an antient colony of the Phocæans, and of the other maritime towns, with the sea itself. And now, continues Procopius, they preside at the equestrian combats in the city of Arles, and coin the gold, which they draw from the mines of Gaul, not with the image of the emperor, as they have done hitherto, but with their own¹. Thus the Franks became lawful sovereigns of the countries formerly held by the Ostrogoths in Gaul, and behaved as such, according to the observation of Procopius, by presiding at the equestrian sports in Arles, at that time the capital of Gaul, and coining gold with their own images. But no favours, no grants, could make the Franks forget their natural treachery, or stand to their engagements, when they had the least prospect of advantage from their acting contrary to them. The Ostrogoths had yielded to them the rich countries, which they held in Gaul ; Justinian had transferred to them the claim and title he had to those countries. By their treaty with the Goths, they were to assist them against the Romans ; by their treaty with the Romans, they were to stand neuter ; and both treaties they equally

¹ Idem ibid. c. 33.

The Franks
make themselves masters of Venetia.

Rome besieged by Totila.

And betrayed to him a second time by the Isaurians.
Year after
Christ 550.

equally observed ; for, thinking both nations greatly weakened by so long a war, they laid hold of that opportunity to fall upon both ; and, accordingly, entering the province of Venetia, belonging partly to the Romans, and partly to the Goths, they seized it for themselves. In the mean time Totila, having received a reinforcement of six thousand Lombards, commanded by Ildiges, one of their princes, resolved to march to Rome, and once more attempt the reduction of that city. Belisarius had left there three thousand chosen men, under the command of Diogenes, an officer of great experience, and known valour, who held out, for a considerable time, against the repeated assaults of the enemy. Totila invested the city on all sides, and, from the very beginning of the siege, made himself master of Portus ; so that all communication being cut off both by sea and land, he hoped to reduce the garrison in a short time by famine. But against this evil Diogenes wisely provided, by causing corn to be sowed within the walls ; so that the town would, in all likelihood, have held out till the arrival of the promised succours from Constantinople, had it not been betrayed a second time by the Isaurians. One of the gates was guarded by a body of that nation, who, being discontented for want of their pay, which they had not received for some years, and hearing that their countrymen, who had formerly betrayed the city, had been preferred and enriched by the Goths, resolved to follow their example ; and accordingly, some of them having first had a private conference with Totila, they opened, at the time agreed on, the gate which they guarded, and received him, with his whole army, into the city. As Totila had caused the trumpets to sound at the opposite gate pretending to attack the city on that side, the garrison hastened thither ; so that he met with no opposition. When the inhabitants found the town was taken, they fled out of the opposite gate towards Centumcellæ, the only strong place held by the Romans in that neighbourhood ; but great numbers of them, and likewise of the soldiers who took the same rout, were cut off by the Goths, whom Totila had placed in ambushes on the road, not doubting but they would fly that way. Diogenes escaped with a slight wound ; but Paul a Cilician, whom Belisarius had appointed to command under him, retired with a body of four hundred horse to Adrian's tomb, and possessed

fessed himself of the bridge leading to St. Peter's church, now Ponte Sant' Angelo. There they defended themselves with incredible valour against the enemy's whole army, till they had no provisions left; when they resolved to fall out, and either open themselves a way through the midst of the enemy, or die in the attempt. Having taken this resolution, they embraced and took leave of each other, as ready to die; which Totila hearing, and dreading the effects of such a desperate resolution, thought it adviseable to offer them terms. Accordingly he let them know by a messenger, that, upon their delivering up their horses and arms, and swearing never to serve more against the Goths, he was ready to grant them leave to return to Constantinople; but that, if they chose rather to stay in Italy, and serve under him, they should have all their effects restored to them, and be treated upon the same footing with the Goths. They chose at first to return to Constantinople; but afterwards changing their minds, they listed themselves among the troops of Totila. Only Paul, and one Mindus an Maurian, begged leave to return home; which Totila not only granted, but allowed them a safe conduct, and money to bear their charges. About three hundred more of the garrison, who had taken sanctuary in the churches, abandoning their asylum submitted to Totila, upon his promising to spare their lives. He was formerly bent upon destroying Rome, as we have hinted above, but diverted from it by Belisarius. Now he made it his chief study to embellish the city, repairing, at a great expence, what he had formerly destroyed. He recalled the senate, and restored them to their antient rank and splendor, invited the citizens to take possession of their estates, supplied the city with plenty of provisions, and, peopling it with Goths and Italians, exhibited the Circensian games, after the manner of the Roman emperors, and presided at them in person. This, so different from his former conduct, was owing to the answer given him by the king of the Franks, when he asked his daughter in marriage, viz. that he would not dispose of his daughter to any but a king; and that Totila ought not to be looked upon as such, since he was not able to preserve the capital city, but had been obliged to demolish part of it, and abandon the rest to the enemy^m. And now Totila, once more master of Rome,

He repairs
 what he had formerly destroyed.

dispatched

^m Idem ibid. c. 36, 37.

dispatched ambassadors to Constantinople, with proposals for a peace, offering upon the emperor's relinquishing Italy to him; to assist him as a faithful ally against any other nation whatsoever. But Justinian was so far from hearkening to the overture, that he would not even admit the ambassadors to his presence. Hereupon Totila, determined to pursue the war with more vigour than ever, having left a strong garrison in Rome, marched with the rest of his army to Circumcellæ, now Civita Vecchia, which he invested; but Diogenes making a vigorous resistance, it was agreed between him and Totila, that he should acquaint the emperor with the situation, and that if, by a time prefixed, he received no relief, the place should be delivered up; and thirty hostages were given. After this, he passed with his army into Sicily, and, in his passage, made an attempt upon Rhegium; but finding the place strongly garrisoned, he left part of the army to block it up, in order to reduce it by famine; and with the rest crossed over into Sicily, after having made himself master of Tarentum. As he was imbarquing his forces, news was brought him, that Ariminum had been betrayed to the Goths he had left in Picenum. Having crossed the streights, he landed without opposition at Messina; but, not being able to reduce that city, he laid waste the neighbouring country, destroying all with fire and sword.

He takes Tarentum, and passes over into Sicily.

In the mean time the garrison of Rhegium, being reduced to the last extremity for want of provisions, submitted upon terms, and delivered up the city to the troops left by Totila before itⁿ.

JUSTINIAN, alarmed at the progress Totila made, forgave Artabanes, who had lately conspired against him, and sent him into Sicily, to defend that island against the Goths, and, if possible, to drive them from thence. At the same time he named his nephew Germanus general against the Goths in Italy, allowing him a large sum to raise troops in Thrace, and Illyricum, whence he was to march into Italy with Philimuth commander of the Heruli, and John then general of Illyricum. As Germanus was a man of a generous temper, and greatly beloved by the soldiery, he soon raised a very considerable army, not only the Romans, but the barbarians, flocking to him from all parts. With this army, the best the emperor had had ever sent into Italy, he hoped to add to the reputation which he had lately acquired against the Vandals in Africa, the glory of driving the Goths out of Italy, and reuniting that country into the empire. This, he thought, he might the more easily accomplish, as he married Matafuntha, the daughter of Amalasuntha, and grand-daughter of Theodoric, who, he hoped would draw great numbers of the Goths over to his party ; for he designed to take her with him into Italy. The Goths were greatly despirited, when they heard, that a general of consummate experience, universally beloved by the soldiery, and so nearly allied to Theodoric, whose memory they adored, was to command against them. On the other hand, the Romans began to take courage anew, and such of them as had been dispersed by their frequent defeats, assembling in one body on the borders of Istria, waited his arrival there. And now Germanus, having drawn together all his forces in the neighbourhood of Sardica, ordered them to be ready within three days to march into Italy. But Providence had otherways disposed of affairs ; for Germanus was suddenly seized with a violent distemper, which, in a few days put an end to his life and all his great designs. The emperor, upon the news of his death, which gave him the utmost concern, ordered Justin, the son of Germanus, and John, who had married his daughter, to lead the army into Italy. But as the winter approached, and they wanted ships to convey the troops thither by sea, they marched into Dalmatia, and there put them into winter-quarters, taking up their own in Salonæ°. In the meantime Totila, having laid waste great part of Sicily, sat down with his army before Syracuse ; but Liberius, whom Justinian had sent with a squadron to protect that coast, having forced his way into the haven, relieved the garrison with a considerable supply both of men and provisions. However Totila pursued the siege with great vigour, though valiantly opposed by the Romans within, who hearing that Artabanes was coming to their relief with a mighty fleet, would hearken to no terms. But the fleet being dispersed on the coast of Calabria by a violent storm, and Artabanes driven to the island of Malta, where, with much difficulty, he saved himself, Liberius, despairing of relief, abandoned Syracuse to the enemy, and conveyed the gar-

Germanus appointed general in Italy.

Syracuse taken, and all Sicily reduced by Totila.

• Idem ibid. c. 39.

Narſes appointed to command in Italy.

Ancona beſieged by the Goths.

riſon by ſea to Palermo. And now Totila, having no enemy in Sicily to oppoſe him, entirely reduced that iſland, and, leaving four ſtrong garrifons in it to awe the inhabitants, he returned to Italy, loaded with booty ^p. Early in the ſpring, Juſtin and John, who had paſſed the winter in Salonæ, having drawn together their forces, ſet out on their march to Ravenna. But in the mean time the Sclavi, paſſing the Danube, either at the inſtigatiſon of Totila, or prompted by a deſire of booty, broke into the Roman provinces, committing every-where unheard-of cruelties. This greatly retarded the march of the army, the Roman generals being obliged to ſend ſtrong detachments againſt them; which in the end obliged them to repaſs the Danube, and return home. But, before the two generals reached the confines of Italy, they received orders from the emperor to proceed no farther, but to wait the arrival of Narſes, whom he had appointed commander in chief of all his forces in thoſe parts with an abſolute uncontrouled authority. But, while Narſes was making the neceſſary preparations for his intended expedition, Totila having equipped a fleet of three hundred galleys, ſent them to pillage the coaſt of Greece, where they got an immense booty. They made a deſcent upon the iſland of Corfu; and, having laid it waſte, they ſailed to Epirus, where they ſurpriſed and plundered the cities of Nicopolis and Anchialus, and took upon the coaſt many ſhips, and ſome among the reſt laden with proviſions for the army of Narſes. At the ſame time Totila blocked up the city of Ancona by ſea and land, and by that means ſoon reduced it to great ſtreights; which Valerianus, who was then in Ravenna, being well apprized of, he acquainted John, who, purſuant to the emperor's orders, was waiting the arrival of Narſes in Dalmatia, with the condition the city was in, earneſtly ſolliciting him to haſten to the relief of the only place the emperor had in thoſe parts, and promiſing to join him with all the forces under his command. John had been ordered not to ſtir from Dalmatia till the arrival of Narſes; but, venturing on this occaſion to diſobey his orders, he put the flower of his army on board forty veſſels, and ſailed with them to Ancona, where Valerianus joined him with a ſquadron of twelve ſhips more. Upon their appearing before Ancona, the Goths, having manned forty-ſeven of their beſt ſhips, failed failed out against them ; whereupon an engagement ensued, in which the Goths, quite ignorant of sea affairs, were utterly defeated, thirty-six of their ships being taken or sunk, with all the men on board, and the rest driven ashore, where they were set on fire by the Goths themselves, lest they should fall into the enemy's hands. The Goths, after this defeat, broke up the siege, and, retiring in great haste, left their camp, and part of their baggage, to the Roman generals, who, having reinforced the garrison, returned, Valerianus to Ravenna, and John to Salonæ. At the same time Artabanes, having assembled his fleet, which, as we have related above, had been dispersed by a storm, landed in Sicily, and, every-where driving out the Goths, recovered all the castles held by them in that island. These losses disheartened the Goths, and Totila himself, to such a degree, that he once more dispatched ambassadors to Constantinople, offering to yield Sicily and Dalmatia to the emperor, to pay an annual tribute for Italy, and to assist the Romans as a faithful ally in all their wars. But Justinian, bent upon driving the Goths out of Italy, ordered the ambassadors to return home, without suffering them to appear in his presence ¹.

TOTILA, finding Justinian would hearken to no terms, began to levy new forces, and make vast preparations both by sea and land. Having equipped a considerable fleet, he sent it against Corsica and Sardinia, both which islands were soon reduced. On the other hand, the city of Croton in Calabria, which had been long besieged by the Goths, was relieved by the garrison of Thermopylæ in Greece, conveyed by sea into Italy. But now Narses drew near at the head of a formidable army, bringing with him an immense treasure to supply the wants of the troops, and to pay the emperor's forces in Italy their arrears, which had been due ever since the beginning of the war. His army consisted not only of Romans levied by him in Thrace and Illyricum, but of barbarians, who had flocked to him from all parts. Besides, Auduin, king of the Lombards, sent him a body of five thousand chosen men ; Philimuth, prince of the Heruli, joined him with three thousand of his countrymen ; Aruth, another prince of the same nation, came to his assistance at the head of a chosen body of veterans. A great number of Gepidæ, Hunns, Persians, &c. cheerfully followed his banner, some in acknowledgment of his former favours,

¹ Idem, l. iv. c. 23.

favours, (for he had been always kind to the barbarians) and others in expectation of spoil and booty ; for they were all convinced, that the Goths could not make head against so numerous an army, commanded by a general of great valour, and consummate experience. Narses, on his entering Dalmatia, was joined by John, and the army under his command ; but being advanced as far as the confines of Venetia, the Franks who, as we have related above, had seized on that province, refused him a passage ; so that, not caring, at so critical a conjuncture, to provoke that nation, by the advice of John who was well acquainted with those parts, he changed his route, and, marching along the sea-coast, he got safe, with his whole army, to Ravenna, where he was joined by the remainder of the Roman forces, under the command of Valerianus and Justin. Having staid nine days in Ravenna to refresh his army, and appointed Justin governor of that city, he began his march towards Rome. Being arrived at Ariminum, Usdrilas, governor of the place, sallied unexpectedly out upon him with part of the garrison, as he was looking for a ford, attended by a small guard ; but a party of Heruli coming seasonably up, put the Goths to flight, and killed Usdrilas in the pursuit. The Romans might have easily made themselves masters of the city, the garrison being greatly disheartened by the death of their governor ; but Narses, pursuing his main design, and avoiding every thing that could retard it, proceeded on his march, the Goths suffering him to pass the river undisturbed. He left the Via Flaminia, being informed, that a strong body of Goths guarded the narrow pass in the mountains called Petra Pertusa, now the Furlo, and, turning to the left, pursued his march towards Rome. In the mean time Totila, having assembled all his forces in the neighbourhood of that city, marched through Tuscany towards the Apennine, and, having reached that mountain, encamped at a village called Tagiria, with a design to give the Romans battle upon the first advantage that offered. He had scarce formed his camp, when Narses came to encamp on the same mountain, at a small distance from the place, which was memorable for the defeat of the Gauls by Camillus, and was called Busta Gallorum, because the Gauls slain by him were buried there. Narses, upon his arrival, dispatched a messenger to Totila, advising him not to contend with the whole strength of the empire, commanding the messenger at the same time, if he found Narses arrives with a great army in Italy.

He is met by Totila.

Totila

Totila bent upon war, to bid him appoint a day for a pitched battle. Totila, without betraying the least fear, told the messenger, that the dispute must be decided with the sword ; and that, eight days after, he would not fail to meet the Roman general. Narses, suspecting some design in this delay, made the necessary preparations, as if he were to fight the day following : and acted therein very wisely ; for the next day Totila advanced with his whole army in order of battle. Narses had in the night detached fifty men to seize on an eminence at a small distance ; which they did accordingly. But Totila, equally desirous to gain it, sent several detachments of horse, one after the other, to dislodge them. The Romans stood their ground, and, being animated by the example of their leader, named Paul, who behaved with unparalleled bravery, they continually repulsed the enemy, and obliged them in the end to give over the attempt, though far superior to the Romans in number, and supported by fresh supplies. While both armies stood in battle-array, waiting the signal, a Goth, by name Cocas, who had formerly served in the emperor's army, advancing before the ranks, challenged any on the Roman side to a single combat. The challenge was readily accepted by one Anzelas an Armenian, who slew his insulting adversary at the first encounter ; and, returning to his companions, was received with joyful shouts by the whole army, who looked upon his success as an omen of their future victory. Totila, being informed, that a body of two thousand horse, whom he had long expected, were near at hand, in order to gain time, desired an interview with Narses ; but before the place was agreed on where they were to meet, the two thousand horse joined the army ; and then Totila drew off his troops, and ordered them to refresh themselves, as if he did not intend to engage that day, it being already noon ; but soon after, he suddenly led them out against the enemy, hoping, by so unexpected an onset, to surprise them. But Narses, who suspected his design, and therefore had kept his men in battle-array, received him with great resolution. Both armies fought for some time with a fury hardly to be expressed ; but in the end the Gothic horse being put to the rout, and retiring in great confusion among the foot, their infantry was by that means thrown into such disorder, that they could never afterwards rally. Narses, observing the enemy's army thus disordered, killed.

And Totila

encouraged his men to make a last effort ; which the Goths not being able to withstand, they betook themselves to flight, leaving six thousand of their men dead on the spot. Totila, finding the day irrecoverably lost, fled, attended only by five horsemen ; but was pursued, and mortally wounded, by a commander of the Gepidæ, named Asbades. However, he continued his flight till he arrived at a place called Capræ, where he halted, and had his wound dressed ; but he expired soon after, and was privately buried by those who attended him in his flight. As Asbades, who gave him the mortal wound, did not know him, the report of his death was not believed by the Romans, till a Gothic woman having discovered the place where he was buried, they opened the grave, and viewed the body^r. Thus Procopius. But other writers tell us, that Totila was mortally wounded in the engagement ; that he withdrew to have his wound dressed, but died under the cure ; and that his men missing him, and concluding he was killed, betook themselves to a precipitous flight^s. Totila is highly commended by all the writers of those times, not only for his valour, but for his humanity, temperance, moderation, and, above all, for his justice and equity. Upon his accession to the throne, he found the affairs of the Goths in a most deplorable condition ; but brought them, in the eleven years he reigned, almost to the same state, in which Theodoric had left them. Totila, says Paulus Diaconus, though a Goth, lived with the Romans like a father with his children, without making the least alteration in their laws, or form of government. Procopius, though a Greek, and consequently no friend to the Goths, could not help extolling, on several occasions, his mildness and clemency to the vanquished. The same writer often commends him as a great lover of justice and equity. In the many cities he reduced, he took particular care, that no affront should be offered to the women ; and even put to death one of his officers for abusing the daughter of a Roman in Calabria, though he was a man of known valour, and the whole army interceded in his behalf : his estate, which was very considerable, he bestowed on the woman, to make some amends for the affront that had been offered her. In short, all the writers who speak of Totila, represent him

as

^r Idem ibid. c. 28, 29.
l. xvii. c. 13.

^s Evagr. l. iv. c. 24. Niceth.

as a person endued with every good quality becoming a prince.

SUCH of the Goths as had the good luck to escape the swords of the Romans, fled over the Po, and assembling at Ticinum, now Pavia, chose Teia for their king. He was deservedly esteemed one of the most valiant men of their nation, and had on several occasions distinguished himself in a most eminent manner. His first care was to assemble the Goths, who, after the late defeat, had taken refuge in several strong-holds beyond the Po. Having secured the treasure, which his predecessor had left in Pavia, he endeavoured to draw the Franks to his assistance by the offer of a large sum, and by representing to Theodebald their king, that, if the Romans once recovered Italy, they would, in the next place, attempt, under some specious pretence, to drive them out of Gaul, to which they had no better claim, than the Goths had to Italy. The speech which the ambassadors of the Goths made on this occasion to Theodebald, has been transmitted to us, by Agathias^t, and is well worth perusing. But the Franks, says Procopius, could not be prevailed upon to lend the Goths any assistance, chusing rather to seize on Italy for themselves, than to employ their arms in securing it either to the Goths, or the Romans^u.

IN the mean time Narses, informed that the Goths had raised Teia to the throne, and that he was assembling his countrymen beyond the Po, detached Valerianus, with part of the army, to watch their motions, and prevent, if possible, their uniting, while he himself marched with the rest towards Rome. On his march he made himself master of Narnia, Spoletum, and Perugia; and then, approaching Rome, invested it with his whole army. Totila, before the arrival of Narses in Italy, had burnt great part of the city; and, not having a sufficient number of men to guard the whole circuit of so large a place, he had surrounded with a new wall that part of it near Adrian's tomb, which seemed to him the most strong and defensible. Into this, as we may call it, fortress or castle, the Goths retired with their best effects, at the approach of Narses, leaving but a small number of men to defend the walls where they seemed weakest; so that the Romans,

I i 4 by

^t Agath. l. i. p. 27.

^u Procop. l. iv. c. 34.

by the help of scaling ladders, got into the city without opposition. Then Narses marched against the castle, which held out for some time ; but the garrison despairing of relief, surrendered in the end upon promise from Narses, that their lives should be spared. Thus was Rome once more recovered by the Romans, and the keys sent again to the emperor. And now the Goths despairing of being able to maintain themselves in Italy, vented their rage on the Roman senators, killing them where-ever they fell into their hands. Such of that body as had been confined by Totila, to Campania, and were now returning to Rome, upon the report, that the city was in the emperor's hands, were all murdered by the Goths quartered in those parts. Totila, upon his leaving Rome to march against Narses, had taken with him, as hostages, the children of the principal Romans, to the number of three hundred, and sent them beyond the Po ; and now Teia finding them there, ordered them all to be put to the sword. At the same time Ragnaris, a Goth, who commanded in Calabria, cut in pieces fifty Roman soldiers, who had been delivered to him as hostages. Teia, during the siege of Rome, had conveyed the best part of the royal treasures to the castle of Cumæ, and secured it there with a strong garrison. Hereupon Narses detached from Rome, where he continued to repair the ruins in the walls, a strong detachment to besiege Cumæ, and at the same time another to attempt the reduction of Centumcellæ. But Teia, fearing the royal treasure might fall into the enemy's hands, resolved at all events to relieve the city of Cumæ, where it was lodged. Pursuant to this resolution, he drew together all his forces, and passing the Po, bent his march through Tuscany. Narses, informed of the route he had taken, detached the greater part of his army to keep him at bay, till Cumæ had submitted. But he, avoiding the nearest way, and fetching a great compass by the sea-coast, got, without meeting the enemy, into Campania. Hereupon Narses, recalling his forces, marched with his whole army into Campania, with a design to oblige the Goths, if they attempted the relief of Cumæ, to come to a general engagement. Both armies encamped at the foot of mount Vesuvius, being parted by the river Draco, now Sarno, and continued there two months, Narses not daring either to pass the river, the Goths being masters of the bridge, or retire lest they should relieve

Narses takes Rome.

The cruelty of the Goths towards the Romans.

Teia marches to the relief of Cumæ besieged by
the Romans.

relieve the city of Cumæ. But at length Narfes having erected on his fide of the river feveral wooden towers, whence the Goths were galled with continual fhowers of arrows, and by a fleet fent him from Sicily, cut off their communication with the fea, they were forced through want of provifions, to abandon their camp, and retire to a neighbouring mountain, by Procopius called Mons Lactarius. Thither Narfes followed them; but, not thinking it fafe to attack them, he made himfelf mafter of all the avenues leading to the mountain, and by that means reduced them to fuch ftreights, that they refolved in the end to put the whole to the iffue of a battle. Pursuant to this refolution, they came unexpectedly upon the Romans, and gave a beginning to one of the moft bloody battles, if Procopius is to be credited, that ever was fought. The Goths, like men in defpair, exerted their utmoft efforts; and the Romans chofe rather to die on the spot, than fhamefully yield to an enemy fo much inferior to them in number. During the action, Teia gave moft furprifing proofs of his valour and conduct, fuch as equalled him, in the opinion of Procopius, to the moft renowned heroes of antiquity. Being well apprifed, that the whole lay at ftake, and that the fate of Italy depended upon the fuccefs of that day, he placed himfelf in the firft rank, to encourage his men by his example. The Romans difcovering him, and knowing that his death would put an end to the difpute, and in all likelihood to the war, directed their whole force againft him, fome attacking him with their fpears, and others difcharging at him fhowers of darts and arrows, which he received on his fhield, killing in the mean time great numbers of the enemy, who, with all their efforts, were not able to make him retire, or yield one inch of ground. When his fhield was fo loaded with darts, that he could not eafily wield it, he called for another, and, renewing the fight, made a great flaughter of the Romans. Thus he fhifted his fhield three times; but, in the third change, having left his breaft expofed, he was, in that moment, wounded with a javelin, and infantly died of the wound, falling in the place where he had ftood from the beginning of the battle, and upon heaps of the enemy, whom he had killed with his own hand. The Romans, feeing him fall, cut off his head, and fixing it upon a long pole, carried it about expofed to the view of the Goths, not doubting but, difheartened

A bloody battle.

Teia flain.

at

at that fight, they would yield in the end, and retire. But, notwithstanding the death of their king, they continued the fight, till night coming on, both armies were obliged to retire. Early next morning they engaged anew and fought with unparallelled bravery, till night again parted them. The third day, the Goths, despairing of being able to overcome the Romans, so much superior to them in numbers, resolved to come to an agreement with them; and accordingly sent deputies to Narses, offering to lay down their arms, provided such of them as chose to live in Italy, were allowed to enjoy their estates and possessions without molestation, as subjects of the empire; and those who were willing to retire elsewhere, were suffered to carry with them all their goods and effects.

The Goths
submit to the emperor.

These terms being readily agreed to by Narses, and the commanders of the army, the Goths, laying down their arms, either repaired to their respective dwellings in Italy, or, abandoning that country, retired with their effects elsewhere, after having promised never to bear arms against the Romans^u. Thus ended the dominion of the Goths in Italy, in the twenty-sixth year of Justinian's reign, the eighteenth of the Gothic war, and of the christian æra 553, after they had reigned sixty-four years in that country from Theodoric to Teia.

The end of their dominion in Italy.
Year after Christ 553.

The Franks
enter Italy.

SUCH of the Goths however, as had been left by Teia, in strong-holds, refusing to stand to the agreement made by their countrymen, had recourse to the Franks, who thinking this a favourable opportunity of seizing Italy, for themselves, promised to assist them against the Romans to the utmost of their power. Accordingly, they entered Italy, notwithstanding their alliance with the emperor, to the number of sixty thousand men, most of them the subjects of Theudebald king of Metz, under the conduct of the two brothers Leutharis, and Bucilinus, giving out, that they were come to assist the Goths, but with a view to make themselves masters of Italy, with the assistance of those whom they pretended to protect. Narses, informed of their march, resolved to reduce, if possible, before their arrival, such towns as were still held by the Goths. Having therefore left part of his army before Cumæ, which city Teia had committed to the charge of his brother Ali-

^u Procop. l. iv. c. 34, 35.

Chap. 15. The History of the Ostrogoths in Italy. 507

Aligern, who refused to deliver it up to the Romans, even after the agreement, he marched into Tuscany, where the cities of Volaterræ, Pisæ, Fesulæ, and several others, submitted to him; but Lucca held out with great obstinacy, the Goths there expecting to be relieved by the Franks. ^{Several cities held by the Goths submit to Narses.} But the march of their pretended allies being retarded by the troops, which Narses had sent to dispute with them the passage of the Po, the city, after three months siege, was obliged to submit. By this time Aligern, being reduced to great straits, in Cumæ, began to consider with himself, that if the Franks, who were coming to his assistance, should in the end drive the Romans out of Italy, the Goths would be no gainers by their victory, since it was not to be doubted, but the Franks whose treachery was well known, instead of reinstating the Goths, would secure the country in dispute to themselves. He therefore judged it more reasonable to deliver it up to the ancient owners, than to strangers; and accordingly, opening the gates to the Romans, he put them in possession of the town, and the royal treasure of the Goths. There were still remaining seven thousand Goths, who being ^{Seven thousand Goths besieged in} headed by one Regnares, had seized a strong-hold near ^{Cassinum.} Capua, called Cassinum. Against them Narses marched with his whole army; but, finding he could not storm the place without great loss of men, he resolved to reduce it by famine. The Goths, who had laid up great store of provisions, held out all winter; but, early in the spring, Regnares demanded a conference with Narses; which being granted him, he insisted upon such unreasonable terms, that the general dismissed him with indignation. This Regnares resented to such a degree, that having gained a hill near the walls, he let fly an arrow at Narses, with a design to kill him; but, having missed his aim, the general's guards sent a shower of arrows after him, with one of which being mortally wounded, he was carried by his own men into the castle, where he died two days after. The besieged disheartened by the death of their leader, submitted, upon promise that their lives should be spared. Narses, being admitted into the place, ^{They deliver up the place to Narses,} spared their lives, agreeable to his promise; but, to prevent their raising any further disturbance in Italy, he sent them all to Constantinople^w. As for the Franks, who who had entered Italy under the conduct of Leutharis and Bucelinus, their numerous army was entirely destroyed, partly by the sword, and partly by sickness, as we shall relate at length in a more proper place ; so that now all Italy was anew brought under subjection to the emperor, and united to the eastern empire, some of the Goths retiring elsewhere, but most of them remaining in Italy, where they continued to enjoy, pursuant to their agreement with Narses, the lands and possessions which they held there. Narses, who had delivered that country from the dominion of the Goths, was appointed by Justinian to govern it as a province of the eastern empire, which he did to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants, till the year

^w Agath. l. i, p. 32. & l. ii. p. 85.

Narses recalled, and Longinus sent in his room.
Year after Christ, 568.

568, when he was recalled by the emperor Justin II. the successor of Justinian, at the instigation of his wife Sophia, and Longinus was sent to govern Italy in his room.

As Longinus introduced a new form of government, we shall in a few words, acquaint the reader with the alterations he made, and then proceed to the history of the Lombards, with which that of the exarchs, the successors of Longinus, is inseparably interwoven. The provinces of Italy had, ever since the time of Constantine the Great, been governed by consulares, correctores, and præfides, no alteration in the government having been made, either by the emperors who succeeded Constantine, or by the kings of the Goths. But Longinus, being sent to succeed Narses with an absolute power and authority, suppressed those magistrates, and, in their room placed, in each city of note, a governor, whom he distinguished with the title of duke. The city of Rome was not more honoured than any other ; for Longinus, having abolished the very name of senate and consuls, appointed one to govern that metropolis with the title of duke, common to the governors of the other cities. For himself, he took the title of exarch, which by the Greeks, was given to those who presided over a diocese, and consequently over the many provinces, of which the diocese was composed. Thus likewise in the ecclesiastic hierarchy, which was formed upon the model of the civil government, the bishop who was put over one single province, was styled metropolitan ; but he, who governed a diocese, and consequently several provinces, was distinguished with the title of exarch. This title was adopted by the successors of Longinus, who, residing as he had done, at Ravenna, were thence called the exarchs of Ravenna. They governed all Italy, naming and removing the dukes at their pleasure, and to them the people had recourse in all matters of moment. Longinus was sent by Justin to govern all Italy; but great part of that country, in the first year of his government, was seized on by the Lombards, called in by Narfes, as we have related at length elsewhere*. This magistrate maintained the power and authority of the emperors of the east in Italy for the space of an hundred and eighty-three years, that is, from the year 568, when Longinus was sent into Italy, to the year 751, when Eutychius, the last exarch, was driven out, and Ravenna taken by Astulphus king of the Lombards. The exarchs who governed Italy during this time, were in all seventeen, viz. Longinus, Zamaragdus, Romanus, Callinicus, Zamaragdus, Joannes Lernigius, Eleutherius, Isaacius, Theodorus, Olympius, Theodorus, Joannes, Theophylactus, Joannes Tyzocopus, Scholasticus, Paulus, and Eutychius. But as the Lombards were the only people, that invaded Italy during their time, and with whom they waged war in defence of that country, we cannot, without repeating the same things, separately deliver their respective histories; and therefore shall now, pursuant to our plan, resume the history of the Lombards, in which the reader will find whatever has been transmitted to us concerning the exarchs, till the taking of Ravenna by Astulphus, and the end of the exarchate.

The beginning of the exarchate.

of

The names of the exarchs.

* Vide p. 381.

† Scalig. isagog.

S E C T. II.

The history of the Lombards, from the death of Clephis, to Desiderius, taken captive by Charlemagne.

IN the foregoing chapter, we have delivered the history of the Lombards, from their first original to the death of Clephis, the successor of Alboin, and second king of Italy^a, and shall now proceed to the history of the other princes

^a Vide supra, p. 374—390.

The Lombards break into Gaul.

Receive a great overthrow from the Franks.

The Saxons and Lombards disagree

The Saxons turn home, are most of them cut by the princes of that nation, to Desiderius their last king, taken captive by Charlemagne. The Lombards, upon the death of Clephis, who had treated them with great cruelty, resolved to be no more governed by kings; and accordingly chose none for the space of ten years, but, during that time, lived subject to their dukes, as we have related elsewhere^b. The most powerful among these dukes, uniting their forces, entered Gaul and committed there dreadful ravages. Gontran, king of Orleans, dispatched a considerable army against them, under the conduct of Amatus, a patrician, who engaged them but was cut off, with the greater part of the army. After this victory, the Lombards ravaged Burgundy without controul, made a dreadful slaughter of the Burgundians, who attempted to oppose them, and then returned home, enriched with an immense booty. Encouraged with this success, they returned soon after, and, laying the country waste, advanced as far as Ebrodunum or Ambrun, where they were met by Ennius, called also Mummulus, at the head of a strong body of Burgundians, who cut them off almost to a man^c. About this time, that is, about the year 578, the Saxons, who, as we have related elsewhere^d, had attended the Lombards into Italy, and were, by an agreement with Alboinus, to share with him his future conquests, falling out with their old friends and allies, resolved to quit Italy, and return to their own country. They pretended to live quite independent of the Lombards, and in a distinct body; which the Lombards not consenting to, they left Italy with their wives, and families, and took their route homewards through Gaul. But Mummulus, one of Gontran's captains, meeting them on the confines, killed a great number of them, took many prisoners and forced the rest to repass the Alps. However, they returned anew, and having with a considerable sum, purchased a passage of Mummulus, who met them at the Rhône, they returned to their antient seats; but found them possessed by the Suani, who, unwilling to quarrel with them, offered them two-thirds of the lands. This offer being rejected with indignation by the Saxons, a bloody battle was fought, in which twenty thousand Saxons were killed, and on the side of the Suani only four hundred and eighty. The Saxons, who remained alive, being about six thousand ^b Vide supra, p. 390, supra, p. 384.

^c Greg. Tar. l. iv. c. 36.

^d Vide thousand in number, renewed the battle ; but were again defeated, and obliged to submit to the terms, which the Suani were pleased to grant them^c. But to return to the Lombards : Three of their dukes, viz. Amo, Zaban, and Rhodanus, notwithstanding the overthrow their countrymen had lately received in Gaul, broke anew into that country, and, dividing themselves into three bodies, laid it waste far and near. But Mummulus, falling upon them before they could unite their forces, cut great numbers of them in pieces, and obliged the rest to quit their booty, and return through by-ways into Italy. Thither a party of Franks followed them, who made themselves masters of a strong-hold in the neighbourhood of Trent, and, having killed Ragilo, who came to oppose them, pillaged the country to the very gates of Trent. But Euin, duke of that city, sallying unexpectedly out against them, cut most of them off, with their leader Charamnichis, and pursued the rest to the Alps, which they passed, leaving their booty behind them, and returned home^d. At the same time the Lombards extended their conquests in Italy, and, having defeated the forces of the exarch Longinus, reduced the cities of Sutri, Bomarzo, Orta, Todi, Amelia, Perugia, Luceoli, and several others of less importance. But in the mean time Tiberius, who had succeeded Justin, dying, Mauritius, who was chosen in his room, alarmed at the progress the Lombards made in Italy, resolved to put a stop to their victories, and, if possible, to drive them quite out. With this view, he recalled Longinus, whom he judged no-ways equal to such an undertaking, and sent Zamaragdus in his room, a person of great prudence, and well-skilled in military affairs. Zamaragdus landed at Ravenna with a considerable army in the beginning of the year 584, and, taking the field early in the spring, made himself master of Broxillus, now Brisfello, a place of great strength on the Po. He likewise prevailed upon Droctulf, an officer of great experience, to revolt from the Lombards, who had raised him, though by nation a Suevian, to the rank of a duke, and to bring over with him a considerable number of men. At the same time Mauritius, concerting other measures to deliver Italy from the yoke of the Lombards, had recourse to Childebert

^c Paul. Diac. de gest. Long. l. iii.

^d Greg. Tur. ibid.

debert king of the Franks, and, with a large sum, prevailed upon him to engage in the war against the Lombards. This confederacy, and the vast preparations made both by Zamaragdus and Childebert, alarmed the Lombards to such a degree, that, apprehending they should not be able to withstand two such powerful enemies, so long as they continued divided, as it were, into so many petty kingdoms, they resolved to restore their antient form of government, to submit anew to the authority of one single person, and to commit to him the whole management of so dangerous a war. Pursuant to this resolution, they assembled in 585, and, with one voice, raised Autharis, the son of Clephis, to the throne. Autharis, with his valour and prudence, so established the kingdom of the Lombards, that, in spite of the utmost efforts of the Roman emperors, it lasted for the space of two hundred years. He had no sooner mounted the throne, than he undertook the recovery of Brissello, being resolved, as it was a place of the utmost importance, to force it, by all means, out of the enemy's hands. But Droctulf, who was in the town, and expected, if he were taken, to be treated with the utmost severity by the Lombards, made such a vigorous defence, that the siege continued a long time; but the garrison being in the end reduced to great straits, Droctulf found means to withdraw in the night, and repair to Ravenna, with such of his men as were able to follow him. Autharis, being thus master of the place, dismantled it, that it might no longer serve as a place of refuge to the enemy, in case it should fall into their hands. After the reduction of Brissello, he put his troops into winter-quarters, the season being already far advanced, and employed himself till the following spring, partly in settling the affairs of the kingdom, and partly making the necessary preparations for the ensuing campaign ^e. In the first place, he took upon him the name of Flavius, and ordered it to be used, in imitation of the Roman emperors, by all the Lombard kings towards their successors ^f. In the second place, considering that the dukes, who, for the space of ten years, had ruled with an absolute sway over their respective dukedoms, would not willingly part with all their authority, he allowed them to continue in their governments; but obliged them to contribute one moiety of their revenues towards the maintenance

The royal authority restored among them, and Autharis
made king.
Year after Christ 585.

He retakes Brissello.

His conduct towards the dukes.

^e Paul. Dia. ibid. c. 7.

^f Idem, l. iii. c. 8.

tenance and support of his royal dignity, suffering them to dispose of the other as they pleased. He reserved to himself the supreme dominion and authority, and took an oath of the dukes, that, in time of war, they would readily assist him to the utmost of their power. Tho' he could remove the dukes at his pleasure, yet he deprived none of their dukedoms, except in cases of treason, nor gave them to others, but when their male issue failed &c. And this was the origin of the fiefs in Italy. Some have imagined, that fiefs of fiefs in were first introduced by the Lombards, and, in imitation of Italy. them, adopted by other nations. But they are therein certainly mistaken, since it is manifest from Aimoinus^h and Gregory of Toursⁱ, that fiefs had been introduced into Gaul by the Franks some years before the reign of Autharis, who first established them in Italy. Gregory of Tours tells us, that in the year 574, that is, eleven years before Autharis was raised to the throne, king Guntran deprived one Erpon of his dukedom, and created another in his room^k. Paulus Æmilius and Cujaccius observe, that, when dukedoms were first instituted in Gaul, the king removed the dukes at his pleasure; but that a custom afterwards obtained, that they were not to be removed, unless convicted of treason, or some other enormous crime. At last the kings, by an oath, confirmed them in the dukedoms, which at first they held only during pleasure^l. Thus were the fiefs first introduced by the Franks into Gaul, and a few years after by the Lombards, in imitation of the Franks, into Italy^m. However, it must be owned, that fiefs, in some degree, owe their origin to the Roman emperors, who for the greater security of the frontiers of the empire, used to grant to the officers and soldiers lands on the confines, as a reward for their long service. By this grant, which was called beneficium, the soldiers were encouraged to defend, with all their might, the frontiers of the empire, since they defended, at the same time, their lands and estatesⁿ. All the customs and laws, which were afterwards introduced and published concerning fiefs, are owing to the Lombards, ^g Idem ibid. Sigon. de reg. Ital. l. i. Regin. l. i. p. 517.

^h Aimoin. l. i. c. 14. ⁱ Greg. Tur. l. iv. c. 45. ^k Idem,

l. vii. c. 22, & l. x. p. 19. ^l Paul. Æmil. de reb. Franc.

l. i. & Cujac. de feud. in princ. p. 38. ^m Molin. in consuet. Paris. tit. de feud. num. 13. ⁿ Vide Lamprid. apud Loyseau des offices, l. i. c. 1, num. 104.

He embraces the christian religion.

Childebert,
king of the Franks, enters Italy ;
but is persuaded by Autharis to retire.

He returns ;
but his army is entirely defeated.

Lombards, who gave them a certain and regular form ; so that, among all other nations, successions, acquisitions, investitures, and every thing else relating to fiefs, were regulated by the customs and laws of the Lombards. Hereupon a new body of laws sprung up, which were called feudal laws, and still are in some provinces of Italy, especially in the present kingdom of Naples, the chief part of the jurisprudence. But to return to Autharis : Having settled matters with the dukes in the manner we have related above, he enacted several wholesome and seasonable laws against theft, rapine, murder, adultery, and other crimes, which, at that time, prevailed among his subjects. He was the first of the Lombard kings, who, renouncing paganism, embraced the christian religion ; and his example was followed by most of his subjects. But as they were all instructed by Arian bishops, they continued long infected with that heresy ; which occasioned great disputes between them and the orthodox bishops of the cities subject to them.

AUTHARIS, having settled the affairs of the kingdom during the winter, received news early in the spring, that Childebert king of the Franks had, pursuant to his agreement with the emperor Mauritius, passed the Alps at the head of a powerful army. Hereupon, being well apprised, that he had not sufficient strength to withstand him in the field, he ordered his dukes to provide their cities with strong garrisons, and to wait on their walls the arrival of the enemy, sending at the same time ambassadors to Childebert, with rich presents, to sue for peace. This conduct was attended with the wished for success ; for Childebert, considering it would prove a very tedious and difficult undertaking to lay siege to so many cities, accepted the presents sent him by Autharis, and returned home. Of this the emperor Mauritius loudly complained, and, reproaching Childebert with breach of faith, insisted upon his returning the money he had received, viz. fifty thousand solidi, for making war on the Lombards, if he did not, within the time prefixed, perform his engagements. Hereupon Childebert, unwilling to return the money, and, on the other hand, thinking himself bound in honour to perform some remarkable service in favour of his ally worthy of so large a sum, raised a far more numerous army than he had before ; and, having supplied them with every thing necessary for the expedition, he ordered them to march, under the conduct of his best generals, into Italy. Autharis had formerly, merly, as we have related above, declined coming to a battle, and, acting only defensively, had kept his troops within the fortified towns. But, now, considering, that if he should have the good luck to crush so powerful an enemy, other nations, as well as the Franks, would be thereby deterred from invading his dominions, he resolved to alter his conduct, and meet the enemy in the open field. With this view, he drew together all the forces he had, and, having encouraged them with a seasonable speech, he marched in quest of the enemy, and offered them battle. The challenge being readily accepted by the Franks, a bloody engagement ensued, in which both armies fought with a fury hardly to be expressed ; but the Franks were in the end utterly defeated. The Lombards pursued them in their flight with great slaughter, and obliged such of them as had the good luck to escape, to take refuge among the barren mountains, where most of them perished with hunger and cold ; so that very few of them got safe to their own country. Childebert, to revenge the loss of this army, Italy invaded sent another, twenty thousand men strong, under the conduct of Anduald, Olo, and Cedinus, three generals of known valour, and long experience in war. Olo laid siege to a strong castle called Bilitio, where he was killed with an arrow, and most of his men cut off in a sally by the besieged.

Cedinus took some strong-holds in Cisalpine Gaul, now Lombardy. And Anduald, advancing as far as Verona, laid some open places in ashes, carrying with him the inhabitants into captivity, contrary to the articles of the treaty between him and the emperor. But in the mean time di-stempers beginning to rage among the Franks, occasioned by the hot season, and want of provisions, and the Lombards keeping, as they had done formerly, within their fortified towns, the generals of the Franks thought it advisable to return home, lest the Lombards should fall upon them, after their army had been considerably weakened by the distempers that daily swept off great numbers. On their return, they were reduced to such streights, that they were forced first to sell their clothes, and at last their arms, to purchase provisions *. Autharis, thus delivered from all fear of so powerful an enemy, resolved to employ his whole strength in subjecting such provinces of Italy, as were still held by the Romans. He had already made himself master of all the Italy invaded anew by the Franks.

Who return home with great loss.

K k 2

hither

* Greg. Tur. l. iv. c. 47. Paul. Diac. l. iii. c. 9.

Autharis reduces Sam-nium and the city of Benevento.

hither Italy, except the dukedom of Rome, and the exarchate, which was at that time governed by Romanus, who had succeeded Zamaragdus, and comprised the present Bolognese, Romagna, the duchy of Urbino, and great-part of Picenum, now La Marca. The provinces, which make up the present kingdom of Naples, were still in the hands of the Romans, the chief cities being governed, according to the form of government which Longinus had introduced, by their dukes, who were all immediately under the exarch. But the most powerful among them, viz. the dukes of Naples, Surrento, Amalfi, Tarento, and Gaeta, despising the exarchs, ruled almost with an absolute sway ; which has induced some to imagine, that these cities were absolutely free ; whereas nothing is more certain in history, than that they acknowledged the emperor for their sovereign, tho' they often refused to obey the exarch. As these provinces lay at a great distance from Pavia, the royal seat of the Lombards, and could receive speedy succours by sea, in case they were attacked, the emperors kept but small garrisons in the cities, being obliged to employ all the forces they could spare in the Persian war, which lay heavy upon them at the same time. Of this Autharis was well apprised, and therefore, leaving Rome and Ravenna behind him, which were defended by numerous garrisons, in the spring of the year 589, he appointed his troops to rendezvous at Spoletum, and, pretending to march elsewhere, turned all on a sudden, and entered Samnium, which province, together with the city of Benevento, he reduced almost without opposition. Encouraged with this success, he over-ran all Calabria, and, advancing as far as Rhegium on the farthest point of Italy, he rid into the sea, and striking with his lance a pillar, that stood near the shore, Thus far, said he, shall the bounds of the Lombards extend. This pillar was still standing in the days of our historian, and known by the name of Autharis's pillar^p. Autharis, on his return into Samnium, reduced that province to a dukedom, appointing Zoto, or Zotto, first duke of Benevento, which he made the metropolis of Samnium^q. Thus to the two famous dukedoms of Friuli and Spoleti was added a third, which, in process of time, became as much superior to the other two, as they exceeded the other dukedoms of Italy. Some authors, and among the rest Camillus Peregrinus, are of opinion, that the dukedom of Benevento was founded founded before the time of Autharis^r ; but all agree, that Zotto was the first who governed that city and province with the title of duke. This dukedom, by degrees, extended its limits, so as to comprise the far greater part of the present kingdom of Naples. Autharis, after the reduction of Samnium, resolved to carry the war into the exarchate and the dukedom of Rome ; but, apprehending he might be diverted anew by Childebert king of the Franks from pursuing his conquests, he thought it adviseable to conclude a peace, if possible, with so troublesome and powerful an enemy. Accordingly, he dispatched embassadors to Guntran, uncle to Childebert, hoping, by his mediation, to lay the foundations of a lasting peace with the king of the Franks. Guntran readily interposed ; but Autharis did not live to see the success of the mediation, being in the mean time taken off by poison. He died in Pavia on the thirteenth of September, 590, after having reigned about six years ; but the author of his death was never known^s. Autharis had married Theudelinda, the daughter of Garibald, king of the Boioarians ; but as he had not children by her, the Lombards, upon the news of his death, assembled in Pavia to chuse a new king ; but not being able to agree among themselves in the choice, they referred the whole affair to Theudelinda, having first settled among themselves, that the person she should chuse among the dukes for her husband, should be invested with the royal dignity ; so great was the opinion they had of the wisdom and prudence of that excellent princess, who, to shew herself worthy of the confidence they reposed in her, after having consulted the wisest men of the nation, by their advice, bestowed herself and the kingdom on Agilulf duke of Turin, a person of extraordinary merit, and nearly related to the late king. Her choice being applauded by the whole nation, Agilulf, after his marriage, was crowned king of the Lombards in a full assembly held at Milan in the month of May 591.

^p Paul, Diac. l. iii. c. 16.

^q Idem, ibid.

The first duke of Benevento.

Autharis dies. Year after Christ 590.

Agilulf chosen king. Year after Christ 591.

In the first year of his reign died Zotto, the first duke of Benevento, of whom we find nothing in history worthy of notice, except his plundering and destroying the famous monastery of Monte Casino, built about sixty years before by St. Benedict, and already wonderfully enriched with the donations of several princes^t. Upon his death, Agilulf appointed

K k 3

^r Cam. Per. in dissert. de duc. Benevent. dissert. 1. ^s Paul. Diac. l. iii. c. 18. ^t Greg. Mag. dialog. l. ii. c. 17. Abb. de Nuce chron. Casin. l. i. c. 2.

A rechis second duke of Benevento.

pointed Arechis, cousin to Gilulphus duke of Friuli, to succeed him in the dukedom of Benevento. The dukes, according to the regulations introduced by Autharis, could only in cases of treason be deprived of their dukedoms; and, upon their death, they were succeeded by their male issue, if the king judged them capable of so great a command. If the duke died without issue male, the king was at full liberty either to chuse another in his room, or to suppress the dukedom: and truly several dukedoms were suppressed by the present king, the dukes having attempted to shake off all dependency, and to usurp an absolute power in their respective districts. The example of Agilulf was followed by his successors, who, declining to appoint new dukes in the room of those who died without issue male, reduced, by degrees, the dukedoms to a very small number. During the government of Arechis, which lasted for the space of fifty years, that is, from the year 591, to 641, the bounds of the dukedom of Benevento were greatly extended; for, at that prince's death, they reached on one side to the city of Naples, and on the other to Sipontum, at the foot of mount Garganus in Apulia. But to return to Agilulf: He was, soon after his election, persuaded by Theudelinda, who had been brought up in the catholic religion, to renounce the errors of Arius; and his example was followed by great numbers of his subjects, some of them abjuring paganism, and others the doctrine of Arius, to embrace the orthodox faith. Hence Theudelinda is highly commended by Gregory the Great, who inscribed to her the four books of the lives of the saints, which he had composed. She had done all that lay in her power to induce Autharis, her first husband, to profess the catholic faith; but to no purpose, that prince refusing to quit the religion in which he had been brought up^a. Agilulf, in the third year of his reign, was forced to turn his arms against his own countrymen; for two of the dukes, viz. Minulf duke of the island of St. Julian, and Gaidulf duke of Bergamo, revolting from him, claimed an absolute authority in their respective districts. Agilulf marched against them, and, having found means to get Minulf into his power, he put him to death, because he had formerly revolted to the Franks, and joined Childebert in the irruption he made into Italy. As for Gaidulf, he besieged him in the city of Bergamo; but, upon his suing for peace, and submitting, he Agilulf embraces the catholic faith.

Some dukes rebel; but are reduced by Agilulf.

^a Paul. Diac. l. vi. c. 2.

he received him again into favour. About the same time Ulfaris, another duke, but of what place, we are not told, refusing to acknowledge the authority of Agilulf, raised great disturbances, which were quelled not without bloodshed; but Ulfaris not only obtained his pardon, but was confirmed by the king in his dukedom^w. While the arms of Agilulf were thus employed against the rebellious dukes, Romanus, who, as we have related above, had succeeded Zamaragdus in the exarchate, laying hold of so favourable an opportunity, broke the truce which he had lately made, and surpris'd several cities belonging to the Lombards. Hereupon the king, drawing together all his forces, marched against the exarch, who, at his approach, retired to Ravenna, leaving small gar-
The exarch surpris'd several cities.
risons in the towns he had taken. Upon his retreat, Agilulf easily recover'd the cities he had seiz'd. Only the city of Perugia held out for some time, being defended by Maurisius duke of the place, who had deliver'd it up to the Romans; but in the end the city was forced to surrender. Maurisius attempted to make his escape, but was taken, and, by the king's order put to death^x. From Perugia Agilulf march'd into the Roman dukedom, and, having laid it waste, encamp'd with his army at a small distance from the city; but Theudelinda, at the earnest request of Gregory the Great, then bishop of Rome, prevail'd upon her husband to grant a peace to the inhabitants of that city and retire^y. The prisoners taken by the Lombards on this occasion, were all ransom'd by Gregory the Great, the other catholic bishops generously contributing to so good a work^z. Paulus Diaconus takes no notice of the ravages committed by the Lombards in the dukedom of Rome; but supposes them to have return'd to Pavia after the taking of Perugia. However, from the letters of Gregory the Great, who flourish'd at that time, it is manifest, that they invaded the Roman dukedom, and laid it waste with fire and sword, for several months together. From a letter of this bishop to the empress Constantina it appears, that the inhabitants of those parts suffer'd more from the emperor's officers, than from the Lombards themselves; that the Corsicans in particular were loaded with such taxes, as oblig'd them to sell even their children, in order to raise money for the collectors; and that thereupon they repair'd in great numbers to the
The emperor's subjects oppress'd by his officers.
Lombards

K k 4

^w Idem l. iv. c. 14. ^x Idem, ibid. ^y Greg. Mag. l. iv. ep. 33. & l. vii. ep. 30. ^z Idem, ibid.

Lombards in Italy, leaving the island, in a manner desolate. In Sicily one Stephen, sent from Constantinople to guard the coasts of that island, committed such rapines, so many acts of violence and injustice, as hardly could be contained, says our prelate, in one volume. He therefore earnestly intreats the empress to acquaint her husband with these grievances, that, by speedily redressing them, he may avert the judgments, that must otherwise fall upon him and his family. He concludes his letter by telling her, it were far better Italy should want supplies of money, than that they should be raised in so scandalous a manner; and that the emperor's ministers, being at so great a distance from their master, promised themselves impunity, though guilty of the greatest extortions; and therefore defeated all his endeavours for concluding a peace with the Lombards, which, they knew, would take away all Agilulf concludes a peace with the Romans and Franks.

Three dukes rebel; but are overcome by Agilulf, and put to death.

The war with the Romans renewed.

pretence of levying such heavy taxes^a. A peace however was soon after concluded by means of the holy prelate, between Agilulf and the exarch Callinicus, who, upon the death of Romanus, had been sent from Constantinople to succeed him. At the same time Theodebert, the successor of Childebert, was in the end persuaded, not only to conclude a peace, but to enter into an alliance, with the king of the Lombards. This peace with the Romans and Franks proved very seasonable; for soon after, three of his dukes, rebelling, raised great disturbances in the kingdom, and gave rise to a civil war. These were Zangrulf duke of Verona, Gaidulf or Gandulf duke of Bergamo, and Warnecaut a third duke, but of what place we are not told. Agilulf, marching against them, gave them a total overthrow; and having taken them prisoners, he ordered them all three to be put to death, in order to deter, by their punishment, the other dukes from following their example. While he was yet engaged in this domestic war, the exarch Callinicus, in manifest breach of the treaty, which had been lately concluded, surprised the city of Parma, in which he found a considerable treasure, and took the king's daughter, and her husband Godescalc prisoners. This breach of faith in the exarch provoked the king of the Lombards to such a degree, that he resolved to pursue the war, which had been thus begun by the Romans, with the utmost vigour, and not to lay down his arms, till he had driven them, if possible, quite out out of Italy. Pursuant to this resolution, he entered into an alliance with Chagan king of the Avars, who was to make a powerful diversion in Thrace, while Agilulf carried on the war in Italy. The king of the Lombards, having raised a considerable army, and finding, that the exarch declined meeting him in the field, marched from Milan, where his troops was assembled, to Cremona, which city he invested on all sides. The Roman garrison made a vigorous resistance; but despairing of relief, they were obliged, after having held out for a month, to deliver up the place, which, by the king's orders, was levelled with the ground. From Cremona he led his army, reinforced by a body of Sclavi sent him by his ally the king of the Avars, against the cities of Padua and Mantua, which were both taken, plundered, and laid in ashes, the garrisons being allowed to retire to Ravenna, and the inhabitants to what place they thought fit. While Agilulf thus pursued his conquests in Italy, Chagan, breaking into Thrace, committed dreadful ravages there; and, having over-run both that province, and all Mæsia, approached the imperial city with his numerous army; which alarmed the inhabitants to such a degree, that they thought of quitting Europe, and retiring with their best effects to Chalcedon, and other places of Asia. But in the mean time Chagan was obliged to return home by a plague, which broke out in his army, and carried off seven of his sons in one day. Upon his departure, he offered to release all his prisoners, of whom he had twelve thousand, at a crown a head; but his offer being rejected by Mauritius, who was a prince of a narrow, parsimonious temper, Chagan, in great indignation, caused all the captives to be put to the sword. During this war died the exarch Callinicus, who had first begun it, as we have related above; and in his room was sent Zamaragdus to govern Italy a second time, with orders from the emperor to set at liberty the king's daughter, with her husband, and to restore the whole treasure, that had been seized by his predecessor in the city of Parma. By this obliging behaviour, Agilulf was so far won, as to grant the Romans a truce from the month of September till the following April^b.

^a Idem, l. iv. ep. 33.

From whom Agilulf takes several cities.

A truce with the Romans.

DURING the truce, Agilulf, having assembled the chief men of the nation at Milan, declared, in their presence, his son Adaluald for his colleague.

Year after Christ 605.

his son Adaluald, or, as others call him, Aldonald, yet an infant, his colleague, and caused him to be crowned in the open circus with great solemnity. After this the peace was renewed with Theodebert king of the Franks, whose ambassadors were present at the inauguration of the young prince; and a perpetual league concluded between the two nations. And now the truce with the Romans being expired, the Lombards began hostilities anew, seizing on two important posts, viz. Orbitum and Balneoregium; but the exarch, with twelve thousand solidi, prevailed upon the king to restore them, and to renew the truce for a whole year, which the king employed in embellishing and fortifying Ferrara, till that time an inconsiderable village, but conveniently situated on the Po, and on that account surrounded by Agilulf with walls, and beautified with several stately buildings; by which means it became, by degrees, one of the most considerable cities in those parts, and has continued as such ever since. In the mean time the truce between the king and the exarch expiring, Zamaragdus prevailed upon the king to renew it for three years longer.

Ferrara embellished by Agilulf.

The Hunns break into the dukedom of Friuli.

But, notwithstanding this truce, the inhabitants of Italy did not enjoy the tranquillity they had promised themselves: for Cakanus king of the Hunns, leaving Pannonia, made a sudden irruption into the dukedom of Friuli, destroying all with fire and sword. Hereupon duke Gilulf, having drawn together what forces he could, marched out against him; but, in the battle that ensued, he was overpowered by the enemy, and cut off, with most of his men. Cakanus, elated with this victory, laid siege to Forum Julii, the metropolis of the dukedom, which was betrayed to him by Romilda the deceased duke's widow, upon his promising to marry her; for she is said to have been greatly taken with the comeliness of the young prince in seeing him from the walls; but he, instead of performing his promise, caused her to be put to an ignominious death, after having abused her himself, and caused her to be in like manner abused by several of his soldiers, to gratify as he said her vicious inclination. The duke's sons, Tato, Caco, Rodoald, and Grimoald, found means to make their escape on horseback; but the latter being yet a child, was overtaken by some of the enemy's horse, and delivered to the custody of one of them, while the others pursued the rest. But while the Hunn rid before him leading

Forum Julii betrayed to them.

leading his horse, he all on a sudden gave him such a blow on the head with his sword, that he left him dead on the spot, and then riding full speed, overtook his brothers, and, together with them reached a neighbouring castle. The Hunns, upon their departure, carried with them all the inhabitants who had fallen into their hands, giving out that they designed to allot them lands in Pan-^{Theircruelty to the inha-}nonia; but, having reached the confines, they put all the men to the sword, and carried the women and children into captivity^c. While the Hunns were thus ravaging the dukedom of Friuli, great disturbances happened in Ravenna; for Johannes Lemigius, who had been sent by the emperor Heraclius to succeed Zamaragdus in the exarchate, levying heavier taxes on the people than they had formerly paid, the multitude, rising all on a sudden, broke into the palace, and there tore the exarch to pieces, together with the judges, whom he had called together for the administration of justice. ^{The exarch murdered.} When news of this mutiny was brought to Naples, Joannes Compositus, who governed that city for the emperor with the title of duke (S), thought he could not have a more

^c Idem ibid.

(S) The present kingdom of Naples was, at this time, held partly by the Romans, and partly by the Lombards. The dukedom of Benevento was governed by its own duke, who was subject to the king of the Lombards; Apulia, Calabria, Lucania, the country of the Brutii, the dukedoms of Naples, Gaeta, Surrento, Amalfi, and other smaller dukedoms, were governed by their dukes, according to the new polity introduced by Longinus the first exarch. These dukes were subject to the exarch, and he to the emperor. The dukedom of Naples had at first but very narrow bounds; for it comprised only the city of Naples, and its territory. But it was greatly enlarged by the emperor Mauritius, who added to it the islands of Ischia, Nisida, and Procida, and afterwards the cities of Cumæ, Stabia, Surrento, and Amalfi (1); which were comprised under the dukedom of Naples, till the time of Pope Adrian and Charles the Great, as is evident from a letter of that pope, quoted by the learned Camillus Pellegrinus (2). This dukedom being, by grin. dissent. de finib. duc. Benevent. p. 32.

(1) Greg. Mag. l. ix. ind. 4. ep. 53.

(2) Camill. Pelle-

The duke of Naples rebels

more favourable opportunity of shaking off all dependence, and making himself absolute lord of the city committed to his charge. Accordingly, he caused himself to be acknowledged by the inhabitants for their prince, and provided the city with a strong garrison, not doubting but forces would be soon dispatched against him either from Ravenna or Constantinople. And truly Heraclius, upon the first notice he had of the murder of the exarch, and the rebellion of the duke, appointed Eleutherius, his chamberlain, a person highly esteemed for his prudence and valour, to succeed Lemigius in the exarchate, enjoining him to appease the mutiny in Ravenna, and then march, with all the troops under his command, against Compositinus, the rebellious duke of Naples. Eleutherius, arriving at Ravenna, punished with death such as he found guilty of the murder of his predecessor; and having thus quelled the tumult, he set out on his march for Naples, with all the troops he could assemble. He took his route through by such additions, become a province, the name of Campania was given it, and the duke took the title of dux Campaniæ, or duke of Campania; which title Gregory the Great often bestows on Scolasticus and Gudiscalcus, dukes of Naples (3). This dukedom held out against the Lombards, after they had reduced almost all the cities in that part of Italy; nay, it was never by them entirely subdued, but only obliged to pay a yearly tribute to the dukes of Benevento, who in process of time, became very powerful. The dukes, who governed Naples, were usually appointed by the emperor himself; but, upon urgent occasions, the exarch was impowered to name a new duke. Thus Eleutherius, having put Compositinus to death, appointed another in his room; and several years before, the duke of Naples being dead, and the two dukes of Benevento and Spoleto uniting their forces, with a design, as was supposed, to fall upon the dukedom of Naples, Gregory the Great, apprehending that if the Lombards made themselves masters of that dukedom, they would easily reduce the rest of Italy, and Rome itself, wrote to John bishop of Ravenna, earnestly entreating him to represent to the exarch the danger that dukedom was in, and prevail upon him to send, without loss of time, a new duke (4).

(3) Greg. Mag. l. ii. ind. 11. ep. 1, 2. & 15.
l. ii. indic. 10. ep. 32.

(4) Idem,

through Rome, where he was received with high demonstrations of joy by the inhabitants, who were greatly attached to the emperors, and bore an utter aversion to the Lombards. From Rome the exarch pursued his march to Naples, where he was, for some time, vigorously opposed by the garrison ; but having in the end made himself master of the city, he put the duke to death, and, ^{Naples reduced, and the duke put to death.} appointing another in his room, he returned to Ravenna^d (T). During these disturbances, Agilulf died in the twenty-fifth year of his reign. He was the first of the Lombard kings who embraced the catholic faith ; and his example being followed by great numbers of his subjects, the Lombards, by that means, became less odious to the inhabitants of Italy, and their government more tolerable. By the advice of his queen Theudelinda, he rebuilt the churches, which had been ruined in the former wars, repaired the monasteries, and enriched both with large possessions, there being few churches or monasteries in his dominions, which could not shew some monuments of his piety and munificence^e.

AGILULF was succeeded by his son Adaluald, whom he ^{Adaluald succeeds his father Agilulf in the kingdom of the Lombards.} had taken some years before for his colleague, as we have related above. As he was yet very young, he suffered ^{himself} ^{Year after} in dissert. de duc. Benevent. p. 33. ^e Paul. Diac. l. vi. c. 2.

^d Idem, c. 24. Anastas. bibliothec. in Deusdedit. Camil. Pel. ^{Christ 615.}

(T) Some modern writers tell us, that Composinus not only made himself master of Naples, but likewise of Apulia, Calabria, and several other cities, with their territories ; that he caused himself to be acknowledged king of the countries he had usurped ; that he was first crowned with an iron crown at Bari, and afterwards with a golden crown at Naples. They add, that the Norman princes, who reigned in Naples, following his example, were first crowned at Bari with an iron crown, and afterwards at Palermo with a crown of gold (5). But it is plain from history, that Composinus was never master of Apulia or Calabria, which at this time were held by the Lombards ; and that he only seized on the city of Naples, and its territory, being taken and put to death by Eleutherius before he had time to make himself master of other places (6).

(5) Beutill. hist. Bar. p. 12.

(6) Paul. Diac. l. iv. c. 20.

himself to be entirely governed by his mother Theudelinda, who applied herself wholly to works of piety and religion ; so that, during his reign, the Lombards enjoyed a profound tranquillity. But great disturbances happened in the exarchate ; for Eleutherius the exarch, elated with the success that had attended him against the duke of Naples, and forgetting that virtue and moderation, which till then had recommended him to the esteem of the emperor, and all the Romans, began to entertain thoughts of usurping the sovereignty of Italy. The great distance between him and the emperor, the authority he had in those parts, and the war with the Saracens, in which the emperor was then engaged, offered him, he thought, a favourable opportunity, of accomplishing his design. Having therefore, in the first place, gained the affection of the soldiery by several popular acts of condescension, but above all by paying them their arrears, which had been long due, he resolved to set out for Rome with his whole army, and caused himself to be acknowledged there king of Italy. He was encouraged to this by the news he received of the death of Deusdedit bishop of that city ; for he thought, that, while the people were busied in the election of a successor, he might, with great ease, seize on the city, and then influence the election, so as to have one of his own friends raised to the see. But on his march he was informed, that Boniface, the fifth of that name, was already elected ; which obliged him to alter his measures : for having commanded the army to halt, he made them a plausible speech, inveighing against the disorders and abuses which then prevailed, promised to redress them to their satisfaction, and assured them of his favour and protection. Having by this speech attached them, as he imagined, to his interest, he openly assumed the title of king, telling them at the same time, that he was marching to Rome, in order to be invested there, as in the most proper place, with the ensigns of royalty. The army was not a little surprised at the conduct of their general ; but did not however, openly oppose it till some days after, when arriving at Luceoli, they began to mutiny, and, no longer looking upon Eleutherius as their general, but as a traitor and usurper, they slew him, and, sending his head to the emperor at Constantinople, returned to Ravenna^f. Heraclius appointed Isaac-

Eleutherius
the exarch takes upon him the title of king.

But is killed by the soldiers.

cus,

^f Idem, l. iv. c. 15.

cius, a patrician, to govern Italy in his room. In the beginning of his administration, one Gregory a patrician, who governed for the emperor those parts, which bordered on the duchy of Friuli, pretending great kindness for Tato, who in that dukedom had succeeded his father Gisulf or Gilulf, killed by the Hunns, as we have related above, invited the youth to Optigerium, where he resided, in order to adopt him there, as he pretended, for his son. Tato, not suspecting the least treachery, readily complied with the invitation, taking with him his second brother Caco, and several other persons of distinction. But they had no sooner entered the town, than Gregory, having caused the gates to be shut, ordered his men to fall upon them. The two brothers and their followers defended themselves for some time with great courage, killing great numbers of the aggressors; but being pursued from street to street, overpowered with multitudes, and quite spent, they were in the end all cut off. Gregory, by this inhuman piece of treachery, hoped to make himself master of the whole duchy, the two remaining brothers Rodoald and Grimoald, being yet very young. But their uncle Grafulf, informed of what had happened, hastened to Forum Julii, and taking upon him the administration, ordered matters so, that Gregory thought it adviseable to make no further attempts. Grafulf kept the dukedom for himself, and the two brothers Rodoald and Grimoald, not thinking themselves safe while in his power, fled to Arechis the second duke of Beneventum, by whom they were kindly received, and entertained in a manner suitable to their rank^g. This happened according to some, during the exarchate of Eleutherius, and soon after the death of Agilulf^h. In the eighth year of Adaluald's reign, one Eusebius was sent by the emperor Heraclius, with the character of ambassador, to conclude a lasting peace with the king of the Lombards, and to settle other affairs of great importance. He, having gained the confidence of the king, either of his own head, or in compliance with his private instructions, presented him, as he came out of the bath, with a draught, which soon deprived him of the right use of his senses, and brought him to a kind of melancholy madness. While he was in this condition, Eusebius, pretending that his nobles had entered into a conspiracy against him, advised him to put the most powerful among them to death. The king followed his advice, and immediately caused twelve of the chief nobility

^g Idem ibid.

^h Vide Sigon. ad ann. 623.

Adaluald deposed, and Ariovald chosen in his room.
Domestic troubles amongst the Lombards.

Adaluald
dies.

And Theudelinda.
Year after Christ 672.

Disturbances in the royal family.

to be inhumanly massacred ; which alarmed the rest to such a degree, that, taking up arms, they removed both him and his mother Theudelinda from the government, and raised to the throne Ariovald duke of Turin, who had married Gundeborg the sister of Adaluald. This revolution occasioned great disturbances among the Lombards, and rent their kingdom into two parties. Ariovald was supported by the nobles, who had deposed Adaluald, and all the bishops beyond the Po, who earnestly laboured to draw the rest to their party. On the other hand, Honorius, bishop of Rome, espoused with great zeal the cause of the deposed king, and left no stone unturned to have him restored to the throne, being prompted thereto by the regard he had for Theudelinda, to whose piety the catholic religion was highly indebted, and by his aversion to Ariovald, who held the tenets of Arius, and had been brought up in that persuasion. He found means to gain Isaaccius the exarch over to his party, and prevailed upon him to join the friends of Adaluald with all the troops under his command. He likewise obliged, with threats and menaces, the bishops who had espoused the cause of Ariovald, to abandon that prince, and declare for Adaluald. But, in spite of the utmost efforts both of the pope and the exarch, Ariovald maintained himself on the throne ; and, Adaluald dying seasonably, some say of poison, an end was put to the domestic troubles, that threatened the kingdom of the Lombards almost with utter destruction ^h. Theudelinda was so affected with the misfortunes of her son, that she fell into a consumption, which, in a short time, brought her to her grave. She was a princess no less commendable for her exemplary piety, than for the excellent endowments of her mind, and worthy, on account of both, to be ranked among the most illustrious women mentioned in history. Ariovald reigned nine years after the death of Theudelinda, during which time the Lombards enjoyed a profound tranquillity both at home and abroad. Only some disturbances happened in the royal family, which gave the king no small uneasiness. One of the chief lords at court, by name Adalulf, having solicited the queen, with whom he was passionately in love, to comply with his unlawful desire, and his proposal being rejected by her with the utmost indignation, the lover, apprehending

^h Paul. Diac. l. iv. c. 15.

prehending she would discover the whole to her husband, resolved to be before-hand with her, and prepossess the king against the virtuous princess. Accordingly, pretending great zeal for his safety, he assured him, that the queen was conspiring against his life with Tato duke of Etruria, who was to marry her after his death. Hereupon Ariovald, transported with rage and jealousy, without further enquiry, ordered the innocent queen to be kept under close confinement in the castle of Amellum, where she continued, till Clotair king of the Franks, pitying her condition, expostulated with her husband for thus treating one of the royal blood of the Franks, and stripping her of her dignity, upon the deposition of a single evidence. Ariovald replied, That he was fully convinced of her guilt; whereupon the ambassadors of the Franks, pursuant to their instructions, proposed the trying of the cause by a single combat between the accuser and one of the queen's friends, according to the custom that then prevailed among the Lombards, and most of the northern nations. As the king could not well reject this proposal, Adalulf was obliged to enter the lists against one Pillo, by Paulus Diaconus called Carell, who having with great ease overcome the accuser, the queen was released, and restored to her former dignityⁱ. Not long after, Ariovald died; and, as he left no issue male behind him, the dukes assembled, upon the news of his death, to chuse another in his room; but not being able to agree in the choice, they resolved to pay the same regard to Gundeberg, which they had formerly paid to Theudelinda, allowing her to chuse whom she pleased for her husband, and their king. Hereupon Gundeberg made choice of Rotharis duke of Brescia, a person equal in every respect to that sublime station, but tainted with the Arian heresy; whence, in his time, there were two bishops in most cities of Italy, the one catholic, and the other Arian^k. He is no less commended by the writers of those times for his equity and moderation, than for his valour and prudence, and was the first who gave written laws to the Lombards. His example was followed by the other kings his successors; so that, in process of time, a new volume of laws appeared, called the Longobard laws, which prevailed in all the provinces subject to that nation, that is, all over Italy, except

Ariovald
dies, and Rotharis is chosen in his room.

ⁱ Idem ibid.^k Idem ibid.

Rotharis the first lawgiver
among the Lombards

except the exarchate of Ravenna, and dukedoms of Rome, Naples, Gaeta, and Amalfi, and the maritime cities of Apulia, Calabria, and Lucania, which continued subject to the emperors, the Lombards being masters of all the other cities and provinces. The Lombards had no written laws till the time of Rotharis ; but had been governed by customs handed down to them by tradition. Rotharis therefore, in imitation of the Romans and Goths, undertook the publishing of written laws ; and to those he enacted, many were added by the succeeding princes. The incomparable Grotius prefers the method, which the Lombards followed in making laws, to that which was practised by the Romans themselves. Among the latter the emperor was the sole lawgiver ; so that whatever pleased him, had the force of a law. But the Lombard kings did not assume that power to themselves, since their laws were enacted in public assemblies, convened for that purpose, after they had been maturely examined, and approved of by all the lords of the kingdom. From these assemblies were excluded the ecclesiastic order, and the people ; so that the legislative power was lodged in the king and the nobles alone¹. Rotharis, the first lawgiver among the Lombards, having summoned, in the year 643, a general diet in Pavia, enacted, with the approbation of his nobles, several laws, which he caused to be committed to writing, and inserted in an edict. This edict, containing no fewer than three hundred and eighty-six laws, was published in the eighth year of Rotharis's reign, that is, in the year 644, in all the provinces under his dominion, especially in the dukedom of Benevento, which was reputed at this time, as it had greatly extended its bounds, the best part of the kingdom of the Lombards. The example of Rotharis was followed by the other Lombard kings his successors, especially by Grimoald, Luitprand, Rachis, and Astolphus ; but the laws of Rotharis far exceeded in number those of the other princes(U). The reign
of

¹ Grot. in proleg. ad hist. Goth.

(U) To the laws of king Rotharis, comprised in the above-mentioned edict, is prefixed the following preface : “ Here begins the edict, which, with the advice of my principal judges, I have composed, I, in the name of God, king Rotharis, the seventh king of the nation of the Lombards, in
“ the of king Rotharis is not only memorable for the laws that prince

“ the eighth year of my reign, and thirty-eighth year of my age,
“ the second indiction, and, since the coming of the Lombards “ into the province of Italy under Alboin, at that time, by “ divine clemency, king. the seventy-sixth. Given at Pavia in “ the palace. How great our care and anxiety is, and has ever “ been, for our subjects, the following decree sufficiently de“ clares.” He then says, that he thought it incumbent upon him to make those laws, in order to relieve the poor from the oppression they groaned under, and to restrain the insolence of the rich, and of men in power, that every one might live in peace, and enjoy his property undisturbed. He declares, that these,
and no other laws, should, for the future, be in force, reserving however to himself the power of adding such other laws to them, as should be approved of by the wise men of the nation.
He orders all controversies, that were not yet decided, and such as should arise after the twenty-second day of November, the day of the publication of the edict, to be determined according to the laws comprised in it ; but at the same time forbids the causes already decided to be re-examined, and orders the parties to acquiesce to the sentence given by proper judges. He concludes by declaring, that no other copy or copies should be of any authority, but such as were written, revised, or approved of, by Ansuald his notary, to prevent, by that means, litigious persons from taking advantage of the mistakes, to which writers or copyists are liable (1). In the famous monastery of the Benedictines at Cava, in the kingdom of Naples, is still to be seen, amongst other monuments of antiquity, an antient manuscript in Lombard characters, containing, besides this edict of Rotharis, the laws of the other Lombard kings, and those likewise of the French and German emperors, who were kings of Italy. In the edict of Rotharis, after the preface, come the titles of each chapter, and then the chapters or laws, in all three hundred and eighty-six, according to the order of the preceding chapters. To the laws of Rotharis, and of the other Lombard kings his successors, the Roman laws in the end gave way.
Justinian indeed had taken care to have the volumes of his laws spread all over Italy, and, annulling all other laws, had ordered them alone, and the novellæ constitutiones, to be observed.
But, in spite of all the pains he had taken to establish them, their authority ended in Italy almost with his life ; for that country being in great part reduced by the Lombards in the reign L 1 2 of

(1) Vide Sigon. de reg: Ital. l. ii. ann. 643.

He reduces the Alpes Cottiæ, and several cities

prince enacted, but for the conquests he made ; for, no thinking himself bound by the treaty, which his predecessor had concluded with the exarch, he broke all on a sudden into the Alpes Cottiæ, and having, almost without opposition, made himself master of that province, he led his army against the cities of Opitergium, now Oderzo, and Treviso, which he easily reduced, with all the cities in the province of Venetia, till that time held by the Romans. Isaaccius, then exarch, alarmed at this sudden and unexpected invasion, drew together all his forces ; but not having been able to assemble them in time to cover the above-mentioned places, he broke with great violence into the dominions of the Lombards, laying them waste with fire and sword. Rotharis was then busied in the siege of Perugia ; which city he had no sooner reduced, than he marched

of Justin, the successor of Justinian, the Roman laws were only observed in such places, as continued subject to the emperor, that is, in the exarchate of Ravenna, in the dukedom of Rome, in the small dukedoms of Naples, Gaeta, and Amalfi, and in some maritime towns of Apulia, Calabria, and Lucania. The Lombards, to the reign of Rotharis, were governed only by their antient customs. As for the natives of Italy subject to the Lombards, they were allowed to retain the Roman laws, but such only as were contained in the Theodosian code, which was in greater repute among the Lombards, than the Justinian code. The former therefore, and the compendium made by order of Alaric, were the only books that had any authority, either among the Lombards, or the Visigoths, at this time masters of Spain. In Rome the popes strove with all their power and might to maintain the authority of the Justinian laws, having much at heart the interest of the emperors, to whom they chose rather to live subject, than to the Lombards. Their zeal for the service of the emperors was, as the learned Pietro Giannone, a most impartial writer, rightly observes, nothing at the bottom but self-interest. As the emperors lived at a great distance, they could not easily discover or defeat the design the popes had of making themselves, by degrees, masters of Rome ; whereas, if the Lombards had once got possession of that city, they must have laid aside all thoughts of ever usurping the sovereign authority over the metropolis of Italy. Hence Rome was no sooner threatened by the Lombards, than the popes pretending great zeal for the emperor's service, solicited succours with great earnestness, both from the emperor and the exarch. By this means they preserved Rome, not for the emperors, but for themselves, as we shall relate hereafter.

marched with his whole army in quest of the exarch, whom he met on the confines of Æmilia, and offered him battle. The exarch accepted the challenge; so that an engagement ensued, in which the Romans were utterly defeated, eight thousand of them being killed on the spot, and the rest obliged to save themselves by a precipitous and disorderly flight. From this time to the reign of Luitprand, no acts of hostility passed between the exarchs and the kings of the Lombards, the latter being satisfied with their new conquests, and the former glad to enjoy unmolested the territories that remained under the dominion of the emperors^m.

Gives the exarch a total overthrow. Year after Christ 638.

ABOUT this time Mauritius, who had been, by Heraclius, appointed duke or governor of Rome, taking advantage of the distracted state of the empire, occasioned by the usurpation of Heracleon, and the invasion of the Saracens, usurped the sovereignty of the city committed to his charge. But an end was soon put both to his life and usurpation; for the exarch Isaaccius was no sooner informed of what had passed at Rome, than he dispatched against the usurper one of his officers, a person of great authority, with a considerable sum of money, and at the head of his best troops. This commander, marching up to the walls of the city, caused a declaration to be read, wherein Mauritius was declared a rebel, and not only a pardon promised, but a considerable gratuity, to all who should quit the traitor, and return to their duty. Upon this encouragement, Mauritius was abandoned by all his troops, and forced, as he had no other resource, to take sanctuary in a church; but he was dragged from thence, and, by an order from the exarch, beheaded, after he had been for some time kept in chains. Not long after, Isaaccius died, and Theodorus Calliopa was sent by the emperor to succeed him in the exarchate. Theodorus governed Italy with great applause for the space of seven years, that is, from the year 643, to 650, when Olympius was appointed exarch in his room. Olympius gained several advantages over the Saracens in Sicily, and at last drove them out of that island; but died in the third year of his exarchate, being quite spent and worn out by the toils and fatigues he underwent in that expedition. Upon his death, the emperor Constant II. sent Theodorus Calliopa to govern Italy once more. In the second

A rebellion in Rome suppressed by the exarch.

L 1 3 year

^m Paul. Diac. l. iv. c. 44.

King Rotha-
ris dies.
Year after
Christ 652.

year of the exarchate of Olympius, that is, in 652, died king Rotharis, after he had governed the Lombards for the space of sixteen years with such prudence, equity, and moderation, that he was deservedly esteemed the most illustrious prince of his age. He himself professed the doctrine of Arius, but allowed his subjects full liberty to embrace which of the two religions they liked best; and therefore took care, that, in all the cities of his kingdom, there should be constantly two bishops, the one catholic, and the other Arian.

Arechis the second duke of Benevento dies.

In the fifth year of the reign of king Rotharis, that is, in 657, died Arechis the second duke of Benevento, after he had governed that dukedom for the space of fifty years, and so enlarged it at the expence of the Romans, that on one side it reached to Naples, and on the other to Sipontum in Apuliaⁿ.

Aio his son succeeds him; but is killed by the Slavonians.

He was succeeded by his son Aio, whom he had taken for his partner in the government five months before his death^p. Aio was a man of very slender parts, and sometimes, as Paulus Diaconus insinuates, distracted in his mind; which that writer ascribes to a potion given him by the Romans. The father therefore, sensible of the incapacity of his son, recommended him on his death-bed to Rodoald and Grimoald, the sons of Gisulf duke of Friuli, who, as we have related above, had fled to him, and were now in the flower of their age. These Arechis looked upon as his own children, and therefore appointed them by his last will to succeed in the dukedom, in case his son should die without issue male^p. While Aio governed the dukedom, the Slavonians, passing by sea from Dalmatia, which they had seized, into Italy, landed at Sipontum, and laid waste great part of Apulia. They dwelt originally on the banks of the Borysthenes, now the Nieper, in European Sarmatia, and from thence advancing to the Danube, they passed that river in the reign of Justinian, and made themselves masters of that part of Illyricum, which lies between the Drave and the Save, and is to this day from them called Slavonia. Upon their landing in Apulia, they encamped in the neighbourhood of Sipontum, and surrounded their camp with deep ditches, which they covered with branches of trees, laying some earth and green turf over them. As Apulia was for the most part subject at that time ⁿ Vide Paul. Æmil. de reb. Franc. p. 132.

^p Idem ibid.

^e Paul. Diac.

time to the duke of Benevento, Aio, hearing of their invasion, marched against them with what troops he could assemble, without waiting the return of Rodoald and Grimoald, who were then absent. But, having attacked their camp, he fell into one of the above-mentioned ditches, and was there slain by the enemy, after he had governed the dukedom five months with his father, and one year alone. Rodoald, hearing what had happened, assembled with incredible expedition a considerable body of forces, and, falling upon the enemy before they had the least intelligence of his march, he gave them a total overthrow, and drove them quite out of the dukedom. Having thus revenged the death of Aio, he took, together with his brother Grimoald, possession of the dukedom, pursuant to the last will of Arechis, who had appointed them to succeed himself and his son⁹. These two princes governed jointly for the space of five years, during which time they laid siege to Surrento, still held by the Romans; but the inhabitants, encouraged by Agapitus their bishop, made such a vigorous resistance, that the Lombards, after having attempted in vain to take the place by storm, raised the siege, and returned home. Rodoald died in Benevento, in the year 647, but his brother Grimoald held the dukedom sixteen years after his death, and is said to have gained several victories over the Neapolitans and Romans, and to have greatly extended the bounds of his dukedom. After he had governed the dukedom five years with his brother, and sixteen alone, he possessed himself of the throne, and reigned nine years more over the whole nation of the Lombards, as we shall relate anon.

Who are defeated by Rodoald the fourth duke of Benevento.

Grimoald, the fifth duke, enlarges the dukedom.

BUT to return to the Lombard kings: Rotharis was succeeded by his son Rodoald, who, as he was a prince of a peaceable disposition, performed nothing which authors thought worth transmitting to posterity. He was tainted, as his father had been, with the Arian heresy, which occasioned some religious contests between him and the orthodox bishops: but these disturbances were soon appeased. He had reigned four years with his father, but scarce reigned one after his father's death, being killed by a Lombard, whose wife he had debauched. He had married Gundeburg the daughter of Agilulf and Theudelinda; but, as he Rotharis succeeded by his son Rodoald.

Who is murdered.

L 1 4

had

⁹ Vide Camil. Pel. in dissert. duc. Benev. p. 54. & Ughel. de archiepif. Surrent. p. 34.

had no children by her, the Lombards, upon his death, assembled, in order to chuse a new king, when the choice fell on Aripert or Aribert, the son of Gundoald, and brother of Theudelinda. The only thing we find recorded of him in history, is his building in Pavia the oratory of St. Saviour. He died, after he had reigned, according to Paulus Diaconus[†], nine years, though Sigonius allows him but five at most. He left two sons behind him, Partharit and Gundebert, between whom he most imprudently divided his kingdom. Partharit, the eldest, chose Milan for the place of his residence, and Gundebert Pavia. But the latter, not satisfied with the part allotted him, began to quarrel with his brother; and, being pushed on by his ambition, and encouraged by the evil counsellors about him, he resolved in the end to drive his brother from the throne, and make himself master of the whole kingdom. He was well apprised, that he could not accomplish this with his own strength; and therefore he dispatched Garibald duke of Turin as his ambassador to Grimoald duke of Benevento, at that time by far the most powerful of all the Lombard dukes, inviting him to his assistance, and promising to give him his sister in marriage, if he succeeded in the undertaking. But the duke of Turin, acting quite contrary to his instructions, instead of persuading Grimoald to assist his master, advised him to lay hold of the present opportunity, and to decide the controversy between the two brothers, by driving them both out, and seizing on the kingdom for himself. He told him, That the two brothers were young, rash and unexperienced; that the affairs of the Lombards required a prince of prudence, valour and experience; and that the disagreement between the two princes would, in all likelihood, end in the ruin of the whole nation. Grimoald, being naturally of an active and ambitious temper, was easily persuaded to follow the advice of the ambassador; and accordingly, having raised a considerable army, he marched at the head of it towards Pavia, leaving his son Romuald to govern the dukedom in his absence. Being advanced as far as Placentia, he dispatched Garibald to acquaint the king with his arrival. The inconsiderate prince received the news of his approach with the greatest demonstrations of joy imaginable; and, being at a loss where he should lodge and entertain tain his supposed friend and ally, Garibald told him, that his own palace was the only proper place for the reception of a person, to whom he had promised his sister in marriage. He added, that, if he did not repose an entire confidence in Grimoald, or had the least suspicion of treachery, he ought, for his greater safety, to receive him with armour under his royal robes. The king put on armour accordingly, and the duke with unheard-of treachery, returning to Grimoald, advised him to be upon his guard, since the king was coming to meet him in armour; no doubt with a design to murder him. Grimoald could not persuade himself, that the king had any such design, till they met, when, upon their embracing each other, he found, that Gundebert was really in armour; and, not doubting in the least but that it was with a design to murder him, in order to be before-hand with him, he drew his sword that instant, and killed the unhappy prince on the spot. Upon his death, he seized on the royal palace, and the treasures lodged there, causing himself to be acknowledged king of the Lombards in his room. Who murders him, and seizes on the kingdom. Gundebert left a son named Rambert or Reginbert, who was privately conveyed away, and brought up with great care by the friends of the deceased king, Grimoald making no great inquisition after him, as he was but an infant. Partharit no sooner heard of his brother's fate, than abandoning Milan in the midst of confusion, he fled to Chagan king of the Avars, and took refuge in his court. He left his queen Rodolind, and his son Cunibert, yet an infant, to shift for themselves; so that they both fell into the hands of Grimoald, by whom they were sent to Benevento, and kept under confinement in that city. The inhabitants of Milan, finding themselves abandoned by their king, opened their gates to Grimoald, who, having taken possession of that important place, marched from thence to Pavia, where, in the latter end of the year, 662, he was with one voice proclaimed by the people king of the Lombards. To gain the affection of the Lombards, and by that means establish himself more firmly in his new kingdom, to the great joy of the whole nation, Grimoald proclaimed king. he married Gundebert, sister to the two unhappy princes. Year after Christ 662. He then sent back his army to Benevento, having first distributed considerable sums amongst them, but kept with him some of his most trusty friends, whom he raised to the first employments of the kingdom.

[†] Paul. Diac. l. iv, c. 18.

THE

THE new king, though confirmed in the power he had usurped by the general consent of the nation, yet, reflecting on the fickleness and inconstancy of the multitude, did not think himself safe, so long as Partharit, his competitor, resided at the court of the king of the Avars, at that time a powerful prince. He did not doubt but the banished king would watch all opportunities of attempting the recovery of his paternal kingdom, and would, in such an attempt, be seconded by great numbers of the Lombards. To prevent therefore the disturbances that would thence ensue, he dispatched ambassadors to Chagan, complaining of the protection he had given to his rival, and threatening to make war upon him, if he did not forthwith banish him his dominions. The king of the Avars, though greatly affected with the misfortunes of the unhappy prince, yet did not think it adviseable to engage in a war for his sake; and therefore to avoid it, commanded him to quit his dominions. Partharit, seeing himself thus abandoned by his friend and ally, and not knowing where to find an asylum, resolved, in that desperate condition, to throw himself upon the honour and generosity of his greatest enemy. Accordingly, he dispatched one of his trusty friends, by name Unulf, to acquaint Grimoald with his resolution, and obtain leave for him to reside in Pavia. Grimoald, highly pleased with the confidence the unfortunate prince reposed in him, and glad of such an opportunity to shew his generosity, complied with the request, and ordered a house to be got ready for him in Pavia every way fit for his reception. Upon his arrival, he received him with the greatest demonstrations of friendship and kindness; but observing, that the multitude attended his entry with unusual marks of joy, and that persons of distinction flocked to him night and day, and seemed, in a manner, to respect him still as their prince, he began to be apprehensive, lest they should attempt to restore him to the throne. This jealousy encreased daily, and at length wrought upon him so far, that, after some time, he placed a guard upon him; and his fears, by degrees getting the better of his generosity, he one day sent private orders to the guard to dispatch him the following night. These orders, however private, did not escape the vigilancy of his trusty friend Unulf, who, acquainting Partharit with them, advised him to change cloaths with him

Partharit driven from the court of Chagan

He recurs to Grimoald, who receives him kindly

But afterwards orders him to be put to death.

him, and, thus disguised, to attempt his escape. Partharit followed his advice, and, having by that means deceived the centinels, he passed the Tesino undiscovered, and finding, on the other side the river, horses and guides provided for him by the care of Unulf, he escaped first to Hasta, thence to Turin, and at last into Gaul. Grimoald, being informed the next morning of what had happened, was so far from punishing Unulf, that, on the contrary, he bestowed the highest commendations upon him for his unshaken fidelity, leaving it to his choice either to stay at home, or follow his master. Clotaire III. then king of the Franks, was so touched with the misfortunes of Partharit and his family, that the following year he sent a powerful army into Italy to replace him on the throne. Grimoald, well apprised that he was far inferior in strength to the Franks, had recourse to the following stratagem: at their approach he pretended to fly, leaving his camp well stored with all manner of provisions, especially with wine. Hereupon the inconsiderate Franks, instead of pursuing the enemy, began to plunder the camp; and, finding in it great plenty of provisions, they abandoned themselves to eating and drinking, which when they had done to excess, they betook themselves to rest, without the least apprehension of an enemy. But Grimoald, returning in the dead of the night, fell upon them while they lay fast asleep, and made such a dreadful havock of them before they could betake themselves to their arms, that few of them were left alive to carry home the news of their defeat^t.

He makes his escape.

The Franks espouse his cause.

But receive a total overthrow. Year after Christ 663.

GRIMOALD, thus happily delivered from one war, was soon involved in another. Hitherto the emperors, neglecting the affairs of Italy, seemed to have laid aside all thoughts of reuniting it to the empire, being well satisfied if they could but keep the few provinces and cities they held there, viz. the exarchate of Ravenna, the dukedom of Rome, and those of Naples, Gaeta, and Amalfi, with some cities of Calabria and Brutium. But Constantians, the son of Constantine, and grandson of Heraclius, having settled the affairs of the empire rent into parties and factions, resolved to employ his whole strength in driving the Lombards quite out of Italy. Pursuant to this resolution, he caused a powerful fleet to be fitted out in

The expedition of the emperor Constantians into Italy.

^t Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 2—5.

in Sicily ; and not satisfied with appointing the best officers he had to command in this expedition, he left Constantinople, and, coming into Italy, put himself at the head of his army. Some writers tell us, that, having murdered his brother Theodore, he was so haunted with ghastly spectres, and terrible dreams, that being no longer able to bear the sight of the place where the murder had been committed, he left Constantinople, and repaired to Italy, hoping to find there some relief for his tormented conscience. Others ascribe his departure from the imperial seat to the hatred, which the Constantinopolitans bore him, on account of his having embraced the tenets of the Monothelites ; and add, that he designed to transfer the seat of the empire from Constantinople to Rome ^u. But the most credible writers, and among the rest Anastasius Bibliothecarius, and Paulus Diaconus, ^w suppose him to have undertaken his journey into Italy upon no other account, but to drive the Lombards quite out of that country. Be that as it will, he landed at Tarentum in the spring of the year 663. and thence marched directly to Benevento, being joined on his march by the troops in the dukedom of Naples. This unexpected invasion with a very considerable army, commanded by the emperor in person, struck the Lombards of Benevento with such terror and consternation, that they abandoned several places in Apulia, and among the rest Luceria, which Constans destroyed. From Lucertia the emperor marched to Acerenza ; but not being able to take it by storm, on account of its strong situation, he pursued his march without loss of time to Benevento, and invested the place with his whole army. Romuald, the son of Grimoald, at that time duke of Benevento, immediately dispatched Gesuald, who had been his guardian, to acquaint his father with the danger he was in, and to solicit succours. In the mean time the Lombards not only repulsed with great vigour the Romans in their repeated assaults, but killed great numbers of them in the sallies they daily made. Grimoald no sooner heard, that the city was besieged, than he assembled, with incredible expedition, all his forces, and, putting himself at their head, he marched to the relief of his son. He dispatched back Gesuald to give him notice, that in a very short time, he should be relieved, and to encourage him to hold out till his arrival. But Gesuald was unfortunately taken

He takes some places, and besieges Benevento.

^u Vide Sigon, de regn. Ital. ad ann. 663. ^w Paul. Diac. l. 5.
c. 4.

taken by the Romans, as he was attempting to get into the besieged city, and carried before the emperor, to whom he ingenuously owned, that he was sent by the king to acquaint the besieged, that he was in full march, and already very near, with a powerful army to relieve them. The emperor, perplexed, and greatly alarmed at this news, resolved to conclude a peace with Romuald, that he might retire unmolested to Naples before the arrival of the king. But, in order to obtain better conditions, he commanded Gesuald to go to the walls, and tell Romuald, that his father could not possibly come to his relief, threatening to put him to a cruel death, if he refused to obey. Gesuald promised to do as he required; but when Romuald appeared upon the walls, with undaunted courage, and a loud voice, that the Romans there present might likewise hear, ‘Take courage, he cried, and banish all fear; for your father is near at hand with a powerful army to relieve you. This night he will reach the river Sangro. I earnestly recommend to you my dear wife and children; for I am in the hands of a perfidious enemy, who this moment will put me to death. The emperor, highly provoked at this generous and bold action, instantly caused his head to be cut off, and with an engine to be thrown into the town, where it was taken up, and carried to Romuald, who, having kissed it with great affection, and bathed it with his tears, caused it, together with the rest of the body, which was soon after found, to be interred with the utmost pomp and magnificence. In the mean time the emperor, hearing the king of the Lombards was within a short march of him, raised the siege, and began, in great haste, his march to Naples. But Mitula duke of Capua, meeting him at the river Calore, cut off great numbers of his men, and obliged the rest, together with the emperor, to save themselves by a precipitous flight. To revenge this disgrace, Saburrus, one of the emperor’s generals, engaged to give the Lombards a total overthrow, and put Grimoald himself to flight, provided he were allowed but twenty thousand men, with an unlimited command. Constant having granted him his request, he encamped at the pass of Formiæ, now, as is generally supposed, Mola di Gaeta, with a design to cover the emperor’s march, who intended to visit Rome, and, when he was out of danger, to go in quest of the enemy. In the mean time Grimoald, arriving with his army at Benevento, and being there informed of the boasting engagement of Saburrus, resolved

He raises the siege, and is defeated in his retreat.

to march directly against him, and offer him battle ; but his son Romuald earnestly entreating him to suffer him to command the army in his room, he complied with his request, and detached the young prince with the flower of his army, who, meeting Saburrus in the neighbourhood of Formiæ, fell upon him with great intrepidity. The Romans, animated by the example of their leader, who behaved very gallantly, made a vigorous stand ; so that the victory continued a long time doubtful. But, while both armies were fighting with the utmost fury, a Lombard, by name Amelongus, engaging a Roman horseman, first struck him from his horse, and then lifting him up on the point of his spear, held him over his head in the sight of the Roman army ; which struck them with such terror, that they began to give ground, and, being vigorously pressed by the Lombards, they abandoned in the end the field of battle, and betook themselves to a precipitous flight. Romuald, having pursued them for some time with great slaughter, returned to the field of battle, and from thence to Benevento, which he entered in a kind of triumph, being met at the gates by the king his father, and received with loud acclamations by the inhabitants, as the deliverer of his country *. In the mean time Constans, arriving at Rome, was received there with extraordinary marks of honour, no emperor having, for a long time, set his foot in that city. He spent twelve days in visiting, or rather in plundering, the remarkable places of that great metropolis ; for he stripped her of all her most valuable ornaments in gold, silver, brass, and marble, not sparing even the coverings of churches, which he caused to be conveyed by sea into Sicily, in order to transport them from thence to Constantinople. He himself went by land to Naples, and from thence to Rhegium, where his army was a third time defeated by the Lombards. From Rhegium he crossed over into Sicily, and fixed his residence at Syracuse, where he was murdered in the bath by his own people in 668, so that the inestimable wealth and plunder, which he had brought from Rome, being left in Sicily, was, soon after his death, seized by the Saracens, and carried to Alexandria †. After his departure from Italy, the Lombards, wholly intent upon improving their late victories, made themselves masters of

The Roman
army utterly defeated by Romuald
Year after
Christ 663.

* Idem ibid.

† Idem ibid. & Pagi de consulib. p. 348.

of Bari, Tarento, Brindisi, and all the places in the country now known by the name of Terra d'Otranto, which were added to the dukedom of Benevento. Grimoald, to reward Mitula duke of Capua, who had defeated the Romans in their retreat from Benevento, gave him his daughter in marriage, and at the same time appointed him to succeed the late duke Zotho in the dukedom of Spoletum; which two dukedoms he governed for many years.

The Lombards make themselves masters of several cities.

WHILE Grimoald was employed against the Romans in the dukedom of Benevento, Lupus duke of Friuli, taking advantage of his absence, oppressed his people in a most enormous manner, and, not satisfied with the wealth, which by heavy taxes, he extorted from them, he broke into the territories of the Venetian Lombards, and there plundered the church of Aquileia of all its rich ornaments. For this the king, upon his return to Pavia, resolved to call him to a severe account; which he apprehending, renounced his allegiance to Grimoald, and openly revolted. Grimoald was determined at all events to punish him with exemplary severity; but being unwilling to lead his Lombards against their countrymen, or suffer them to imbrue their hands in the blood of each other, he employed Chagan king of the Hunns to make war upon him, who broke into his territories the following year at the head of an infinite multitude, and laid them waste far and near. This Lupus did not tamely suffer; but, drawing together what forces he could, he marched against the Hunns, and, engaging them four days successively, made a dreadful havock of the undisciplined multitude; but, in the fifth engagement, his men being tired out, and quite spent, they were, after a most obstinate dispute, in which Lupus himself was killed, overpowered, and put to flight. Upon the death of Lupus, and the defeat of his army, Chagan over-ran the whole country, and laid it waste without controul. But Grimoald, who had employed the king of the Hunns only to punish the rebellious duke, sent ambassadors to put him in mind of their agreement, and require him to retire with his forces, since there was no further occasion for them in the dukedom of Friuli, or the territories of the Lombards. Chagan answered plainly, That he would not quit a country, which he had conquered with his arms, and the blood of so many of his subjects. Grimoald, provoked at this answer, resolved to drive him out by force; and accordingly marched against him at the head of a very considerable army; but as it was far inferior

The duke of Friuli revolts.

He is killed by the Hunns.

ferior in numbers to that of the Hunns, in order to make it appear more numerous than it really was, he mustered his troops in the presence of Chagan's ambassadors, and made the same men pass thrice before him in different cloathing. By this device they appeared to be treble the number they really were ; and such they were by the ambassadors represented to the king, who thereupon, in great fear, retired to his own dominions ^z. Upon the retreat of Chagan, Warnefrid, son to the deceased duke, attempted, with the assistance of the Slavonians, to possess himself of his father's dukedom ; but Grimoald, having defeated the Slavonians, and killed Warnefrid, appointed one Welcar to succeed Lupus in the dukedom of Friuli ; and at the same time married Theodorata, the daughter of Lupus, to his son Romuald, duke of Benevento ^a. About this time Alczecus, one of the princes of the Bulgarians, abandoning his own country, entered Italy with a body of his countrymen, and, repairing to Pavia, offered his service to Grimoald, who, thinking he might prove very serviceable to his son against the Romans, sent him to Benevento, in which dukedom several cities were allotted to him and his followers, as we have related elsewhere ^b.

Welcar appointed duke of Friuli.

Grimoald corrects the edict of Rotharis.

AND now Grimoald, having no wars on his hands, and no enemy to fear, applied himself wholly to the arts of peace. The laws of king Rotharis, which had been published twenty-four years before, were by this time become familiar, not only to the Lombards, for whom they had been made, but likewise to the natives of Italy, who chose to follow them, though they had never been forbidden the use of the Roman laws ; but these laws, in Process of time, proving, as it generally happens, defective, and some of them being thought too severe, Grimoald, in the sixth year of his reign, undertook the revising of the edict of Rotharis, and, in a general diet held in the year 668, with the consent and approbation of his nobles, repealed some laws, enacted others in their room, and published a new edict ^c, containing eleven chapters, which is still to be seen in the above-mentioned code lodged in the monastery of Cava. Grimoald, having thus performed all the duties of an excellent prince, was to the great grief of the Lombards, unexpectedly snatched away by the following accident : he had been let blood in one of ^z Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 17—20.

supra, p. 594.

^a Idem ibid. c. 21.
^c Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 12. & Sigon. de regn Ital. l. ii ad ann. 668.

^b V de of his arms, and as he was nine days after, bending a bow, the vein opened, and, all possible means for closing it proving ineffectual, he bled to death^d. He was a prince of uncommon parts, and in every respect equal to the high station to which he was raised. Though he had been brought up in the principles of Arius, he renounced the errors of that heresiarch, and embraced the catholic religion, yielding to the arguments of John bishop of Bergamo, a prelate of great piety and learning. The example of Grimoald was followed by the kings his successors, who all professed the catholic religion, so that Arianism was, in a short time, forsaken by the whole nation of the Lombards. He died in the year 672, the ninth of his reign, leaving behind him, besides Romuald duke of Benevento, another son, by name, Garibald, to whom, though yet very young, he bequeathed on his death-bed the kingdom of the Lombards. From his excluding Romuald, authors conclude that prince to have been his illegitimate son. Be that as it will, Garibald did not long enjoy his new dignity; for he had scarce mounted the throne, when Partharit, who was still in Gaul, hearing of the death of his arrival, hastened into Italy, and, being received with extraordinary joy by great numbers of Lombards, he advanced, attended by crowds of followers, to Pavia, and was there received by the inhabitants, and the great men of the nation, as their lawful sovereign, Garibald having withdrawn to his brother in Benevento, after a short reign of three months. Partharit, thus restored to the throne, recalled his wife Rodelinda, and his son Cunipert, who, ever since his expulsion, had been in exile at Benevento. Having reigned alone in great peace and tranquillity for the space of eight years, in the latter end of the year 680, he took his son Cunipert for his partner in the kingdom, and reigned with him ten years more. During their joint reign, Alachis duke of Trent, openly revolting, assumed the title of the king of the Lombards. Hereupon Partharit, marching against him with all his forces, besieged him in his own city; but Alachis, sallying out with the flower of his troops, obliged the king to raise the siege, and save himself by flight. However, Alachis, finding himself abandoned by the greater part of his men, who refused to bear arms against their lawful sovereign, thought it adviseable to submit, upon promise of pardon; which Partharit granted him, at the

Grimoald
dies Year
after Christ 672.

Garibald
succeeds;
but is driven out by Par-tharit.

Who takes his son Cunipert for his partner.

^d Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 33.

Partharit
dies. Year after Christ 690.

Alachis
duke of Trent revolts, and drives Cunpert from the throne.

the earnest request of his son Cunipert, who had a great friendship for the duke, with whom he had been brought up from his infancy ; nay, the young prince, in order to win him by kindness, not only prevailed upon his father to take him anew into favour, but to create him duke of Brescia, adding that dukedom to the dukedom of Trent. The king on that occasion told his son, That, by his good offices, he did not so much oblige a friend, as strengthen an enemy ; but nevertheless he could not help complying with his request. Some time after, Partharit died, a prince highly commended by our historian for his piety, justice, moderation, and above all for the great care he took of the poor. Three years before his death, Deodorus Calliopa the exarch was recalled, and one John sent to govern Italy in his room. Alachis, duke of Trent and Brescia, was no sooner informed of the death of Partharit, than, unmindful of the favours he had received at the hands of Cunipert, he resolved to drive him from the throne, and place the crown upon his own head, agreeable to what Partharit had foretold his son, while he was studying to gain him by kindness. The rebellious duke, having drawn into the conspiracy two brothers, Aldo and Granso, the two most considerable citizens of Brescia, and several other Lombards, while the king was absent, seized on the royal palace of Pavia, and took upon him the title of king. Hereupon Cunipert, who was quite unprovided, not imagining the duke could be guilty of such treachery and ingratitude, fled to an island in the lake Larius, now Lago di Como, and there fortified himself in the best manner he could. In the mean time the usurper, behaving in a most despotic and tyrannical manner, highly disoblinded all his subjects, even those to whom he was chiefly indebted for the crown he wore. As he was one day telling money in his closet, he happened to let a piece drop, which the son of Aldo, who was present, officiously took up, and gave him. The tyrant, in receiving it, ‘ Your father said he, has many such pieces, which, ere it be long, shall be all mine.’ As the son of Aldo was but a child, the tyrant was not upon his guard, but the boy, remembering what he said, upon his return home, told it to his father, who concluding from thence, that his death, and the ruin of his family, would be the reward of all his services, if he did not, by some means or other, prevent them, consulted with his brother brother Granfo, and his other friends, about deposing the usurper. They all agreed to seize on the city of Pavia, and recal their lawful sovereign the first time Alachis should go out to take the diversion of hunting. This they did accordingly, to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants, especially of the clergy, whom the tyrant had chiefly disoblige^{Canipert re-}d.

Alachis, finding upon his return the gates shut against him, and Cunipert possessed of the royal palace, fled into Istria, and, having raised a considerable army there, he returned at the head of it, not doubting but he should be able to drive Cunipert anew from the throne. The king hear^{War be-}ing of his return, drew together all his forces, and, meeting the usurper in the plains of Coronata, he challenged him to a single combat, in order to save the lives of many innocent men, who must otherwise perish; but, Alachis refusing the challenge, the two armies began to prepare for a general engagement. While they were drawn up, and Cunipert ready to charge the enemy, one Zeno, a deacon of the church of Pavia, greatly attached, as were all the ecclesiastics, to the king's person, and firmly persuaded, that the welfare of the church depended upon his safety, with the greatest earnestness imaginable, begged leave to put on his armour, and counterfeit his person: 'If I perish, said he, the loss will be small; but upon your safety depends the welfare both of the church and state.' The king being, with much-ado, prevailed upon by the tears and intreaties of his friends to accept the proposal, Zeno put on his armour, and appeared in it so like the king, whom he resembled in shape and stature, that he could hardly be distinguished from him; so that, when the two armies joined battle, Alachis, mistaking him for the king, engaged him with the utmost fury, and, having with great ease overcome and slain him, in the greatest transports of joy imaginable, he ordered his head to be cut off, and exposed to the view of both armies on the point of a spear; but, finding it was the head of a priest, and not of the king, his joy was succeeded by a violent rage and passion, in which he vowed to emasculate all the ecclesiastics, in case he obtained the victory. In the mean time Cunipert, observing that his men, disheartened with the report of his death, began to give ground, shewed himself to them, and, by shewing himself, encouraged them to such a degree, that, returning to the charge, they renewed the fight with fresh vigour. However, Cunipert, to avoid the effusion of blood, sent a second time to Alachis,
M m 2 inviting

Alachis killed, and his army defeated.

Cunipert
dies. Year after Christ 703.

Luitbert
succeeds ;
but is driven out by Ra-gumbert

Ragumbert succeeded by his son Aripert.

Who puts Luitbert to death.

inviting him to decide the quarrel by a single combat ; but he, declining anew the challenge, that two armies fought with the utmost fury, till, Alachis being slain, his men disheartened by his death, fled in the utmost confusion. Most of them were cut off in the flight, and the rest drowned in the Adige. The Army of the dukedom of Friuli, which Alachis enticed to his party, while they were marching to the assistance of the king, withdrew in the beginning of the battle, scrupling either to fight against him, to whom they had sworn allegiance, or against their lawful sovereign. Cunipert, after this victory, which put an end to the civil war, returned in triumph to Pavia, having first caused the deacon Zeno to be interred with the greatest pomp and solemnity. He afterwards built, in honour of St. George, a magnificent monastery in the field where the battle had been fought ^f. Cunipert, having thus happily suppressed so dangerous a rebellion, reigned in great peace and tranquillity till the year 703, when he died, universally lamented ; for he was a prince, says our historian, of a most comely aspect, of a sweet temper, engaging behaviour, great courage, and extraordinary piety ^g. He had married Hermelinda, a princess of the blood royal of the Anglo-Saxons, and had by her one son, named Luitbert, to whom he bequeathed the kingdom ; but, as he was then an infant, he committed him to the care of Asprand, a person of great distinction among the Lombards, and highly esteemed for his wisdom. Luitbert, or rather Asprand, had scarce governed eight months, when Ragumbert, duke of Turin, taking upon him the title of king, defeated Asprand in battle, and caused himself to be acknowledged by the whole nation ; but he died the same year, and was succeeded by his son Aripert, in whose reign Luitbert, assisted by several dukes, attempted the recovery of his paternal kingdom ; but he was utterly defeated by the usurper, and taken prisoner, in a battle fought at a small distance from Pavia. Rotharit duke of Bergamo, who had espoused with great zeal the cause of the king, fled, after the defeat of the army, to his own city, in which he was closely besieged by Aripert, who, having in the end made himself master of the place, sent the duke to Turin, where he was soon after put to death by his orders. Luitbert, his young competitor, met with no better treatment ; for he soon after ordered him to be stifled in a bath. As for Asprand,

^f Idem ibid. c. 38—41.

^g Idem ibid.

prand, whom, above all others the tyrant was desirous of getting into his power, he fled first to the above-mentioned island in the lake Larius; but being informed, that a strong detachment was marching against him, he fled from thence to Ravenna, and from Ravenna to Theudebert duke of the Boioarii, with whom he continued for the space of nine years. Aripert's men reduced the island; but not finding Asprand there, they returned to Aripert, who, transported with rage at his disappointment, put out the eyes of Sigibrand the son of Asprand, and at the same time caused the nose and ears of his wife Theuderata, and daughter Aurona, to be cut off. Asprand had another son, by name Luitprand; but the tyrant spared him, as he was yet a child, and sent him to his father, Providence reserving him, as our historian observes, for great things^b. Aripert, notwithstanding the acts of cruelty he practised in the beginning of his reign, is said to have ruled afterwards with great prudence and equity. He was a great friend to the ecclesiastics, and very liberal to the churches, which he enriched with ample donations. To the church of Rome he restored many lands, especially the patrimony of the Alpes Cottiae, which had been seized on by king Rotharis. We are told, that he sent the instrument of this donation to the bishop of Rome written in golden lettersⁱ (W). In the ninth year of his reign,

His cruelty.

Is liberal to the churches.

^b Idem ibid. c. 18—21. & l. vi. c. 22. ⁱ Idem, l. vi. c. 28.

(W) The lands and estates, which the churches acquired, not only within the district of their respective cities, but in distant countries, were styled patrimonies, as were likewise the hereditary estates both of princes and private persons, but with this difference, that the prince's estate was called patrimonium sacrum, as appears from several constitutions of the Justinian code (1). The patrimonium sacrum was what we now call the king's demain. As for the churches, so many profuse donations were made to them, both by princes and private persons, that, in process of time, they acquired great estates, which, according to the style of those times, were called patrimonies. Thus, in the letters of pope Gregory the Great, frequent mention is made, not only of the patrimony of the church of Rome, but of the church of Milan, Rimini, Ravenna, and several others. The churches of great cities, such as Rome, Ravenna, and Milan, where the emperor's officers, and other illustrious persons, resided, acquired patrimonies.

M m 3

(1) Cod. Justin. l. xii.

Asprand returns into Italy.

reign, Asprand returned into Italy at the head of a powerful army, raised by the duke of the Boioarii, who, having espoused patrimonies, not only within their own district, but in distant countries; whereas the churches of smaller cities, whose inhabitants had but moderate fortunes, and their estates within their own limits, had no patrimonies out of their districts. The church of Rome, above all others, acquired, by degrees, immense patrimonies, not only in Italy, but in the most distant provinces of Europe (2). In the time of Gregory the Great, that church held ample patrimonies in Sicily; for Gregory, in a letter to Justin governor of Sicily for the emperor, intreats him to cause the corn of the patrimony of St. Peter to be, without delay, conveyed to Rome, where there was great scarcity. The church of Rome had likewise a patrimony in France, and another in Dalmatia, of which the latter was committed to the care of one Antoninus a sub-deacon, and the former to that of a priest named Candidus, whom Gregory, in one of his letters, earnestly recommends to queen Brunichild, and likewise to king Childebert her son. In a letter to Candidus, he shews him how the revenues of that patrimony are to be disposed of; nay, from the letters of the same pope it appears, that the church of Rome had, in his time, a patrimony in Africa; for, in a letter to Gennadius exarch of that province, he returns him thanks for taking care of the patrimony of St. Peter there, and in particular for sending such as depended upon him to till the lands, which had been abandoned by the tenants. In Italy the patrimonies of the Roman church were almost without number. In the province of the Alpes Cottiae she had a large patrimony, which was seized, and for a long time possessed by the Lombards; but restored to her by king Aripert in the time of pope John VII. Aripert king of the Lombards, says Paulus Diaconus, restored the patrimony of the Alpes Cottiae belonging to the apostolic see, but for a long time possessed by the Lombards, and sent the donation to Rome in golden letters (3). This donation was, according to the same writer, confirmed by king Luitprand. Other patrimonies were held by the same church, as appears from the letters of several popes, in the exarchate of Ravenna, in the dukedom of Naples, in the territories of Salerno and Nola, in the provinces of Campania, Lucania, Calabria, Abruzzo, Liguria, Tuscany, &c. That these patrimonies might be the more respected, the bishops gave them the names of the saints, which each church had in special veneration. Thus the possessions of the church of Ravenna were called the patrimony of St. Apollinaris; those of Rome, Milan, Naples, &c. the patrimony

(2) Vide Ammirat. in opusc. discept. vii.
l. vi. c. 28.

(3) Paul. Diac.

espoused his cause with great warmth, resolved to assist him with all his strength in revenging the cruel treatment his wife mony of St. Peter, St. Ambrose, St. Aspremus, &c. The name of patrimony did not import any sovereignty or jurisdiction; for the pope, as well as the other bishops, held their patrimonies of the prince, in whose state they lay, paying the same taxes and impositions as other subjects. It is true, that, in some places, those who had care of the Patrimonies of St. Peter, attempted to take the administration of justice into their own hands; but this no prince would suffer, and besides, Gregory the Great forbid all attempts and encroachments of that kind, on pain of excommunication (4). In the year 681, the emperor Constantine Pogonatus granted an exemption from all tribute for the patrimonies of the roman church in Sicily and Calabria; and the tribute paid for the patrimonies of the same church in Lucania and Abruzzo was remitted by Justinian, the successor of Constantine, in 687. But Leo Isauricus, provoked against the bishop of Rome, on account of his hindering the imperial edict against the worship of images from being put in execution, first revoked the exemptions granted by his predecessors for the patrimonies in Sicily and Calabria; and afterwards, as the bishop continued to oppose the edict, he seized on those patrimonies, and ordered the revenues to be paid into the exchequer. The church of Rome possessed, as we have observed, several patrimonies in the different provinces of Italy, and this gave rise to a great mistake among the writers of later times, who confounding the patrimonies which the church of Rome held in those provinces with the provinces themselves, have supposed the provinces of the Alpes Cottiae, of Sicily and Calabria, the dukedoms of Benevento and Spoleto, and part of Tuscany and Campania, to have belonged to the church of Rome. Into this mistake several eminent authors have fallen, and among the rest Scipio Ammiratus, who, though otherwise a most exact and accurate writer, supposes king Aripert, by the donation we have mentioned above, to have restored and confirmed to pope John VII. the province of the Alpes Cottiae (5); whereas it is evident from the words of the historian, that the king restored to the church of Rome the patrimony, which she had in that province, and not the province itself, which reached as far as Genoa, and comprised a great tract of country, in which were many cities of note, and places of great importance. It is surprising any one should imagine, that the king of the Lombards would have divested himself of such a country, and given it to the pope, whom he knew to be greatly attached

M m 4

(4) Vide Ant. Matt. man. ad. jus can. l. iii. tit. 17. (5) Scip. Ammirat. opusc. discept. vii.

Aripert drowned.

Asprand declared king wife and children had met with at the king's hands. Aripert met him on the confines with an army no-ways inferior to his. Hereupon a bloody battle ensued, which lasted till night parted the combatants. The next day Asprand was for renewing the fight ; but Aripert, though he had not lost near so many men as his adversary, yet declining, for reasons unknown to our historian, a second engagement he left the enemy masters of the field of battle, and retired to Pavia. Being pursued by Asprand, whose men were no less encouraged by his retreat, than Aripert's were disheartened, he abandoned Pavia, with a design to pass into Gaul, and there hire a new army, carrying with him for that effect the best part of his treasures ; but, attempting to swim cross the Tefino, he was drowned in that river. His body was found the next day, and buried with great pomp in the church of St. Saviour, founded by Aribert, the first of that name. His brother, by name Guntbert, fled to the king of the Franks, and continued at his court to his death. Reginbert, the eldest son of Guntbert, governed the city of Orleans for the king of the Franks in the time of our historian^k. The throne being vacant by the death of Aripert, Asprand was placed on it by the unanimous consent of the whole nation ; but he dying three months after his accession, his son Luitprand succeeded him in the kingdom of the Lombards. But, before we speak of his reign, we shall relate what happened till his time, worthy of notice, in the other provinces of Italy subject to the Lombards.

IN

^k Idem ibid. c. 35.

attached to the emperors of the east, the implacable enemies of the Lombards. But of this subject we shall speak more at length hereafter, on occasion of the many famous donations made to the church of Rome by Charlemagne and Lewis the Pious, where it will appear, that what we read in them of Naples, Benevento, and Salerno, ought to be understood of the patrimonies, which the church of Rome had in those dukedoms, and not of the dukedoms themselves, it being certain, that the dukedom of Benevento came first under the dominion of the church in the year 1052, by way of exchange made between the emperor Henry II. and pope Leo IX. for the church of Bamberg. (6).

(6) Vide Pietro Giann. hist. civil. di Napoli, l. iv. c. 4.

IN the year 677, died Romuald duke of Benevento, ^{The dukes of Benevento.} and was succeeded by Grimoald II. his son, to whom he left that dukedom greatly enlarged by the addition of Tarento, Brindisi, Bari, and their territories, which he took from the emperor of the east, as we have related above. Grimoald governed, with his brother Gisulph, not quite three years ; and, upon his death, Gisulph held the dukedom alone fourteen years more. All we find recorded of him in history is his laying waste, upon what provocation we know not, the territory of Rome. Gisulph dying in 694, was succeeded in the dukedom by his son Romuald II. who ruled twenty-six years, during which time he greatly harassed the Neapolitans, and, by a stratagem, made himself master of Cumæ, belonging to them. Hereupon Gregory II. then bishop of Rome, apprehending that metropolis to be in danger, did all that lay in his power to persuade the duke to restore Cumæ, offering him even a considerable sum in lieu of it. But his offers, and every other fair means, proving ineffectual, the bishop in the end thundered against him the sentence of excommunication ; but finding, that Grimoald made no more account of his excommunications, than his offers, he had recourse to John duke of Naples, whom he advised to attack the city in the night ; which he did accordingly, and, having made himself master of the place, he put three hundred Lombards, with their gastald, to the sword, and took five hundred more prisoners, whom he carried with him to Naples. As for the city, he sold it to the bishop, as had been agreed on before-hand, for seventy pounds weight of gold¹. Romuald died in 720. and was succeeded by his son Adelai, who governed only two years, and performed nothing worthy of notice. In the dukedom of Friuli, ^{The dukes of Friuli,} Welcar, who had been appointed duke by Grimoald, as we have related above, was succeeded by Landar, and he by Rodoald, in whose absence one Ansfrid seized on the dukedom, and soon after, aspiring at the crown, began to make vast preparations for so great an undertaking. But Cunipert, who reigned then, being privately acquainted with his design, found means to intercept him as he was going to Verona. However, he spared his life, but sent him into banishment, after he had caused his eyes to be put out. In the mean time Rodoald dying, his brother Aldo succeeded ded to the dukedom, which he governed, according to our historian, but one year and seven months^m. though Sigonius will have him to have held it seven years. Aldo, who by Paulus Diaconus is styled only protector of the dukedom, was succeeded by Ferdulf, who was killed by the Slavonians, with all the nobility of the dukedom, except Munichis, who had the good fortune to make his escape. One Corvulus was then appointed duke by king Aripert, whom he soon disoblged, and was on that account deposed and deprived of his sight. In his room was raised to the dukedom one Pemmo, who, seeking for the sons of the nobility killed by the Slavonians, brought them up with his own childrenⁿ. During this time died Mitula, who had been rewarded by king Grimoald, as we have related above, with the dukedom of Spoleto, for his gallant behaviour against the emperor Constans. He was succeeded by his son Faroald, who governed jointly with his brother Wachilap^o.

¹ Idem. l. v. c. 44. & Joan. Diac. apud Ughell. de episc. Neap. p. 86.

And of Spolete.

Luitprond.
Year after
Christ 711.

Two conspiracies against him.

To return, after this short digression, to Luitprand :
THAT prince, from the very beginning of his reign, gave great instances of his courage and prudence. He had scarce mounted the throne, when one of his kinsmen, named Rotharis, conspiring against him, invited him to a banquet at his house, where he had assassins concealed, who, upon a signal agreed on before-hand, were to rush into the room where the king was, and dispatch him. But Luitprand, receiving private intelligence of the treason that was hatching against him, sent for Rotharis to the palace, who, finding himself discovered, drew his sword all on a sudden, with a design to kill the king ; but he defended himself with great bravery, not shewing the least tokens of fear or surprize, till his guards, coming in at the noise, dispatched the traitor. He sometimes suffered himself to be transported by his courage beyond what was prudent in a prince, on whose safety depended the welfare of his subjects. Thus, being informed that two of his attendants had conspired against his life, and only watched a favourable opportunity of putting their design in execution, he one day walked out with them alone into a thick wood, and there, drawing his sword, he upbraided them with their treachery, and told them that they now had what they so long wished for, the king alone ; and therefore might try, if they pleased, to compass their wicked design. These words, with the king's generosity,

^m Paul. Diac. l. v. c. 17.
ibid. c. 30.

ⁿ Idem ibid. c. 24, 25. ^o Idem.

generosity, and their own guilt, made such a deep impression upon their minds, that they threw themselves disarmed at his feet, and, owning the whole truth, acknowledged themselves unworthy of mercy. The generous prince, however, not only forgave them, but receiving them into favour, preferred them afterwards to great employments^p. Having thus won his enemies at home by his kindness, and strengthened his interest abroad by marrying the daughter of the duke of the Boioarii, who had received and entertained him and his father in their distress, he applied himself, in imitation of his predecessors Rotharis and Grimoald, to the making of new laws, for the better regulation of his kingdom, and administration of justice. Having therefore, in the first year of his reign, convened a general diet in Pavia, with the consent and approbation of his nobles, and the judges from all parts of his kingdom, he enacted several laws, which he added to the edicts of Rotharis and Grimoald. In the following years he published many others, as occasion^{He publishes a new edict of laws.} required; so that, next to Rotharis, he ought to be accounted the chief lawgiver of the Lombards^q. His first edict was published the last day of February, in the eleventh indiction, and the first year of his reign, as appears from the preface prefixed to it (X), and several others he published the following years; so that his laws amounted in the end to an hundred and fifty-two. But the wisdom this prince shewed in settling his kingdom with excellent laws and his other extraordinary parts, were not a little eclipsed by his unbounded ambition; for, not satisfied with the large and extensive dominions left him by his predecessors, he undertook to drive the Romans quite out of Italy;

^p Idem ibid. c. 38. ^q Idem, l. vi. c. 58. Bernard. Saccus, hist. Ticin. l. ix. c. 5. Sigon. reg. Ital. ad ann. 713.

(X) The preface is couched in the following words: “Whereas “our most mighty predecessor, and most eminent king, Rothar “published an edict for the Lombards, wherein he prudently “caused the following words to be inserted; If the princes of “the Lombards, our successors, find any thing superfluous in this “edict, they may leave it out, and, with the assistance of God, “add what they think wanting: after him, the most glorious “king Grimoald accordingly added and left out what to him “seemed fit; and we, following his example, and inspired, as “we

Italy ; which in the end occasioned the ruin of the kingdom of the Lombards in that country : for the popes growing jealous of their too great power, and finding the emperors of the east incapable of making head against them, or putting a stop to their conquests, had recourse to a foreign nation, which raised a new empire in Italy, upon the ruins of the kingdom of the Lombards, as we shall relate in the sequel of this history. Luitprand, pushed on by his ambition, watched all opportunities of enlarging his dominions at the expence of the emperors ; and in the fifth year of his reign a very favourable one offered : for Leo Isauricus, who at that time reigned in the east, having, by his famous edict, forbidden the worship of images, and ordered them to be every-where pulled down, the people were so provoked at that innovation, that, in several places, they openly revolted, and, falling upon the emperor's officers, drove them out of the cities. In the east Germanus, patriarch of Constantinople, opposed the emperor's design with great warmth ; but Leo caused him to be deposed, and Anastasius to be raised to that see in his room, ordering at the same time all the images in the imperial city to be pulled down, and “ we hope by God, have decreed to be added and omitted such “ things, as, according to the law of God, seemed to us proper:

 “ therefore, in the name of the omnipotent God, I Luitprand,
 “ the most excellent, the christian, and catholic, king of the “ nation of the Lombards, beloved of God, in the first year of “ my reign, the day before the calends of March, in the ele“ venth indiction, together with all the judges from the “ parts of Austria and Neustria, and borders of Thufcia, with “ others of my faithful Lombards, and all the people assisting “ am pleased with the following regulations, which to us have “ appeared good, according to the fear and love of God”. Then follow the six chapters of the edict, whereof the first bears this title De successione filiarum. In the fifth year of his reign he published another edict and a great many more in the following years, which are all to be seen intire in the manuscript code lodged in the monastery of Cava, with seven other chapters added to them under the following titles, I. De mercede magistri. II.
De muro. III. De annona. IV. De opera. V. De caminata.
 VI. De furno. VII. De puteo. The laws of Luitprand are in all an hundred and fifty-two, as appears from the above-mentioned code ;
 but the compiler of the three books of the laws of the Lombards has thought fit to insert in that work only an hundred and thirty-and publicly burnt, he strictly enjoined his officers in the west, especially the exarch of Ravenna, to see his edict punctually obeyed in their respective governments. In compliance with these orders, Scholafticus, then exarch, began to pull down the images in all the churches and public places in Ravenna; which incensed the superstitious multitude to such a degree, that, taking arms, they openly declared they would rather renounce their allegiance to the emperor, than the worship of images. Thus a kind of civil war being kindled in the city, Luitprand thought he had now a favourable opportunity of making himself master of the seat of the exarch, not doubting but the conquest of such an important place would be followed by that of the whole exarchate. Having therefore drawn together all his forces, he unexpectedly appeared before Ravenna, and closely besieged it. The exarch little expected such a surprize, as a friendly correspondence had been maintained for many years between the exarchs and the Lombard kings. However, he defended the place with such courage and resolution, that Luitprand, despairing of success, broke up the siege, and led his army against Classis at a small distance from Ravenna, which place he took, plundered, and levelled with the ground. The loss of this place, and the severe treatment the inhabitants met with from the king, threw the citizens of Ravenna into the utmost consternation; which Luitprand being informed of, he resolved to take advantage of their fears, and, returning before Ravenna while the inhabitants were thus disheartened, to attempt once more the reduction of that place. Accordingly he led his whole army against it, and, by frequent attacks, tired the inhabitants and garrison to such a degree, that the exarch, finding they could hold out no longer, and despairing of relief, privately withdrew. Luitprand, informed of his retreat, attacked the town with more violence than ever, and, having carried it by storm, gave it up to be plundered

Disturbances occasioned in Italy by the edict of Leo Isauricus.

Luitprand invades the exarchate.

He takes and by plunders Ravenna.

Year after
Christ 722.

thirty-seven of them, viz. forty-eight in the first book, and eighty-nine in the second. As for the third book, is chiefly composed of those laws, which were made by the emperors who reigned in Italy, as successors to the kings of the Lombards; for several laws were enacted by them, not as emperors or kings of France, but as kings of Italy, or of the Lombards, and hence the Lombard laws were never of any force in France, nor the French laws in Italy.

by his soldiers, who found in it an immense booty, as it had been for a long time the seat of the Roman emperors, of the Gothic kings, and the exarchs. The king stripped it of most of its valuable monuments of antiquity, and caused, among the rest, an equestrian statue of an emperor, of wonderful workmanship, to be conveyed to Pavia, where it is to be seen to this day. The reduction of Ravenna was followed by the surrender of several cities of the exarchate, which Luitprand reduced to a dukedom, appointing Hildebrand, his grandson, to govern it with the title of duke, and giving him, as he was yet an infant, Pcredeus duke of Vicenza for his guardian^r.

THE conquest of Ravenna, and the greater part of the exarchate, did not a little alarm Gregory II. bishop of Rome. He was then at variance with the emperor, whose edict against the worshipping of images he had opposed with all his might, and by that means provoked Leo to such a degree, that he had threatened to drive him from his see, and send him into exile. However, the pope, no less jealous of the power of the Lombards, than all his predecessors had been, resolved, by some means or other, to put a stop to their conquests. The only prince in Italy, to whom he could have recourse, was Ursus duke of Venice, the Venetians making already no inconsiderable figure. To him accordingly he wrote a very pressing letter, conjuring him to assist his worthy son the exarch, and, for the love of the holy faith, to attempt with him the recovery of the exarchate, which the wicked nation of the Lombards had unjustly taken from his sons Leo and Constantine emperors. Ursus and the Venetians, moved with the pope's letter, and at the same time greatly alarmed at the growth of so powerful a neighbour, promised to assist the exarch with the whole strength of their republic, and accordingly fitted out a considerable fleet, pretending it was designed for the service of the emperor against the Saracens. At the same time the exarch, who had taken refuge in Venice, abandoning that place, as it were in despair of bringing the duke over to his party, raised, in the places still subject to the emperor, what forces he was able ; and having got together a considerable body, he marched with them towards Imola, giving out, that he designed to besiege that city ; but turning all on a sudden towards Ravenna, as had been

^r Paul. Diac, l. vi. c. 32. & Anast. bibliothecar. in Greg. II.

been agreed upon between him and the Venetians, he laid siege to it by land, while they invested it almost at the same instant by sea. Peredeus defended the town for some time with great courage and resolution, obliging all those, who were able to bear arms, to repair to the walls. But the Venetians having, in spite of all opposition, forced open one of the gates on the side of the sea, the city was taken, and Peredeus slain, while he was attempting, at the head of a choice body, to drive the enemy from the posts they had seized. As for Hildebrand, he fell into the hands of the Venetians, who, having thus recovered Ravenna to the emperor, returned home, leaving the exarch in possession of the city. Luitprand was then at Pavia ; but the town was taken before he could assemble his troops to relieve it^a. And now Gregory bishop of Rome, to whom the recovery of Ravenna was chiefly owing, persuading himself, that the emperor would, out of gratitude, give ear to his remonstrances and admonitions, began to solicit him with more pressing letters than ever to revoke his edict against the worship of images ; but Leo, well apprised, that the bishop, in all the measures he had taken, had been more influenced by a regard to his own interest, than to that of the empire, instead of hearkening to his remonstrances, was still more provoked against him for thus obstinately opposing the execution of his edict. Being therefore resolved at all events to have it observed in Rome itself, and, on the other hand, not doubting but the pope would oppose it to the last with all his might, in order to remove all obstacles, he sent three officers to Rome, with private orders either to dispatch the pope, or to take him prisoner, and to convey him to Constantinople. At the same time he wrote to Mauritius duke of Rome, secretly enjoining him to assist his three officers in their undertaking ; but no favourable opportunity offering to put their design in execution, the emperor, in the year 725, recalled Scholasticus, and sent Paul a patrician into Italy, to govern in his room, with private instructions to encourage the above-mentioned officers with the promise of great rewards, and to assure them of his protection. But in the mean time the plot was discovered, and two of the conspirators apprehended by the citizens of Rome, and put to death, the third having escaped into a monastery, where he Ravenna recovered by the exarch and the Venetians.

Leo and pope Gregory quarrel.

^a Paul. Diac. ibid.

The exarch attempts to get the pope into his power,

Who is defended by Luitprand.

The pope opposes the emperor's edict against images.

he took the monastic habit, and ended his days ^t. Hereupon the exarch, in compliance with the emperor's orders, resolved to proceed no longer by secret plots, but by open force. Accordingly he drew together a considerable body of troops, and set out at the head of them on his march to Rome, with a design to seize on the pope, and send him, as he had engaged to do, in chains to Constantinople. But, on this occasion, Luitprand, though highly provoked against Gregory for having stirred up the Venetians against him, yet resolved to assist him, and the citizens of Rome, against the exarch, in order to keep the balance even between them, and, by assisting sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, weaken both. Pursuant to this resolution, he ordered the Lombards of Tuscany, and those of the dukedom of Spoleto, to join the pope, and the inhabitants of Rome, who being, by this reinforcement, far superior in strength and number to the exarch, obliged him to return to Ravenna, and gave over all thoughts of any further attempt on the person of the pope. In the mean time Leo, persisting in his former resolution of suppressing throughout his dominions the worship of images, sent fresh orders to the exarch Paul, strictly enjoining him to cause his edict to be put in execution in all the cities of Italy under his empire, especially in Rome. At the same time he wrote to the pope, promising him his favour and protection, if he complied with the edict, and declaring him, if he continued to oppose it, a rebel, and no longer vested with the papal dignity. But Gregory was so far from yielding to the emperor's threats or promises, that, on the contrary, he solemnly excommunicated the exarch for attempting to put the imperial edict in execution; at the same time wrote circular letters to the Venetians, to king Luitprand, to the Lombard dukes, and to all the chief cities of the empire, exhorting them to continue steadfast in the catholic faith, and to oppose with all their might such a detestible innovation. These letters made such an impression on the minds of the people in Italy, that, though of different interests, and often at war with one another, they all united, protesting they would defend the catholic faith, and the life of the pope in so glorious a cause, at the expence of their own; nay, the citizens of Rome, and the inhabitants of Pentapolis, now Marca d'Ancona, not contenting themselves selves with such a protestation, openly revolted from the emperor, and pulling down his statues, they elected, by their own authority, magistrates to govern them during the interregnum. We are even told, that, transported with a blind zeal, they were for chusing a new emperor, and conducting him to Constantinople, not doubting but the people would every-where join them. But the pope, thinking this resolution unseasonable, and not to be easily put in execution, opposed it; so that it did not take place^a.

^t Anastas. in Greg. II. Sigon. ad ann. 725. Marc. Freher. in chron. exar. Rav. p. 38

Several cities revolt.

In the mean time the exarch Paul, having gained a considerable party in Ravenna, began, pursuant to the repeated orders from the emperor, to remove the images, as so many idols, out of the churches. Hereupon the adverse party, supported and encouraged by the pope, flew to arms, and, falling upon the iconoclasts or image-breakers, as they styled them, gave rise to a civil war within the walls of Ravenna. Great numbers were killed on both sides; but those who were for the worship of images prevailing in the end, a dreadful slaughter was made of the opposite party, and among the rest, the exarch himself was murdered. However, the city of Ravenna continued faithful to the emperor; but most of the cities of Romagna belonging to the exarchate, and all those of Pentapolis or La Marca d'Ancona, abhorring the emperor as an heretic, submitted to Luitprand king of the Lombards, who, pretending a great zeal for the catholic religion, took care to improve the discontent of the people to his advantage, by representing to them, that they could never maintain their religious rights under a prince, who was not only an heretic, but a persecutor of the orthodox. In Naples, Exhilaratus, duke of that city, having received peremptory orders from the emperor to cause his edict to be put in execution, did all that lay in his power to persuade the people to receive it; but finding all his endeavours thwarted by the bishop of Rome, for whom the Neapolitans had a great veneration, he hired assassins to murder him. But the plot being discovered, tho' carried on with great secrecy, the Neapolitans, highly provoked against the duke, tore both him and his son to pieces, and likewise put to death one of his chief officers, who had composed a libel against Great disturbances in Ravenna, and the exarch murdered.

All Pentapolis, and great part of Romagna, submit to Luitprand.

The Neapolitans put their duke to death.

^a PAUL. DIAC. l. vi. c. 9. REGIN. chronol. l. i. p. 47. SIGON. ad ann. 726.

gainst the pope ^w. Luitprand, and Gregory, at that time duke of Benevento, laying hold of so favourable an opportunity to make themselves masters of the dukedom of Naples, did all that lay in their power to persuade the Neapolitans to submit to them. But the Neapolitans, bearing an irreconcilable hatred to the Lombards, with whom they had been constantly at variance, rejected every overture of that nature with the utmost indignation, and, continuing stedfast in their allegiance to Leo, received from Constantinople one Peter, who was sent to govern them in the room of Exhilaratus. Some writers suppose the Neapolitans, in this general revolt of the cities of Italy, to have shaken off the yoke with the rest, and to have appointed magistrates of their own election to govern them, in the room of the officers hitherto sent from Constantinople, or named by the exarch; but they are therein certainly mistaken, it being manifest from history that Peter succeeded Exhilaratus in that dukedom; and that the Neapolitans continued to live under the emperors, till they were conquered many years after by the Normans, as we shall relate hereafter. In the mean time Leo, hearing of the murder of the exarch, and the general revolt of the cities, and not doubting but the pope was the chief author of so much mischief, sent the eunuch Eutychius into Italy with the title and authority of exarch, strictly injoining him to get the pope dispatched by some means or other, since his death was absolutely necessary for the tranquility of Italy. The exarch left no stone unturned to get the pope into his power; but a messenger, whom he had sent to Rome, being apprehended by the citizens, and an order from the emperor found upon him to all his officers in that city, commanding them to put the pope to death at all events, the pope's friends thenceforth guarded him with such care, that the exarch's emissaries could never afterwards find an opportunity of executing their design. As for the messenger, the Romans were for putting him to death; but the pope interposed, contenting himself with excommunicating the exarch ^x. And now the Romans provoked more than ever against Leo, and, on the other hand unwilling to live under the Lombards, resolved to revolt from the emperor, and appoint their own magistrates, keeping themselves united under Eutychius, the new exarch, attempts to get the pope murdered.

The origin of the pope's temporal power.

^w SIGON. ad ann. 726. MAIMB. hist. iconoclast. p. 73.

^x FREHER. in chron. exarch. Raven. p. 82.

under the pope, not yet as their prince, but only as their head. This they did accordingly, and from these slender beginnings the sovereignty of the popes in Italy took its rise, though they did not then, as is commonly supposed by historians, but many years after, become sovereign lords of Rome (Y).

EUTY-

(Y) The Greek writers, who flourished long after Gregory, Paulus Diaconus, and Anastasius Bibliothecarius, tell us, that the Romans revolting from the emperor Leo, chose Gregory for their prince, and took an oath of allegiance to him. They add, that the pope readily accepted the sovereignty offered him, that he forbade the Romans, and the other inhabitants of Italy, to pay tribute for the future to the emperor; that he absolved all the subjects of the empire from their oath of allegiance; and finally that, with great solemnity, he excommunicated and deposed Leo. Hence, say the Greek writers, viz. Theophanes, Cedrenus, Zonaras, and Nicephorus, the temporal dominion of the popes over Rome, and the Roman dukedom, took its rise; to which were afterwards added, by Pepin and Charles the Great, the exarchate of Ravenna, Pentapolis or the Marca d'Ancona, and several other cities of Italy. On the other hand, Paulus Diaconus, Anastasius Bibliothecarius, and Damascenus, take no notice of the pope's deposing or excommunicating the emperor, of his forbidding tribute to be paid to him; or of his accepting from the rebellious Romans the sovereignty of Rome. These writers only say, that he opposed with all his might the edicts of Leo; that he prevented them from being received by the people; and that he earnestly exhorted and conjured the emperor to revoke them, and give over, as they style it, such an impious undertaking. Anastasius, after having told us, that Leo deposed Germanus patriarch of Constantinople for opposing his edict, and appointed Anastasius in his room, adds, that Gregory excommunicated the new patriarch, and wrote to the emperor, exhorting him to revoke his edict. Had he likewise excommunicated the emperor, we cannot persuade ourselves, that Anastasius, Paulus Diaconus, and Damascenus, would have passed over in silence such a remarkable incident, it being agreed on by all writers, that no prince or emperor had been excommunicated till that time. As for what Cedrenus, Theophanes, Zonaras, and Nicephorus, write of the pope's deposing the emperor, it is evidently false, since Gregory acknowledged Leo for emperor as long as he lived, as did likewise Gregory III. his successor, who wrote several letters to him full of respect; nay, the dates of most of that pope's EUTYCHIUS failed in his design upon the life of the pope ; but, having brought with him from Constantinople a good letters bear the years of Leo's reign ; and in that, which he wrote to Boniface, he gives Leo the title of Most pious, Imperante domino piissimo Augusto Leone imperii ejus xxiii (1). Hence the French writers, and among the rest P. de Marca, Natalis, and Du Pin, maintain, that Gregory never excommunicated, or attempted to depose, the emperor Leo ; that what the above-mentioned Greek authors have written on that head, ought to be deemed fabulous ; and, that, in so remarkable an incident, the silence of the Latin writers, who flourished in times less distant, ought to be of far greater weight with every un-biased reader, than the authority of the Greeks, who out of their natural aversion to the Latin church, have obtruded such fables on the publick. But most of our protestant writers seem to give entire credit to the Greeks, and by all means will have it, that Gregory excommunicated the emperor ; that he absolved all his subjects from their allegiance ; that he forbade them to pay him the usual tribute ; and that, being offered the sovereignty of Rome by the rebellious Romans, he accepted the offer, and thenceforth took upon him all the state of a temporal prince. Spanhemius thinks, that all this was denied by the French writers, lest in the reign of Lewis the Great, they should seem to acknowledge such a power, in the popes (2). The Italian writers, even those among them who are most addicted to the court of Rome, agree with the protestants in giving credit to the Greeks, but with a different view, viz. to shew, that the power of excommunicating and deposing princes was so early exerted by the popes. To conclude, Theophanes, Cedrenus, Zonaras, and Nicephorus, say, that Gregory II. not only excommunicated the emperor Leo, but absolved his subjects from their allegiance, declaring that they were no longer bound to obey him ; that on this occasion the Romans, shaking off the yoke, offered the sovereignty of Rome to the pope ; and that he, accepting the offer, became sovereign lord of that city, and its dukedom. On the other hand, Paulus Diaconus, Anastasius, and Damascenus, who flourished before the Greek writers, only say, that the pope opposed the edicts of Leo ; that he excommunicated both the exarch of Ravenna, and the patriarch of Constantinople ; and that he exhorted the emperor to revoke his edict. Some modern writers give entire credit to the Greeks ; others from

the

(1) Greg. III. ep. iii. P. de Marca de con. fac. & imp. l. iii. c. 11. num. 5. imag. p. 52.

(2) Spanhem. contra Maimburg. in hist.

a good number of troops, he easily quelled the rebellion in Ravenna, and severely punished the authors of the late disturbances.

the silence of the Latins, conclude the accounts of the Greeks to be fabulous; and such truly they appear to us, since Gregory, so long as he lived, acknowledged Leo as emperor; and Gregory III. his successor, not only wrote respectful letters to him, but dated those he wrote to others by the years of his reign, as we have hinted above. As for the temporal dominion of the popes in Rome, we shall shew in a proper place, that it did not begin till several years after; and that their first acquisitions were in the exarchate; that they became afterwards masters of Pentapolis, of several places in the Roman dukedom, and lastly of Rome. As for the famous donation of all Italy, said to have been made by Constantine the Great in the year 324, to pope Sylvester, it is now universally exploded as fabulous. It was indeed formerly defended with great warmth by most of the Italian writers, who even maintained in their works, that the emperors, who succeeded Constantine, had no title or right to any part of Italy, as belonging to the pope, and being the patrimony of St. Peter; that from thence the investitures given by the popes took their rise; and that, from that time, Italy began to be disjoined from the empire, and was never afterwards subject to the emperors; nay, Matteo d'Affitti, a civilian of no small account, from this supposed donation, will have the constitutions published by the emperors, the successors of Constantine, to be of no force in Italy, since those princes had not the power of causing them to be received by the inhabitants of that country, who were no longer subject to them; and several eminent civilians, members of the collateral council in Naples, were of opinion, that in Italy recourse ought to be had to the canon, and not to the civil law (3). But, in later times, it has been evidently proved by many able writers (4), that this donation was forged in the eighth or ninth century, and then inserted into the decrees of Gratian, no mention of it being made by any writer before that time. The many copies of this famous instrument, which are still extant, and widely differ from each other, are so many evident proofs of forgery to every person, who does not delight in darkness, to use the expression of Pietro Giannone, and therefore shuts his eyes, lest he should be forced to see. A copy of this supposed donation is still to be seen in

N n 3

the

(3) Affit. in constit. in prælud. q. 2. num. 2. & q. 20. num. 1. Tappia de jur. reg. l. i. de legib. l. i. num. 6.

(4) Marca, l. iii. c. 12. & l. vi. c. 6. Schol. strat. antiqu. illust. part. ii. diff. iii. c. 8.

disturbances. As for the rebellious Romans, he was well apprised he could never reduce them, so long as they were supported by the king of the Lombards; and therefore he employed all his art and policy to take off that prince from the party of the Romans, and bring him over to his own. Luitprand, for some time, withstood all his offers;

the Vatican library, but greatly differing from that, which we read in the decrees of Gratian. It is related in quite different words by the popes Melchias, Nicholas II. and Leo IX. and quoted by Petrus Damianus, Balzar, Juo de Chartres, Burfattus, and Albericus, with great disagreement both in words and sense. Besides, who can imagine, that Eusebius, and other contemporary writers, who have transmitted to posterity the most minute incidents of Constantine's reign, would have passed over in silence this, perhaps the most remarkable of all? This donation is said to have been made by Constantine at Rome, in the spring of the year 324. and four days after his baptism. But it is evident from history, that Constantine was not then at Rome, but engaged in a war against Licinius in the east; and that, the war being ended, he went the same year to Thessalonica, and continued there till the year following (5). He defeated Licinius in his third consulship, having Crispus for his colleague, who was likewise in his third consulship, as is affirmed by all historians. Now, according to the unanimous consent of chronologers, Constantine and Crispus were consuls for the third time in 324, and in the spring of that year, the very time when he is supposed to have made that donation, he was at Thessalonica, as is manifest from two of his constitutions still to be seen in the Theodosian code. the one bearing the following date, Dat. viii. id. Mart. Thessalonicae Crispo III, & Constantino III. coff. the other dated thus; Dat. vi. id. Aprilis, Thessalonicae, Crispo III. & Constantino II. coff (6). The latter is directed to Lucer. Verinus, that year prefect of Rome, as appears from the notitia of the prefects of that city, where we read Crispo III. & Constantino III. coff. Lucer. Verinus praefectus urbi. From these constitutions, and likewise from the most credible historians both Greek and Latin, it has been evidently proved by several writers, that Constantine was baptized in Nicomedia when he was dying, and not in Rome by pope Sylvester, to whom he is supposed to have made the above-mentioned donation four days after his baptism: so that, upon the whole, we may conclude Constantine's yielding Rome to Sylvester, and his receiving baptism at the hands of that pope, to be equally fabulous.

(5) Vide Zof. l. ii. & anonym. Sirmund.
Theod. l. iv.

(6). Cod.

offers; but Trafimund duke of Spoleto revolting at this very juncture, the exarch, laying hold of that opportunity, offered to assist the king with all his strength against the rebellious duke, provided he would in like manner, assist him against the pope and the Romans. With this proposal Luitprand readily closed, and a league being concluded upon these terms between him and the exarch, the two armies joined, and began their march towards Spoleto. An alliance between the exarch and Luitprand. At their approach, the duke despairing of being able to resist two such powers, came out with a small attendance to meet them, and, throwing himself at the king's feet, sued, in that humble posture, for pardon; which Luitprand not only granted him, but confirmed him in the dukedom, after he had obliged him to take a new oath of allegiance, and give hostages for his fidelity in time to come. From Spoleto the two armies marched, in pursuance of the treaty, to Rome, and encamped in the meadows of Nero, between the Tiber and the Vatican. They besiege Rome. Gregory had caused the city of Rome to be fortified in the best manner he could; but being sensible, that the Romans alone could not long hold out against two such armies, and reflecting on the kind treatment the duke of Spoleto had met with upon his submitting to the king, he resolved to follow his example; and accordingly, taking with him some of the clergy, and the principal inhabitants of the city, he went to wait on the king in his camp; and there, with a pathetic speech, as he was a master of eloquence, softened Luitprand to such a degree, that, throwing himself at his feet in the presence of the whole army, he begged pardon for entering into an alliance against him, and, assuring him of his protection for the future, he went with him to the church of St. Peter, and there disarming himself in the presence of his chief officers, he laid his girdle, his sword, and his gantlet, with his royal mantle, his crown of gold, and cross of silver, on the apostle's sepulchre. After this, he reconciled the pope with the exarch, who was thereupon received into the city, where he continued for some time maintaining a friendly correspondence with the pope. At this time an impostor, taking the name of Tiberius, and pretending to be descended from the emperors, seduced a great many people in Tuscany, and was by them proclaimed claimed emperor. The exarch resolved to march against him ; but, as he had not sufficient forces to oppose the rebels, Gregory, who let no opportunity slip of obliging Leo, persuaded the Romans to attend the exarch in this expedition ; by which means the usurper being taken in a castle, his head was sent to the emperor, and the rebellion utterly suppressed. But the emperor still insisting upon his edict against the images being received in Rome, the Romans at the instigation of the pope, publicly renounced their allegiance to Leo, paid him no more tribute, and withdrew for ever their obedience to the emperors of the east. Leo, informed of this revolt, and not questioning but the pope was the author of it, immediately caused all the patrimonies of the church of Rome in Sicily, Calabria, and his other dominions, to be confiscated. At

N n 4

Leo resolves to reduce the revolted cities, and to chastise the pope :

the same time he ordered a powerful army to be raised, with a design to recover the towns that had revolted, to chastise the Romans for their rebellion, and, above all, to be revenged on the pope, who had raised all these disturbances, by opposing himself, and persuading others to oppose the execution of his edict. Gregory, greatly alarmed at the warlike preparations that were carrying on throughout the empire, and well apprised, that they were chiefly designed against him and the Romans, resolved to recur to the protection of the French, the only nation at that time capable of coping with the emperor, and on whom, on account of their zeal for religion, he thought he might depend. The Lombards were then very powerful ; but, as they wanted to be masters of Rome, he did not think it adviseable to trust them. The Venetians, though zealous in the defence of the pope, were not yet in a condition to withstand the power of the emperor, and besides, were jealous of the Lombards, who watched all opportunities of enlarging their dominions at the expence of their neighbours. As for Spain, it was then in a most deplorable condition, being over-run, and almost wholly ruined, by the Saracens. The French nation was at this time governed by the celebrated Charles Martel, who had distinguished himself in a most eminent manner in the wars of France and Germany, and had not long before, gained a signal victory over the Saracens in the neighbourhood of Tours ; whence he was generally reputed the best general, and the greatest hero, of his time. To him therefore Gregory sent a solemn embassy, embassy, with a great number of reliques, earnestly entreating him to take the Romans, and the church, under his protection, and defend them against the attempts of Leo. The ambassadors were received with extraordinary marks of honour, and a treaty soon concluded between them and Charles, who engaged to march into Italy in person, at the head of a powerful army, in defence of the Romans, and the church, if they should be attacked either by the emperor or the Lombards. On the other hand, the Romans were to acknowledge him for their protector, and confer on him the honour of the consulship, as it had been formerly conferred on Clovis by the emperor Anastasius, after that prince had defeated the Visigoths. The ambassadors returned from France loaded with rich presents². But Gregory did not long enjoy the fruit of their negotiations; for he died the same year 731, and was succeeded by pope Gregory III. in whose time some place the above-mentioned embassy. These authors tell us, that Liutprand, having defeated Thrasimund, who had revolted a second time, invaded, after his victory, the Roman dukedom, and laid close siege to Rome, being provoked against Gregory, for receiving and entertaining the rebel; that the pope finding his prayers and entreaties did not make the same impression on the king, as those of his predecessor, had recourse to Charles Martel; and that Charles persuaded the king of the Lombards to raise the siege, and, contenting himself with four cities only, to leave Rome, and the rest of that dukedom to the Romans and the pope³. Be that as it will, it is certain, that, upon the pope's recurring to France, the French first began to concern themselves in the affairs of Italy, and afterwards by degrees, made themselves masters of the country, as we shall relate anon.

In the mean time died the emperor Leo, and was succeeded by his son Constantine, surnamed Copronymus, who, treading in the footsteps of his father, renewed his edict against images, and began to prosecute all those, who stood up in their defence; nay, not satisfied with ordering the images to be removed, he went farther, and forbade the invocation of saints, especially of the virgin Mary, not suffering any holy days to be kept in her ho-honour, or her assistance to be implored. This edict occasioned new disturbances in Italy, and confirmed the Romans in the resolution they had taken of separating themselves entirely from the empire, the more as, being now under the protection of Charles Martel, they had nothing to fear from the emperor. They therefore drove out of their city such of the imperial officers, as they had hitherto suffered to continue there, and by that means abolish the very shadow of dominion, which the emperor had till this time among them. Soon after the emperor Leo, died Gregory III. and was succeeded by Zachary, who was no sooner elected, than he dispatched a solemn embassy to Luitprand, entreating him to restore the four cities, which had been yielded to him upon his raising the siege of Rome. Luitprand received the ambassadors with extraordinary marks of honour, and seemed inclined to comply with their request; but as the desired restitution was put off from time to time, Zachary in imitation of Gregory, went in person to wait on the king, attended by all the clergy of Rome. Luitprand, who was then at Terni, received him with the greatest respect imaginable, and not only granted him his request, but restored to the church of Rome the patrimony in Sabina, which had been confiscated thirty years before, and concluded a peace with the Romans for twenty years. Towards the latter end of his reign, being impatient of rest, he invaded the exarchate, and, having taken Cesena, was making the necessary preparations for besieging Ravenna, and bringing that place once more under his dominion. But Zachary, for whom the king had the greatest veneration, interposing, Luitprand, at his request, not only laid aside all thoughts of making further conquests, but even restored Cesena, and some other places, which he had taken^b. Not long after, Luitprand died, in the year 743, the thirty-second of his reign, and was buried with great pomp and solemnity in the church of St. Adrian in Pavia. Paulus Diaconus bestows on him the highest encomiums, and not undeservedly; for he was endued with every good quality becoming a prince^c. He governed with great justice and moderation, treating his subjects as his children, and giving daily instances of his generosity and good-nature, even

² Vide append. ad GREG. TUR. p. 15. ad. ann. 739.

³ SIGON.

Luitprand
dies.
Year after
Christ 743.

^b PAUL. DIAC. l. vi. c. 57, 58.

^c Idem ibid.

even to his greatest enemies. He enlarged his dominions by the addition of Pentapolis, and the greater part of Æmilia; and this his thirst after conquests, and his ambition, are the only faults, which the writers of those times have been able to discover in his character. He founded many churches and monasteries, enumerated by Paulus Diaconus^d, whereof the vestiges are admired to this day. With his death Paulus Diaconus closes his history of the Lombards (Z).

LUITPRAND was succeeded by his grandson Hildebrand ^{Hildebrand succeeds;} or Hildebrand, whom he had, some years before, taken for ^{but is depo-} his partner in the kingdom. But the Lombards, finding ^{sed, and Ra-} him unequal to so great a charge, deposed him, after a ^{chis chosen} short reign of seven months, and in his room raised to the ^{in his room.} throne Rachis duke of Friuli, a person highly esteemed for his piety and eminent virtues^e. He ascended the throne in 744, to the unspeakable satisfaction of the whole nation, and, in the beginning of his reign, confirmed the peace with Zachary and the Romans, which had been granted them by his predecessor. In the second year of his reign, finding the laws of the Lombards still defective, notwithstanding the many alterations and additions made by the preceding kings, he resolved to add some new laws to them, and ^d Idem ibid.

Longob. p. 5:

^e Erch. apud Peregrin. in hist. princ.

(Z) With the death of Luitprand, Paulus Diaconus closes his history of the Lombards. He was deacon of the church of Forum Julii, in the territory of which city his great-grandfather's father settled, when the Lombards, his country-men first came into Italy. He left five sons, who were carried into captivity by the Avars, when Forum Julii was betrayed to them, as we have related above, by Romilda the wife of Gisulf. Of the five brothers, one only, by name Lupicis, returned to the place of his nativity, where he married, and had a son named Arechis. The son of Arechis, named Warnefrid, had, by his wife Theudelinda, Paul Warnefrid our historian, commonly called Paulus Diaconus, or Paul the deacon. He betrays, throughout his whole work, great partiality for his countrymen, of which the reader will find several instances in the learned Camillo Peregrino (7).

(7) Camill. Peregrin. in dissert. fin. ducat. Benevent. ad septentrion. p. 37.

He publishes a new edict of laws.

He invades
the Roman dukedom, and lays siege to Pe-rugia.

He raises the siege, and turns monk.

and soften the rigour of others. Accordingly, having convened the states in Pavia, with their consent and approbation, he published a new edict in 745, and ordered it to be observed throughout his dominions. This edict, containing eleven chapters, is still to be seen in the often-mentioned code of the monastery of Cava in the kingdom of Naples^f. Having thus provided his subjects with excellent laws, and settled the affairs of the kingdom to his satisfaction, though naturally inclined to peace, he turned all on a sudden his thoughts upon war, and, pushed on by an ambition of enlarging his dominions, as his predecessors had done, he raised a considerable army, and, putting himself at the head of it, he first retook several places in Pentapolis, which had revolted from him, and then, entering the Roman dukedom, laid close siege to Perugia. The emperor was at a great distance, and did not mind the affairs of Italy. The exarch was not in a condition to defend himself, if attacked, much less to protect his neighbours. Zachary therefore, instead of soliciting the assistance either of the emperor or the exarch, resolved to try, whether, by his own authority and character, he could divert the king of the Lombards from pursuing his conquests. As his former journey had proved successful beyond his expectation, he resolved to undertake another. Accordingly, he went in person to the camp of Rachis, under the walls of Perugia, and, being received by that prince with great marks of respect and veneration, he represented to him, with such force and energy, the punishment that is reserved for those, who unjustly invade the property of others, that Rachis, wonderfully affected with his speech, not only raised the siege of Perugia, but restored all the places he held in Pentapolis; nay, the presence and authority of the bishop made such a deep impression on his mind, that the following year he went to Rome, with his wife Tasia, and his daughter Ratruda, to pay him a visit. Being overcome, while he was in that city, with the secret force of religion, he renounced his kingdom, and, prostrating himself at the pope's feet, took the habit of St. Benedict, and retired to the monastery of Monte Cassino, where he spent the remainder of his days, and was honoured after his death by those monks as a saint.

saint (A). Tasia his wife, and Ratruda his daughter, followed

{A} Giovanni Villani, in his history of Florence, supposes the large statue of brass, which is still to be seen at Barletta, a city of Apulia, and is called Arrachio, to have been erected by the Lombards of Benevento to this prince (8). Beatillus (9), and the abbot de Nuce (10), are of the same opinion; for at this time, the dukedom of Benevento extended as far as Bari, so that it comprised the city of Barletta; and it is not improbable, say they, that the Lombards of Benevento should, in one of their cities, erect a statue to their king. They were, it is true, immediately subject to their own duke; but both he and they were at the same time subject to the king, the kingdom of the Lombards comprising not only that country, which is now known by the name of Lombardy, and the other small dukedoms, but likewise the three famous dukedoms of Friuli, Spoleto, and Benevento. But Pietro Giannone alledges two strong arguments against the opinion of Villani, and the two above-mentioned writers, who have espoused, without due consideration, his opinion. In the first place, it is altogether improbable, says he, that the Lombards of Benevento would have erected such a large and magnificent statue in a town at that time of no account, and situated on the very borders of their dukedom, and not in Benevento their metropolis, or in some other city of note, such as Capua, Salerno, Bari, &c. which were all cities of that dukedom. Villani, who flourished in the reigns of Charles II. of Anjou, and Joan I. his niece, when Barletta, was become one of the most considerable cities of Apulia, thinking it had been such in the reign of Rachis, and seeing a statue there, called by the natives Arrachio, concluded it to be the statue of Rachis. The other reason alledged by Giannoni is, that the prince represented by that statue is dressed after the manner of the Roman emperors, has in one hand a cross, in the other a globe, and no beard; whereas the kings of the Lombards are represented, as appears from the ancient code of the monastery of Cava, with long beard, military garments, a sceptre in their right-hand, and a crown on their head, none of them having either the cross or the globe. Hence Giannoni concludes it to be the statue of some Roman emperor, perhaps of Heraclius, there being some resemblance between that emperor's name and the name, which, time out of mind, has been given to the statue by the inhabitants of Barletta (11).

(8) Villan. l. ii. c. 9. (9) Beatill. hist. di St. Sabino, p. 83. (10) D. Nuce ad Ostiens. l. i. c. 8. (11) Piet. Giannon. hist. civil. di Napoli. l. v. c. 1. sect. 11.

His brother Aistulphus chosen king
in his room.
Year after
Christ 751.

lowed his example, retiring into a monastery of virgins, founded by them at a small distance from Monte Cassino &c. The Lombards no sooner heard, that Rachis had resigned, than, assembling in Pavia, they chose his brother Aistulphus, or Aistulphus, in his room, a man of great gallantry in the field, and wisdom in council. He raised the kingdom of the Lombards to the highest pitch of its grandeur ; which gave occasion to its total ruin, as we shall relate anon. In the beginning of his reign, he confirmed the peace concluded between his brother and pope Zachary, who died the following year 752, and was succeeded by Stephen II. But Stephen, having held the see three days, died on the fourth, and in his room was chosen another named likewise Stephen, whom the antients call Stephen II. not reckoning his predecessor, who died before he was consecrated ; for, in those days, the election alone did not make a pope, but the consecration ; and hence this pope is by Echerempertus, and Leo Ostiensis, called Stephen II. and not Stephen III. but at present it is a settled point in the church of Rome, that the pope receives all authority from his election, contrary to what was believed by the antients ; and therefore the writers of later times reckon Stephen, who lived but three days, and was not consecrated, among the popes, altering by that means the number of the subsequent Stephens ; so that the second is by them called the third, the third called the fourth, &c. and the ninth called the tenth, which has bred confusion in the history of the church. Stephen II. or, as the modern writers call him, the third, three months after his election, dispatched legates to king Aistulphus, with rich presents, to confirm the peace, which had been lately granted by that prince to Zachary. The king received the new pope's legates with the greatest respect, and not only ratified the peace, but extended it to forty years more. This he did with no other view, but to divert the pope from thwarting the design he had upon the exarchate, which he was resolved to invade, the emperor Constantine Copronymus being then engaged in a war with the Saracens and Bulgarians, and all Asia and Greece miserably wasted by a dreadful plague. He thought he could not have a more favourable opportunity of subjecting Ravenna, and the rest of the exarchate ; and there-

He confirms the peace with the pope.

therefore, having raised a very considerable army, he marched strait to that city, and closely besieged it. Euty chius, who was still exarch, defended the place for some time with great valour; but finding his men quite tired out, and despairing of relief, he at last abandoned it to the enemy, and returned by sea to Constantinople. Astulphus, thus became master of the metropolis of the exarchate, reduced, with great ease, the other cities, and all Pentapolis, which he added to his kingdom, and, by that addition, raised the power of the Lombards to a higher pitch than any of his predecessors had done. Thus ended the exarchate of Ravenna, and with it the splendor of that city, which, ever since the time of Valentinian, the emperors had chosen for the place of their residence, as it was afterwards the seat of the Gothic kings, and, upon their expulsion, of the exarchs, who, for the space of an hundred and eighty-three years, maintained the power and authority of the emperors of the east in Italy. As the dukes of the other cities of Italy, and of Rome itself, were under the exarch, who resided at Ravenna, the bishops of that see contended for precedence even with the bishops of Rome. But a period was at the same time put to the exarchate, and to the lustre of that antient metropolis, which was reduced by the Lombards to a dukedom; so that, by degrees, it decayed, and, in process of time, came to the deplorable condition in which it is at present. Marquardus Freherus, in his chronology of the exarchs of Ravenna, writes, that the exarchate lasted for the space of an hundred and seventy-five years^a. But he does not reckon well; for he himself tells us, that it began in 568, and ended in 752, so that, even according to him, it must have lasted an hundred and eighty-three years.

He invades the exarchate, and takes Ravenna.

An end of the exarchate, which is changed into a dukedom. Year after Christ 752.

ASTULPHUS, now master of the exarchate, thought he had a just title to all the places depending on it, and consequently to the Roman dukedom, and to Rome itself. He therefore dispatched a messenger to that city, requiring the inhabitants to acknowledge him for their sovereign, and alledging, in justification of his demand, that the exarchate, which was his by right of conquest, gave him the same power, which the emperors had till then in Italy over the inhabitants of Rome, and the Roman dukedom. At the same time he marched his army towards Rome, and, having taken Narnia, now Narni, he sent from thence to acquaint the pope, Astulphus invades the Roman dukedom.

^a Freher. in Leunclav. tom. i. jur. Græc. Rom.

The pope endeavours in vain to divert him from that invasion.

pope, that he was determined to plunder Rome, and put all the Romans to the sword, if they refused to acknowledge him, by paying him yearly a golden solidus a head. The pope, alarmed at this severe message, attempted first to divert the king from this resolution by a solemn embassy, at the head of which were the two abbots of Monte Cassino and St. Vincentius, who, meeting the king at Vulturnum, a city in Campania, standing on a river of that name, put him in mind of the peace he had lately concluded with Stephen and the Romans, and endeavoured, by arguments, prayers, and intreaties, to persuade him not to break it, but to employ his arms elsewhere¹. The two legates had brought rich presents with them for the king; but he, rejecting them, insisted upon his being acknowledged by the pope and the Romans for their sovereign. This threw Stephen into the greatest perplexity imaginable; for he found the king of the Lombards unalterably determined upon the reduction of Rome, and the Roman dukedom; and, on the other hand, the emperor was no ways in a condition to defend them, or put a stop to the conquests of so powerful and warlike a prince. The pope upon the first irruption of the Lombards into the exarchate, had written pressing letters to the emperor, representing to him the danger Italy was in, the disgrace, which, from the loss of the countries he still held there, would, in future ages, redound upon his memory, and the glory, that would accrue to him from preserving so valuable a portion of the empire. But the emperor, instead of an army, sent one John, with the character of ambassador, to the king of the Lombards, requiring him to restore the places he had already taken, and not to disturb the peace of Italy, by attempting the reduction of others. John went first to Rome, and from thence, attended by Paul, the pope's brother, to Ravenna, where Astulphus then was. The king received the message with the utmost contempt, and dismissed the messengers with great scorn, which they might well have expected. Hereupon the pope sent his brother to Constantinople, to acquaint the emperor, that the king of the Lombards was not to be restrained by his authority alone, and to intreat him to send a powerful army into Italy, without which Rome, and the remains of the Roman empire in that country, would be irreparably lost. But Constantine at that time had no troops to spare, being engaged in other wars; so that the pope,

upon

¹ Sigon. ad ann. 753.

upon the invasion of the Roman dukedom, thinking it was in vain to have recourse to him, resolved, after the example of Zachary and the two Gregories, to recur to the protection of France. That kingdom had been transferred some years before from the Merovingian to the Carolingian line; and the celebrated Pepin, son to Charles Martel, was then king. As pope Zachary had had a great share in that translation, Pepin had promised to protect his see against all its enemies, especially against the Lombards. Stephen therefore, not doubting but Pepin would readily perform what he had promised, dispatched privately a messenger into France, to acquaint him with his distress, and the desire he had of conferring with him in person, provided he could do it without danger, and a safe conduct was procured for him from the king of the Lombards, who already kept Rome, in a manner, blocked up. Pepin, glad of the opportunity of obliging the pope, sent immediately two persons of distinction, to beg, in his name, of the king of the Lombards, leave for Stephen to come out of the city, and go with him into France. The two ambassadors found the Lombards in possession of all the castles and strong-holds in the neighbourhood of Rome, and ready to invest that city. However, Astulphus readily complied with their request, and suffered the pope, not only to come safe out of Rome, but to repair with them to France, where he was received by Pepin with the greatest marks of esteem and veneration. He laid before the king the deplorable condition to which he was reduced by the Lombards, and, imploring his assistance and protection, he promised, as one good turn deserves another, to employ all the authority of the apostolic see in his behalf. On the other hand, Pepin assured him of his assistance, and, having prevailed upon him to stay till the winter was over, and the army ready to march, both he and his two sons Charles and Carloman, were in the mean time anointed by him with the holy unction, and, with great solemnity, consecrated in the church of St. Dennis kings of France. This ceremony, Pepin thought, would recommend him to the respect of his subjects, and greatly contribute to the establishing of the kingdom in his person and posterity ^k.

Pope Stephen recurs to Pepin king of France.

He goes in person into France.

In the mean time Astulphus, not aware of the danger that threatened him, was wholly intent upon publishing a new edict of laws which is still to be seen in the code of the monastery

Astulphus publishes a new edict.

^k Leo Ostiens. l. i. c. 8.

monastery of Cava, and contains twenty-two chapters. The preface prefixed to this edict is couched in the following words : “ Having maturely and seriously weighed and examined the laws enacted by my predecessors, I have found many things wanting, and great disorders arising from that want : Therefore, in the fifth year of my happy reign, in the name of God, on the first day of March, the seventh indiction, having called together the chief lords and judges of my kingdom, I have caused to be added to the laws of my predecessors, and to my own, what to me seemed just, and pleasing to God.” But while Astulphus was busied in making new laws, pope Stephen was negotiating in France the ruin of him and his kingdom. Pepin, upon the arrival of Stephen in France, had promised to assist him against the Lombards, with the whole strength of his kingdom, and to drive them out of the exarchate and Pentapolis, which were to be restored, as Pepin understood, to the emperor, from whom the Lombards had taken them. But the pope finding the king ready to gratify him in all his demands, he resolved not to let slip so favourable an opportunity of aggrandizing himself ; and therefore insinuated to Pepin, that he could not better acquit himself of his obligations to the apostolic see, consult the welfare of his soul, or reward him for the dangers he had undergone, and the pains he had taken for the safety of Italy, and the church, than by granting both the exarchate and Pentapolis to St. Peter, that is, to himself.

Pepin is persuaded by the pope to make war on the Lombards.

As for Constantine, the pope pretended he had forfeited all right to those countries, by forsaking the protection of Italy, and persecuting the church. Pepin, to oblige the pope, not only promised to put him in possession of the exarchate and Pentapolis, if he should succeed in driving the Lombards out, but confirmed his promise with a solemn oath, which was likewise taken by his two sons Charles and Carloman¹. When Pepin was ready to set out on his march for Italy, in order to perform his promise, the pope was taken ill ; so that the expedition was put off till the month of August. In the mean time the pope, by frequent letters and messages, endeavoured to persuade Astulphus to restore what he had taken, conjuring him by the holy mysteries, and the tremendous day of judgment, to prevent, by his compliance, the effusion of christian blood. Pepin likewise interposed his good offices, sending three different embassies to the king

¹ Sigon. l. iii. p. 126, 127.

king of the Lombards, and earnestly intreating him to content himself with such countries as had been held by the kings his predecessors. But, finding Astulphus deaf to his intreaties, he resolved to employ force ; and accordingly, putting himself at the head of his army, he marched, attended and spurred on by the pope, towards the Alps, sending a party of chosen men before to open the passes. These Astulphus attacked with great vigour ; but his men being put to flight by the French, who had the advantage of the ground, he fled with great precipitation to Pavia. Pepin, finding the passes clear, crossed the mountains unmolested, and, entering Italy, advanced to Pavia, where the king had taken refuge, and closely besieged it. Astulphus, surprised of the danger he was in, sent one of his chief lords to Pepin to sue for peace ; which was granted him, upon his engaging, by a solemn oath, to restore the places he had seized in the Roman dukedom, the exarchate, and Pentapolis, not to the emperor, but to the pope. For the performance of these articles, he delivered up forty hostages to Pepin, who sent them into Thrace, and soon after followed them thither with his whole army, though in the depth of winter. As for Stephen, he returned with great joy to Rome, not doubting but Astulphus would soon put him in possession of the countries, which he had, by a solemn oath, promised to deliver up to him ; but Astulphus, without the least regard either to his oath, or the hostages, when he thought the storm blown over by the departure of Pepin, instead of delivering up the countries he had seized before, broke unexpectedly into the Roman dukedom, and made himself master of several cities, destroying all with fire and sword. At last he approached Rome with his army, and closely besieged it, not imagining that Pepin would pass the Alps a second time. In this extremity, Stephen had recourse to his protector, writing to him the three letters that are still extant ^m, and couched in the most submissive terms imaginable. St. Peter, to whom the donation had been made, is introduced speaking in these letters to the king, his two sons, and all the states of France, conjuring them to come to his relief, on pain of being debarred from the kingdom of heaven ⁿ. Pepin, greatly affected with the pope's letters, and looking upon the breach of faith in the

He enters Italy, and besieges Astulphus in his metropolis.

The exarchate and Pentapolis given by Pepin to the pope. Year after Christ 754.

O o 2

king

^m Tom. vi. concil. p. 239. & Baron. ad ann. 755. Chesne hist. tom. iii. p. 705.

ⁿ De

king of the Lombards as an affront offered to him, resolved to have recourse anew to arms. Having therefore, with great expedition, assembled his forces, he again set out on his march for Italy ; which Astulphus no sooner heard, than breaking up the siege of Rome, which had lasted already three months, he returned in great haste to the defence of his own country. In the mean time Pepin, having defeated, as formerly, the troops that had been sent to defend the passes in the Alps, and entered Italy, Astulphus, whose army was not near so numerous as that of Pepin, threw himself a second time into Pavia, with the flower of his army. Thither Pepin followed him, and invested the city on all sides. In the mean time the emperor Constantinus Copronymus, receiving intelligence of the agreement between the pope and Pepin, in virtue of which the king was to drive the Lombards out of the exarchate, and then deliver it up, not to him, but to the pope, immediately dispatched ambassadors to Pepin, to protest against that donation, to convince him, if possible, of the injustice of it, and persuade him to restore to the empire what had been rent from it, and not to the pope, who had no manner of claim to any part of his dominions. The ambassadors went first to Rome, and thence to Marseilles, where they were informed, that Pepin had already passed the Alps. Hereupon one of them made privately the best of his way to Pavia, where he understood the king then was, leaving the rest at Marseilles with the legate, whom the pope had sent with them from Rome, and who, as they apprehended, would have thwarted their negotiations. The ambassador, who was immediately introduced to the king, after having extolled, in his master's name, the courage, valour, and conduct, which he had shewn in the present war with the Lombards, the common enemy of the empire and France, represented to him, that the exarchate, without all dispute, belonged to the empire, from which it had been taken with the greatest injustice, while the emperor was engaged in a war with the Saracens ; that, since the king had retaken it from the unjust invader, it was agreeable to the rules of equity, that he should restore to the emperor what was his ; that the bishop of Rome was his subject ; and that since he suffered him peaceably to enjoy what had been given him by princes and private persons for maintaining his dignity, he could not usurp the dominions of his sovereign, without being guilty at the same time of high treason, and the most crying injustice. The ambassador concluded his speech

Astulphus besieged a second time in Pavia by Pepin.

The emperor sends embas-sadors to claim the ex-archate.

speech by telling the king, that his master, who desired nothing of others but what seemed agreeable to equity, was ready to practice it himself; and therefore would willingly reimburse him all the expences he had been at in the recovery of the exarchate, and other places taken by the Lombards. Pepin, having heard with great attention what the ^{Pepin's an-}embassador said, replied, that the exarchate belonged to the ^{swer to them.} conqueror of the Lombards, who had acquired it by right of war, as their forefathers had done; that many places had, of their own accord, submitted to Luitprand, the inhabitants having no other means to maintain their religion; that therefore the right of the Lombards to those countries was no more to be questioned, than that of the French to the countries, which they had taken from the Romans and Visigoths; that the right which the Lombards had was devolved upon him, so that he could dispose of those countries as he thought fit; and he had judged it proper to bestow them on the pope, that the catholic faith might be preserved in its full purity, and be no longer defiled with the many abominable errors of the Greeks; that this was his firm resolution, which nothing could make him alter; and that he was determined to maintain, to the last drop of his blood, the pope, and the church, in the possession of what he had given them. He then dismissed the ambassadors, without suffering them to reply^o; and, pursuing the siege of Pavia with great ^{Astulphus} vigour, reduced Astulphus to such straits, that, being no ^{submits.} longer able to hold out, he sent ambassadors to sue for peace; which was granted him by Pepin, upon his promising to perform immediately the treaty made the year before, and, over and above, to deliver up to the pope the city of Commachio, a place of that time of great importance. This promise was confirmed by a solemn oath, and hostages were given as formerly. Pepin then renewed his donation, whereby he yielded ^{Pepin renews} to St. Peter, and his successors, the exarchate, ^{his donation} Æmilia, ^{to the pope.} now Romagna, and Pentapolis, now Marca d'Ancona, with all the cities therein, to be held by them for ever; and, having caused a new instrument of the donation to be drawn up he delivered it, signed by himself, by his two sons Charles and Carloman, and by the chief Barons and prelates of France, to Fulard abbot of St. Denis, to be given into the pope's hands. Fulard, whom Pepin had appointed his commissary

O o 3

^o Anastas. in vit. Steph. III. p. 87. P. de. Marca de concord. sacerdot. & imper. l. i. c. 11. num. 5.

And puts him in possession of the exarchate,
&c.
Year after
Christ 756.

commiffary, having received this instrument, went, together with the commiffaries named by Aftulphus, to all the cities of the exarchate, Æmilia, and Pentapolis; and, taking poffeffion of them in the pope's name, he received hostages, with whom he repaired to Rome, carrying with him the keys, and Pepin's donation, which were laid by the pope on St. Peter's fepulchre. Pepin, having thus performed the promife he had made to the pope, left Italy, and returned with his army to France^p. The exarchate comprifed, according to Sigonius^q, the following cities, viz. Ravenna, Bologna, Imola, Faenza, Forlimpopoli, Forli, Cefena, Bobbio, Ferrara, Commachio, Adria, Cervia, and Secchia, which were all delivered to the pope, except Faenza and Ferrara. Pentapolis, or Marca d'Ancona, comprehended Rimini, Pefaro, Conca, Fano, Sinigaglia, Ancona, Ofimo, Umana, Jefi, Foffombrone, Monteferetro, Urbino, the Balneſian territory, Cagli, Luceoli, and Eugubio, with their territories and diftricts, as appears from the donation of Lewis the Pious, by which Pepin's donation was confirmed. The pope committed the government of the exarchate to the archbiſhop of Ravenna, who thereupon took the title of exarch, not as archbiſhop, but as an officer of the pope, now a temporal prince. Thus was the ſceptre added to the keys, the ſovereignty to the prieſthood, and the popes enriched with the ſpoils of the Lombard kings, and the Roman emperors. As thoſe countries belonged, without all doubt, to Conſtantine then emperor, ſome authors have thought, that this donation was made in his name, and that this gave riſe to the fable of the donation of Conſtantine the Great^r. Be that as it will, from this time the popes left off taking notice of the years of the emperors in their Bulls and letters, as they had done hitherto; and depending upon the protection of France, they withdrew their obedience to the emperor, and would be no longer deemed his ſubjects. The French, who pique themſelves upon being the firſt authors of the popes temporal grandeur, will not however allow Pepin to have ever inveſted them with the ſovereignty, it being manifeſt, ſay they, that the ſovereignty remained in Pepin and his deſcendants, and was exerciſed by them all over Italy. With them moſt authors agree, and among the reſt, the learned Sigonius. Petrus de Marca maintains this opinion, and at the ſame time

Whether the pope was inveſted with the ſove-reignty over thoſe countries.

^p Leo Oſtiens. l. i. c. 8. Anaſtaſ. ibid.
^r Spanhem. de imag. contra Maimburg.

^q Sigon. ad ann. 756.

time tells us how the popes, by degrees, became sovereigns of Rome. The exarchate of Ravenna, says that writer, being yielded to the pope, the government of Rome, of course devolved on him; for the Roman dukedom had been always subject to the exarch: the sovereignty indeed was vested in the emperor, but the administration belonged to the exarch; whence the pope, when he became master of the exarchate, claimed it, and continued to govern Rome, not as sovereign, but only with the authority that had been vested in the exarch, till the year 876, when the authority of the emperors, successors of Charlemagne, declining in Italy, Charles the Bald yielded all his claim to, and sovereignty over Rome, to the apostolic see^s. Hence Constantine Porphyrogenitus, describing the state of Europe in his time, that is, about the year 914, writes, that Rome was subject to the pope as its sovereign. It was upon the declension of the western empire, when it was confined to Germany alone, that the pope, as well as the several princes of Italy, assumed the sovereignty, which they enjoy to this day, as we shall plainly demonstrate in our modern history. A modern writer has endeavoured to prove, from the coins of the popes, that the French emperors were never sovereigns of Rome, nor had any authority in that city, but what was granted them by the pope; for, according to him, the senate and people of Rome, shaking off the yoke of the emperors of the east, subjected themselves to the pope, and acknowledged him for their sovereign^t. But that writer is, in our opinion, fully confuted by Le Blanc, in a treatise which he published on the coins of Charlemagne, Lewis the Pious, Lothaire, and their successors, coined in Rome^u.

BUT to return to Aistulphus: That prince, finding himself constrained to surrender the exarchate, and the other countries, to one who had no more right to them than himself, began to make vast preparations, with a design to retake what he had been obliged to give up, and at the same time to put himself in a condition of withstanding the French, who, he did not doubt, would return into Italy, and renew the war. But while, in the height of these warlike preparations, he was one day taking the diversion

O o 4

of

^s P. de Marca, l. iii. c. 11. num. 7, 11, 12. Const. Porph. de themat. l. ii.

^t Vignoli antiquior. pont: Rom. denar. p.

19.

^u Vide Le Blanc. p. 17.

Astulphus
dies. Year after Christ 756.

Desiderius causes himself to be proclaimed king.

He is supported by the pope, to whom he yields some cities.

of hunting in a neighbouring forest, he was killed, according to some by a wild boar, according to others, by a fall from his horse. Erchempertus writes, that he was killed with an arrow^w. We should perhaps have been able to give a more favourable account of his reign, had Paulus Diaconus continued his history; but that writer living in the time of Charlemagne, the son of Pepin, prudently declined writing the history of this and the following king's reign, lest, by relating the transactions of those times, he should disoblige the French princes, who, having driven out the Lombards, succeeded them in the kingdom of Italy. His countrymen were, for the same reason, all silent; so that those events have been transmitted to posterity by such writers only, as were byased in favour of the prevailing party. As the deceased king left no issue male behind him, and his brother Arachis had taken the monastic habit, the Lombard lords began to assemble, in order to proceed to a new election. But in the mean time Desiderius, whom Astulphus had raised to the dukedom of Tuscany, and besides made him his comes stabuli, or master of the horse, caused himself to be proclaimed king by his Tuscan Lombards. This Rachis no sooner understood, than, repenting of his former resolution, he resolved to quit the monastic life, and resume the purple, being encouraged thereunto by several persons of great authority among the Lombards, and by the inhabitants of Liguria and Venetia, who began to flock to him in great numbers. This gave great uneasiness to Desiderius, who thereupon had recourse to the pope, offering him the cities of Faenza, Ancona, Secchia, and Ferrara, which had not been restored by Astulphus, provided he assisted him at this juncture, and, by his authority, maintained him on the throne. The pope readily closed with the proposal, and, entering into an alliance with Desiderius, found means to persuade Rachis to continue in the state he had embraced, and lay aside all thoughts of recovering the kingdom, which was held by his friend and ally. Desiderius, being thus delivered from the danger that threatened him, surrendered the above-mentioned cities to the pope, pursuant to the agreement. Pope Stephen died soon after, that is, on the twenty-sixth of April of the present year 757. To him the church of Rome is chiefly chiefly indebted for the grandeur it still enjoys. He was succeeded by his brother Paul, who renewed the alliance with the king of the Lombards, but died in the third year of that prince's reign. In his room was chosen Stephen the third, or, as the modern writers will have it, the fourth, between whom and Desiderius great jealousies arose, which at last came to an open rupture. Desiderius having, by his interest, caused one of his intimate friends, named Michael, to be chosen by the people and clergy archbishop of Ravenna, the pope, not approving the election, drove him from that see. Hereupon the king, to be revenged on the pope, caused the eyes of Christopher and Sergius to be put out. These were two legates sent from Rome to demand the restitution of some lands belonging to that church. After this, Desiderius, not doubting but the pope would have recourse to the kings of France, resolved to be before-hand with them, and gain them over, if possible, to his side. In order to this, he offered his two daughters in marriage to Charles and Carloman, who, upon the death of their father Pepin, had divided the kingdom between them. Pope Stephen was no sooner informed of this treaty, than he wrote to the two princes, earnestly entreating them not to enter into any sort of alliance with the king of the Lombards, and threatening them with excommunication, nay, and damnation^w, if they consented to marry his daughters. But Desiderius having gained Bertrade, the mother of the two princes, the marriages were, by her means, concluded, in spite of the utmost endeavours of the pope to prevent them. This alliance however was but short-lived; for Charles soon after divorced his wife, pretending, that she was incapable of bearing children, and married in her room Ildegarda, a princess of Suevia. His brother Carloman dying about the same time, Berta, the deceased king's widow, not thinking herself, and the two sons she had by him, safe in France, fled to her father in Italy, and put herself and her children, under his protection. Desiderius, who was highly incensed against Charles for divorcing his daughter, received them with great joy, not doubting but he should, one time or other, be able, by their means, to raise disturbances in France; which would both give him the satisfaction of being revenged on Charles,

^w Erchemp. p. 6.

and Misunderstanding between him and Charlemagne.

^w Tom. vii. concil. p. 582.

and divert that prince from intermeddling with the affairs of Italy. In the mean time died pope Stephen, and Adrian I. was, in the year 772, chosen in his room. He no sooner saw himself raised to the apostolic see, than he sent two legates to conclude a lasting peace with Desiderius; and it was agreed, that neither of them should disturb the other in the possession of the countries they held. Desiderius, concluding, from this step taken by Adrian, that he did not entertain such jealousies and suspicions of the Lombard kings, as his predecessors had done, nor was so attached to the princes of France, proposed to him the consecrating and anointing the sons of Carloman kings, not doubting but that would raise tumults and disturbances in France, and at the same time create a misunderstanding between the pope and Charles, which would give him an opportunity of recovering the countries taken by Pepin, and yielded to the church. The ceremony of anointing, after the example of Pepin and his two sons, had been, by degrees, introduced among christian princes, the people deeming those, who were thus anointed, lawful kings. But Adrian, who, notwithstanding the peace he had concluded with the Lombards, was no less jealous of their power, than his predecessors had been, peremptorily refused to comply with the request of Desiderius, being well apprised, that, by granting it, he should incur the displeasure of Charles, the only prince capable of protecting him against the Lombards. Desiderius left no stone unturned to bring the pope into his measures; but, finding he could obtain nothing by fair means, he resolved to employ force. Accordingly, he broke unexpectedly into the exarchate, and, having made himself master of Ferrara, Comachio, and Faenza, he threatened Ravenna itself with a siege. Adrian, alarmed at these hostilities, immediately dispatched ambassadors to put the king in mind of the peace lately concluded, and to demand the restitution of the places, which he had taken with an open breach of the late treaty. The king received the ambassadors with the greatest marks of honour, and told them, that he was desirous of treating with the pope in person; and that, if he came himself, nothing should be denied him. But Adrian, rejecting the invitation, answered with great haughtiness, That he would never appear before him, unless he restored the cities he had seized. Desiderius, highly provoked at this answer, marched his army into Pentapolis, and, having there laid waste the territories

He quarrels with the pope, and takes several cities.

territories of Sinigaglia, Monteferetro, Urbino, and Eugubio, he approached Rome, destroying all with fire and sword, and carrying into captivity such of the inhabitants, as fell into his hands. Hereupon Adrian ordered the abbot of St. Vincent, attended by twenty monks in great reputation for the sanctity of their lives, to wait upon the king in his name, and earnestly entreat him to restore the places he had taken, and desist from further hostilities. The king received them in a very obliging manner, and assured them, that, if the pope would come in person to confer with him, the cities should be immediately restored, and an end put to all hostilities. Not satisfied with signifying to the legate his earnest desire of a private interview with the pope, he sent embassadors of his own to acquaint Adrian therewith, and persuade him, if possible, to comply with his request, since he had matters of the utmost importance to impart to him. But Adrian, firm in his former resolution, solemnly protested, that he would never appear before the king, till the towns he had taken were restored; but that, as soon as they were restored, he would meet him in what place soever he should think proper to appoint, in order to settle, in concert with him, the tranquillity of Italy. Upon the return of these embassadors, Desiderius sent others, to whom the pope made the same answer, adding, that, if he did not comply with the king's request, as soon as the cities were restored, he gave them leave to take them anew, and invade the territories of the church at his pleasure. But Desiderius, provoked more than ever at the obstinacy of the pope, threatened to bring his army before Rome, and, by that means, oblige Adrian to grant him his request. The pope was so terrified with these menaces, that, thinking himself in the utmost danger, he resolved, in imitation of his predecessors, to have recourse to France. Accordingly he sent one Peter by sea, all the passes by land being guarded by the Lombards, to acquaint Charlemagne, then king of France, with the danger he was in, and not only to implore his assistance, but to invite him to the conquest of Italy, almost intirely ruined by the Lombards. Desiderius was no sooner informed of the arrival of the pope's legate in France, and of the things laid there to his charge, than he dispatched embassadors to Charlemagne, assuring him of his inclination to live in peace with the pope, and complaining of Adrian's obstinacy, in refusing him a private interview for settling the

The pope recurs to Charlemagne king of France.

the tranquility of Italy. But Charlemagne, who only wanted a favourable opportunity of revenging himself on Desiderius for keeping his two nephews, with a view, as he supposed, of raising disturbances in France, received the invitation made him by Adrian with incredible satisfaction, and began to make such preparations, as plainly shewed, that his design was not only to assist the pope, but to make an intire conquest of the kingdom of the Lombards*. He appointed Geneva for the place of the general rendezvous, and there, when the troops were all assembled, he divided his numerous army into two bodies, whereof the one he led in person, and committed the other to the conduct of his uncle Bernard. On the other hand, Desiderius, having certain intelligence of his motions, sent some troops to guard the passes in the Alps, and then, making numerous levies in the dukedoms of Friuli, Benevento, Spoleto, Etruria, and the other dukedoms, of which his kingdom was composed, he raised a mighty army, and, putting himself at the head of it, marched to Turin, with a design to give Charlemagne battle, in case he forced the streights, and came into the plain country. We are told, that Charlemagne, as he drew near the Alps, to prevent the effusion of christian blood, dispatched embassadors to the king of the Lombards, offering him fourteen thousand solidi, provided he restored to the pope the cities he had taken; but that Desiderius would hearken to no proposals, being bent on the conquest of all Italy. Be that as it will, Charlemagne pursued his march to the Alps; and, finding the passes guarded by the Lombards, he sent a detachment, under the conduct of experienced guides, to cross the mountains another way. This they happily accomplished, and, falling unexpectedly upon those who guarded the passes, struck them with such terror, that, abandoning their posts, they fled in the utmost consternation. Upon their retreat, Charlemagne passed unmolested with his whole army, and, descending from the mountains, marched in quest of the enemy. Some authors write, that the two armies came to an engagement, in which, after an obstinate dispute, Desiderius was defeated. They add, that the place, where the battle was fought, from the great number of the slain, took the name of Mortuaria. Others, less affected to the Lombards, tell us, that, at the approach of Charlemagne, they fled in the utmost confusion, not daring to look the enemy in the face. Be Charlemagne enters Italy.

* Sigon. p. 141—143

Be that as it will, it is certain, that Desiderius retired and shut himself up in Pavia, not being in a condition to keep the field. At the same time he sent his son Adalgisus, and his daughter Berta, the widow of Carloman, with her two sons, to Verona, a place not inferior in strength to Pavia itself. Charlemagne, hearing that the king had shut himself up in Pavia, led his whole army against that city, and closely besieged it. The Lombards defended the place with great vigour; and, on the other hand, Charlemagne, determined not to withdraw his troops from before it till it had submitted, sent for his wife and sons, and continued with them in the camp till Christmas, which festival he celebrated with great pomp, and then, leaving his uncle Bernard to pursue the siege of Pavia, he went with part of the army, to invest Verona. Adalgisus defended the town, for some time with great bravery; but, in the end, finding himself reduced to the last extremity, and despairing of relief, he withdrew in the night; and, after having wandered a long time about the country in disguise, he found means, at last, to make his escape by sea to Constantinople, where he was received and entertained with great kindness by the emperor. Upon his departure, the garrison and inhabitants of Verona surrendered to Charles, who, having got Berta and her two sons into his power, sent them immediately, under a strong guard, into France; but what became afterwards of these two unfortunate princes, was never known. Verona being reduced, all the other cities on the same side of the Po submitted upon the first summons to the conqueror, who, returning before Pavia, pursued the siege with more vigour than ever. But, in the mean time Easter approaching, Charles resolved to keep that solemnity at Rome, and accordingly, committing a second time the care of the siege to Bernard, he set out for that city with a splended train, and, being received, in all the places through which he passed, with the greatest marks of honour imaginable, he reached Rome the day before Easter. Adrian exerted himself on this occasion, thinking it incumbent upon him to receive so great a prince, and one to whom the church was so highly indebted, with the greatest demonstrations of honour, gratitude, and esteem. By his orders the magistrates and judges, with their banners and the badges of their respective offices, met him thirty miles from the city. At a mile from the gate he was received by a procession of children, carrying in their hands branches of palms and olives, and singing his Desiderius retires, and is besieged in Pavia.

Verona besieged by Charles, and taken,

Charles goes to Rome.

His reception there.

his heroic exploits and virtues. After them came a great number of cross-bearers, for whom it was customary to attend the public entries of the exarchs and patricians. Charles, as soon as he saw the crosses, alighted from his horse, and, attended by his own nobility, and the Roman magistrates, went the rest of the way on foot. As for the pope, he went early in the morning, with the clergy and people, to the church of the Vatican, and there, sitting on a kind of throne on the steps, waited the arrival of the king, who, going directly to the church, ascended the steps, kissing each of them as he mounted. Being arrived at the throne, the pope, coming down, received him with great tenderness, and, after mutual embraces, and congratulatory speeches, they went together into the church, the people following them with loud acclamations, and the clergy frequently repeating, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. When they came to the place, called then, as it is to this day, the confession, prostrating themselves on the ground, they returned thanks to the Almighty, and to his apostle St. Peter, for the success that had hitherto attended the king's arms against his enemies, and the enemies of the church, that is, the unhappy Lombards, who, in reality, were as well-wishers to the church as Charles, but were not willing the churchmen should rob them of the countries they had purchased at the expence of their blood and treasure. After this, Charles begged leave to go into the city for the Vatican stood then without the walls, to perform a vow, and visit the holy places ; which was granted by the pope, after they had both sworn upon the body of the apostle, that they designed no harm or injury to each other. The day following, being the festival of Easter, the king made a solemn entry into the city, attended by the nobility, clergy, and Roman people, who accompanied him to the church of St. Mary ad Præsepe, whence, after divine service, he went to the Lateran, and dined there with Adrian. The next day he assisted at public prayers in the Vatican ; and, when the service was over, Adrian caused thanks to be given him for his kindness to the church in an oration, on which occasion the generosity of Charles Martel, and his son Pepin, to the church of Rome, were highly extolled, the exemplary piety of their most illustrious family mightily commended, and great encomiums bestowed on the whole nation. The orator told his auditors, that Charles, not degenerating from the piety of his glorious ancestors,

Honours done him at Rome.

cestors, was come, with a mighty army, to humble the enemies of the church; that he had hitherto, with the assistance of Heaven, been as successful in so commendable an enterprize, as he had been ready to undertake it; and that, according to all appearance, Italy would, in a few days, have occasion to congratulate him upon his accomplishing the work, which he had so happily begun, as now both Italy and the church returned him their hearty thanks for what he had already performed ^y. When the rejoicings, feasting, and congratulations, were over, Adrian came to the main point, requiring Charles to confirm the donation, which his father Pepin had made to the church of Rome. Charles readily complied with the Pope's request; and, having ordered Iterius his secretary to draw up a new instrument, he signed it himself, caused it to be signed by the abbots, bishops, and other great men, who had attended him to Rome, and, with his own hand, says Leo Ostiensis, laid it, thus signed, on the altar of St. Peter ^z. Anastasius Bibliothecarius writes, that Charles, not satisfied with the donation of Pentapolis and the exarchate made by Pepin, added to them the island of Corsica, and that large country, which, extending from Luna to Sorano and Monte Bordone, comprehends the cities of Vercetri, Parma, Reggio, Mantua, and Montefelice: nay, according to that writer, the generosity of Charles did not even stop here; for he tells us, that the new instrument comprised the provinces of Vinetia and Istria, and the two dukedoms of Benevento and Spoleto ^a. In the chronicle of the monastery of St. Clement, Charles is said to have added to the donation of Pepin only those two dukedoms. Sigonis will have the donation of Charles to have comprised, besides those dukedoms, and the countries given by Pepin, the Sabinian territory, lying between Umbria and Latium, with part of Tuscany and Campania. Petrus de Marca adds all Campania, with the city of Naples, and the provinces of Abruzzo and Puglia; and hence, according to him, the kings of Naples have ever been, as they still are, invested by the pope ^b. Some modern writers suppose Charles to have given likewise Saxony,

He confirms the donation of Pepin.

Whether he added other countries to that donation.

^y Leo Ostiens. l. i. c. 12. Anastas. Bibliothec. in Adrian. p. 75. ^z Leo Ostiens. ibid. ^a Anast. Bibliothec. in Adrian ^b P. de Marca de concord, sacerdot. & imper l. iii. c. 10. num. 5.

Saxony, which he had lately conquered, and other countries, which he never conquered, viz. Sardinia and Sicily ; for these two islands were held by the emperors of the east, till the Saracens became masters of them. But as no copy of the supposed donation of these several countries is to be found, either in the archives of the Vatican, or the annals of France ; and, on the other hand, it is manifest from history, that Charles, as king of Italy, held the dukedoms of Friuli, Spoleto, and Benevento, in the same manner as they had been held by the Lombard kings his predecessors, and that they were immediately governed by their own dukes ; we may conclude from thence, that Charles only confirmed the donation of the exarchate and Pentapolis made by his father Pepin. Charles indeed caused the patrimonies, which the church of Rome possessed in the Alpes Cottiae, and in the dukedoms of Benevento and Spoleto, to be restored ; and hence, according to the learned civilian Pietro Giannone, arose the mistake of those writers, who will have Charles to have given that province, and those dukedoms, to St. Peter : they confounded the patrimonies of the church in those countries with the countries themselves ^c.

Charles returns to the siege of Pavia.

CHARLES, having thus satisfied his own curiosity, and the desires of the pope, after a stay of eight days in Rome, returned to the camp before Pavia, which city he was resolved at all events, to reduce, being well apprised, that, if Desiderius remained master of it, he might easily recover all the rest. The same motive that prompted Charles to exert his utmost endeavours in the reduction of the place, animated the king of the Lombards to defend it with all his might. Charles, finding his men constantly repulsed in their repeated attacks, and despairing of being able to carry it by force resolved to reduce it by famine. Accordingly, besieging it more closely, he shut up all the passes and avenues, so that nothing could possibly be conveyed into the city ; which by that means was, in a short time, reduced to the utmost extremity. Desiderius however still held out for a considerable time ; but a violent plague beginning to rage within the walls, and carrying off daily great numbers both of the garrison and the inhabitants, the unhappy prince, not able to contend with so many enemies at once, was obliged, in the end to surrender the place, and deliver up himself, with his wife and children, to Charles, who sent them all to France, Desiderius taken prisoner, and the end of the kingdom of the Lombards.

Year after Christ 774.

^c Piet. Giann. hist. civil. di Napol. l. v. c. 4.

France, where they ended their days, being never afterwards heard of. Thus ended the kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, after they had held that country for the space of two hundred and six years. They were at first a cruel and barbarous nation; but divesting themselves, by degrees, of their native fierceness and barbarity, especially after they had embraced the christian religion they governed with such equity and mildness, that most other nations envied the happiness of those who lived under them. As they had no other kingdom nor dominions elsewhere, Italy became their own country; whence the natives looked upon their kings as their natural princes, not thinking themselves governed, much less kept in slavery, by a foreign nation, as it happened to them afterwards, when, by frequent changes, they groaned under the heavy yoke, sometimes of one nation, and sometimes of another. Under the government of the Lombards, says Paulus Diaconus^d, and with him agrees the Abbot of Wesperg, no violence was committed, no one unjustly dispossessed of his property, none oppressed with taxes; theft, robberies, murder, and adultery, were seldom heard of; every one went, without the least apprehension of danger, whither he pleased: and truly their many wholesome laws, restraining, and severely punishing, all sorts of crimes, the magnificent churches, and rich monasteries, with which they filled that part of Italy, which was subject to them, the many bishopricks, which they erected, the towns and cities which they either built, or repaired, in most provinces of Italy, their generosity even to the bishop of Rome, their avowed enemy, and finally, the great numbers of persons among them, whose sanctity and eminent virtues have been acknowledged by the popes themselves, must convince every impartial reader, that the Lombards were not such a savage, barbarous, and inhuman nation as they are described by some of the popes, especially by Adrian, the chief author of the downfall of their kingdom. They were the only power in Italy capable of defeating the ambitious views of the bishops of Rome, whom they would not suffer to enrich themselves with the spoils of the emperors, but looked upon them as their own by right of conquest; and hence arose the inveterate hatred, which the popes bore them; and could not help betraying in all their writings. But the many wholesome laws which they left behind them, and devouring time has spared, are convincing proofs of their justice, humanity, and wisdom, and at the same time a full confutation, as Grotius observes, of the many calumnies, with which the popes, and their partisans, have endeavoured to asperse them. Their laws were found so just and equitable, that they were retained in Italy, and observed there, some ages after their kingdom was at an end. Paulus Diaconus, Grotius, Gunter, who was secretary to the emperor Frederic I. and several other writers, equal, and, in many particulars, prefer, the laws of the Lombards to those of the Romans themselves. Gunter, who was far from being prejudiced in their favour, after examining their laws, could not help calling them a sagacious, wise, and industrious people, and above all, excellent law-givers^e. Hence it sufficiently appears, with how much injustice they are styled by pope Adrian, in his letters, an unpolished, barbarous, and cruel people.

The Lombards undeservedly aspersed by the popes.

^d Paul. Diac. hist. Long. l. iii. c. 8.

The state of Italy in the time of Charlemagne.

BEFORE we dismiss this subject, it may not be improper to give the reader a succinct account of the state of Italy at the time Charlemagne, by the captivity of Desiderius, put an end to the kingdom of the Lombards, and of the new form of government introduced by the conqueror. Italy was, at that time, divided as it were, into four states, held by the Venetians, the Lombards, the popes, and the emperors of the east. The Venetians, by their trade to the Levant, were become very considerable, and, having a great number of vessels they bore no small sway in the affairs of Italy, though we do not yet find them possessed of any town on the terra firma or continent. The pope, by the generosity of Pepin, and his son Charles, was master of the exarchate and Pentapolis, which we have described above. The dukedom of Naples, and some cities in the Hither and Farther Calabria, were still held by the emperors of the east. All the other provinces of Italy were held by the Lombards, viz. the three famous dukedoms of Friuli, Spoleto, and Benevento, and the provinces of Liguria, Venetia, Tuscany, and the Alpes Cotticæ, which were properly called the kingdom of the Lombards. When Desiderius was taken prisoner, the dukedom of Benevento was governed by Arechis, son-in-law to the unhappy prince. It comprised then almost all the present kingdom of Naples; for of the twelve provinces, into which that kingdom is now divided, nine were subject to the duke of Benevento, viz. Terra di Lavoro, Contado di Molise, the Hither Abruzzo, Capitanata, Terra di Bari, Basilicata, the Hither

The extent of the dukedom of Benevento.

^e Gunter. in Ligurino, versu 173, &c.

Hither Calabria, and the Hither and Farther Principato's ; so that it was bounded on the west by the dukedoms of Rome and Spoleto ; on the south by Gaeta, and its territory ; on the east by the territories of Cosenza and Cassano ; and on the north by Siponto, and the promontory of Gargano. This dukedom, on account of its extent, was by the Latins called Italia Cistibernia, and by the Greeks Longobardia Minor, to distinguish it from the Greater, which, lying on both sides the Po in Cisalpine Gaul, retains to this day the name of Lombardy. This extent of the dukedom induced the dukes ^{And its government.} to divide it, for the more convenient administration of justice, into several districts, called counties, each of which had its proper governor, styled count or gualtald. These counts or gualtalds were, at first, appointed and removed by the dukes at their pleasure ; but, in process of time, it became customary not to remove them, unless convicted of treason, and not to transfer the counties to other Families, till their male line was extinct : and this was the first origin of counts and counties in that part of Italy. The only difference between the counts and gualtalds was, that the latter governed only during pleasure, and the former were never removed, unless guilty of treason : hence the title of count denoted dignity, and that of gualtald only office. The other two great dukedoms, viz. of Spoleto and Friuli, were far inferior, both in power and extent, to that of Benevento. The former comprehended all Umbria, in which were many cities of great note ; and the latter all Friuli, and the greater part of Istria. The dukedom of Naples, which continued subject to the emperors of the ^{The dukedom of Naples its extent and government.} east, extended towards the west as far as Cuma, comprehending within its limits the islands of Ischia, Nisita, and Provida, with the maritime towns of Pozzuolo, Baia, and Miseno. Towards the south Castellamare, Sarrento, Amalfi, and the island of Caprea, were comprised in it. Towards the east and north its limits were much confined, the dukedom of Benevento reaching almost to the very gates of the city. The cities of this dukedom were governed by their particular rectores, who were appointed by, and subordinate to, the duke of Naples. These rectores were likewise called counts, but were not, as in the dukedom of Benevento, feudatories ; they only governed during the pleasure of the duke : so that they were upon a footing with the Lombard gualtalds. As for the duke, he was appointed and removed at pleasure by the emperor. The duke of Naples was likewise styled magister

Cities in Italy belonging to the emperor.

gister militiæ, and consul ; but how the title of consul came to be given him, no writer has yet had the curiosity to inquire (B). Besides the dukedom of Naples, the emperors of the east possessed several cities in antient Calabria, and in the country of the Brutii, now known by the name of Farther Calabria. In antient Calabria they held the cities of Gallipoli and Otranto ; and in Farther Calabria, Reggio, Gerace, Santa Severina, Crotone, and besides these, the two cities of Amantea and Agripoli, with the promontory now called Capo di Licosa^f, the dukedoms of Gaeta, and Amalfi. All these cities were immediately governed by their rectores, who were appointed and removed by the patrician,

28

^f Pellegrin. in dissert. de finib. ducat. Benevent. p. 72.

(B) The title of consul, which the emperor had long had in great esteem, and looked upon as an honour to themselves, was, towards the latter end of the empire, entirely slighted by them, and laid aside. What made them undervalue and despise it, was its being assumed by those princes, whom they looked upon as barbarians and usurpers. Thus Charlemagne, to shew, that he succeeded to all the rights of the emperors of the west, took upon him, amongst other titles that of consul. The other French emperors, his successors, followed his example, as did likewise the Italian emperors, Berengarius duke of Friuli, and Guido duke of Spoleto ; nay, even the Saracens, after they had conquered Spain, in imitation of the emperors of Constantinople, styled themselves consuls. Thus Abderamus, who began to reign in Cordova in the year 821, and Mohammed, his son, and successor in that kingdom, marked, in their writs, not only the years of their reign, but likewise of their consulship (1). The emperors therefore, finding it thus assumed by foreign and barbarous nations, took it no longer themselves, but gave it to their officers. Father Pagi thinks, that the emperors laid it quite aside about the year 933 (2). The Saracens gave the title of consul to their admirals ; whence, in process of time, it became common not only to them, but to all the governors of the maritime towns, and to those who, residing in the sea-ports, took care, that justice should be administered to the merchants of their respective countries. Thus Codinus (3), Pachimeres (4), and Gregoras, (5), observe, that the Pisan and Anconitan magistrates, residing at Constantinople, were styled consuls. No wonder therefore, that the title of consul was given to the dukes of Naples, since it was bestowed on magistrates of a much inferior rank.

(1) Pagi de consulib. p. 370. & Eulog. in memorial. sanctor. l. ii. c. 1. (2) Pagi ibid. (3) Codin. c. 7. num. 9.
(4) Pachimer. l. ii. c. 32. (5) Gregor. l. iv. c. 6.

as he is styled, or governor of Sicily ; for to him were subject, at this time, all the places, the dukedom of Naples excepted, which the emperors still held in Italy : hence they are all comprised by Constantine Porphyrogenitus under the Thema of Sicily (C). In more antient times, only the Farther

(C) The empire of the east being, by the invasion of several barbarous nations, who had seized on Egypt, Africa, Syria, and other large provinces confined to Asia Minor, Greece, Thrace, and a small part of Italy with Sicily, and the adjacent islands, no further regard was had to the antient division of provinces ; but new divisions into districts, which had their particular governors, were introduced, and called themata. Of these themata or divisions Constantine Porphyrogenitus wrote two books, whereof the first contains the themata or provinces of Asia, seventeen in number, and the second those of Europe, which were but twelve. Among the themata of Europe, Sicily is the tenth, and Longobardia, or Lombardy, the eleventh. We have observed above, that under the name of Lombardy, properly speaking, came those provinces in Cisalpine Gaul, of which the Kingdom of the Lombards was composed, and that the dukedom of Benevento was likewise called Lombardy. Of these two Lombardies the former was called Longobardia Major, and the latter Longobardia Minor ; but neither of them was in the possession of the Greeks, the greater Lombardy, being held by the French kings of Italy, and the lesser by the Beneventan Lombards, whose dukes had the same power and authority under the French kings of Italy, as they had had under the princes of their own nation. By the province of Lombardy therefore, mentioned by Constantine in his themata, must be understood that small part of Italy, which was still possessed by the emperors, who out of vanity and ostentation, gave it the name of Lombardy. The countries which Constantine names under the thema of Lombardy, are the dukedom of Naples, and antient Calabria, in which however the Greeks possessed, at this time, but two cities, viz. Gallipoli and Otranto. The country of the Brutii, now Farther Calabria, with the cities of Reggio, Giraco, Santa Severina, Crotone, and some other places, are comprised under the thema of Sicily, as being subject to the patrician or governor of that island. That Magistrate seems to have had some authority even in the dukedom of Naples ; for Anthemius duke of that city being dead, and disputes arising about the election of a new duke, the Neapolitans had recourse to the patrician of Sicily, who appointed one Theoclistus to be their duke ; but the emperor, not approving of his choice, removed Theoclistus, and sent one Theodore to govern in his room (6). From this account Capacius, or whoever else is ther Calabria was subject to the patrician of Sicily ; but the cities, which the emperors held in that part of Italy, being reduced to a very small number, they were all put under the government of the patrician, who was sent from Constantinople to govern Sicily, as is evident from the themata of Constantine Porphyrogenitus ^g, and likewise from one of pope Adrian's letters to Charlemagne, wherein he complains of the Beneventan Lombards, whom he calls a most wicked race, for taking from him the city of Gaeta, and restoring it to the patrician of Sicily. Gaeta belonged to the emperor, and was under the government of that patrician ; Charles took it from the emperor, and yielded it to the pope ; the Lombards of Benevento retook it, and restored it to its lawful owner ; and on that account they are called by the pope a most wicked people ^h. From the superintendency over the countries on this side the Faro, which, in those times, belonged to the patrician of Sicily, some writers will have those countries to have been called Sicily ; which name was afterwards extended by the Norman and Suevian princes, and likewise by the popes, to all the provinces, of which the present kingdom of Naples is composed. It is certain, that, in the time of the Normans, the name of Sicily was common both to that island, and to the present kingdom of Naples ; but ~~with~~ this difference, that the former was called Sicily beyond the Faro, and the latter Sicily on this side the Faro, as appears from a charter of Roger the Norman of the year 1115, quoted by Ughellus ⁱ.

(6) Vide Ughell. ibid.

Whence the kingdom of Naples called Sicily.

Charlemagne crowned king of Lombardy.

DESIDERIUS being taken captive, as we have related above, and the city of Pavia reduced, all the other cities submitted of their own accord to Charles, who thereupon, claiming the kingdom of the Lombards by right of conquest, caused himself to be crowned king of Lombardy, with an iron crown, by the hands of the archbishop of Milan. The ceremony was performed by Thomas then archbishop of Milan, ^g Const. Porphy. de themat. p. 8.

Pellegr. in. fin. duc. Benevent. ad Merid.
sacra, tom. ix, in archiepif. S. Severin.

^h Adrian. ep. lxxiii. ⁱ Ugh, Ital.

The author of the Latin history of Naples, and Camillo Pellegrino, conclude the Neapolitans to have been, at least sometimes allowed to chuse their own dukes.

Milan, at a place called Modostia, about ten miles from that city. Charles, as we read in an antient ritual called Ordo Romanus, was led out of his chamber by several bishops to the church ; and, being conducted to the high altar, after some solemn prayers, the archbishop asked the people, Whether they would subject themselves to Charles, and, with constant fidelity, obey his commands ? The people answering they would, the bishop anointed his head, breast, shoulders, and arms, praying, that the new king might prove successful in his wars, and happy in his issue. He then girt him with a sword, put bracelets on his arms, gave him a robe, a ring, a sceptre, and, having placed the crown upon his head, he led him through the choir to the throne, and, having seated him there, and given him the kiss of peace, he celebrated divine service *. Charles ordained, that the same ceremony should be observed in the coronation of his successors, and performed by the archbishop of Milan, who thenceforth began to contend for dignity with the archbishop of Ravenna. The ceremony of the coronation being over, Charles, now king of Italy, thought it necessary to settle the frame and polity of his new kingdom, and, in order to this, resolved to go to Rome, and advise with Adrian. He goes to Rome, where great honours are conferred upon him. The pope, having notice of his design, assembled fifty bishops, and a great number of abbots and other dignitaries, in order to consult with them, what honours ought to be paid to so great a prince, whose father and grand-father, as well as himself, had so much deserved of the Roman church. After several consultations, it was unanimously agreed, that he should be made a Roman patrician ; that, throughout the provinces, he should institute all bishops and archbishops, who were not to be consecrated, unless instituted by him ; and that he should appoint the bishop of Rome, and be declared protector of the apostolic see. Charles, upon his arrival at Rome, was received by the pope, and the Roman people, with the greatest marks of respect and esteem, and the honours we have mentioned were, with the unanimous consent of all, conferred upon him. The naming of the bishop of

P p 4

Rome

* Ordo Romanus, apud Sigon.

Rome was granted to him, for preventing the tumults, that, to the great scandal of all good christians, began to arise among the people and clergy, on occasion of those elections, no one having any power or authority to restrain them. But this right Charles used with great moderation, and, after some time, remitted it to the clergy, and people. The dignity of patrician was, at that time, the first in the whole empire, and the conferring of it belonged of right to the emperor ; but his authority being now extinct in Italy, the pope arrogated to himself that, as well as he did, by degrees, all the other imperial honours and ornaments. Charles, extremely well pleased with the reception he met with at Rome, continued some time in that metropolis, consulting with the pope about the manner of settling the affairs of Italy ; and then returned to Pavia, where he declared, that he intended to maintain the same form of government, which had been introduced by the Lombard princes his predecessors. Accordingly, he allowed every one full liberty to live under the same Roman or Lombard laws, to which they had been accustomed ; but to the latter he added, as king of the Lombards, some of his own. He did not disturb the emperors in the possession of the dukedom of Naples, and of the other places, which they still held in Italy. As for the three famous dukedoms of Friuli, Spoleto, and Benevento, he allowed those dukes the same power and authority, which they had enjoyed under the Lombard kings, requiring only, that as they had been subject to these princes, they should acknowledge him for their king. The exarchate, the Pentapolis, and the dukedom of Rome, he yielded to the pope ; but retained the sovereignty to himself. The other provinces, which we have mentioned above, he kept as the kingdom of Lombardy¹. He continued, as his predecessors had done, the other dukes in their dukedoms, contenting himself with the oath of allegiance, which he obliged them, as well as the greater dukes, to take annually to him. The oath was conceived in the following terms : I promise, without fraud or deceit, to be faithful to my sovereign Charles, and his sons, as long as I live ; and I swear, by these holy gospels, that I will be faithful to him as a vassal to his lord and sovereign ;

He retains
the same form of government.

Allows the dukes the same power.

¹ Sigon. p. 163.

reign ; neither will I divulge any thing, which in virtue of my allegiance, he shall commit to me. The dukedoms he never transferred from one family to another, but when the dukes broke this oath, or died without issue male. This translation from one to another was called investiture ; and hence it came, that fiefs were not granted but by investiture, as was afterwards observed with respect to other vassals and feudatories, viz. counts, captains, and valvasours, the model of whose services and tenures were afterwards perfected by the princes of Germany. The limits of the kingdom, and the towns, Charles committed to the care of counts, who were vested with great authority. These limits or borders were called marchæ or marches ; whence those, who had the superintendency of them, were styled ^{Magistrates appointed by him.} counts of the marches, and marquises ; and hence the title of marquis had its rise. These were the ordinary magistrates appointed by Charles for the government of the cities, and the limits of the kingdom ; but he sometimes appointed extraordinary magistrates, or commissaries, who had greater authority than the counts, and were called missi. It was their province to part and distinguish the limits of each city, which, under the Lombards, were greatly confused ; whence arose frequent disputes among the neighbouring cities about their boundaries ; but the missi assigned to each city its boundaries, and, for the most part, following nature, appointed mountains, rivers, brooks, vallies, and other perpetual and lasting limits to serve for marches, that time might not alter and confound them. He likewise obliged the cities to take an oath of ^{Tribute imposed by him.} allegiance to him, and imposed upon them, as well as upon the fiefs, churches and monasteries, a kind of tribute, called foderum, parata, and mansionaticum, which was to be paid to him, especially when he came into Italy ; but this tribute he afterwards generously remitted for himself and his successors. That Italy might retain at least some shadow of Liberty, as often as he returned thither, he convened a general assembly of all the bishops, abbots, and barons of the kingdom, in order to settle with them the public affairs of importance. The Lombards had but one state, composed of barons and judges ; but the French, in the time of Charlemagne, had two, viz. of the ecclesiastics and nobility ; hence by Charles was added likewise in Italy, after the manner of France, the order der of the ecclesiastics to that of the barons or nobility. This custom of assembling the two states lasted in Italy till the time of the emperor Frederic I. They met, for the most part, at Roncaglio, a place not far distant from Placentia, and there enacted several laws for the better regulation of public affairs^m. The affairs of Italy being thus settled, Charles, leaving a strong garrison in Pavia, returned to France in the year 774. But he was scarce gone, when the Lombard dukes, those especially of Friuli, Spoleto, and Benevento, scorning to live subject to a foreign prince, resolved to shake off the yoke, and make themselves absolute in their respective dukedoms. While Charles therefore was engaged in a war with the Saxons, Rodgand duke of Friuli, laying hold of that opportunity, renounced his allegiance, and caused himself to be acknowledged sovereign in his dukedom. But Charles, who had already put an end to the Saxon war, by the reduction of that country, was no sooner informed of the revolt of Rodgand, which, he apprehended, might prove of dangerous consequence, if it was not timely suppressed, than he hastened into Alsace, and having kept his Christmas there, marched, in the depth of winter, with a powerful army cross the Alps, and entered the dukedom of Friuli. Rodgand met him with all the forces he could raise; but, in the engagement that ensued, he was utterly defeated, taken prisoner, and, soon after, publicly beheaded. Charles did not appoint another duke, but, adding the cities, of which this dukedom was composed, to his kingdom, appointed counts to govern them in the same manner as the other cities of his kingdom were governed. Thus ended the dukedom of Friuli, the first that was erected under Alboinus, and likewise the first that was suppressed by Charlemagne. Paulus Æmi- lius tells us, that it was afterwards restored by Charles, who appointed one Henry, a native of France, to govern it with the title of dukeⁿ. But of this, and the dukes who are supposed to have succeeded him, no mention is made by other historians. Hildebrand duke of

The duke of Friuli revolts.

But is defeated and
put to death.

That dukedom ended.

^m Vide Sigon. ibid. & Franken. diff. de Majum. Maicamp. & Roncal. p. 42.
ⁿ Paul. Æmil. de reb. Franc. p. 142.

of Spoleto, who had likewise revolted, upon the news of the defeat and death of Rodgand, submitted of his own accord, and was again received into favour by Charles. At this time Arechis, who had married Adelperga, daughter to Desiderius, the last king of the Lombards, was duke of Benevento ; but he waiting a more favourable opportunity of shaking off the yoke, continued quiet till such time as Charles, after having appointed Pepin his eldest son king of Italy in 781, was returned to France, and engaged there in other wars. Then Arechis, scorning to live in subjection to a foreign prince, as he had Arechis duke of Benevento changes his dukedom into a principality.
 done to his father-in law, and trusting to his own strength, Year after and the affection his subjects bore him, not only revol- Christ 781.
 ted, but, laying aside the title of duke, assumed that of prince, causing himself to be anointed and crowned with great solemnity as king by his bishops, and dating thenceforth all his writs and diplomas from our most sacred palace, according to the style of other princes and Sovereigns. As it was then customary among princes, when they were crowned, to cause their images to be placed in all the churches throughout their dominions, representing them with a crown on their head, this custom was likewise observed by Arechis, who was thereupon acknowledged by all the inhabitants of the dukedom as their sovereign. He coined money with his own image, made what alterations he thought fit both in civil and military affairs, without consulting either Charles or Pepin, and even enacted several laws ; for his capitularia have reached our times ; and, in the often mentioned manuscript code lodged in the monastery of Cava, among the edicts of the Lombard kings, is to be found one of this prince, containing seventeen chapters. His example was followed by the other princes his successors, namely by Adelchis, Sicardus, and Radelchisus, as appears from their capitularia published by Camillo Pellegrino °. Thus to the laws of the Lombard kings were added those of the princes of Benevento. Charles, finding that his son Pepin was not able to reduce the Beneventan Lombards, returned in 786, with a powerful army into Italy, ° Camill. Pellegrin. capit. Arech. princ. p. 309 & cit. hist. p. 73—92.

Italy, being then disengaged from other wars. But, Arechis suing for peace, Charles granted him it upon the following terms, viz. that he should pay to Pepin a yearly tribute ; that he should deliver up to him his treasure, and with it his son Grimoald, and his daughter Adalgisa, by way of hostages. The peace being thus concluded, Charles returned to France, leaving Arechis in possession of the principality of Benevento, which was held by him, with the title of prince, as it was by his successors, who greatly enlarged it, till a cruel war being kindled in the bowels of their country between Siconulphus and Radelchifus, two competitors to the principality, the one invited the Saracens of Africa, and the other those of Spain, to their assistance, who, after a twelve years war, completed the ruin of both ; so that, to get rid of their troublesome auxiliaries, they were obliged to have recourse to Lewis king of France, and by taking an oath of allegiance to him, acknowledge him for their sovereign. Lewis divided the provinces of Benevento between the two competitors, by which division two principalities were made out of one ; that of Benevento was allotted to Radelchifus ; and the other, called from its metropolis the principality of Salerno, to Siconulphus, the emperors of the west exercising, as kings of Italy, the same authority over them, as the Lombard kings had formerly done.

The Bene-ventans forced by their intestine broils, to submit to the emperors of the west.

AND thus far of antient history, or the history of antient nations, from their first original, to their being either blended with. or giving rise to, some of the modern nations, which naturally paves us the way to modern history. We have spared no pains in the execution of our proposals, and hope we have made no slips, but such as the candid reader will think excuseable, when he reflects on the many difficulties, that attend a work of this nature. We have not the vanity to think we have been guilty of no faults ; but the encouragement, which, far beyond our expectation, we have met with, we may say, from all ranks of people, both at home and abroad, and which we now acknowledge with the utmost gratitude, inclines us to believe, that the mistakes we may have committed, are no ways material. This we are the more apt to imagine, as we find but very few alterations from the original made by the several men of learning, who have thought it worth worth their while to translate our work into their respective languages. As for a perfectly complete history, it is not to appear, as a modern writer expresses it, but in that year, which discovers the philosophers stone and the perpetual motion.

P Le Moyne.

The End of the Nineteenth Volume.

A N

I N D E X

T O T H E

N I N E T E E N T H V O L U M E.

N. B. The Numbers directs to the Page, and Letter n, to the Notes.

A

A Aron, king of Bulgaria, murdered by his brother, 413.

Abisvinda, daughter of Alboinus, 389. Sent to Constantinople, ib.

Acaritzi subdued by Attila, 58.

Achaia plundered by the Goths, 127.

Achris taken by Basilus, 418. Its vast treasures, 420.

Actuarii, a tribe of the Franks, 235.

Acum defeats the Bulgarians, 393. Taken prisoner, 394.

Adalgadus, his escape out of Verona, 589.

Adaluald made co-partner with his father, 521. Peaceful reign, 525. Poisoned by Eusebius, 527. Dethroned and dies, 528.

Adalulf, his treachery to Ariovald and his queen, 528. Defeated, 529.

Adrian, pope, why invaded by Desiderius, 586. Invites the French against him, ib. Hatred and partiality against the Lombards, 593.

Adrianople taken by the Bulgarians, 409.

Ægidius relieves Arles from the Goths, 162. Defeats them, ib. Seizes on Childeric's crown, 270. Driven out, ib. & seq. & n.

Ætius's intimacy with Attila, 73. Opposes him with a vast army of Gauls, 79. Defeats him at Orleans, 80. Near Châlons, 84, & seq. Outwits Thorismund, 86. And Attila, 87. Pursues him to the Rhine, 88. Success against the Franks, 260. Peace with them, 263.

Africa, ravaged by the Vandals, 203, 204. Yielded to Genseric by the Romans, 217.

Agilmund, first king of the Lombards, 374, 378. Defeats the Vandals, 378. His death, ibid.

Agilulf chosen king of the Lombards, 517. Turns orthodox, 518. Suppresses the revolted dukes, ib. Conquests on the Roman exarchate, 519, & seq. Truce with him, 521. Death and character, 525.

Ajas

I N D E X.

- Ajax infects the Suevi with Arianism, 232.
- Aildichus driven out of his kingdom, 379.
- Ajo, duke of Benevento, defeated and killed, 535.
- king of the Lombards, 376.
- Alachis revolts, 546. Forgiven by Cunibert. ib. Ingratitude to him, ib. & seq. Defeated and killed, 547, 548.
- Alans submit to Attila, 61, 62. Invaded by him, 92. By Torismond, ib. Regain their liberty, 95. Where settled, ib. &c. Defeated by Wallia, 155. Assist the Vandals, 196. Enter Spain, 197. Their territories there, 199.
- Alaric, king of the Visigoths, driven out by the Hunns, 118. Serves under the Romans, 144. Spirited up by Rufinus, ib. His dreadful ravages, 145, 146. Spared by Stilicho, 147. Preserved by Arcadius, ib. Made king of the Goths, 150. Breaks into Italy, ib. & seq. Peace with Stilicho, 151. Corrupted by him, ib. Enters Noricum, 152. And Rome, ib. His death, 153, 294.
- Albinus sent ambassador to Attila, 709.
- Albofleda's conversion, 282. Death, ib.
- Alboinus, king of the Lombards, his cruelty to Cunimundus, 339. Marries his daughter, 340. His reign in Italy, 376. Valour and reward, 380, 381. Conquests in Italy, 382, & seq. Proclaimed king, 386. Fresh conquests, ib. Death and character, 388, & seq.
- Alczecus settled in Benevento, 394, 544.
- Alemans, defeated by Clovis, 279. Where settled, 280. Submit to him, 281. Defeated by the Burgundi, 308. Their origin, 320. Territories, government, &c. 321. Wars, ib. & seq. Ravaged by Maximine, 322. Break into Gaul, and defeated, ib. By Claudius, 323. By Aurelian, ib. Break into Italy, and defeated, ib. By Probus, 324. By Maximian, &c. ib. Sixty thousand cut off by Chlorus, 325. Beat by Constantine, &c. ib. & seq. By Julian, 326, 328. Defeated in Gaul, 329, 330. Make peace with Valentinian, 331, 332. Break it, 333. Defeated by Gratian, ib. Settled in Switzerland, ib. Defeated by Audoacrius, 334. Settle in Alsace, ib. Defeated and dispersed by Clovis, ib.
- Aligern's brave defence of Cumæ, 507.
- Alpes Cottivæ taken by Rotaris, 532.
- Alufianus undermined by John, 423. Made Deleanus's colleague, ib. Submits to Michael, ib.
- Amalaric, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118. In Spain restored to his crown, 437. His territories, 442.
- Amali, the princely tribe of, 107, 118, 441.
- Amalus, a Bathian prince, 118.
- Ambrosius Aurel. succeeds Vortigern, 19. Defeats the Saxons, ib. His progress through England, 20. Victories over the Saxons, 21.
- Amelongus throws the Romans into a panic, 542.
- Amfivarii, a tribe of Franks, 235.
- Anastasius confirms Theodoric king of Italy, 188.
- II's, his deposition and death, 397.
- Anatolius sent to make peace with the Hunns, 67.
- Anchialus plundered by the Ostrogoths, 498.
- Ancona besieged by the Ostrogoths, 498.
- Anderchester razed by the Saxons, 21, 22.
- Angiers, seized on by Childeric, 269.
- Angles, their origin, &c. 9. Settlements, ib. Joined to the Saxons, ib. Why called Angli, 10, 11. Assist the Britons, 14.
- Anglia, whence so called, 9.
- Anquialum, taken by the Goths, 128.
- Anfivarii, Anfinarii, who, 237, 238. Why so called, ib.
- Ansfrid's treason and punishment, 553.
- Anthemius's success against the Hunns, 96. Chosen emperor against Genferic, 212. Assists Leo against him, 213.
- Anzelas, kills a gigantic Goth in single combat, 501.
- Apollinaris defeated by Clovis, 294, & n.
- Apollonius sent ambassador to Attila, 71. Noble answer to him, ib.
- Appius Sabin. defeated by the Dacians, 369.
- Aquileia destroyed by Attila, 89, 90. Taken by the Lombards, 384, 385.
- Aquitana Gallia subdued by Clovis, 296.
- Aquiulphus's treason and death, 161, 162, & 229.
- Araric, a famed Bathian prince, 118.
- Arbogastes stirs up the Romans against the Franks, 255. Defeated them, ib.
- Arborici, who, and where, 284, n.
- Arcadius's partiality to the Goths, 146, 147.
- Ardaburius drives the Hunns out of Illyricum, 88.
- Ardaris,

I N D E X.

- Ardaric, king, a great favourite of Attila, 62. Serves under him, 76. Revolts after his death, 95.
- Arechis, second duke of Benevento, 518. His large territories, ib. Death, 534. Assumes the sovereign power, 603. Peace with Charles, ib.
- Aridius's signal fidelity to Gundebald, 286.
- Ariogeses chosen king of the Quadi, 350.
- Ariovald dethrones Adalwald, 528. His death, 529.
- Aripert, Ch. king of the Lombards, 536. Divides his kingdom, ib. Cruelty to Lupert, 548. To Alprang, and his family, 549. Donations to the Church, ib. & seq. & n. Defeated and drowned, 552.
- Arles, the siege of, raised, 296.
- Armorican Britons, of what standing, 37. Cruelty to the old inhabitants, 38. Submit to Clovis, 284.
- Arnagastus defeats the Hunns, 97.
- Arnegseles, defeated and slain by Attila, 67.
- Artabanus basely forsaken by the Romans, 479, 480. Brave fight with a gigantic Goth, 480. Death, 481. Sent against Totila. 496. Shipwreck, 497. Success in Sicily, 499.
- Artasiris sent to defend Rome, 485. Defeated, 486.
- Artemidorus promoted at Rome, 183.
- Arthur, king, succeeds Nazabed, 24. His history much doubted, ib. His tomb at Glastenbury, 25. Victories over the Saxons, 27. Death, 30.
- Arvaracus, his vision concerning the Hunns, 77, n.
- Ascaric, antient king of the Franks, 240. When, 241. His sad end, 248.
- Asmontium's noble defence against Attila, 68.
- Asgardians, who, 111.
- Asotes marries Samuel's daughter, 415.
- Aspar's narrow escape out of Africa, 204.
- Asprand driven out by Aripert, 548. Declared king of the Lombards, 552. Dies, ib.
- Aspurgia, where sited, 111.
- Aspurgians, who, ib.
- Astorga, destroyed by the Goths, 162.
- Astulphus, Ch. king of the Lombards, 574. Seizes on Ravenna, ib. Invades Rome, 575, & seq. His new edicts, 577. Defeated by Pepin, 579. Besieged in Pavia, 581. Submits to him, ib. Restores his conquests, 582. Dies, 584.
- Ataulphus founds a kingdom in Gaul, 118. Succeeds Alaric, 153. And invades Gaul, ib. Marries Placidia, ib. Murdered, ib.
- Atec, antient king of the Franks, 240. Submits to Dioclesian, ib.
- Athalaric, king of Italy, 119. Succeeds Theodoric, 442. His letter to the senate 443. To the Gauls, &c. 444. Debauches and death, 448.
- Athanagild, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118.
- Atharic defeated by the Hunns, 46, 139. His famed wall, 139. Wars with Valens, 136. Defeated, 138. Peace with him, ib. Kindly received by Theodosius, 141. Buried by him ib. & seq.
- Athens plundered by the Goths, 127. By Alaric, 146.
- Attalus made emperor, and deposed by Alaric, 153.
- king of the Marcomans, allies with Gallienus, 348.
- Attila's cruelty to the fugitive Hunns, 58. Falls foul on the Romans, 59. Upon Theodosius II, 60. His fratricide, 61. Peace with Theodosius, ib. Haughty answer to the Romans, 62. Proud character 63. Affects plainness, 64. Troops of wives, ib. Why called flagellum dei, 65. Wars with the Romans, 66. Horrid devastations, ib. & seq. New peace, 67. Forgives the Roman conspirators, 70. Falls foul on the western empire, 72. Demands the princess Honoria, 74. Outwits Valentinian with a sham peace, 75. His vast army, 76. Defeats the Franks, ib. Falls out with the Romans, 77. Defeated at Orleans, 80. Besieged in his camp, 85. Retires towards the Rhine, 87. Invades Italy, 89. Success and devastations there, 90. Revenge on the Roman pride, ib. n. Truce with Rome, 91. Enters Dauphiny, 92. Driven from it, ib. His death, 93. Pompous funeral, 94.
- Audoinus, king of the Lombards his success against the Gepidae, 339, 379.
- Auges, a famed Bathian prince, 118.
- Avignon taken by Theodoric, 297.
- Avitus proclaimed emperor by Theodoric, 160.
- bishop, his letter against duels, 307.
- Aurelian's success against the Goths, 129.
- Aurelius Conasus's wicked reign, 32.
- Auric, a famed Bathian prince, 118.
- Aufones, where sited, 111.
- Autharis chosen king of the Lombards, 391. Takes the name of Flavius, ib. Success against the Romans, ib. & seq. Turns christian, 514. His conquests, 516, & seq. Peace with Childebert, 517. Poisoned ib.
- Aurun, taken by Childebert, 319.

I N D E X.

- Auvergne yielded to Euric, 168.
 Auxinum taken by Belisarius, 470, 472.
 Aylesford, the battle of, 16.
 B.
- B A B A I defeated by the Ostrogoths, 176.
 Badicarini, heads of the ravaging Bulgarians, 393.
 Badon, the battle of, when fought, 29.
 Bagaudæ defeated by Astorius, 226.
 Balamir. See Valamir, 62.
 Baldwin's dreadful fate, 424.
 Baleares islands, ravaged by the Vandals, 200.
 Balthi, the princely tribe of, 107, 118.
 Bandaspes, king, imprisoned by his subjects, 357.
 Barani, where seated, 122.
 Barbation's ill-timed bravery, 485, 486.
 Basic, the Hunn, lifts in the Roman service, 56, 57.
 Basiliscus's treachery to Leo, 214. Defeated, 215. Pardoned 217.
 Basilus defeated by the Bulgarians, 413, 414. Success against them, 416. Cruelty to his prisoners, 417. Fresh conquest in Bulgaria, 418, 419. Cruelty to them, ib. Kindness to their king's family, 420. Triumph over them, 421.
 — Synademus, falsely accused by Democaitas, 421.
 Basina's reception of Childeric, 270, n. Runs away with, and married to him, 274, & n.
 Bathancester, Bath, taken by the Saxons, 34.
 Bebamburgh, Bamborough, by whom built, 30, 31.
 Begdeg, made king of Westphalia, 111.
 Belgia, whether conquered by Pharamond, 259.
 Belisarius's success against the Ostrogoths, 452. & 433, n. Answer to them, 456. Complaint to the emperor, 460, & n. Brave defence of Rome, 462. Defeat, 463. Raises the siege, 465. Success against the Goths, 466. Fresh conquests, 470. Proclaimed emperor by the Goths, 475. Recalled, 476. Sent against Totila, 485. Dissuades him from destroying Rome, 489. Retakes it, 490. Recalled 492. His conduct censured, ib.
 Beneventum dismantled by Totila, 482. Erected into a dukedom, 395, 516. Besieged by Constans, 540. Relieved by Grimoald, ib. — The dukes of, 516, 553. The extent of their dominions, 594. Government, 595. Changed into a principality, 603. Given to Radelchisus, 604.
 Berea delivered up to Basilus, 416.
 Berig invades the Almerugians and Vandals, 107.
 Bernica, a province in Northumberland, 31.
 Berry taken by the Visigoths, 166.
 Bessa sent to command in Rome, 485. His fatal avarice, 488.
 Bithynia, ravaged by the Goths, 124.
 Bladinus, king of the Bulgarians, 392.
 Bladishablus saved by Gabriel, 413. Murders him, 418. Suspected by Basilus, ib. Slain before Dyrrhachium, ib.
 Bleda succeeds Rouas, 57. Advantageous peace with Rome, 58. New conquests, ib. & seq. See sub. Attila.
 Bo, made king of Riisland, 111.
 Boarex, queen, defeats Styrax, &c. 98.
 Bodyna taken by Basilus, 416.
 Boëtius's consulship and character, 298. Compliments Theodoric at Rome, 438. Put to death by him, ib. Excellent character, ib. & seq.
 Boii, driven out of Bohemia by the Marcomans, 345.
 Bonifacius undermined by Ætius, 501. Invites the Vandals into Afric, ib. Besieged by them in Hippo, 204. Returns into Italy, ib.
 Borises sent prisoner to Constantinople, 412, 413. His escape and death, 413. Delivers up Scopia to Basilus, 417.
 Braga plundered by Theodoric, 229.
 Brissello taken by the Lombards, 512.
 Britain Great, invaded by the Picts, 3.
 Britains, make and murder their kings, 4. Dismal condition, and letter to Ætius, ib. & seq. Horrid degeneracy, 5. Destroyed by pestilence, 6. Invite the Saxons, ib. & n. Driven out by them, 15. Out of Kent, 18. Beaten by Ella, 20. Under Nazaleod, 23. Defeat the Saxons, 29. Grow more debauched, 31. Lose several battles, 34. And three of their kings, ib. Retire into Wales, 36. And Cornwall, ib. And South Scotland, ib. Into Armorican Gaul, ib. When, ib. The sad state of those in Wales, 38. Those in Gaul defeated by Euric, 166.
 Brittenberg castle built by the fugitive Britons, 16.
 Bructerii, a tribe of the Franks, 235. Their dreadful punishment, 249.
 Budini, who, and where seated, 354.
 Built, given to Pascentius, 20.
 Bulgaria Magna, where sited, 391.
 Bulgarians, their antient seat, extract, &c. 391. Defeated by Theodoric, 161. Come into Thrace, 392. Defeat Aristus, 393.

I N D E X.

393. New invasions, ib & seq. And defeats by the Romans, ib. Revenge, 394. Their language, 395, & n. Defeat Justinian, 397. And Copronymus, 398. Defeated, ib. Peace with Leo, 399. Defeat Constantine, IV. 400. Fresh invasions and conquests, 401. Defeated by Leo, 403. Success against Romanus, 408, 409. & seq. Subdued by the Rossi, 412. Submit to Zimisces, ib. Revolt and set up four kings, ib. Their war with Basilus, 413. Submit to him, 419. Revolt under Deleanus, 421. Submit to Michael, 424. Totally subdued by the Turks, 425.

Burgundi, who, and where sited, 122. Harassed by the Hunns 55. Are baptized, and defeat them, 55, 56. Defeated by the Goths, 131. Their Territories in Gaul, 163. Assist the ravaging Vandals, 196. War with the Franks, 285, &c. Defeated by Clovis, 287. Ally with him, 295. Defeated by Theodoric, 296. Their origin, 305. Religion, kings, &c. 306. Various defeats in Gaul, 307. Found a kingdom there, 192. Their conversion and conquests, 309. Wars with the Franks, 316. Subdued by them, 319.

Buteliana, the palace of burnt, 418.

Byzacene yielded to the Vandals, 205.

C.

CACANUS ravages Italy, 522.

Calabria, its territories, &c. 596.

Calocyus intices the Russi into Bulgaria, 412.

Cambray taken by Clodio, 261, & n.

Cannabaud slain by Aurelian, 129.

Caracilla defeats the Alemani, 321.

Carbonaria Sylva, where, 262, n.

Cardanes demands a tribute from Constantine, IV. 400.

Carloman marries Desiderius's daughter, 585. Dies, ib.

Carpi, who and where seated, 120, 122.

Buffed and affronted by Menophilus, 358. Submit, and transplanted, 359.

Carthage, taken by the Vandals, 205.

Carthagera destroyed by the Vandals, 200.

Cassanria destroyed by the Hunns, 99.

Cassiodorus sends embassador to Attila, 75.

Castinus's ill success against the Goths, 200.

Catalonia yielded to the Romans, 155.

Catigern's death and monument, 16.

Catti, who, 235.

Cattualdes chosen king of the Suevi, 222. Driven out, ib.

Cavions and Chaibons, who, 343.

Ccaulin's success against the Britons, 34. Defeated and driven out, 35. 36.

† Cenforinus sent embassadors to Emeric, 226.

Cerdic's arrival and success in Britain, 22, & seq. Sends for more Saxons, 27. Defeats the Britons, ib. Founds the West-Saxon kingdom, 28.

Chagan's ravages in Thrace, &c. 521. Outwitted by Grimwald, 543.

Chalazar put to death by Totila 492.

Chalcedon destroyed by the Goths, 123.

Chalons, the battle of, 80, 81. Authors reconciled about it, ib. n. & seq.

Chamavi, who, and where, 235.

Charnichis slain by Eui, 511.

Chararic, king of the Franks, 275. Refuses to aid Clovis, ib. Dethroned and murdered by him, 302.

Charford, the battle of, 28.

Charlemagne falls out with Desiderius, 657. Invited against him by the pope, ib. Success against him in Italy, 588. Grand reception at Rome, 589. Donations to the pope, 591. Conquests in Italy, ib. & seq. Crowned king of the Lombards, 598. Second reception at Rome, 599. Form of government, 600.

Chauci, who, and where sited, 235.

Chersonesus made free, 361.—Cimbrica, described, 106. Its first inhabitants, who, ib.

Chichester built by Cissa, 28.

Childebert's success against the Burgundi, 318, 319. Against the Lombards, 512. Defeated, 514, & seq.

Childeric, king of the Franks, 240. Taken prisoner by the Hunns, 76. Restored by Attila, 267, 268. His reign and conquests, 269. Death, ib. Tomb and character, ib. Dethroning and restoration, 270, & seq. & n.

Chilperic made magister militum, 306. His conquests in Gaul, 310. Extract, 311. Death, 312.

Chindasuinthus, } kings of the Visi-Chintila, } goths, 118.

Chloderic's parricide, 299. Punishment, ibid.

Chlotildis's character, &c. 277. Married to Clovis, ib. & seq. Strives to convert him, 279, 282. Her retirement and death, 304. Extract, 312. Revenge on Sigismund, 315, 316.

Chnodomarius's defeat and death, 327.

Chrestus enters Sarinatia, 361.

Chrysaphus hires Edecon to murder Attila, 69. Forgiven, 70.

Chuni, who, and where, 45.

Cimbrians, their origin, names, &c. 114. Success against the Romans, 486.

Cimbrica Chersonesus described, 106. When and by whom inhabited, ib.

I N D E X.

Circensian games, why exhibited by Totila, 495.

Cissa, second king of the South-Saxons, 28.

Classis razed by the Lombards, 557.

Classus, king of the Lombards, 379.

Claudebald, the supposed elder brother of Merouee, 265. Deprived of the crown by him, ib.

Claudius's success against the Goths, 125, & seq.

Clemantia, Kelmitz, a city of the Quadi, 349.

Cleodomir's baptism and recovery, 282.

Clephis, chosen king of the Lombards, 389. His cruelty and death, ib.

Clergy, British, their horrid degeneracy, 6, 33.

Clodio, king of the Franks, 239. Settles afresh in Gaul, 240. His character and reign, 259. Founds the French monarchy, ib. Why surnamed Long-hair, 260. His conquests, 263. Death, ib.

Clodion's sons fall out about the succession, 76.

Clodomir's success against Sigismund, 316. Defeated and killed, 317.

Clodovecus. See Clovis, 240.

Clotildis. See Chlotildis, 277.

Clovis, king of the Franks, fixes his seat at Paris, 240. His birth, 275. Dominions and conquests, 276. Marries, Chlotildis, 277, & seq. Defeats the Alemans, 279. His conversion, &c. 281. When, 282. The first christian king, ib. Success against the Burgundi, 285, 287. Falls out with Alaric, 289. Interview with him, 293. Defeats and kills him, 294. Zeal for the catholics, 295. Conquests, ib. & seq. Peace with Theodoric, 297. Made consul by Anastasius, ib. Treachery to Sigebert, and his son, 299. Proclaimed king, 300. Seizes on his dominions, 301. Dethrones and murders Chararic, &c. 302. And other princes, 303. His death and progeny, 304. Division of his kingdom, ib.

Cniva, a famed Bathian prince, 48. Success and ravages in Thrace, 121, 122.

Coimbra taken by the Suevi, 165, 232, 233. Plundered by them, ib.

Cologne, capital of the Ubii, taken by the Franks, 251. By Julian, 252. By Clodio, 264. Destroyed by the Alemans, 326.

Commachio given to the pope, 581.

Compositus's revolt and punishment, 525, n.

Conon's brave defence of Naples, 483. Reception from Totila, 484.

Constans, why he invaded Italy, 539. Repulsed before Benevento, 541. Defeated by Mitula, ib. By Romuald, 542. Enters Rome, ib. & seq.

Constantine's success against the Goths, 133. Against the Franks, 248. Severity to them, 250.—the son of king Arthur 30. His wicked reign, 31.

Consuls in Italy, their office, 595, & n.

Corfu wasted by Totila, 498.

Cornwall made part of the West-Saxon kingdom, 28.

Coviat castle, noble defence against the Goths, 162.

Counts in Italy, their origin, &c. 595.

Couridachus invites Attila against the Acatzariri, 58.

Creanford, the battle of, 18.

Creca, Attila's wife described, 64, & seq.

Crisco ravages Pontus, 360.

Crispus's success against the Franks, 250.

Crumus's resentment and success against Nicephorus, 401. Against Michael, 402. Defeated and killed, 403.

Cumæ besieged by the Romans, 504. Surrendered, 507. Taken by the Lombards, 553. Sold to the pope, ib.

Cunipert seized on by Grimoald, 537. Restored and made colleague to his father, 545. Driven out by Alachis, 546. Restored by Aldo, 547. Defeats and kills Alachis, 548.—His death, ib.

Cutha slain, 34, 35.

Cuthwolf's success against the Britains, 34. His death, ib.

Cutyrgurian Hunns, why so called, 41. Where sited, ib. Fall out with the Utyrgurians, 99. Defeated by Belisarius, 101. By Germanus, ib.

Cymenshore, the battle of, 20.

D

D A C I A described, 367, & seq. Made a Roman province, 374. Wasted by Attila, 66. Subdued by the Goths, 124. Yielded to Theodoric III. 181.

— New, where sited, 373.

Dacians their origin, 366. Character, customs, &c. 367. Kings, 368. Irruptions, defeats, &c. ib. & seq. Conquests, 369. Peace with Domitian, 370. War against Trajan, 371. Subdued by him, 372. Fresh revolts and submissions, 373. Dispersion, ib.

Dagalaiphus sent against the Alemans, 329.

Danes, their origin, 106.

Dania, Denmark, by whom first peopled, 106.

Daniel, father, his notion of the Arborigi, confuted, 284, n.

Dava,

I N D E X.

Dava, the antient name of Dacia, 367.
 David chosen king of the Bulgarians, and dies, 412, 413.
 Days of the week in England, from whom named, 12.
 Decebalus, king, his character, 368. Success against the Romans, 371, 372. Submission and death, ib.
 Decius the emperor, defeated and killed, 122.
 Deira, the province of, by whom founded, 31.
 Deleanus chosen king of Bulgaria, 421, Treachery to Teichomer, 422. Requited by Alufianus, 423.
 Denmark kings, whence called Skioldungar, 112.
 Demetrius sent admiral against Totila, 482. Defeated and insulted by him, 483.
 Dengisic, Attila's son, slain, 65. — Wars with the Romans, 97. Slain, ib.
 Deoram, the battle of, 34.
 Desiderius proclaimed king of the Lombards, 584. Falls out with the pope, 585. Allies with Charles of France, ib. Falls out with him, ib. Allies with Adrian, 586. Falls out with, and invades him, ib. Invaded by Charlemagne, 588, & seq. Taken and sent prisoner into France, 592. Heard no more of, 593.
 Die yielded to the Burgundi, 310.
 Dioclesian's success against the Goths exaggerated, 130.
 Diogenes's stout defence of Rome, 494. Of Circumcellæ, 496.
 Dionysius sent to treat with the Hunns, 57.
 Disparg castle, where sited, 240.
 Droctus's treachery and promotion, 511. And narrow escape, 512.
 Drogo heads the Bulgarians into Mœsia, 393.
 Duels brought into Gaul by the Burgundi, 306, 307. Laws made to enforce them, ib. & seq.
 Dukes, in Italy, their rise, 508, & seq. Their power cropt by Autharis, 513. Privileges and succession suppressed, 518. Their boundaries, 523, n.
 Duras resigns his crown to Decebalus, 368. — city taken by Theodoric III. 180.
 Dyrrachium taken by the Romans, 415. By Deleanus, 422.
 Dyfæ, inferior deities of the Saxons, their office, 12.
 Dyspargum, where sited, 237.

E

E A S T E R, whence so called, 12.
 Eburodunum, } cities of the Quadi, Eburum, } 349.

Ebusa, the Saxon, comes to the Orcades, 15. Settles in Northumberland, ib.
 Edecon sent ambassador to Theodosius, 68. Discovers his treachery to Attila, 69, 70.
 Edobic, general of the Franks, 257.
 Egiga, king of the Visigoths, 118.
 Eldol's inveteracy against Hengist, 21.
 Eleric over-reaches Copronymus, 399. Driven out by his subjects, 400. Turns christian, ib. & seq.
 Eleutherus sent to quell the rebellious dukes, 524. Takes the title of king, 526. Killed, ib.
 Elfs sacrificed to by the Saxons, 12.
 Ella, and his three sons, defeat the Britains, 20. Defeated, 21. Inlarges his kingdom, ib. & 22. His death, 28.
 — the son of Attila, made king of the Acatziri, 59.
 Ellac succeeds Attila, 94. Opposed by his brothers, 95. Defeated and killed, ib.
 Emperors, their territories in Italy, 596.
 England, whence called Anglia and Saxony, 10.
 English takes some provinces from the Welsh, 36.
 Engoulesme taken by the Franks, 296.
 Eoster worshipped by the Saxons, 21.
 Ephesus, the temple of, plundered by the Goths, 123.
 Epiphanius, bishop, successful embassy to Gundebald, 432. To Godogisles, ib. & seq.
 Eraric chosen king of the Ostrogoths, 119, 478. Murdered, 479.
 Erchenwin founds a fourth Saxon kingdom, 30.
 Ermenegild, king of the Goths in Gaul, 118.
 Ermeric invaded by the Hunns, 46. Kills himself, ib.
 — king of the Suevi in Spain, 199. Driven out by the Vandals, 200. Wars with the Galicians, 225, 226. Resigns to his son Rechila, ib. His death, ib.
 Ernac, and his Hunns, settle in Scythia Minor, 96.
 Ernigius, king of the Visigoths, 118.
 Esk made co-partner with Hengist, 18. Succeeds him, 21. His death, 28.
 Essex seized on by the Saxons, 18.
 Esus worshipped by the Saxons, 11.
 Ethelbert raises civil wars among the Saxons, 31.
 Eudocia, Commena, married to Hunneric, 207.
 Eudoxia, forced to marry Maximus, 207. Carried prisoner by Genferic, ib. Sent back to Leo, ib.

I N D E X.

Eugenius's intrigue with Honoria, punished, 72.

Eulyſian region, the ancient ſeat of the Hunns, 41.

Euric, king of the Viſigoths in Gaul, 118, 164. Ravages Luſitania, 165. His conqueſts in Spain, ib. & ſeq. In Gaul, 166. Vain attempt on Auvergne, 167. Enmity to the orthodox, ib. His territories, 168. Death, 169. Character, ib. & ſeq.

Eutaric's marriage and promotion, 441. Reception at Rome, ib. Death, 442.

Eutropius, undermined by Gainas, 148. Put to death, ib.

Eutychius, ſent to murder the pope, 562. Allies with Luitprand, 567. Driven out of Ravenna, 575.

Exhilaratus attempts the pope's life, 561. Aſſaſinated, ib.

F

FASTIDA, king of the Gepidæ, invades the Goths, 335. Deſeated, 336.

Feletheus killed by Odoacer, 379.

Feroaleus, firſt duke of Umbria, 386.

Ferrara beautified by Agilulf, 522.

Fefulæ, taken by the Romans, 470, 473.

Fiefs their origin, 513. Regulated by the Lombards, ib.

Filimer the great, ſettles near Palus Mæotis, 107. Reigns there, 117.

Fimbultyr, the ſuppoſed inventor of the Runic letters, 112.

Flaccus, Valerius, reſcued from the Quadi, 351.

Flenſburgh, metropolis of the Angles, 9.

Florianus's ſucceſs againſt the Goths, 130.

Folkſtone, battle of, 17.

Fontejus, Agrip. killed by the Iazyges, 356.

Forum Julii. See Friuli, 385.

Franci ludi, why and by whom inſtituted, 249.

Franks, their origin and firſt ſettlements, 8, 234. Deſeated by Attila, 76. Furious onſet againſt the Gepidæ, 81. When converted, 135, n. Whence their name, 234, 235. Their various tribes, 235. Why called Sicanbrians, ib. Some notions about them confuted, 236. Their extent, 237. Motley character, 238. Government, kings, &c. 239. Driven out of Gaul, 240. Ravage it, 242. Suppreſſed by Aurelian, ib. & ſeq. By Gallienus, 243. Serve under the Romans, 244. Dreadful ravages in Italy, ib. In Spain, ib. & ſeq. Driven out of Gaul, 245, 246. Settled near the Euxine, 246. Ravage Sicily, Afric, &c. ib. Treachery to Proculus, ib. Deſeated by Carauſius, 247. Settled in lower Germany, ib. Transplanted into Gaul, 248. Deſeated by Conſtantine, 249. Their ſevere puniſhment, 250, & ſeq. Peace with Conſtans, 251. New ravages, ib. Suppreſſed by Julian, 252. By Theodoſius, 253. Cut off by Nannius, 254. Irruption into Gaul, 256, 257. Their diſſeſ, 260. When ſettled in France, 261, & ſeq. & n. Enmity to churches, 264. Converſion, 281. Strengthened by the Armorici, 284. Treaty with the Oſtrogoths, 287. Inlarge their dominions, 295. Deſeated by Theodoric, 297. Conqueſts of Burgundy, ib. & ſeq. Treachery to the Goths and Romans, 459, 471. Great power in Gaul, 493. Conqueſts in Italy, 494. Refuſes to help the Oſtrogoths, 503. Enter Italy, 506. Deſtroyed there, 508. Aſreſh, 511. By Autharis, 514, & ſeq. Diſmal return, 515.

Franton ſet up king of the Suevi, againſt Maldras, 230.

Fraomarius made king of the Bucinobantes, 332.

Fratres Septem, Heptadelphi, mount, where, 15.

Frederic, deſeated and killed by Egidius, 163.

Fietanleagh, the battle of, 34.

Friederic's treachery to Theodoric, 185.

Friga, Frea, worſhipped by the Saxons, 12.

Friſii, a tribe of the Franks, 235.

Fritigil, queen, her converſion, 348. Submission to the empire, ib.

Friuli, Forum Julii, taken by the Lombards, 385. Erected into a dukedom, ib. & ſeq. Ravaged by the Hunns, 522.—The dukes of, 553. The end of them, 602, 603.

Frumarius ſhares the Sueviſh kingdom with Remiſmund, 231. His ravages and death, ib.

Fulard ſent to confirm Pepin's donation, 581, 582.

Furtius driven out by the Quadi, 350.

Fuſcus deſeated by the Daci, 369, 370.

G

GABINIUS, king of the Quadi, murdered, 352.

Gabriel, king of the Bulgarians, murdered, 418.

Gætulia ſeized on by Geſeric, 205.

Gainas ſtirſ up the Goths in the Eaſt, 148. Treachery to Arcadius, ib. & ſeq. Deſeat and death, 149.

Gaiobomar, king of the Quadi, put to death, 350. Gaius,

I N D E X.

Gaisus, king of the Franks, 240. When, 241. His sad end, 248.

Galicia maintains its liberty against the Suevi, 199.

Gallus buys off the Goths, 122.

Gadulf put to death by Agilulph, 520.

Garibal's treachery to Gundebert, 536.

The son of Grimoald, dethroned, 545.

Gaferic usurps the Gothic throne, 437. His defeat and death, ib.

Gaſaldi in Italy, their dignity, 395.

Gaudentius carried prisoner by Genſeric, 207.

Gaul, how divided under Theodoric, 444, n.

Gaulish church, its dismal state under the Visigoths, 170.

Gauſeric miraculously repulsed before Bazas, 56.

Gelimer, last king of the Vandals in Africa, 192.

Gelonians, who, and whence, 354, & seq.

Genobald, antient king of the Franks, 239. Submits to Dioclesian, 241.

Genſeric's cruelty to his daughter-in-law, 754. Advantageous peace with Theodosius, 61. Carries the Vandals into Africa, 192.

——II. succeeds Gonderic in Spain, 201. His character, ib. Treaty with Bonifacius, 202. Conquest of Africa, 203. Repulsed before Sicily, 204. Peace with Rome, ib. Breaks it, 205. Ravages Sicily, 206. Invited into Italy, 207. Plunders Rome, ib. Defeated by Ricimer, 208. Ravages, ib. Despises the emperor's embassy, ib. Surprises Majorianus's fleet, 210. Peace with him, and breaks it, 211. Ravages Italy, &c. ib. Peloponnesus and Greece, 212. Haughty answer to Leo, ib. New conquests and ravages, 217. Treaty with Rome, ib. Death, 218.

Gepidæ, who, and where, 121. Submit to Attila, 61. Defeat his son, and regain their liberty, 95. Obtain a pension from Rome, ib. Defeated by the Goths, 121. By Theodoric, 184. Settle in Thrace, 195. Defeated by Probus, ib. Their other settlements, 335. Defeat the Burgundi, ib. War with the Hunns, 337. Settled in Dacia, ib. Defeated by Justinian, ib. Defeated by the Lombards, ib. & seq. Again, and again, 338, 339. Subdued by them ib. The end of their reign, ib. The same with Longobards, 375. Why called Gepidæ, 377.

Germania Prima, invaded by the Vandals, 196.

Germanus sent general into Italy, 496. Dies, 497.

Gerontius betrays the streights of Thermopylæ, 145. Allies with the Vandals, 197.

Gesaleich, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118.

Gesuald's singular fidelity, 541. Death, ibid.

Getæ, Getes. See Goths, 105.

Gevaudan taken by the Visigoths, 166.

Giberic, a Bathian prince, 118.

Gisulphus, first duke of Friuli, 385.—Of Benevento, his reign and death, 553.

Gloucester taken by the Saxons, 34.

Godegisel leads his Vandals into Gaul, 192. Allies with Clovis, 286. Treachery to Gundebald, ib. Put to death by him, 287.

Godemar, king of the Burgundi, 317. Hires the Ostrogoths, ib. Success against the Franks, ib. Peace with them, 318. Driven out of his kingdom, 319. Taken prisoner, 320.

Gonderic, king of the Vandals in Spain, 199. Defeats the Suevi, 200. Defeated by Asterius, ib. His miserable end, ib. & 201.

Gondicarius defeated by the Hunns, 55.

Gontran invaded by the Lombards, 510.

Gordas, king of the Hunns, turns christian, 98. Murdered by his subjects, ib.

Gothish women fight in mens apparel, 129.

Goths seize Gothland from the Cimbri, 9. Defeated at Chalons, 84, & seq. The vast number of the slain, 86. Their history, 104. Origin, ib. & 114. The same with the Cimbri, 105, 114. Various settlements, 105, & seq. Countries and names, 108, & seq. Language, writing, 110. Come into Germany, ib. to 114. Allowed of polygamy, 116, 117. Why called Goths, 117. Their customs, kings, &c. ib. & seq. Dress, 119. Wars with Caracalla, 120. Ravage Mœsia, ib. Driven out of Thrace, ib. & seq. Fresh ravages, 121. Repulsed by Æmilian, 122. By Aurelian, 123. By Macrianus, ib. Ravage Asia, ib. Repulsed by Odenatus, 124. Invade the empire, 125. Defeated by Claudius, 126. Destroyed by pestilence, 127. Surrender to Claudius, 128. Driven out of Pannonia, 129. Out of Thrace, ib. Dacia, &c. 130. Defeated by Dioclesian, ib. By Constantine, 131. Assist him against Licinius, 132. An hundred thousand of them destroyed, 133. When and how converted, ib. & n. Serve under several emperors, 134. Defeated by Valens, 136, 137. Obtain a peace, 138. Driven out, and submit to the Hunns, 139. Submit to Theodosius, 140. Ravage Greece, 145. Italy, 150. Conquests in France, &c. See sub Visigoths, 153, & seq. & Ostrogoths, 173, & seq. Q 9 4 Graſulf,

I N D E X.

Grafulf seizes on the dutchy of Friuli, 527.

Gratian his success against the Alemans, 333.

Gregory's treachery to Tato, &c. 527.

—— II. pope, opposes Leo's edict, 558.

Stirs up the Venetians, 560. Falls out with Leo, 559. Assisted by Luitprand, 560. Excommunicates the exarch, ib. Conspired against by Leo, 561, 562. Submission to Luitprand, 567. Embassy to Ch. Martel, ib. 568. Death, 569.

Greuthongi, who, 46. Defeated by Valens, 138.

Grimoald refuged in Lombardy, 534. Made duke of Benevento, 535. Seizes on the crown of Lombardy, 537. Treachery to Partharit, 538. Stratagem against the Franks, 539. Against the Romans, 542. Against the Hunns, 543. Corrects the Lombard laws, 544. His death and character, 545.

—— II. succeeds his father, and dies, 553.

Gualstads in Italy, their office, 595.

Gudeok, king of the Lombards, 379. His death, ib.

Gundamund, king of the Vandals in Afric, 192.

Gundebald defeated by Clovis, 286. Besieged in Avignon, ib. Success against his brother, 286, 287. Made magister militæ, 306. His law in favour of duels, 307. Fratricide, 312. Conquests and ravages, 313. Death, ib.

Gundebert's treachery to his brother, 536. Killed by Grimoald, 537.

Gundemar, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118.

Gunderic settles in Galicia, 192.

Gundiac, king of the Burgundi, made magister militæ, 306. His success in Spain and Gaul, 310.

Gundicarius, king of the Burgundi, 306. Defeated and killed, 309.

Gylvo, Gylphus, receives Woden in Sweden, 112.

H

HAMSHIRE inhabited by the Jutes, 10.

Hancetowns, whence so called, 238.

Hela, the goddess of hell, 13.

Helmichild, sorely over-reached by Rosamund, 387. His fatal end, and revenge on her, 389.

Hengist, (and Horsa) who, and whence, 9. Help to defeat the Picts and Scots, 14. Settled in Lincolnshire, ib. Treachery to Vortigern, 17. Defeated by Ambrosius, 21. His death, ib. When he came into Britain, 113.

Heraclea taken by Theodoric, 177.

Heraclius recovers Tripoli from the Vandals, 214, 215.

Hermanaric, king of the Goths, 118, 136. His great conquests, 139. Kills himself ib.

Hermigarius's defeat and death, 202.

Herna, Attila's youngest son, 65. His character, &c. ib.

Hertius worshipped by the Angles, 13.

Heruli, who and whence, 340. Settled in Thrace, 341. And Scandinavia, ib.

Why so called ib. Their religion, laws, &c. ib. & seq. Sundry ravages and defeats, 342.

Subdued by Ermeneric, 343. And Attila, ib. & 61, 62. 139. By the Lombards, 344. Dispersed, ib. Regicide, ib.

Conversion, 345. Sad character, ib. Subdued by the Lombards, ib. &c.

Hilarius the philosopher put to death by the Goths, 146.

Hilbas's success against the Franks, 297.

Hildebrand made duke of Ravenna, 557.

—— king of the Lombards, deposed, 571.

Hilperic assists the Goths in Spain, 161.

Hippo taken and burnt by the Vandals, 204.

Holstein, the antient seat of the Saxons, 9.

Honorius stirs up Attila against her brother, 72, 73. Her lewd character and imprisonment, ib.

Honorius falls out with Alaric, 153.

Hormidæ, defeated in Dacia, 96.

Horsa, who, and whence, 9. Defeated, and slain, 16. Where buried, ib.

Hortarius sues to Julian for peace, 328.

Hulmul, a prince of the Bathian family, 118.

Hungarians, whence descended, 103. Why so called, 104. Hired against the Bulgarians, 405.

Hunila married to Bonosus, 129.

Hunneric king of the Vandals in Afric, 192.

Hunnimund, king of the Ostrogoths, 118. Submits to the Hunns, 173.

Hunns, whence, 40. Their tribes names, &c. 41.—Scythian, their kings or chiefs, 43. Origin, names, &c. 44.

Cross the Palus Mæotis, 45. Subdue the Alans, 46. And Ostrogoths, ib. Visigoths, &c. ib. Their other conquests, 47.

Hired by Theodosius, 48. Defeated in Thrace, ib. Their horrid ravages, ib.

& seq. In Thrace, Illyricum, 50. Assist Stilicho against Radagaisus, 51. Second irruption, 52. And defeat, ib. Side with the usurper John, 53. Repulsed, ib. When possessed of Pannonia, 54. Join Ætius against the Burgundi, 55. 20000 cut

I N D E X.

cut off by them, ib. Defeat the Goths before Narbonne, 56. Plunder Auvergne, ib. Defeated before Thoulouse, ib. Make peace, 58. New conquests, ib. & seq. Under Attila, 59. Ravage Illyricum, 88. Their prowess ends with Attila's death, 94. Defeated by the Goths, 96. In Dacia by Anthemius, ib. Fresh irruption into the empire, 99. Vast plunder, &c. ib. Defeated, 100. By Sigebert in Thuringia, 102. Extent of their dominion in Charles the Great's reign, 102. Embassy to him, ib. Totally reduced by him, 103.

I

IAZYGES, who, 354. Declare for Vespasian, 355. Ravage Mæsia, ib. Defeated by Gallus, 356. Join the Suevi against Rome, ib. Embassy to Adrian, 357. Defeated by M. Aurelius, ib.

Ibatzes's success against the Romans, 418. Taken prisoner, 420.

Ibereus, king of the Lombards, 374, 376.

Ida founds a second Saxon kingdom, 30.

Idatius's account of the Vandals eruption, 198.

Idolatry rooted up by the Goths in Greece, 146.

Igillus, king of the Vandals, taken prisoner, 195.

Ildebald, chosen king of the Ostrogoths, 119. 477. Defeats the Romans, ib. Murdered by Vilas, 478.

Ildigefal refuged among the Gepidæ, 339.

Illus's treachery to Zeno, 181.

Illyricum laid waste by Attila, 66.

Imola rebuilt by Clephis, 389.

Ingomer's baptism and death, 282.

John's bravery against the Vandals, 216.

Death, ib. & seq.——Belisarius's general's success, 464. Besieged in Rimini, 466.

Relieved, ib. Treachery to Belisarius, 468.

Opposes Totila's offers, 484. Releases the Roman senators, 491. Put to flight by Totila, ib. Sent into Italy, 497. Defeated at sea, 498, 499, & seq.

Jornandes's fabulous account of the Hunns, 89.

Jotæ, who, and where seated, 111.

Jovinus's success against the Alemans, 330.

Isacius defeated by Rotharis, 533. Quells

Mauricius's rebellion, ib.

Isarna, a Bathanian prince, 118.

Italy ravaged by Attila, 89, & seq.

Cleared of the Goths and Franks, 508. Put under a new government, ib. & seq.

Julian's success against the Franks, 252.

Against the Alemans, 326, 327.

Justin sent against Totila, 497. Made governor of Ravenna, 500.

Justinian, why styled Gepidicus, 340, & seq. Wars against the Ostrogoths, 450. Betrayed by Theodebert, ib. & n. Success against him and them, 456.

Jutes, their origin, 8 & seq. Why called Giotæ, 9.

Juthungi settled in Thrace, 195. Defeated by Ætius, 225.

Jutland conquered by the Goths. 112.

K

KAER-WENT, Gourtigern consumed by lightning, 18. Given to Paicentius, 20.

Keaulins's success against Ethelbert, 31, 34.

Kent inhabited by the Jutes, 10. Seized on by Hengist, 14. Becomes a Saxon kingdom, ib. & seq.

L

LAMISCUS, king of the Lombards, 376. Why so called, 378. Defeats the Bulgarians, ib.

Lantilais renounces Arianism, 282.

Larissa taken Theodoric III. 177. 181. By the Bulgarians, 413.

Latin tongue corrupted in Italy, 395, 396, n.

Lemigius, duke, murdered for extortion, 523.

Lens, the battle of, when fought, 261.

Lentineses defeated by Mallobaudes, 254.

Leo, pope, sent ambassador to Attila, 91.

——Arcadius's general, defeated, and killed, 148.

——the compiler of the Theodorician laws, his character, 171, & n.

——the emperor's great preparations against Genferic, 213. Defeated at sea by him, 215.

——Phocas's ill success against the Bulgarians, 407.

——Morolon's noble defence of Adrianople, 409. Tortured to death, ib.

——Melissæus betrayed by Stephen, 413, 414.

——Isauricus causes great disturbances by his edict, 557. Opposed by the pope, 560. Preparations against him, 568.

Leontius's treason and defeat, 181. Speech to the Franks, 451, n.

Lerida taken by the Suevi, 227.

Leta, king of the Lombards, 376, 379.

Letes, who, and where sited, 247.

Leunigild, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118.

Leutharis heads the Franks into Italy, 506. His army destroyed, 508.

Liberius sent to relieve Syracuse, 497.

Libertem

I N D E X.

Libertem heads the Bulgarians in Thrace, 392.

Licinianus sent embassador to Euric, 167.

Liguria ravaged by the Burgundi, 313.

Limigantes, why so called, 363. War with the Romans, ib. & seq. Submit to Constantius, 365.

Linva, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 318.

Lions taken by the Burgundi, 310.

Lisbon taken by the Suevi, 230.

Litorius taken prisoner by the Goths, 357. Insulted and put to death by Theodoric, ib.

Livisa slain by Theodoric, 186.

Lombards, their origin, &c. 374. Whence called Longobards, 376. Their wars with the Gepidæ, 337. Settle in Pannonia, 376. Their kings, character, dress, &c. ib. Migrations, 377, & seq. Defeat the Vandals, ib. Outwit the Asipiti, 378. Success in Gothland, ib. Settle in Rugiland, 379. Defeat the Heruli, ib. And Gepidæ, ib. Settle in Pannonia, 380. Enter Italy, 382. Their success and conquests, 384. Begin a kingdom there, 386. Split it into dukedoms why, 390. The ill consequence of it, ib. The number of those dukes, ib. & seq. Chuse a new king, 391. Their language, 396, n. Break into Gaul, 510. Defeated by Ennius, ib. Fall out with the Saxons, ib. Chuse Autharis their king, 512. Renounce Arianism, 518. 545. Success against the Romans, 540. The end of their kingdom, 592. Character and government vindicated, 593. The extent of their dominions, 594. Laws, see under Longobardian, 530 & seq.

Lombardy, how divided, 597. Its three states, 601.

Longinus defeated by Leontius, 181. Reception of Rosamund, 389. First exarch of Ravenna, 508. His new government, ib. & seq. Defeated and recalled, 511.

Longobardi, who, and where, 374. Different from the Lombards, 375. Whence called Vinili, ib. The rest see under Lombards.

Longobardian laws, when and by whom compiled, 529, & 530 n. Corrected by Grimoald, 544. By Hildebrand, 571. By Astolph, 577.

Lucera destroyed by Constans, 540.

Lugdunensis, Gallia, seized on by the Burgundi, 310.

Luitbert, dethroned and murdered by Ragumbert, 548.

Luitprand spared by Aripert, 549. Consoled against, 554. Rash courage and generosity, ib. New body of laws, 555, & n.

Invades Ravenna, 557. Success there, 561. Reconciled to the pope, 567. Reception of Zachary, 570. Death and character, ib. & seq.

Lupus Vib. bishop of Troyes, forced to quit it, 88. Duke of Friuli, revolts, 543. Defeated and killed, ib.

Lydia, over-run with Goths, 124.

Lygians, Logiones, defeated by Probus, 194. Ally with the Suevi against the Romans, 222.

M

MACEDON, plundered by the Hunns, 67.

Macrianus defeated by the Franks, 253. Valentinian, 332. His death, ib.

Magnifrid sent against the Hunns, 102.

Magoclinus's wicked reign, 32.

Majoranus defeats the Visigoths in Gaul, 163. Wars against the Vandals in Afric, 209. Peace with them, 211.

Malaric, ancient king of the Franks, 240, & seq.

Maldra, chosen king of the Suevi in Spain, 162. Ravages Lusitania, 163, 230. His treachery and death, 231.

Mallobaudus, king of the Franks, 241. Success against the Alemans, 253. Bravery and promotion under Gratian, ib. Death, 254.

Manfuetus, bishop of Britany, 37.

Mantua taken by the Hunns, 90.

Marcellinus's success against Genseric, 214. Assassinated in Sicily, 216.

Marcian's noble answer to Attila, 71. Taken prisoner in Afric, 204.

Marcomani, who, and whence, 345. Their character, customs, &c. 346. Peace, with Augustus ib. War with the Cherusci, ib. Success against the Romans, ib. Defeated by them, 348. Submit to them, ib.

Marcomir, king of the Franks, 239. Ill success against the Romans, 255, & seq.

Maroboduus driven out of his kingdom, 345. The city of his residence, 346.

Marobudum, by whom built, 346.

Mars, his supposed sword found, 63.

Marseilles yielded to Theodoric, 289.

Martel, Ch. allies with the pope, 568, 569.

Martinus killed before Rome, 463.

Matafuenta married to Germanus, 476.

Mauringa seized by the Lombards, 378.

Mauritius's rebellion and death, 533.

Maximin, why in friendship with the Goths, 119. — Sent against them, 482. Defeated, 483.

Maximus, Theodosius's embassador to Attila, 69, 74.

Melanchlenæ, a kind of canibals, 355.

Mellobaudes's

I N D E X.

Mellobaudes's success against the Alemans, 333.

Mentz, put to fire and sword by the Hunns, &c. 78. By the Vandals, 196. By the Alemans, 331.

Merida taken by the Visigoths, 161. By the Suevi, 226.

Merouee outwitted by Ætius, 37. Carried by him at Rome, 264. Succeeds Clodio, 265. His noble services to the Romans, ib. Reign, character, and death, ib. 266, & n.

Merovingian line, 266, & n.

Mesembria taken by the Bulgarians, 402.

Michael forced to turn monk, 410. Lays claim to the crown, 411. Dies, ib.

Milan taken and plundered by the Hunns, 90. By Theodoric, 185. By the Lombards, 386. By Belisarius, 465. Besieged by the Ostrogoths, 466. Taken, and put to the sword, 469. Opens to Grimoald, 537.

Mitula defeats the Romans, 541. Made duke of Spoleum, 543.

Mæsia yielded to Theodoric III. 183.

Moldavia part of antient Dacia, 357.

Moon, how worshipped by the Saxons, 11, 12.

Mortagon assists Michael against the rebels, 404.

Moses, one of the four Bulgarian kings dies, 413.

Mucuruna turns nun, 312.

Mugaris, king of the Hunns, takes Bosphorus, 98. Repulsed by John, ib.

Mummulus's success against the Lombards, 510, 511.

Mundo raises a revolt in Pannonia, 433. Submits to Theodoric, ib.

Mundus's success against the Bulgarians, 394. Against the Ostrogoths, 452, & n. Defeated and killed, 455.

Mundzuchus, king of the Hunns, 44.

N

NAISSUS taken by Attila, 60. Described, ib. n. Taken by the Ostrogoths, 176.

Nannianus's success against the Alemans, 333.

Naples taken by Belisarius, 453, & n. Its dreadful slaughter, 454, n. Besieged by Totila, 482. Taken and dismantled, 483, 484. The exarchate of, 516. Its extent, 423, & n. Extent of its dukedom, 595. Dukes, why called consuls, ib. & n. Why called Sicily, 597. Theodoric's ominous statue set up at, 429, & n.

Narbonne, taken by the Visigoths, 153. By Theodoric II. 163.

Narles's success in Italy, 381. Invites the Lombards thither, 382. Three gene-rels of that name, 383. Joins Belisarius, 466. Falls out with him, 467. Takes Imola, 468. Accused and recalled, 469. Sent back into Italy, 498. His huge mixed army, 500. Success against Totila, ib. & seq. His conquests into Italy, 503, & seq.

Naulobad, taken prisoner, and promoted, 343.

Nazaleod defeated and killed by the Saxons, 23. Uncertain who he was, ib.

Neapolitans, unshaken adherence to the pope, 562. Whether still under the emperors, ib.

Nephthalite Hunns, where sited, 41. Subdue the Persians, ib. & seq. Their character, 42. Repulsed before Edessa, 48.

Nicephorus's success against the Bulgarians, 401. Defeated and killed by them, ibid.

Nicolas's ingratitude to Basilus, 416.

Nicomedia taken by the Goths, 124.

Nicopolis taken by the Goths, 128. By the Bulgarians, 411. Submits to Deleanus, 422. Plundered by the Ostrogoths, 498.

Night-mare, whence so called, 12.

Nocca, Neptune, worshipped by the Saxons, 12.

Northumberland made a kingdom, 30. Its extent, ib. & seq.

Numidia yielded to Genseric, 204.

O

OCTA, the Saxon, comes into Britain, 15. Settles in Northumberland, ib.

Octar, king of the Hunns, wars with the Burgundi.

Odin, king of the Asgardians, 110, 111.

Odoacer yields his conquests to the Goths, 168. Makes himself king of Italy, 183. Put to flight by Theodoric, 184. Recovers part of it, 185. Defeated afresh, 186. Besieged in Ravenna, ib. Surrenders, and put to death, 187.—A Saxon defeated by Childeric, 269.

Odotheus, king of the Greuthongi, invades the empire, 142. Defeated and slain by Theodosius, 143.

Olympius, the exarch, success against the Saracens, 533. Death, ib.

Opitergum taken by Rotharis, 532.

Orbitum taken by the Lombards, 522.

Orcades islands, plundered by the Saxons, 15.

Orestes sent by Attila to Constantinople, 69. His marriage and issue, ib. n. Character and death, ib. When he left Attila's service, 73.

Orleans taken by Attila, 80. Saved by Ætius, ibid. Taken by Childeric, 269.

Orocles's misdemeanour and odd punishment, 367. Ostrogotha,

I N D E X.

Ofrogotha, a Bathian prince, 118. Defeats the Gepidæ, 121.

Ostrogoths driven out by the Hunns, 46. Pass the Danube, 47. Settle in Pannonia, 96, 174. Whence so called, 107, 108. Where seated, 118. Subject to the Hunns, ib. Invade the empire, 143. Defeated by Theodosius, ib. Their kings, history, &c. 173. Ravage Illyricum, 175. Settle in Thrace, 184. Where settled by Clovis, 288. Seize upon Arles, 297. And Panonnia, 298. Their government in Italy, 428. War against the Romans, 452, & seq. Invaded and plundered by the Franks, 470. Outwitted by Belisarius, 475. Choose a new king, 477. War against Narses, 498. Cruelty to the Romans, 504. Defeated by them, 505. Submit to them, 506. Suffered to enjoy their liberty, 508.

Otranto relieved by Belisarius, 485. Taken by John 491.

Otta, third king of Kent, 28.

P

PALENTIA, destroyed by the Goths, 162.

Palermo taken by Belisarius, 452.

Pampelona, taken by the Visigoths, 165.

Pancrattus, a lying mathematician slain, 400.

Pannonia erected into a country, 435.

Paris taken by Childeric, 164. Made the metropolis of the Franks, 298. And of the whole monarchy, 299.

Partharit, king of the Lombards, 536. Undermined by his brother, ib. His flight to Chagan, 537. Driven thence, 538. Narrow escape from Grimoald, 539. Recovers his crown, 545. Dies, 546.

Paschasius, bishop, three years slavery under the Vandals, 206.

Pascentius defeated by Ambrosius, 20.

Patrician, in Italy his office, 597.

Patrimonies of the church, an account of, 549, n. That of Constantine exploded, 565, n. Confiscated by Leo, 568.

Pavia, taken and burnt by Attila, 90. Taken by Theodoric, 185. By Albonius, 386. Made the metropolis of Lombardy, ibid.

Paul, count, killed by Childeric, 269. His brave defence of Rome, 494. Kind treatment from Totila, 495. Made exarch of Ravenna, 559. Opposes the worship of images, 561.

Paulus Diaconus, his writings and character, 571, n.

Pentapolis, in Italy, submits to Luitprand, 561. Given to the pope, 579.

Pepin assists the pope against the Lombards, 577. Success against Astolph, 579. Answer to Copronymus's ambassadors, 581. Donations to the pope, ib. Confirmed and enlarged by Charlemagne, 591.

Peredeus's brave defence of Ravenna, 559. Death, ib.

Perugia besieged by Totila, 491. Taken 493.

Peter succeeds his father Simeon, 410. Peace and alliance with Romanus, 411.

—Sent duke of Naples, 562.

Pharamond, the time of his defeat and death, 240. Of his reign, 257. Where buried, 258. Whether he compiled the Salic Laws, 259.

Phial, the holy, at Rheims, the fable of, 283.

Philippopolis, plundered and taken by the Hunns, 66. By the Goths, 121.

Phrygia, ravaged by the Goths, 124, 148.

Picenum laid waste by the Romans, 464.

Picts, fresh invasion, 3. And repulse, 5.

Pipa, whether married to Gallienus, 243.

Pisidia, ravaged by Tribigil, 148.

Placidia married to Ataulph, 153. Sent back by Wallia, 154.

Plintha's shameful peace with the Hunns, 57.

Pomerania invaded by the Goths, 107.

Popes hatch the destruction of the Lombardic kingdom, 556. The beginning of their sovereignty, 562, & seq. & n. How confirmed, 574. Put in possession of Ravenna, &c. 582. Whether with the sovereignty of them, ib.

Porta's arrival at Portsmouth, 22.

Portæ, Caucasia and Caspia, where, 40.

Posthumius's success against the Franks, 245.

Priam whether the first king of the Franks, 239.

Principius killed at Rome, 463.

Priscus Julian's conjurer, put to death, by the Goths, 146.

Probus's success against the Goths, 130. Against the Vandals, 194. Franks, 246. Quadi, 350, 351.

Procopius's history defective, 288, & seq.

Proculus, bishop's sermon against the Hunns, 53.

Proconsularis yielded to Genseric, 204.

Proterus, the philosopher, put to death by the Goths, 146.

Q

QUADI, who, and where sited, 349. Their cities, ib. War with Rome, ib. Submits to Antoninus, ib. Peace with Rome made and broken, 350. New

I N D E X.

New one with Commodus, ib. Ravage Illyricum, ib. Defeated by Carus, 351. Fresh ravages, ib. Peace with Constantius, 352. New ravages and conquests, ib. & seq. In Gaul, 353. Their end, ib.

Quintianus, bishop, driven out by the Arians, 293.

Quintillus's success against the Goths, 128.

Quintinus's unhappy expedition against the Franks, 254.

R

RA C H I S chosen king of the Lombards, 571. His new edict, 572. Conquests, ib. Turns monk, ib. His statue at Barletta, 573, n. Dissuaded by the pope from resuming the crown, 584.

Radagaisus repulsed by Stilicho, 51.

Ragaisus, when he reigned over the Franks, 241.

Ragilo slain by the Franks, 511.

Ragnacharius, king of the Franks, 275. Assists Clovis against the Romans, 276. Betrayed and murdered by him, 302.

Raspa ravages Asia, 123.

Ravenna besieged by Belisarius, 473. Taken, 475. Erected into an exarchate, 508. Plundered by Luitprand, 557. Reduced into a dukedom, 558. Retaken by Scholasticus, 559. The end of its exarchate, 575. Duration, ib. Given to the pope, 582.

—— bishops of, claimed the pre-cedency of all bishops, 575.

Raufimodes, king, defeated and killed, 362.

Reccard, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Recensuinthus, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Rechiarus crowned at Merida, 227. His plunders, ib. Peace with Rome, ib. Invades it, 228. Turns christian, 232. Invades Carthage, 227. Haughty answer to Theodoric, 228. Defeated and put to death by him, ib.

Rechila made king of the Suevi, 226. His conquests, ib. Death, 227.

Rechimir, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Rectores, in Italy, their office, 596.

Regillianus's success against the Sarmatians, 360. Murdered, ib.

Regnares killed for his treachery to Narses, 507.

Regnomer murdered by Clovis, 303.

Reidogothland. See Jutland, 112.

Remigius, bishop, converts the Franks, 281. His character, 282.

Remismond ravages Lusitania, 163, 165. And Galicia, 230. Succeeds Maldra, 231. Peace with Theodoric, 232. Broken, 233.

Ravages Lusitania, ib. Peace with Euric, 234. Death, ib.

Requarius. See Rechiarius, 228.

Retiarium taken by Attila, 60. Described, ib. n.

Rhing, the royal palace of the Hunns, plundered, 103.

Ricared, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Richarius murdered by Clovis, 302, 303.

Ricimer, king of the Franks, 241. Success, against Genferic, 208.

Riisland conquered by the Goths, 111.

Rimini taken by the Lombards, 389. By the Romans, 465. Besieged by the Ostrogoths, ib. Relieved, 467.

Riotham, king of Bretagne, defeated by Euric, 38, 166.

Ripuarian Franks, who, and where seated, 279. Proclaimed Clovis their king, 300. Their territories, 301. Character, laws, &c. ib.

Roas, Rougas, king of the Hunns, defeated and killed, 53, & 54, n. Succeeded by Attila and Bleda, 57.

Roderic, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Rodoald defeats the Slavonians, 535. Made duke of Benevento, ib. His death, ibid.

—— king of the Lombards, murdered, ib.

Rodolinda and her son seized on by Grimmoald, 527.

Rodolphus defeated by the Lombards, 344, 379.

Romagna submits to Luitprand, 561. Given to the pope, 581.

Romans driven out of part Gaul, 153, 164. Out of Spain, ib. & seq. Defeated in Afric, 204. In dread of the Vandals, 205. Driven out of Gaul, 284. Invasion of Gaul, Germany, &c. See under those respective articles.

Romanus sent prisoner to Constantinople, 411. 413. Why unfit for the crown, ibid.

——exarch of Rome defeated by Agilulf, 519.

Rome taken by Belisarius, 458. Besieged by Vitiges, 462. Under the plague and famine, 463. Relieved, 464. Besieged by Totila, 486. Its dreadful condition, ib. Surrendered and plundered, 487, 488. Retaken and rebuilt by Belisarius, 490. Betrayed to Totila, 494. And repaired, 495. Retaken by Narses, 504. Divested of its privileges, 508. Reduced into an exarchate, 516. Its extent, ib. &c. Ravaged by the Lombards, 519. Revolts from the emperor, 562. Besieged by Luitprand, 567. The rest see under Popes.

Romuald receives the Bulgarians into Benevento, 395. Defends it against Constans,

I N D E X.

flans, 540: Defeats him, ib. Dies, 553.

Romuald II. conquets on Naples, 553: Death, ib.

Romulus sent embassador to Attila, 73.

Rosalmond causes Alboinus to be murdered, 387, & seq. Her flight and punishment, 389, & seq.

Rotharic put to death by Aripert, 548.

Rotharis chosen king of the Lombards, 529. Gives the first laws to them, 530, & n. His conquests, 532. Death and character, 534. — A traitor against Luitprand, murdered, 554.

Rowena, Hengist's daughter, whether married to Vortigern, 14.

Roxolana. See Rissland, 111.

Roxolani, who, 354, & seq. Success in Mœsia, 355. Cut off by M. Aponius, ib. Become pensioners to Rome, 357.

Rufinus stirs up the Hunns, 48. And the Visigoths, 144. Undermines Stilicho, 145.

Rugians, who, 478. Settled in Illyricum, 96. Submit, to Attila, 62.

Runic character brought by Woden from Asia, 112. Why condemned, ib.

Rusciana taken by Totila, 491.

Russi, Rossi, seize on Bulgaria, 412. Driven out of it, ib.

Rusticana saved by Totila, 488.

S

SABINIANUS defeats the Ostrogoths, 180.

Saburrus's valour and defeat, 542.

Salii, who, and whence, 235. Why so called, 238. Submit to Julian, 253.

Samnium taken by the Lombards, 516.

Samuel, chosen king of the Bulgarians, 413. His horrid ravages, ib. Defeated by Basilus, ib. Fresh conquests, 414. Defeated by Uranus, 415. By Basilus, 417. Breaks his heart, ib.

Sangiban, king, who, 83, & n.

Saragoffa taken by the Visigoths 165.

Sardica, taken by the Bulgarians, 401.

Sardinia taken by the Vandals, 211. Recovered by Marcellinus, 214. Retaken by Genferic, 217.

Sarmatia, its extent, 354. Nations, ib.

Sarmatian giant killed by Constantine, 361. Games whence, 362.

Sarmatians settled in Illyricum, 96. Their names, character, &c. 354. First irruptions, 355. Submit to Adrian, 357. Peace with M. Aurelius, ib. Where settled, 358. Defeated by Caracalla, ib. & seq. By Maximinus, 359. Peace with Probus, 360. Defeated by Carus, ib. & seq. By Constantine, 361. Defeat the Goths, 362.

Submit to Constantine, ib. & seq. Beaten by the Goths, ib. Repulsed and dispersed by their slaves, 363. Made free by Constantius, 364. Restored to their country, 365. Fresh inroads and defeats, ib. Subdued by the Hunns and Goths, 366.

Sathagetes submit to Attila, 62.

Savernæ rebuilt and fortified, 326.

Saxon, first south kingdom 18, & seq. Second, 22. Third, west, 28, & seq. Fourth, east, 30. Fifth, ib. Sixth, East Angles, 34. Seventh, Mercia, 35.

Saxons sail into Britain, 6, 7, & n. Their origin, and settlements, 8, & seq. Why called Saxons, 10. Their manners, &c. 11. Government, religion, &c. ib. Success in Britain, 14. Driven out by Vortimer, 17. Treachery to the Britons, 18. Victories over them, 19. Leave Italy, and cut off by the Suevi, 510.

Scandinavia, the antient seat of the Goths, 104. Described, ib. & seq. Whence so called, 105. By whom peopled, ib.

Scaldi, Scaldri, Gothic bards, why so called, 112.

Scholasticus driven out of Ravenna, 557. Recovers it, 559. Attempt against the pope frustrated, ib.

Sclavi invade the empire 498.

Scots fresh invasions, 3. Retire into Ireland, 5. Repulsed by the Saxons, 14.

Scythia submits to Attila, 62.

Scythian Hunns their bloody character and customs, 42. Government, &c. 43. The rest see under Hunns.

Semno taken prisoner, 194.

Servia taken by Basilus, 416.

Severus the senator, sent to treat with Genferic, 217. His amiable character, ib. Obtains the release of the Roman prisoners, 218.

Seville taken by the Vandals, 200. By Rechila, 226.

—— the church of, given to the Arians, 201.

Sicambri, who, 220, & n. Submit to Tiberius, ib. Why so soon extinct, 221. Some notions concerning them exploded, 235.

Sicily subdued by Genferic, 217. Yielded to Odoacer, ib. Subdued by Totila, 497. Recovered by the Romans, 499.

—— the thema of, 597, & n.

Sironulphus made duke of Salerno, 604.

Sido, king of the Suevi, assists Vespasian, 222.

Sidonius, a zealous orthodox bishop, 167. His character of king Euric, 169. Retreat from Lyons, 311.

Sigebert

I N D E X.

Sigebert invaded by the Alemans, 279.
Murdered by his son, 299.

Sigeric succeeds Ataulph in Gaul, 118.
Assassinated, ib. & 154, 315.

Sigg made king of Franconia, 111.

Sigismund made a partician, 306. Submissive letters to Anastasius, 314. Murders his son Sigeric, 315. Retirement and penance, ib. Defeated by Chlotildis's three sons, 316. H's death, ib.

Sigtunum, in Sweden, built by Woden, 112.

Silingians, who, 155, 199.

Simeon's success and ravages in Macedonia, 405. Defeated, ib. Treachery to Leo, ib. & seq. Peace with him, 406.
Falls out with Alexander, ib. Takes Adrianople, 407. Defeats the Romans, ib.
& seq. Cruelty to Leo, 409. Besieges Constantinople, ib. Makes peace with Romanus, 410. Defeated by the Chiobati, ib. His death, ib.

Singidunum taken by Attila, 60. Described, ib. & seq. n.

Sirmium taken by Attila, 60. Described,
62, n.

Sisebatus, } kings of the Visigoths in Sisenand, } Gaul, 118.

Sittones, who, and where, 105.

Skiold made king of Jutland, 112.

Sleswick, the antient seat of the Angles, 9.

Soily, Henry de, erects a new monument to king Arthur, 26, n.

Soissons made metropolis of the French by Clovis, 276.

Spain, abandoned by the Vandals, 197.
Its dreadful state occasion'd by it, ib. & seq.

Spanish bishops, their zeal for their flocks, 198.

Spoleto made capital of Umbria, 386.
Taken by Belisarius, 490.

——the dukes of, 543, 554. Extent of their territories, 595.

Squirri, Scirri, who, 52. Defeated by the Romans, ibid. Submit to At-tila, 62. Regain their liberty, 95. Settled in Mœsia, &c. 174. Defeated by the Ostrogoths, 175.

Stephen, king of Hungary, his success in Bulgaria, 424, 425.

——III. pope, his peace with the Lombards, 574. Invaded by Astulph, 576.
Goes to king Pepin, 577. Sirs him up against the Lombards, 578. Enriched by him, 581. Bribe'd off by Desiderius, 584.

Stilicho's success against the Hunns frustrated, 48. Marches against the Goths, 145.
Recalled, ib. Goes to succour Greece, 146. Partiality to the Goths, ib.

Stratzburgh, the battle of, 327.

Strompitza taken by Basilus, 418.

Stuf, the Saxon, arrives in Britain, 27.

Stylita, the hermit, foretels the ill success of the Vandals, 212.

Styrax defeated and sent prisoner, 98.

Suani defeat the Saxons, 510.

Suartas sent king of the Heruli, 345.

Suevi, where settled 8: Submit to At-tila, 62. Defeated in Spain, 161. Retire into Galicia, 162. Assist the Vandals, 196. Re-enter Spain, 197. Their territories there, 199. Various tribes, 219.
Whence called Suevi, ib. Their government, 220. Submit to Augustus, ib.
Part settle in Gaul, 221. Some in Frisia, 222. Defeat the Romans in Pannonia, 223. Defeated in Italy, ib. Divide Spain, 224. Defeated by Wallia, ib. Shut up in Biscay, 225. Defeated in Germany, ib. Ravage Galicia, ib. Submit to Theodoric, 229. War against each other, 230.
&c. Kill the Romans on Easter day, 231.
Turn christian, 232. Infected with Arianism, ib. Ravage Spain, 233. Settle in Galicia, ib.

Suevus, river, whence so named, 219.

Suinthila, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Suiones, who, and where sited, 105.

Sun worshipped, by the Saxons, 11, 12.

Sunieric sent against the Suevi, 163, 230. Ravages, 231.

Sunno, king of the Franks, 239. Ill success against the Romans, 255.

Suomarius sues Julian for peace, 328.

Suffex seized by the Saxons, 18, 20.

Sufurbulus made guardian of Bulgaria, 410.

Syagrius, governor of Soissons, 276. Defeated by Clovis, ib. Beheaded by him, ib.

Syebi, who, and where sited, 111.

Symmachus confirmed pope by Theodoric, 434. Put to death, by him, 438.

Syracuse plundered by the Franks, 246.
Taken by Totila, 497.

T.

TACITUS's success against the Goths, 130.

Tafia, and her daughters, turn nuns, 573, 574.

Taifalæ, who, 130. Inroads into the empire, 132.

Tanfana, worshipped by the Saxons, 12.

Tarentum retaken by Belisarius, 490.
By Totila, 496.

Tarraco taken by the Visigoths, 165.
Destroyed by the Franks, 245.

——taken by the Visigoths, 165. &
seq. Destroyed by the Franks, 245.

Tassilo,

I N D E X.

Taffilo, duke of Bavaria, revolts against the emperor, 102.

Tato and Caco murdered by Gregory, 527.

Tatus, king of the Lombards, his success against the Heruli, 379. Death, ib.

Teja, chosen king of the Ostrogoths, 119, 503. His character, ib. Cruelty to the Romans, 504. Goes to relieve Cumæ, ib. Defeated and slain, 505.

Teichomer, chosen king of Bulgaria, ib. Stoned to death, 422.

Telefis chosen king of Bulgaria, 398.

Thanet island given to the Saxons, 7.

Tharamis worshipped by the Saxons, 11.

Themata in Italy, what, 597, n.

Theodatus's treachery to Amalasunta, 448. War against Justinian, 454. Deposed 457. Murdered, ib.

Theodemir, king of the Ostrogoths, 118. Serves under Attila, 173. Defeats the Suevi, &c. 176. Invades Illyricum, 177. His death, ib.

Theodomir, king of the Franks, 239. The same with Pharamond, ib. & 242.

Theodorets's treachery to the Goths, 459, 471. Retires laden with spoil, ib. & 472.

Theodoric, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118. Subdues Italy, ib. Peace with Rome, 156. Repulsed before Narbonne, ib. Defeated by Ætius ib. Defeats Litorius, 157. Peace with Rome 159. His death, 160.

— II. his character, 159. Alliance, with Rome, ib. Success against the Suevi in Spain, 161. Ravages Lusitania, 162. Returns into Gaul, ib. His conquest there, ib. & seq. Murdered by his brother, 164.

— III. sent hostage to Leo, 175. Returns richly laden, 176. Defeats the Sarmatians, ib. Invades the empire, ib. Succeeds his father, 177. Cared and deserted by Zeno, ib. &c. Ravages Thrace, &c. 179. Defeated, 180. Goes to Constantinople, 181. Retires, 182. Marches into Italy, 183. Conquests and victories there, 185, &c. Betrayed, and shut up in Pavia, ib. Assisted by the Visigoths, 186. Reduces all Italy, ib. & seq. Treachery to Odoacer, 187. Proclaimed king of Italy, 188. Subdues Sicily, ib. His alliances, ib. & seq. Confirms the Roman laws, 189. And government, 190. His courts of judicature, ib. Protects the Alemans, 280. Letter to Clovis in their behalf, ib. Alliance with him, 285. Outwits him, 288. Interposes between him and Alaric, 289. Second letter to Clovis, 290. To Gundebald, 291. To the Heruli, ib. & seq.

Opposes the Franks, 295. Falls out with Sigismund, 315. Outwits the Franks, 316. His glorious reign 426. Acknowledged by the emperor, 427. Vast territories, ib. Moderation, 428. & seq. With respect to the Romans, 430. To religion, ib. & seq. Justice, 431. Temperance, 452. Generosity to his captive subjects, ib. & seq. War with Anastasius, 433. Peace, 434. Entry into Rome, ib. Munificence, there, 435. War with the Burgundi, 436. With Clovis, ib. Chosen guardian to Amalaric, 437. Restores him to his crown, ib. Cruelty to Boetius and Symmachus, 438. Grief for it, 440. Death and offspring, 441. Opposes Attila in Gaul, 442. His bravery at the battle of Chalons, 85. Death, ib. Funeral, 86. Success against the Hunns, 102.

— Basilicus's general treats with king Theodoric, 178. Forces Zeno to shameful articles, 179.

Theodorician laws, why so called, 171.

Theodorus, Calliopa, chosen exarch, 533.

Theodosius invaded and insulted by Attila, 60. Treachery to him, 69. To Constantius, 71. Receives the Goths into Thrace, 140. Blamed for it, ib. & seq.

Theodotus king of Italy, 119.

Theophylact cut off by the Bulgarians, 418.

Thervingi. See Visigoths, 471, 142.

Thessalonica, taken by the Bulgarians, 414.

Thessaly ravaged by the Goths, 127.

Theudelinda takes Agilulf for her husband, 517. Converts him, 518.

Theudis, king of the Goths in Gaul, 118.

Theudiselus, king of the Goths in Gaul, ib.

Theutat, worshipped by the Saxons, 11.

Tholosan temple and treasure described, 455. Taken by the Visigoths, 153.

Thor, worshipped by the Saxons, 11.

Thorismond's bravery at Chalons, 84. Narrow escape, 85. Proclaimed king, 86. Returns to his kingdom, ib. & 158. Defeats Attila, 92. Succeeds Theodoric in Gaul, 118, 158. Wars with Rome, ib. Murdered 159. King of the Ostrogoths, his short reign and death, 173.

Thrace wasted by Attila, 68.

Thrasamond, king of the Vandals in Afric, 192.

Thule, the peninsula of, where, 341.

Thuringians oft confounded with the Tongrians, 274, n. Where seated, 276.

Tiberius an impostor proclaimed emperor, 567.

Tibur put to death by Attila, 484.

Todasius, chosen king of the Heruli, 344.

Tongres

I N D E X.

Tongres taken by Attila, 77.
 Tongrians conquered by Clovis, 276, 277.
 Totila chosen king of Italy, 119, 479.
 Defeats the Romans, 481. His other conquests, 482. His letter to the senate despised, 484. Pursues his conquests ib. & seq. Enters Rome, 487. Stern speech to the senate, 488. Carries them prisoners, 489. Second attempt against Rome, abortive 490. Takes it afresh, 494. Repairs it, and the senate 495. Conquests in Sicily, 496. Reduces it, 497. Plunders Greece, 498, & seq. Offers to the emperor rejected, 499. Subdues Sardinia, and Corsica, ib. Marches against the Romans, 500. Defeated and killed, 501, 502. His character, ib. & seq.
 Toulouse, metropolis of the Visigoths, 155. The rest see sub Tholose.
 Tournay, taken by Clodio, 263.
 Tours, Greg. de, his history defective, 288.
 Transilvania, part of antient Dacia, 367.
 Treves taken by Attila, 77. Destroyed by the Franks, 257.
 Tribelin assists Anastasius, 397.
 Tribigil raises new feuds in the east, 148. His death, 149.
 Troyes, forsaken, 88. Burnt by the Goths, 123.
 Tufa's double treachery, 185.
 Tuisco, worshipped by the Saxons, 11, 12.
 Tulga king of the Visigoths, 118.
 Tuscany recovered by the Ostrogoths, 482.

V.

VALACHIA, part of ancient Dacia, 367.
 Valemir, king, a great favourite of Attila 62, 76. Serves under him, 173. Defeats the Hunns, 96, 174. Slain by the Sauiri, 176.
 Valens's success against the Goths, 138. Peace with them ib.
 Valentine I. marches against the Quadi, 352. His sudden death, 353.
 Valentinian III. embassy to Attila, 73. Over-reached by him, 75. Preparations against Genseric, 205. Peace with him, 207.
 Valentinian's success against the Alemans, 331.
 Valerianus killed before Rome, 463.
 Valhall among the Saxons, what, 42.
 Vandals defeated by the Goths, 131. Driven out of Audalusia, 155, & seq. Their origin, 191. Why so called, ib. Character, religion, &c. 192. Alliances and conquests, 193. Repulsed by Aurelius, ib. By Aurelian, ib. Seize on Gaul, 194. Defeated by Probus ib. & seq. Settled in Cambridgeshire, 195. Others in Thrace, ib.
 Vol. XIX.

Revolt and defeated, ib. Invade Gaul, 196. Horrid ravages, ib. Defeated by Constantine, 197. Enter Spain, ib. Divide it with the Alans and Suevi, 199, & seq. Humbled by Wallia, 200. Fresh ravages, ib. In Afric, ib. Refuse to return into Spain, 203. Repulsed before Hippo, 204. Beat the Romans, ib. Defeated in Campania, 209. Vain attempt on Alexandria, 212. Settle in Afric, 217, & seq. Vandalusia, Andalusia, whence so named, 199.
 Vandelsburgh, in Cambridgeshire, whence so named, 195.
 Vangio and Sido reign over the Suevi, 222.
 Vannius made king of the Suevi, 222. Banished, ib.
 We, one of the sons of Woden, 111.
 Wegdegg made king of E. Saxony, 111.
 Velir, one of the sons of Woden, 111.
 Venedi subdued by Hermanaric, 139.
 Venedic bay, whence so called, 105.
 Venedotia, the antient name of South Wales, 37.
 Venetians, their low beginning, 90, & n. Territories, trade, &c. 594.
 Venice founded, 90. Taken by the Franks, 494.
 Verona, the Romans shameful attempt against, 479. Taken by the Hunns, 90. By the French, 589.
 Uffa founds the seventh Saxon kingdom, 34. His ditch, 36.
 Vectobales, who, 363.
 Vidimir, king of the Ostrogoths, under Attila, 173. Settled in Pannonia, 174. Invades the empire, 176. His death, ib.
 Vienne yielded to the Burgundi, 310.
 Vigilius obtains a peace from Attila, 67. Ordered to murder him, 69. Forgiven by him, 70.
 Viminacium taken by the Hunns, 60.
 Viomald procures Childeric's liberty, 268, 269. And restoration, 270.
 Visigoths permitted to settle in Thrace, 47. Invade Italy, 117, 118. Found a kingdom in Gaul, ib. Where seated ib. Settled in Thrace, 142. Serve under Theodosius, 144. Wars with the Romans, 153. In Spain, 155. Return to Gaul, 162. Defeated by the Romans, 163. Conquests in Gaul, 166, & seq. Profess Arianism, 167. The end of their kingdom in Gaul, 173.
 Visumar defeated by the Goths, 131.
 Vitheric abandons his country to the Hunns, 46, 139. Retires into Podolia, 173.
 Vithicabius murdered, 313.
 Withmir, king of the Ostrogoths, 139. Slain by the Hunns, 173.

I N D E X.

Vitiges, king of Italy, 119. His election, 457. Betrayed by Matafuenta, ib. & seq. Wars with the Romans, 459. Marches against Belisarius, 460. Repulsed by him, 461. Ill success before Rome, 464. Repulsed before Rimini, 467. Embassy to Cosrhoes, 470. Besieged in Ravenna 473, &c. Offers of peace rejected, 474. Carried off prisoner, 476. His death, ib.

Vitus defeated by the Suevi, 226.

Uldin, king of the Hunns, 44. Assists the Romans, 51. Defeats and kills Gaias, 52. Invades the Romans, ib. Defeated, ib.

Ulitheus defeated and killed, 465.

Ulprana taken by Theodoric, 177.

Umbria, made a duchy by Alboinus, 386.

Unulf's fidelity to Partharit, 538.

Vortigern consents to invite the Saxons, 6, 7. Heads them against the Picts and Scots, 14. Deposed by his Subjects, 16. Taken prisoner by the Saxons, 18. Retirement and death, ib.

Vortimer's bravery and success against the Saxons, 16. Death and last command, 17. Where buried, ib.

Vortipora's wicked reign, 32.

Uria sent against Belisarius, 470. Against Thomas, 474. Refuses the Gothic crown, 477. Murdered by Idebald, ib.

Uranus defeats the Bulgarians, 415.

Urbinum and Urbiventum taken by Belisarius, 468.

Ufdrilas slain by the Ostrogoths, 500.

Ustirigothus, refuged among the Lombards, 339.

Uther, whether the same with Nazeleod, 23.

Uturgurian Hunns, whence so called, 41. where sited, ib. Fall foul on the Cuturgurians, 99, 100.

Vulger heads the Bulgarians into Mæsia, 393.

W.

WACHO, his reign, wives, &c 379. Walamir, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Wales, whence so called, 36. Its six regions, ib. & seq. Dismembered of some of its provinces, ib. & 37.

Walia, king of the Visigoths, 118. Succeeds Sigeric, 154. Peace with the Romans, ib. Wars with the Vandals in Spain, ib. & 155, & 200. Settles in Aquitain, 155. His death, ib.

Walterius, king of the Lombards, 379.

Wamba, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Wandalar, king of the Ostrogoths, 118, 173.

Warnecaut, duke, put to death, 520.

Warnefrid defeated and killed, 544.

Warni, who, 161.

Wanidike, the battle of, 35.

Welcar made duke of Friuli, 544.

Westphalia inhabited by the Saxons, 8.

Westrogoths, Visigoths, whence so called, 107. Where seated, 117.

White Hunns. See Nephthalites, 41.

Wideinir, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Wight, isle of, inhabited by the Jutes, 10. Put to the sword by Cerdick, 29. Given to his Nephew, ib.

Winitar, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Wiomand's fidelity to Childeric, 76, 77.

Wisimar, king, defeated and killed, 363.

Witgar the Saxon's arrival in Britain, 27.

Witizia, king of the Visigoths, 118.

Witteric, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, 118.

Woden, king of the Goths, & seq. His reign and conquests, 110, 111. Settles and dies in Sweden, 112. His character, acts, ib. & seq. Worshipped by the Saxons, 11, 12.

Wulphilas, the apostle of the Goths, 134, 2. His Gothic character, 110, 113.

X

XAMOLXIS's reign in Thrace, &c. 107. Who he was, 367.

Xiphias Niceph. saves Basilus from the Bulgarians, 417.

Z

ZACHARY, pope's embassy to Luitprand 570. Influence over him, ib. Over Rachis, 572. Death, 574.

Zamaragdus's success against the Lombards, 511.

Zamarga defeated by the Romans, 100. By Zandilichus, 101.

Zangrui, duke of Verona, put to death, 520.

Zantichus's peace with the Romans, 357.

Zantzaz removes the mart to Thessalonica, 404, 405.

Zealand inhabited by the Saxons, 8, 9.

Zeno's treachery to Constantius, 71. To Theodoric, 178. Rejects his offers, 180. Bestows great honours upon him, 181. Treaty with Genferic, 217.

—A priest, his zeal for Cunipert, 547.

Zisais, made king of Sarmatia, 364.

Zoe sends a vast army against the Men. Bulgarians, 407.

Zotto, first duke of Benevento, 517. His death, ib.

F I N I S.

AN UNIVERSAL HISTORY,

FROM THE Earliest Account of Time to the Present.

COMPILED FROM

ORIGINAL AUTHORS;

And ILLUSTRATED with

MAPS, CUTS, NOTES, Chronological
And other TABLES.

VOL. XX.

Ἱστορίας ἀρχαίας ἐξέρχεσθαι μὴ κατάνομι, ἐν αὐταῖς γὰρ ἐυρήσεις ἀκόπως, ἅπερ ἄλλοι συνήξαν ἐγνόπως. Basil. Imp. ad Leon. fil.

DUBLIN:

Printed for R. OWEN, S. HYDE, G. RISK, J. LEATHLEY, G.
and A. EWING, W. SMITH, J. SMITH, P. CRAMPTON, G.
FAULKNER, A. BRADLEY, T. MOORE, E. EXSHAW, C.
WYNNE, C. CONNOR, O. NELSON, P. WILSON, W. POWELL,
I. KELLY, T. BUTLER, and W. BRIEN, Booksellers.

MDCCLXV.

I. 9337

Summer 1870
C. H. 170

To the LEARNED MEMBERS of the Two CELEBRATED UNIVERSITIES of ENGLAND.

Reverend and Learned Gentlemen,

THE great helps and encouragement, which the authors of this work have received from your Two Learned Bodies, not only exact this public testimony of our gratitude, but have made us long since look upon ourselves as accountable, in no small measure, to You, for every deviation we have found reason to make from our original plan; especially as the greater part of our number have had, and some of us do still enjoy, the happiness of being members of one or other of your colleges.

The late learned Mr. Sale, the first compiler of this grand work, was so fully satisfied, that it was capable of considerable improvements, that he offered the first plan, rather as a sketch or specimen, than a complete system of what was intended; and accordingly closes it with a hint, that the undertakers were, even then, sensible they should find cause both to make additions to, and to vary from, the method of it, in the course of this history: And that such addition and variation might the more effectually conduce towards the perfecting of the whole, as far as a work of this nature, and hitherto unattempted by any nation, could be brought to such perfection, care was taken, in the proposals prefixed to every number of the first and subsequent volumes, to invite such of the Learned, both at home and abroad, who wished to see so considerable and extensive a work well executed, and could either furnish us with any useful hints, towards the improvement of the plan or history, or could favour us with any observations, which might explain a doubt, clear up a difficulty, discover an error, or give a new light to any point of history, chronology, geography, &c. that they would be pleased to communicate them to us, with a promise, that they should be thankfully acknowledged, and either complied with, or reasons assigned, why they were not.

DEDICATION.

This we quickly found to have the desired effect, and many learned men, not only from your Two Illustrious Universities, and other parts of South and North-Britain, but likewise from other parts of Europe, even so far as from Sweden and Norway, favoured us with their correspondence, and furnished us with many useful hints and remarks, and even curious materials which have been inserted in this work, and well approved by the Learned of our acquaintance, to say nothing of some others, which will more properly belong to the Modern Part of this history. We were more particularly obliged, for several very curious remarks, to those gentlemen, who undertook the translation of this work into foreign languages, especially the learned translator of it into Dutch, who was pleased not only to send us over his version, as it came out in Holland, but likewise to communicate to us his reasons, whenever he found any, to differ from us in any of those remote and abstruse points, concerning which nothing can be offered, at best, but probable conjectures, and wherein, consequently, every author has an undoubted right to declare, and defend, his own. And as it plainly appears to us, that these gentlemen had not been behind-hand with us in calling in the best helps, and consulting the ablest judges of their nation and acquaintance; so not to have paid a due regard to their judgment, in points of that arduous and intricate nature, would have been doing a manifest injury to them, and a much greater to the public.

But, notwithstanding all this, our eyes have chiefly been fixed on your Two Illustrious Bodies. It is to some of your learned members that we have had constant recourse, in all doubtful points; and it has been their decision that has finally determined us in every deviation from, or, rather, as we have good ground to hope, in every improvement we have made to our original plan; for, whether they occurred to ourselves, in the course of this work, or were communicated to us by our correspondents, they never received our approbation, till they had previously obtained the sanction of some

DEDICATION.

Some of the most learned amongst You! And that we might the more effectually come at your real sentiments, we did not content ourselves with a bare epistolary intercourse, but deputed, upon all such material emergencies, some of our number to your Universities, to consult with such numbers of Both, as were known to be best versed in those points, in which we wanted advice, or could direct us to the most likely means to improve both the design and the work itself: And this was done sometimes by personal application to such of our learned friends and acquaintance, who, we were sure, would give us their opinion, without any reserve; but, in other cases, much oftener, by a third hand; that is, by the assistance of some persons of their acquaintance, who could more freely introduce the point in question occasionally, as it were, and without any other seeming view, than to know their private sentiments on the subject. And by this means it was, that many of them have been prevailed upon to open their minds more freely, especially where they differed from us; which their extreme modesty, the inseparable companion of true learning, might, in all probability, have induced them to conceal, had they been applied to in any other way. Hence it will be allowed, that we took the most effectual steps to enable ourselves to carry on this arduous and useful work, in such a manner, as to intitle it, as we may presume to say, to the kind acceptance it hath met with from your Two Illustrious and Venerable Bodies: And, as a natural consequence of that, from the public. And the obligations we are under on this head to several of the Learned Members of those bodies, will, we hope, be deemed a sufficient apology for addressing this concluding Volume of the Antient History to the Members of Both Universities in general, as well as for every thing that, in the execution of the work, shall be found to deviate from our original plan.

However, for our further justification to the rest of our readers and encouragers, who are unapprised of our frequent applications to You, as well as to remove even the shadow of a suspicion, that this address was calculated to insnare them into an implicate belief of, and acquiescence to, what we have ventured to affirm in it, we shall for their fuller satisfaction, acquaint them in the Preface here subjoined, not only with the most material alterations we have made to our plan, but with our reasons for them, and the visible advantages the public will receive from them ; and we doubt not but they will convince every unprejudiced reader, that we have, in every such deviation, studied the ease and benefit of the student and purchaser, much more than our own interest.

DEDICATION.

But, not to anticipate what more properly belongs to the pages following, we beg leave to instance to You, our Reverend and Learned Patrons, only one of those alterations, indeed a very considerable and advantageous one to the Purchasers, which was first thought of and agreed upon at Oxford, and has been since honoured with an universal approbation ; we mean, the dividing the whole work into two distinct classes or bodies ; the one to contain all that is properly called Antient History, and which is now happily concluded in these Twenty Volumes ; the other, all that belongs to the Modern part, which is now to follow ; that so each part might be had separately, or, when completed, together, as the genius and inclination, the course of study, or circumstances of every purchaser, should determine him.

All that we shall presume further to add to this our thankful acknowledgment for all Your past favours, shall be only our constant and hearty prayers for increase of the honour, welfare, and prosperity, of your Two Illustrious Bodies, and to declare our sense of the singular happiness which this address affords us, of subscribing ourselves,

Reverend and Learned Sirs,

Your most obliged, most dutiful and Humble Servants,

The Authors

THE PREFACE.

HAVING been induced to deviate, in several particulars, from our Original Plan, we think ourselves obliged, in the Preface to a Volume which concludes one great period of our labours, to lay before the public our reason for so doing.

These deviations, then, may be reduced to the three following heads.

The First, That we have swelled the book to a greater bulk than we had promised in our Proposals.

The Second, that we have taken a much longer time to finish it than we had engaged for.

The Third, relates to that division of the work into two distinct bodies; the one, of the Antient History, the other of the Modern; which is mentioned in the preceding Dedication.

As to the First article, relating to the increased bulk of the work, it is necessary to observe, That the fourth number of our First Volume was scarce published, when we received complaints from several of our correspondents, that we had handled the history of the Egyptians, Syrians, Canaanites, and other antient nations, in so concise a manner, as could by no means answer the principal end of the work, which, according to our Proposals, was, to save our readers all that vast expence of time and books, which they must otherwise be at, to obtain a competent knowledge of the histories of the respective nations, by furnishing them with a Complete Body of History, ready compiled to their hands; and, at the same time, to let in upon the abstruser parts, all the light that could be gained from antient and modern authors; as well as from our own study, and, even, conjectures, where the matter to be treated of, admitted not of absolute certainty.

P R E F A C E .

These considerations, and others of equal force, determined us to be more full and explicit for the future, upon every curious and material point ; and even, where requisite, to write short dissertations upon them ; and since our purchasers would be gainers by these additions, if they were pertinent and instructive, to be less solicitous, than we had been, about the bulk of the work ; which must, of necessity by ; this means be greatly increased.

Accordingly, we found ourselves obliged to enter upon a more diffuse and copious display of historical facts, extracted from a much larger number of authors, than we had before selected, and, as our subjects called for it, to take into our scheme the principal masters of Chronology, Geography, Natural History, Politicks, Philology, &c. And by these means we presume to say, we have given our readers a clearer and more extensive view, not only of past ages, and antient nations ; but of their various religions, laws, trade, navigation, climates, genius, learning, manufactures and produce ; of their wars and conquests, rises, and falls ; and, in a word, of every thing that is diverting, useful, and instructive in the history of each country ; intermingling occasionally, besides, proper explanations of every dark and intricate point ; reconciling original authors, and removing every difficulty, as far as the nature of the subject, and our own abilities would admit.

Nor may it be amiss, in this place, to observe, that if we had principally consulted our own interest, as Authors, or that of the Proprietors, we must have been naturally led to adhere to our original design. For as, on the one hand, the more expensive a work of so large a nature, is made, the fewer purchasers it will have ; so on the other, the succinctness we had proposed to observe, would have afforded us a very plausible excuse (had we been inclined to make use of it) for passing over slightly, or in silence, many things which were difficult to come at ; whereas a more enlarged and capacious plan, necessarily obliged us to take notice of every thing that we imagined our readers had reason to expect either from our care or industry.

These considerations will, we presume, sufficiently apologize for the length we have been obliged to run into : and, at the same time, necessarily account for the Second deviation from our Proposals ; which is, The delay of the work : For the reader cannot but suppose, that that the above-mentioned alteration in our scheme, must have laid us under a necessity of entering upon new studies and researches, and of procuring great numbers of the scarcest books ; some of which were not to be had in England ; so that no small time was required after we had, with the greatest difficulty, obtained them, to digest them ; and when we had done this, we were obliged to new-model the copy we had before, in a manner, ready for the press.

P R E F A C E.

But hence, that is to say, from this enlargement of our plan, resulted a still greater cause of delay than the former ; for, hereupon several of our society declined the work ; some plainly acknowledging, that it was become too difficult a task for them to perform, while others, as freely declared, that it would be too laborious an undertaking ; and that it was unlikely to succeed in such a manner as to afford them a suitable encouragement for the time and pains which this new method made absolutely necessary to be taken. This extremely surprized, and even disconcerted, the remaining few, who began then to apprehend, that the design must be wholly laid aside. But the proprietors having found the work, so far as it was published, received with an uncommon approbation, and their learned encouragers, as well abroad as in Britain, extremely desirous to have it prosecuted, resolved, as they had been already at a very great charge in providing books and entering into Correspondencies, &c. to spare no expence to obviate this new and very discouraging difficulty ; by engaging, as opportunity should offer, new assistances ; in which they happily succeeded. But nevertheless, like mariners in a storm, who were obliged to part with some valuables, in order to save the rest of the cargo, they found themselves under a necessity to give up that part of our Proposals, which engaged us to publish twenty sheets monthly : For after proper hands were procured, which was not easily or soon effected, it must be supposed, that it took up some considerable time, notwithstanding the extraordinary qualifications of the new engaged gentlemen, to acquaint themselves with what had been already done ; with the method to be proceeded in ; with the authors we had selected for our purpose ; and with the system of history, chronology, &c. which, upon the maturest deliberation, and with advice of our learned friends, we have resolved to follow throughout the work.

P R E F A C E.

To these difficulties, (to which may be added, the much-to-be-regretted death of a valuable assistant) which would have been unsurmountable to authors and proprietors less determined to prosecute so useful, and, we will venture to say, so publick-spirited an Undertaking, was it owing, that the publication of the First-Volume, more particularly, was so long delayed, that we began ourselves to apprehend, that the Work would not meet with an encouragement answerable to our assiduity and pains. But when our readers and correspondents came to see what they were likely to gain by this delay, it procured from them such a kind and generous reception to our labours that it inspired the proprietors with hopes, that altho' the first edition might not compensate them, nor even repay them the interest of the money they should be obliged to expend in the prosecution of a Work, that must necessarily take some years to complete ; yet that the probability of its becoming a Standard Work to Posterity, and of a future impression, (the present not being a large one) and that their families, if not themselves, might reap the benefit of their risques and expence : This therefore induced them to spare no pains nor charge to perfect it ; and this ardor being seconded by all the gentlemen employed, we have been enabled, notwithstanding such unavoidable and unforeseen hindrances, as have been occasioned by the sickness, the death, and sometimes the necessary absence of some of our society, to publish every volume more regularly since ; and at length to complete this body of Antient Universal History, in such a full and extensive manner, that the like never had been attempted in our nation, or any other.

But before we obtained this desirable end, and even at the time we determined upon the alteration we have mentioned ; to wit, the enlargement of our plan ; another difficulty, and that no small one, occurred, which concerned principally the interest and advantage of our kind Encouragers : For we could not but foresee, that by this more diffuse manner of treating our subjects, we must necessarily swell the Work to a price as well as to a bulk, that might not be suitable to the convenience of every one that might be desirous of being possessed of so valuable a repository of antient and modern learning. And this brings us to account for

The third material deviation from our original plan.

To be the better enabled to obviate this difficulty, some of our society undertook personally to consult such of their learned

P R E F A C E.

learned friends at Oxford, on whose judgment they had the greatest reason to rely. The result, after the maturest deliberation, was, as we hinted in the Dedication, to divide the Work into two distinct bodies; the one, to contain the antient, the other the Modern History; so as that each might be purchased separately, as the genius or circumstances of our encouragers should determine them. And as the preparation necessary for the Modern Part, would take up some time, that intervenient space, it was observed to us, might possibly make the purchase of the Modern Part, when it came to be published, more convenient to such as chose to have both:—While the Antient History would deserve, nevertheless, to be considered as a perfect Work of itself.

To what we have mentioned on this head, we shall observe that this deviation from our original plan, will render the study, as well as the purchase, easier to many gentlemen, who are desirous to acquire knowledge in the history of the Universe, than if we had adhered to our proposed method; as it will enable them to distinguish with greater certainty and judgment between what properly belongs to the Antient, and what to the Modern. For such a distinction is manifestly necessary to be made between these antient kingdoms and nations, that have long since ceased to be such; for instance, the antient Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Grecians, &c. and those that continue still in being, under the same or other denominations; as also, from those that remain nearly in the same condition which they have been in from the remotest times; such as the Muscovites, the Tatars, vulgarly called Tartars, the Chinese, and many other eastern and northern nations.

And here it is proper to observe, that upon the prosecution of this part of our new plan, another distinction appeared to us absolutely necessary to be made; and that was, between the antient state of these kingdoms and nations that still subsist, and that period of time in which they were brought to the form of government they now enjoy, or live under; as it is proper, for the better elucidation of the history of those nations, to begin their modern at that epocha. Thus, for instance, the antient nation of the Arabs, with respect to its religious concerns, differs as much from itself before and since the time of Mohammed, as any two nations can well do, from one another. Their Antient History, therefore, could could not reach lower than that epoch ; and it is our design, for the same reason, to begin our Modern, at the birth of that noted Legislator. The like may be said with respect to the history of Spain, Gaul, Germany, Italy, and several other countries ; in which had we followed our first Plan, the Antient and Modern History would have been so blended and confounded, as to have rendered both much more unintelligible to our readers, than now they will be found to be.

P R E F A C E.

But we ought not to omit mentioning, that while we were endeavouring to please such of our judicious readers, as admonished us against being too succinct and concise, we had the misfortune to be blamed by some few others, for having been too copious and diffuse in some parts of the Work, particularly in the Roman History. But here, not to remind those gentlemen, that the History of the Constantinopolitan Empire, is properly includable, and therefore included, in that of the Roman ; we desire, that it may be considered, that the Roman History is by far the most considerable of any, both as to the extent and copiousness, as well as the usefulness of its matter, and that by reason of its unbounded conquests, the affairs of almost every nation in the then known world, must be, more or less, included in it ; and the more, because in duration of time it exceeded any of the other three Universal Monarchies, as they were called. And as there was a necessity, that the most material transactions between the Romans, and the nations they subjugated, should be inserted either in the history of the one or the other, we judged it more eligible, to give the preference to the conquering nation ; and in our account of the others, to refer for the principal transactions between both, to that of the Romans ; than to take the contrary method : And by this means the histories of the other nations are treated with a brevity which that of the Romans would less allow of ; references being constantly made in them to the Roman History ; as will be found in our accounts of the antient Spaniards, Gauls, Germans, &c. By this method, prolix as the one part must necessarily seem, compared with some of the others, the bulk of the Work in general is very little augmented.

But we had still a more cogent motive to treat the Roman History thus extensively : The reader may remember, that it had been written very lately abroad in other languages, and by several hands ; but tho' by far more diffusive than

P R E F A C E.

than ours, yet in so partial and unsatisfactory a manner, that it would have been next to impossible to have set the most important and instructive facts related in their true light, without descending into all those particulars, which serve as a clue to unravel the truth and springs of the principal ones. And this we have frequently hinted at in several parts of that history, by way of apology, and to prevent our readers being misled into a notion, that we were swelling the Work to an unnecessary bulk, for selfish considerations.

When we first entered upon this great Work, we resolved to make it a rule with us, to avoid, as much as possible, all Religious disputes, and to leave all controverted points of that nature to Ecclesiastic writers: But we had scarcely passed over the threshold, (that is to say, the Cosmogony) before we found reason to dispense, occasionally, with this our Resolution.

The account which Moses gives us of the Creation, the Flood, the Dispersion of nations, the Foundation of antient kingdoms, &c. is so succinct, and, in many cases, so dark, intricate, and controverted, that our Readers would have reaped but little benefit from the best light we could have given them, unless we had descended to particulars, by explaining some, proving others, and obviating or answering such objections, as had been, or might be, made to that and the rest of the sacred historians; as well as inserting the various notions and systems which the learned, whether Christians, Jews, or Gentiles, had built either upon, or against, them. And we were soon convinced, by the universal approbation that first Volume met with, as well as by the letters which we received from our correspondents, that this method, tho' difficult, and likely to swell the first Volume beyond our intention, ought to be strictly followed where-ever our materials were taken from the inspired Penmen.

By this means, we may safely affirm, that we have rendered much easier than ever, the study of those remote histories; and, at the same time, by the explication we have given to obscure and difficult places, in the Sacred Books, have cleared up many abstruse Points that had been the subject of Controversy, occasionally answering the Objections of our modern, as well as the antient, Sceptics; and, we hope, have set many important Facts, and intricate subjects, in such an impartial light, as may both convince and instruct; and upon the whole, save our readers

P R E F A C E.

readers the trouble of consulting an endless number of Commentators, which would be more likely to confound than satisfy, the minds of the younger students especially.

Whatever therefore, may be objected to this new method, by persons who had much rather be left at liberty to cavil at their pleasure with the sacred writers, the more serious and unprejudiced part have been very well pleased to see those important points so fairly stated and cleared.

This likewise has necessarily increased the bulk of our Work ; particularly in our Jewish History : But nevertheless, instead of blaming us, several eminent writers have done us the honour of a public approbation, by quoting us, in some of their learned works since published, and many more have favoured us with theirs in their epistolary correspondence.

We must beg leave to add, that we should have been justly chargeable with the most flagrant, not to say unpardonable neglect, if, whilst we endeavoured, as becomes all impartial historians, to vindicate the character of a ZOROASTER, a CONFUCIUS, a SOLON, a LYCURGUS, or any other heathen philosopher or lawgiver ; we had left those of our truly INSPIRED WRITERS, and more especially that of our DIVINE MASTER, unrescued from the misrepresentation and obloquies of an unbelieving age. Such an omission must have been interpreted either as a total giving up of the cause of Revelation, or, at least, of all hopes of convincing our modern unbelievers of the truth of it, by any arguments. Whereas we ought, in candor and charity, to believe, that the most sober and thinking part of them are willing and ready to peruse and weigh every thing that can be said against, as well as for, their unbelief. However that be, the success which this work has met with, hath happily convinced us, that our theological, critical, and even philosophical excursions, have been disrelished but by very few, in comparison of those who have given them their approbation and encouragement.

The Chinese, the Eastern Tartars, the Japanese, the Siamese, and other potent Nations of the East-Indies, were, some of them, so wholly unknown, and the rest so imperfectly known to antient authors, that we have thought proper to refer our accounts of those people (as well as, still more properly, of the kingdoms of America, or the New World) intirely to the intended Modern Part of our Work.

But

P R E F A C E.

But nevertheless, that we may not be thought to omit any thing material to our design, we propose to begin our Modern History of those East Indian empires, kingdoms and states, with a brief recapitulation of all that is to be met with in antient writers concerning them.

Upon the whole, we presume to congratulate our kind encouragers, as well as our selves, that we have so happily gone through and completed the most abstruse and laborious part of our undertaking: An undertaking, the difficulties whereof the reader will be able to form some idea of, when he casts his eye on the subsequent list of authors which we have consulted, for the first Volume only, (for it would have been too tedious and painful a task to have gone through the whole Seven Volumes in the same manner) and upon the ensuing collection of texts of scripture, which we have either new translated, or explained and defended, or both. We repeat our thankful acknowledgments to them, and to all our correspondents, for their patience with us, and favour to us; and hope, all the difficulties of a task so arduous considered, that our Work will appear worthy of both.

A LIST

A LIST of the Principal AUTHORS and Books quoted in the First Volume of this Work.

A.	Alpinus	Avienus
A Badie	Alstedius	Aufonius
Abdalrahman	Altinga	Azariah, R.
Abenezra	Ambrose	B.
Abraham, ben Levi	Ambrosiast	Bacon, Sir Fr.
——— Nicol.	Ammianus, Marcel.	Baker
Abravanel	Anastafius	Balbi
Abu'l, Faragus	Anaxagoras	Bambrige
Abu'l, Feda	Anaximander	Bamidbar, Rabbah
Abu'l, Shafi Khantz	Annianus	Barabbin
Abu, Moham. Must.	Anselm	Barcepha, R.
Abunazar	Antoninus, Marc.	Bardefan
Abydenus	Antonius, liberal.	Baronius
Achilles, Tatus	Apollodorus	Barreman
Acosta	Apollonius	Barthenora, R.
Abdamnana	Apuleius	Bartolocci
Ado	Aquila	Bafil
Ælian	Aquinas, Th.	Bafnage
Æschilus	Arabic Version	Bayle
Ætius	Arburthnot	Becchai, R.
Africanus	Aristobulus	Beckius
Agatharchides	Aristocles	Beda
Agathias	Aristotle	Bedford
Ahmed, Ebn Yusef	Armenius	Behmius
Ainsworth	Arnobius	Beker
Al'atyr	Arrian	Belarmin
Al'moftætraf	Arrias, Montan.	Bellonius
Al'foynti	Artapanus	Ben Gershon, R. Dav.
Al'tabari	Artemidorus	Bereshith, Rabbah
Al'termedi	Assemanus	Bernard
Albertus, Aques.	Athanasius	Bernardi, Edw.
Alex. ab Alexand.	Athenæus	Bernier
——— Halles	Athenagoras	Beroaldus
Alexandrian Chronicle	Atlas Sinenf.	Berosus
——— Septuagint	Auctuarium ad Dios-	Pseudo Berosus
Allin	coridem.	Berruyer
Allix	Augustin	Betram
Alphonfus king of Na.	Avicen	Beveridge, bp.
		Beverovicus

A LIST of the Principal Authors, &c.

Beverovicius	Caryand	Cumberland, bp.
Beyer	Caufaubon	Cunæus
Bion	Cassian	Cuper
Blount	Cassiodorus	Curtius, Quint.
Bochart	Castalio	Cyprian
Bodinus	Castro, de	Cyril
Bolduc	Celsus	D.
Bonfrere	Censorinus	Dacier
Boot. Anf. de	Chalcidius	Dale, Van
Borrichius	Chaldee Paraphr.	Damachus
Bossuet	Chalepta, R. ben Jos.	Damascen, Nic.
Boullage	Chardin, Sir John	Damiati
Brawn	Chatillon	Dandily
Brett	Chazelles	Danhaver
Breves, de	Chemnitius	De Dieu, Lud.
Brie	Chevinah, R.	Del Rio
Brochard	Chevreau	Democritus
Broughton	Childea, R.	Derham
Brown	Chitrcæus	Dicæarchus
Bruyn, le	Choisy	Diçtys, Cret.
Bucer	Chomer, R. Elias	Didymus
Budeius	Choronensis, Mos.	Diodorus Sicul.
Bugenhag	Chrysoftom	Diogenes Laert.
Bull, bp.	Cicero, M. T.	Diogenet
Bundy	Clarke, Dr. Sam.	Dionysius Perieg.
Bunting	Clavius	——Patr. Jacob.
Burgensis, Lud.	Cleitarchus	Dioscorides
Burnet	Clemens, Alex.	Dius
Burratius	Clerk, le	Dodwell
Burretini	Cluverius	Dorotheus
Buteon	Coccejus	Dositheus
Buxhornius	Codomanus, Laur.	Driedo
Buxtorf, { fen. jun. C.	Colvius	Drufius
Cajetanus	Columba	Dupin
Calmet	Comestor	Dupleffis
Calvesius	Compend. Relig. Mo- ammed	Dutch embassy
Calvin	Compte, Fath. le	E.
Cantacufenus	Conrigius	Ebn, Abd. al Hokhm.
Capzovius	Coreal	Ebn, Al amyd
Cardan	Cosmas	Ebn, Patric.
Cardinalis, Hug.	Couplet	Ebn, Shohnah
Carlow	Cozi, R. Mos.	Ebwicus
Carofalo	Cozri, lib.	Ecchellenfis
Carrion	Cratylus	Edwards
Cartesius	Cross, Alex.	Edeffen
Cartwright	Ctesias	Eichstad
	Cudworth	Eliakim, R.
		Eliezer, R.

A LIST of the Principal Authors, &c.

Eldred	Galen	Heidegger
Elle, Hadvarim rab.	Gaon, R.	Helladius
Elleshemoth, rab.	Ganz, R. David	Hellanicus
Elmacin	Gassendi	Helmont, Van
Empedocles	Gastrel, bp.	Helvicus
Enoch, lib. apocr.	Gaulmin	Herbelot, de
Ephesius	Gazæus	Herbert
Ephodeus	Gedaliah, R.	Herman
Ephrem, Syr.	Gellius, Aul.	Hermias
Epiphanius	Gemarra Hieros.	Hermippus
———Pseudo	———Babyl.	Herocles
Eraſtothenes	Gerard	Herodian
Eſtrange, Sir Roger	Genebrard	Herodotus
Eucharus	Gefner	Herrera
Eudoxus	Gerundensis, R. Mos.	Hefiod
Eugubinus	Glycas	Hefiæus
Eupolemus	Goar, R.	Hefichius
Euripides	Golius	Hevelius
Eusebius	Gomarrus	Hierocles
———Pamphilus	Goodwin	Hilarius
Eustatius	Gordon	Hill, Aaron.
Eutropius	Gorion, Joseph' ben	Hillerus
Eutychius	Goropius Beccan	Hippocrates
Eutymius	Gouffet	Hirtius
F.	Grabe	Hiſcunius
Fabricius	Grand, le	Hobbs
Fagius	Greaves	Holſtein, Lut.
Falconeri	Gregorius Magn.	Homer
Ferus	———Nyſſen	Horace
Festus, Rufus	———Nubiens	Hornius
Feuillee	Mac Gregory	Hofſein
Figueria	Grew	Hofpin
Fitch	Grotius, Hug.	Hottinger
Flacceius	Gurtler	Howel
Fleury	Gyraldus	Hudson
Folard	H.	Huetius
Fontenelle	Hackluit	Hyde
Foffenbrona, Paul	Hahſon, R.	Hyginus
Frederic, Cæſar	Haitho	I.
Frefier	Halicarnaffus, Dio.	Jallalo', din
Froes, Lud.	Halley	Jamblichus
Fuller	Hammond	Ides
Funccius	Harduin	Jean dos Santos
G.	Harman	Jehudah, R.
Gabalıs, Count de	Haroph, R. Abr.	———Hakkodeſh
Gabriel Sionita	Hart, Vander	Jerom, St.
Galatinus	Hayntinus	Jerombalus
Gale	Hecataeus	Johan. Hierosol.
		Johnſon

A LIST of the Principal Authors, &c.

Johnson
 Jonathan, R.
 Jones
 Jornandes
 Josephus
 Jovinius
 Journal des Scavants Isidorus, Hispal.
 ——— Pelusiota
 Ister
 Judah, R. ha Levi
 Juchasin, lib.
 Julius Firmic.
 ——— Pollio Junius, Franc.
 Justin Martyr
 ——— ex Trogo
 Juvenal
 Izaak, R.
 K.
 Karo, R. Mof.
 Keil
 Kidder, bp.
 Kircher
 Kitab, Taffir
 Kohnd, Amyr.
 Kopping
 Koran, Al.
 L.
 Lactantius
 Lact, John de Lætus Pomponius
 Lambeccius
 Lamberg
 Lamy
 Lansberg
 Lapide, Cornel. a Launoy
 Leo, Judah
 ——— de Modena, R.
 Leon, Hebreu
 Letters V concerning Inspiration
 Lescalopier
 Lesley, Charles
 Levi, R.
 Levita, R. Elias
 ——— Abr. ben Dior

Leusden
 Lightfoot
 Lipenius
 Lippoman, R.
 Lipsius Justus Lisle, de Littleburry
 Livy, T.
 Lluydd
 Locke Longomontanus
 Lord
 Loubere, la Lucan
 Lucas
 Lucian
 Lucretius
 Ludolph Luther Lydiat, Th.
 Lyranus, Nic.
 M.
 Macrobius
 Mæstlinus, Mich.
 Maffæus
 Maimonides, R.
 Maldonat
 Malela
 Mallebranche Manasse, Constant.
 ——— ben Israel
 Manetho
 Manoch, R.
 Maricon
 Marcus Diacon.
 Marianna
 Marraccius
 Marroc, R. Sal.
 Marsham, Sir Rob.
 Martianay Martini Martyr, Pet.
 Masius
 Massochet, Pessachim
 Massorah
 Maundrel
 Mede, Jos.
 Medina, R. de

Megasthenes
 Megillath, Thahanith
 Meibonius
 Melancthon
 Mela
 Menage
 Menander
 Mendez
 Meral, al' Zeman
 Mercennus
 Mercer
 Mesner
 Methodius
 Metzger
 Meyer
 Micrelus
 Middrashim
 Mildendorp
 Minutius Fælix
 Mirandula, Pic. de Mirat-kainat Mitylenensis, Zach.
 Moebius
 Moham. Ebn. Jacob.
 Moncæus
 Monconis
 Monozah
 Montfaucon
 Mopsuet
 Morinus
 Morizon
 Mornay, Phil. de Moschus, Job.
 Moses Ægyptius ——— Cos.
 ——— Barcepha
 Munster
 Muyfius
 Muscato, R.
 Musculus
 N.
 Nachman, R.
 Nathan, R.
 Nepos, Cornel.
 Newberry
 Newton, Sir H.
 Nicen acta Concil.
 Nicetas

Nichols

A LIST of the Principal AUTHORS, &c.

Nichols	Philip, P.	Pythagoras
Nicholson	Philippe, de St.	Q.
Nieuhoff	Philippus Berg	Quadra, de la
Noldius	Philastrius Brix	Quandt
Nonnius	Philo Biblius	Quaresm
Nosen, R. Jason	————— Judæus	R.
Numenius	Philochoras	Raban, Maur.
O.	Philopon	Radzivil
Oakley, Sim.	Philosophic. Transact.	Ramazzin
Ocellus, Lucan	Philostratus	Raleigh, Sir Walt.
Odoardus	Philostorgus	Rascius
Olearius	Phocas	Rauwolf
Oleaster	Phornutius	Ray
Onkelos	Photius	Regnauld
Onuphrius	Pierius	Reinhold
Opeemerus	Pignorius	Reland
Origen	Pineda	Relation des Indes or.
Orosius	Piscator	Renaudot
Ortellius	Plato	Reuchlinus
Osthanes	Pliny	Reymer
Overald	Plot, Dr.	Reinford
Ovid	Plotinus	Rhodoginus, Cæl.
Outram	Plutarch	Ribera
P.	Pocock	Ricciolus, J. Bap.
Pachurst	Poiret	Rivinus
Pagninus	Pollion, Treb.	Rogers
Panætius	Polybius	Rohault
Panodorus	Polyænus	Rollin
Pantaleon	Polyhistor, Alex.	Romuald, St.
Paracelsus	Pontac, Arnold.	Roque, de la
Patricio, Fr.	Pool	Rubruquis
Patrick, bp.	Porphirius	Rufinus
Paul Burgens	Posidonius	Rufus
———de Middleburg	Postellus	Rupertus
Pausanias	Poulet	S.
Peletier	Præcepta Affirmat.	Saadias, R.
Pelican	and Negat.	Sacrobius
Pelling	Prateolus	Safoddin
Perdicas	Prideaux	Salden
Peritzol	Proclus	Salian
Perizon	Procopius	Salmasius
Perkins	Propag. of the Gospel	Salmeron
Petavius	Prosper	Samaritan Pentat.
Petit	Ptolemy	Sanches
Peucer	Puffendorff	Sanchoniatho
Peyrerius	Purchas.	Sanctius
Pezron	Pyrro	Sanders
Pfeiffer		Sandys

A LIST of the Principal Authors, &c.

Sanfon	Spencer.	Thoyth
Sarisbury	Spinosa	Thuanus
Saubert	Spondanus	Thucydides
Saurin	Stackhouse	Thymestes
Scaliger	Stanley	Tillotson
Scene, le	Stephanus, Byz.	Timæus
Schikard	Sternheimius	Toland
Scholiafts	Steuchus	Tornelius
Schotus, Gasp.	Stillingfleet	Tostatus
Schindler	Stobeus	Tournefort
Schroeder	Strabo	Tournemine
Schultens	Strada, della	Trallius
Schotanus	Struys	Travels of the Preachi
Scotus Marian.	Stunica, Diego de	Tremellius
Selden	Suetonius	Trithemius
Seder Olam	Suidas	Tudela, Benj. de
Seleucus	Sulpitius, Sever.	Turre Cremata
Seller	Syncellus	Turretinus
Semedo	Synod. Oecumenic.	Tyrius, Maxim.
Seneca	Syrian	——Guillelmus
Sepharadi, R. Abr.	T.	Tzetzes
Septuagint	Tabari	V.
Serrarius	Tacitus	Vagenschid
Sextus, Emp.	Talmud	Vajicra, rabbah
Shabtai, R.	——Hierosol.	Valerius Maximus
Shalmheleth, hakabal.	——Babyl:	——Flaccus
Shem, tobb R.	Tanhuma, R.	Valesius, Franc.
Sherira, R.	Targums	Valle, Petro de la
Shuckford	Tavernier	Vandal
Sibyl Erithrea	Tatius	Varenius
Sicard	Tarcensis	Varro
Sigonius	Temple, Sir Wil.	Vasmuth
Silius, Ital.	Tennison	Vatablus
Simeon, R.	Texira	Vega
——ben Paki	Temporarius	Vegetius
Simler	Ten Rhine	Velleius, Paterc.
Simmachus	Testam. XII. Patriar.	Velferius
Simon, Fath.	Tertullian	Victor, Hug. de St.
Simpson	Thales	Vignier
Smith	Thearidas	Villalpandus
Solinus	Themestius	Villamount
Solomon Jarchi	Themistocles	Villet
——ben Melech	Theodoret	Vincent
Solomonis Judicium	Theodotus	Virgil
Sozomen	Theophilaet	Vitringa
Spanheim	Theophrastes	Vitruvius
	Theopompus	Vives, Lud.
	Thevenot
	Thomafini

A LIST of the Principal Authors, &c.

Vossius { sen.	Wendelen	Xenophon
jun.	Whiston	Xiphilinus
Voyage, de Perse	Whitby	Y.
Usher, archbp.	Wikman	Ya'hya
Ufiel, ben R.	Wilkins, bp.	Yarchi
Ufuardus	Willibald, Sir Wil.	Z.
W.	Woodward	Zacchut, R.
Walton	Wolf	Zamachfari
Wansleb	Worstius	Zeno
Warren	Wooton	Zohar, lib.
Watts	X.	Zoroaster.
Webb	Xanthus
Wells

The constant Recourse we have had to the Sacred Books, in every Part of this WORK, would make it an endless Task to give here (as is usual in Works of that kind) a full List of the Texts quoted out of them ; that which is here annexed, is only designed to direct our Readers to the principal Passages that have been either explained, defended, commented upon, or differently translated by us, and to the Volumes and Pages they are to be found in.

GENESIS.

Ch.	Verse.	V.	Page.	Ch.	Verse.	V.	Page.
				9	20	i.	343 n.
				10	21		348
1	1	i.	146, & seq.	11	10		366, 367
	2, & seq.		160, & seq.	11	26, & seq.	ii.	394, & n.
	16		162	15	12		402
	19	ib.		16	12, & seq.		405, n.
	31		163	17	1, & seq.		405, 406, n.
	26		165	18	Pass.		412, n.
2	7		166	19	Pass.		94, 95
	21	b.		20	16		413, n.
3	1, & seq.		196 & iv. 187	21	9		414, n.
4	2, & seq.		224, 225	22	2, & seq.		416, n.
	21, & seq.		234	23	2, & seq.		418, 419,
5	22, & seq.		236 & seq.				420, n.
6	2, & seq.		180, 244	24	3, & seq.		421, 422 n.
7	4, & seq.		278, 304
8	Pass.		306

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
25	1, & seq.	ii. 423, 424, 425 n.
	29, & seq.	144, 145 n.
27	27, & seq.	147 n.
27	1, & seq.	147 n.
	33	435, 436 n.
	40, ad fin.	436, 437 n.
30	14	440, n.
31	19	443, n.
32	28	448, n.
33	4	450, n.
	17, 18.	450, 451, n.
36		439, n.
37	3	456, n.
38	2, & seq.	459, n. & seq.
	24	461, 462, n.
40	13	463, n.
41	45	465, 466, n.
42	Pass.	468, n. & seq. n.
43	11, & seq.	470, n.
46	8, & seq.	476, n. & seq.
47	ult.	481, n.
48	ult.	483, n.
49	3	485, n.
	5 & 6	485, n.
	10, 11	486, n. & seq. n.
	13, 14	488, 489, n.
	17	489, n.
	19, 20	490, 491, n.
	21	491, n.
	22, & seq.	492 n.
	27, ad fin.	494, n.
50	Pass.	495, n. & seq.

EXODUS.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	7, & seq.	ii. 509, 510, n.
	15, & seq.	515, 516, n.
	21	517, n.
2	1, & seq.	519, & seq. & n.
	10, & seq.	523, n.
	15, & seq.	528, n.
3	2, & seq.	534, n. & seq. n.
	15, & seq.	536, n.
	21, ad fin.	545, 546, n.
4	24, & seq.	550, 551, n.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
7	3, ii.	558, n.
	11, & seq.	560, n.
8	18,	564, & seq. & n.
10	3, & seq.	570 n.
12	2, & f. iii.	{ 572 186, n. & seq. n.
	30,	ii. 574
13	18,	578
14	1, & seq.	579, & n.
	15, & seq.	582, & 583, n.
16	4, & seq.	592, & n.
	33,	595, & n.
17	6,	596, & n.
	8, & seq.	598, & n.
20	Pass.	602, & n.
	24	iii. 315, & n.
	26	274
21	pass.	ii. 609, n. & seq. n.
25	20	iii. 297, n.
27	5	311, n.
28	30	265, n.
32	4, & seq.	618, n.
33	12 ad fin.	622, & n.
34	5, & seq. x.	385, n.
38	8, & seq.	iii. 317.

LEVITICUS.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
3	14	iii. 373, & n.
13	pass.	376, n.
23	27	219, n. & seq. n.
25	4, & seq.	207, n.
—	8, & seq.	211, & n.
27	28	245

NUMBERS.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	52, & seq. iii.	52, & seq.
5	24, & seq.	347, 348.
10	33, & seq.	62, n.
11	7	ii. 595, n.
12	1, & seq.	547, n.
13	29, 33	i. 250, n.

Ch.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

16 1, & seq. iii. 14, n.

Ch. V.

23— } 21. & { 27, n.
24— } 3, 4, 7 {

35 6, 19 282, & seq.

36 6 32

DEUTERONOMY.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

6 4 172, 173, & n.

8 3 ii. 623, & 624, n.

7 {
8 { iii. 355, n.

17 8, & seq. 252, n.

18 10, & seq. 387, n.

22 5 375, n.

23 3 321, n.

24 1, & seq. 361, n.

31 24, & seq. iv. 165, n.

33 { pass. iii. 45
34 {

JOSHUA.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

1 1, & seq. iii. 64

2 1, & seq. 65, n.

3 16 69, n.

5 2 71, n.

6 1, 24, & seq. 72, 73, n.

10 12, & seq. 79, n. & seq. n.

JUDGES.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

3 31 iii. 494, & n.

9 pass. 503, n.

11 30, ad fin. 513, n.

12 & seq. pass. 519, & seq.

RUTH.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

1 1, & seq. iii. 521, & n.

1 SAMUEL.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

1 20 iii. 524, n.

— 25 508, n.

2 29, & seq. 254, n.

6 19 526, & n.

13 19, & seq. 534, & n.

16 { pass. 539, 540, 541, n.
17 {

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

19 24 iii. 545, n.

24 3, & seq. 550, 551, n.

27 7 iv. 6, n.

— 10, & seq. ib. n.

28 7, & seq. 8, 9, 10, 11, n.

31 4, & seq. 12, n.

2 SAMUEL.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

2 10 iv. 11, 13, n.

3 6, & seq. 15, n.

— 2, & seq. 18, n.

5 9 Appen. iv. xxxix, n.

6 6 19, n.

— 12, & seq. 20, n.

7 12 22, n.

8 17, 18 23, 24, 25, n.

10 1, & seq. ii. 124, 125, n.

11 3 iv. 26, n.

12 30 27, n.

15 7 34, n.

21 3, & seq. 44, n.

24 1, & seq. 45, 46, n.

— 15, & seq. 46, 47, n.

1 KING S.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

4 26 iv. 56, n.

7 2, & seq. 67, 68, n.

9 13, & seq. 69, n.

— 27, & seq. 70, n.

10 1, & seq. 74, 75, n.

11 4, & seq. 77, n.

14 25 85

22 8, 11, & seq. 96, n.

2 KING S.

Ch. Verse. V. Page.

1 3, & seq. 99, 100, n.

6 25 104, n.

8 4, & seq. 107, 108, n.

9 11 110, n.

10 13, 15 113, n. & seq. n.

12 4, 13 122, n.

— 17, & seq. 118,

13 3, & seq. 124, n.

— 14, & seq. 126, n. & seq. n.

14 25, & seq. 129, n.

2 KING S.

2 KINGS.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
15	8, 15	iv. 132, n. & seq. n.
—	5	135, n.
16	7, & seq.	141, n.
17	25, & seq.	147, n.
20	1, & seq.	149, 150, n.
—	11	150, n. & seq.
21	2, & seq.	157, n.
—	11, & seq.	159, n.
23	11, pass.	163, n.
22	8, & seq.	165, n. & seq. n.
23	29—31	169, n.
—	34, & seq.	170, 171, n.
24		175, 176, n.
25		179

1 CHRON.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	10	i. 359
5	26	iv. 146, n.
21	6, & seq.	46, n.
—	24, 25	48, n.
29	4, & seq.	50, n.

2 CHRON.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
8	3	iv. 67, n.
9	13, 18	68, n.
14	1—9	88, n.
16	14	89, n.
30	15, & seq.	143, n.
—	16, & seq.	ibid. n.
35	3, & seq.	157, n.
—	25	170
36	7, 8, 13	175

JO B.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
18	13	iii. 237, n.
31	30	248, n.

P S A L M S.

Pf.	Verse.	V. Page.
16	4, & seq.	iii. 19, n.
22	1, & seq.	x. 513, n.
—	6	iii. 229, n.
40	6	210, n.
72	10	x. 344, n.
82	6	442 n.

Pf. Verse. V. Page.

87	pass.	iii. 420, n.
110	1, & seq.	458, n.

P R O V E R B S.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
16	4	ii. 606, n.
30	19	iii. 354, n.

I S A I A H.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
7	14	iv. 138, n.
		x. 335, & n. & seq. n.

9	1, & seq.	436.
20	{	pass. iv. 279, 280, n.
21
27	12	i. 445, n.
49	1, & seq.	iv. 138, n.
53	pass.	x. 342, n.

J E R E M I A H.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	1, & seq.	iv. 164, n.
13	21	i. 462
24		x. 7, 8
39	10	6, n.
31	22	337, n.
—	15, & seq.	384, n.

E Z E K I E L.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
12	13	iv. 178, n.
40		app. 4, 5, n.

D A N I E L.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
9	1, & seq.	viii. 590, n. & seq. n.
—	26	ix. 56, n.
11	ib. ad fin.	90, n. & seq. n.
9	24, & seq.	x. 326, n.
11	31	116, n.

H O S E A.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	1, & seq.	iv. 129, n.

J O E L.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
3	2, & 12	iv. 101, n.

A M O S.

Ch.	Verse.	V. Page.
1	1, 4, & f.	iv. 131
2		132, n.

N A H U M.

NAHUM.

Ch.	Verse.	V.	Page.
1	1, & seq.	iv.	156, n.
HABAKKUK.
1	1, & seq.	iv.	173, n.
3	7, & seq.	i.	462
ZEPHANIAH.
1	1, & seq.	iv.	165, n.
3	10	i.	462
ZECHARIAH.
4	14	iii.	257, n.
JUDITH.
1	1, & seq.	iv.	160, n.
4	3		282, n.
MATTHEW.
1	1, & seq.	x.	331, n.
2	ult.		385, n.
4	4, & seq.	ii.	624, n.
8	18, & seq.	x.	454, n.
11	29		448, n.
—	31, & seq.		450, n.
13	3	iii.	506, n.
17	24	x.	470, n.
21	9, & seq.		484, n.
22	31, & seq.	ii.	544, n.
23	36, & seq.	x.	485, n.
26	6, & seq.		494, n.
26	26, & seq.		497, n.
27	5		503, n.
—	33, 34		509, n.
—	38		511, n.
—	45		513, n.
—	65		518, n.
28	9		523, n.
MARK.
1	23	x.	436, n.
3	17, & seq.		444, n.
5	20, & seq.		456, n.
11	13		490, n.
15	33		509, n.
16	17		436, n.
LUKE.
2	1, 2, 22	iii.	237, n.
3	23, & seq.	x.	331, n.
6	1, & seq.	iii.	183, n.
19	41	x.	487, n.

Ch.	Verse.	V.	Page.
22	43, & seq.	x.	499
23	43		512, n.
24	51		529, n.
JOHN.
1	28	x.	421, n.
2	4		423, n.
2	9, & seq.	iii.	357, n.
3	1, & f. } & 23 }	x.	428, n.
4	5		440, n.
6	30		461, n.
10	34, & seq.		442, n.
11	44		482, n.
13	6	x.	495, n.
18	31		502, n.
19	40	iii.	395, n.
21	19	x.	524, & n.
ACTS.
2	4	x.	534, n.
18	18	iii.	249
23	5	x.	493, n.
ROMANS.
5	7, & seq.	iii.	473, n.
1 CORINTHIANS.
7	18	iii.	71, n.
10	4	ii	596, n.
16	22	iii.	342, n.
GALATIANS.
3	17	ii.	397, n.
2 TIMOTHY.
3	8	ii.	560, n.
HEBREWS.
11	12, 13	iii.	228
	21	ii.	481, n.
1 PETER.
1	12—18	iii.	299
2 PETER.
2	5	i.	287
3	5		151
JAMES.
2	2	iii.	330, n.
REVELATIONS.
8	2	i.	179
22	2, & seq.		200

A N I N D E X T O T H E N I N E T E E N V O L U M E S.

N. B. To save the trouble and expence of a geographical table to this large and extensive work, we have marked all the articles, which relate to geography, in this general index, with an † on the margin; whereby the reader may have them in view under each letter, so as to answer the end of such a table.

The Numeral Letters direct to the Vol. The Figures to the Page, and Letter n. to the Note.

A

A ARON, the brother of Moses, married to Elizabeth, vol. ii. 549. His genealogy and family, ib. Meets his brother on mount Horeb, 554. Appears with him before Pharaoh, 555. Consecrated with his sons, 624. His rod's miraculous budding, iii. 18. Idolatrous calf, ii. 617. Vainly palliated by some writers, ib. But condemned by Moses, 619. His apology for it, ib. The death of his two sons by fire from heaven, iii. 3. Why excluded from entering the promised land, 21, 22. His priestly dress and office transferred to his son, 22. Dies immediately after, ib. The time of his death, ib.

— a christian martyr in Devonshire, xv. 311.

VOL. XX,

Aaron king of Bulgaria, murdered, xix. 413.

Ab-Beth-Din, among the Jews, his office, x. 90.

† Aba, a city in Phocis, by whom founded, vi. 32, & seq.

† — a mountain in Armenia, ix. 321.

† Abacanum, a city in Sicily, described, vii. 323, & n.

Abaddir, Abaddires, at Carthage, worshipped, xvi. 634.

† Abalitzæ, where sited, xviii. 93, 112.

† Abana, a river of Damascus, described, ii. 265, 266, & n.

† Abantes, first inhabitants of Eubæa, vii. 648.

Abara, Habara, what, x. 422.

† Abarim, the mountains of, in Palestine, iii. 33, & n.

A

Abariman,

I N D E X to the

Abariman, prince of the fallen angels, among the Persians, i. 139, 181.

Abarus's speech to Scipio, xii. 373.

Abas, king of Argos, v. 624.

— of Hetruria, xi. 276.

— leader of the Abantes, killed, vii. 648, 649.

† Abellia, its limits, xviii. 85. High mountains, 96.

Abb, the second month of the Jews, iii. 268, n.

Abdalominus made king of Sidon, viii. 185.

Abdas, consecrated bishop in Persia, xi. 309. His untimely zeal fatal to the Christians, 110.

Abdastartus murdered by his nurse's sons, ii. 379.

Abdemelech, the Saracen, makes peace with Justinian, xvi. 350.

Abdemonus, the Tyrian, expounds Solomon's riddles, ii. 378.

† Abdera, by whom founded, ix. 507, 508.

Abdon judges Israel eight years, iii. 719.

Abdymon dethrones the king of Cyprus, vii. 499. Killed, ib.

Abel, where probably born, i. 225. The import of that word, ib. n. Murdered by Cain, 227. Variety of opinions about it, 228 n, 229 n. Whether married, ib. How accepted by God, 227 n. The etymon of his name, 225 & 436 n.

Abel Mizraim, why so called by the Canaanites, ii. 497.

Abelard accused of some erroneous opinions, i. 88.

Abel of the Vineyard, city of Ammonitis, ii. 117, 118.

Abel's stratagem in favour of the Spanish hostages, xii. 214.

Abgarus I. founder of the kingdom of Edessa, ix. 631,

— II. his conquests, ix. 632,

— III his letter to Christ, ib.

— IV. treachery to the Romans, ix. 633.

— V. allies with them, ib.

— VI. &c. ib. & seq. Embassy to Trajan, xiv. 578. Reception of him, 579. Submission to Severus, xv. 108. Treacherous advice to Crassus, xi. 25.

Abias invades Abilene, ix. 638. Defeated by Izates, ib.

Abiathar escapes Saul's massacre, iii. 547. Flees to David, ib. Made high-priest, iv. 54. Deposed by Solomon, ib.

Abibal, first king of Tyre mentioned in history, ii. 375. Cotemporary with David, ib.

Abiff, a Jewish month, whence so called, iii. 187, n.

Abihu, one of the sons of Aaron, ii. 549. Consecrated, 625. Why killed by fire from heaven, iii. 3.

Abijah, foretels to Jeroboam the ruin of his family, iv. 84.

Abijam, Abijah, king of Judah, iv. 86. Defeats Jeroboam, ib.

Abimael, one of the sons of Joktan, where placed, i. 475.

Abimelech, king of Gerar, his good character, ii. 230. Obligingness to Abraham, 231. Covenant with him, 232.

— II. his kindness and justice to Isaac, ii. 233. Misrepresented by Josephus, 234. n. Covenant with Isaac renewed, 235.

— the natural son of Gideon, iii. 504. Murders all his sons but one, ib. Proclaimed king at Shechem, ib. Cruelty to the Shechemites, 509. Shameful death, 510.

Abinadab, the ark placed at his house, iii. 527.

Abiram, one of the mutineers against Moses, iii. 14. His dreadful end, 17.

Abisares's submission to Alexander, viii. 305.

Ablavivus's treachery to Sopater, xv. 430, n. Murdered by the Soldiers, 432.

— king of the Thervingi, leads them towards Thrace, xvi. 14. Outwits and beats the Romans, 15. Put to death for treason, 316.

Abner proclaims Ishbosheth king of Israel, iv. 13. Defeated by Joab, 14. Kills Azael, ib. Revolts to David, 15. Killed by Joab, ib.

† Aborigines, whence so called, xi. 267. By whom civilized, ib. & seq.

† Abouillana, the lake of, described, v. 624.

Abra and Alba, their joint reign, xviii. 167.

Abradates's bravery and death, v. 75, & seq. Buried by Cyrus, 77, n.

Abraha's fabulous defeat by the Arabs, xviii. 274. Mr. Sale's notion of it exploded, 276.

Abraham, the son of Terah, the tenth in descent from Shem, ii. 394. Called out of Ur. 395. Goes into Canaan, ib. Into Egypt, 396. Returns to Bethel, 398, seq. Separates from Lot, 399. Rescues him from Chedorlaomer, 401. Receives the name of Abraham, 405, 406, & n. i. 437, n. Circumcised with all his males, ii. 407. & seq.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

& seq. Promised a son and heir, 406. Entertains three angels, 411. Who promise a son to Sarah, ib. Intercedes for Sodom, 412. Dismisses Hagar and Ishmael, 414, 415. Covenant with Abimelech, ib. Commanded to sacrifice Isaac, ib. & seq. Buries Sarah in Macphelah, 420. Provides a wife for Isaac, 421, & seq. Marries Keturah, 423. Issue by her, 424. His death, ib. Jewish and other fictions concerning him, 425, n. & seq. n. Author of the Perse religion, v. 40. Whether he lived among them, ib.

Abraham Halim, defeated by the Romans, xvi. 451.

Abreas killed by the Malli, viii. 316.

† Abretana, part of the Mysian kingdom, v. 561.

Abshalom, the son of David, murders Ammon, iv. 31. Retires into Geshur, ib. Recalled, 33. His rebellion, 34, &c. Defeat and death, 40.

— the pillar of, described, iii. 159, & n.

— the son of Hircan, x. 208. Chuses a retired life, 211. His death, 239, n.

† Absarus, a river in Colchis, ix. 603.

Abu Moslem's opinion of God, &c. i. 88.

Abulites put to death for oppression, viii. 332.

Abulpharagus, his works and character, ix. 186, n.

Abundantius, the raiser of Eutropius, xvi. 125. Ungratefully requited and banished, 127.

Abydenians, their horrid despair, vii. 72.

† Abydos in Phrygia Minor, by whom built, v. 521, 581. A mine of gold found at, 549. Taken by the Macedonians, vii. 72. Forsaken by Antiochus, ix. 40.

— the oracle of, in Egypt, xv. 491.

† Abydus, an antient city of Thebais, i. 488. — Taken by the Turks, xvi. 532.

† Abyla, where situate, xvii. 313, n.

† — mount, where, xviii. 15.

† Aca, Aco, a famed port in Phenice, xvi. 561, & n.

Acacius, sent against the Persians, xvi. 321. Forsook by the army, ib.

Academia, by whom so called, vi. 129.

Acalide, the wife of Tros, her progeny, v. 542.

Acamas, the son of Antenor, v. 544.

† Acanthine, island, where, xviii. 107.

Acaritzi, subdued by Attila, xix. 58.

† Acarnania, described vi. 81, n. vii. 93.

Acarnanians, why antiently called Curetes, vi. 81, n. Join in the Achæan league, 577. Their character and bravery, ib. & vii. 8. War with Athens, 65, & seq.

Friendship to the Macedonians, 93, & seq. Reject the alliance of the Romans, 94, & seq. Subdued, and become a province of Achaia, 95.

Acaes, bishop of Amida's excellent charity, xi. 113.

Acastus drives Jason out of Thessaly, vii. 23 & seq.

† Acead, the city of, where situate, i. 363, n, & seq.

Accaron, given to Jonathan, ix. 119.

Accia, Aria's singular care of her son Octavius, xiii. 163, 164.

Accua, taken by young Fabius, xii. 241.

Acdestis, the son of Jupiter, by the rock Agdus, v. 505. Tamed by bacchus, ib.

† Aceldama, or field of blood, iii. 145. Where situate, x. 504.

† Acerræ, taken by Corn. Scipio, xii. 178. Abandoned and burnt, xvii. 399.

† Acesta, in Sicily. Vid. Segesta, vii. 151.

Aceronia, drowned for Agrippina, xiv. 197.

† Achæans, antient Grecians, v. 604, & 605. Join with Aratus, vi. 377. The league called by their name, 552, & seq. By whom formed, 553, & seq. Their laws, 554 & seq. Contests with the Lacedemonians, supported by Antigonus, 527, 537, 563, & seq. Victory at Mantinea, 541. At Selasia, 569, & seq. War against the Ætolians, 572, & seq. Beg king Philip's assistance, 575. Invade Elis, 580. Betrayed by Apelles, 585. Invade Ætolia, 587. Sparta, 590. Make peace, 599. Go over to the Romans, 611, 628, & seq. Fall into new broils, 626. Send deputies to Rome, 628. Highly counted, 630. Restore the Lacedemonians, 635, & seq. Defeated by the Messenians, ib. & seq. Betrayed by their Roman deputy, 650. Forced to restore the Spartans, 641. Courted by Perses, 644. Assist the Romans against him, 646. Ill requited by them, 648. Protest against their cruelty, 649, 650, & seq. War against them, 653. War against the Lacedemonians, ib. & seq. 661. Defeated by Metellus, 662, 663. By the Roman consul, 667. Made tributary to Rome, 670, & seq.

Achæus assists the Byzantines, vii. 430. Gained over by the Rhodians, ib.

— defeated by the Macedonians, viii. 478.

— regent of Syria, his valour and fidelity, viii. 598. Forced to seize on the government, 610. Besieged in Sardis, 619. Betrayed and beheaded, 622.

† Achaia, part of the ancient Greece, v. 604. Whence so called, vi. 85. Described, 86. Conquered by the Achæans, 87, & seq. Divided into twelve districts, 88. One of the chief states after the Achæan league, 551. Its extent ib. Laws, &c. 552, & seq. Duration 553. Conquest, &c. 671, & seq. Taken from the Roman senate, xiii. 547, & n. Infranchised and plundered by Nero, xiv. 265, 268, & seq. Plundered by the Hunns, xix. 127.

Achamenes, made governor of Egypt, ii. 79. Slain, ib. King of Persia, v. 57.

Achaia, stoned and burnt for sacrilege, iii. 77.

† Achelous, river, the fable of, vi. 75, & 76, n.

Acheus, the son of Xuthus, founder of Achaia propria, vi. 85.

Achillas drives out Cleopatra, ix. 275. Besieges Cæsar in Alexandria, 280. Put to death, 282. Treachery to Pompey, xiii. 74, 76, & seq. Slain, 80.

Achilles, king of Phthia, vi. 24. Where born, 16, 17. Made invulnerable, 24. Exploits before Troy, v. 555, & seq. Cruelty to Hector, vi. 25. Requited, ib. His tomb, v. 523.

Achilleus's revolt and defeat, xv. 262.

—— in Egypt, xv. 298. Defeated, 305.

Achish, king of the Philistines, ii. 252. Hospitality to David, ib. Success against the Israelites, 254. Against Saul and his sons, ib.

Achme's forgery discovered to Herod, x. 389, & n.

† Acholla, where situate, xvi. 582.

† Achor, the valley of, whence so called, iii. 77, 78.

Achris, taken by Bazilius, vii. xix. 418. Vast treasures found in it, 420.

Achshaph joins Jabin against Israel, ii. 204.

Achthoes, the king, killed by a crocodile, i. 604, n.

Aclius sent against Antiochus, vii. 40. Defeats him, 42. Takes Heraclea, 44.

Haughtiness to the Ætolians, 47, & seq. Relieves Neopactus, 51, & seq. Takes Lamia, 53. Succeeded by Scipio, 54, 55.

—— Glabrio's success against Antiochus, xii. 306. Sumptuous triumph, 308.

—— a proscribed senator, saved by his wife, xiii. 226.

Acmon, the father of Uranus, v. 421, & seq.

Acoris, king of Egypt, joins with the king of Cyprus against the Persians, ii. 82. Dies, 83.

† Acra, the fortress of, built to command the temple, x. 113. Described, 137, & n. Besieged by Judas Maocab, 150. Fortified by Bacchides, 166. Immured by Jonathan, 179. Surrendered, 185. Demolished, ib. When, 186, & n.

† ——— island, where sited, xvii. 559.

† Acradina, one of the four quarters of Syracuse, vii. 144. Forced by Dionysius, 230. Taken by the Carthaginians, 242. Delivered up to the Romans, 379, & seq. Taken by Himilco, xvii. 97.

† Acre, St. John de, its ruins described, iii. 148.

† Acria, a sea-port of Sparta, vi. 48.

Acris, taken and plundered, xvii. 191, 192, & n.

† Acro-Corinth. Vid. Corinth, taken by Aratus, vi. 555.

† Acroe, when and by whom built, vii. 160. Described, 366, & n.

Acron, killed by Romulus, xi. 301.

† Acropolis, the citadel of Athens, vi. 127. Stormed by the Persians, 202.

Acrotalus's brave defence of Sparta, vi. 515. Succeeds Areus, 518. Slain, 519.

Actei, at Athens, whence so called, vi. 333.

Actiac æra, how computed, ix. 312.

—— games, whence, xiii. 509.

—— anniversary forbid by Caligula, xiv. 71.

Actian family, its original, xiii. 497, n.

Actisanes drives Amosis from the throne, ii. 44. Unites Egypt with Ethiopia, 45.

† Actium, where cited, xiii. 355.

—— the battle of, xiii. 360.

Actor, first king of Ægina, vii. 635.

Actors, on the stage, despised among the Romans, xi. 623, 624, n.

Actuarii, a tribe of the Franks, xix. 235.

† Ad, an old Arabian tribe, xviii. 15.

Ada, queen of Caria's conduct towards Alexander, viii. 168.

Adad, Adar, chief deity of the Syrians, ii. 287, & n.

Adah, the first wife of Esau, see Judith.

Adalwald's peaceful reign, xix. 521, 525. Poisoned 527.

Adam, where created, i. 175. Forbid the tree of knowledge, 193. Names the birds, beasts, &c. ib. Takes Eve, ib. His fall, ib. Objections to the literal sense, 197. Confuted, 199. By whom tempted, ib. His trial defended, 206. The sad effects of his sin, 209. On man, 210. Changes made on the earth, 212, & seq. Where he dwel dwelt afterwards, 224, & n. His death, 239. Opinions about his repentance, 240, n. And the place of his burial, ib.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Adam, an appellative of both sexes, 166. n. Rabbinical and Mohammedan dreams about the first man, 167, & n. & seq. Etymon of that name, 166, n. & 437, n. A better, xviii. 122, 123, n.

† — the city of, where Jordan's waters divided, iii. 69, & n.

Adar, the sixth Jewish month, i. 206, n.

Adarnasses, why excluded the succession, xi. 105.

† Adia, Addis, where situate, xvi. 575, n.

— the bridge of, built by Claudius, xv. 251.

Addo's treachery to Caius, xiii. 442. Punished, ib.

† Aden, its situation and mart, xviii. 200.

Adergumbades preserves young Cavades, xi. 130. Put to death for it, 131.

Adherbal defeats the Romans, xii. 142, & seq. In Italy, 207, 208. His descent, 432. Flees to Rome, 433. Divested, 434. Defeated by Jugurtha, 435. Murdered, 437. See also, xvii. 583.

— defeats the Romans at sea, xvii. 274, 275.

† Adiabene, a province of antient Assyria, iv. 196, & n. Subdued by Trajan, xiv. 581. Reduced by Severus, xv. 101.

— the kings of, ix. 635, & seq. Embrace christianity, 641.

† Adiabenia subdued by Tigranes, ix. 331.

† Adiba, fortified, x. 179.

† Adis taken by Attil. Regulus, xii. 124.

† Adites, their kings, government, &c. xviii. 215.

Adjatrix legion's furious onset, xiv. 358. Declares for Vespasian, 396.

Admetus killed before Troy, viii. 192.

— king of Epirus's kindness to The-mistocles, ix. 537.

Adodus, conjectures concerning that deity, i. 397, 398, & n.

Adonia, the meaning of that word, ii. 536, n.

Ahijah conspires against David, iv. 48. Pardon'd by Solomon, 49. Put to death, 54.

† Adonis, river, in Tingitania, xviii. 13. Why it appears sometimes bloody, ii. 335.

— the Phœnician deity, who, ii. 349, & n. His origin, 353. Worship, 354, & seq.

Adonibezek's arrogance and cruelty, iii. 206. Punished, ib.

Adonizedek besieges Gibeon, iii. 262, 203. Miraculously cut off by Joshua, 203.

Adramelech, an Assyrian deity, how represented, iv. 203.

† Adramitar, who, and where fitted, xviii. 194.

† Adrana, river, its course, xiii. 524, & n.

† Adranum, a city in Sicily, vii. 153. Taken by the Romans, xvii. 236.

Adranus, the tutelar god of Sicily, vii. 153.

† Adrastia, whether the same with Pa-rium, vi. 563.

Adrastus, king of Argos. v. 633. His kindness to Polynices and Tydeus, ib. & seq.

— the last king of Phrygia, v. 579.

† Adria, where fitted, xiv. 607. Wounded by Hannibal, xvii. 370.

Adrian, adopted by Trajan, xiv. 559, 596. Made questor, 566. Obsequies to Sura, 569. Demolishes Trajan's bridge, 572. Pretorship and games, 578. Sent into Pannonia, ib. & seq. Made archon of Athens, 584. Governor of Syria, 594. Proclaimed at Antioch, ib. Whether really adopted, 596. Extract and education, 607. Talents of body and mind, 608, & seq. Mild government, 611. Letter to the senate, 613. Modest entry into Rome, 615. Success against the Scythians, ib. Progress through the empire, 617. Narrow escape in Spain, 618, & seq. Return to Rome, Athens, &c. 619, & seq. Goes into the east, 620. Syria and Egypt, 621, 622. Observations on those countries, ib. Unnatural love to Antinous, 624. Severity against the Jews, 625, 626. Stay and generosity at Athens, 632. Sickness, 635. Names Verus his successor, ib. Cruelties, 637. Adopts Antoninus, 638. Painful death, 639. Verses to his soul, 641, n. Year of his death, ib. n. Obsequies, buildings, &c. 642. Huge Mausoleum, 643. Character, laws, &c. 644. Writings, 647, n. Temple, 669. His wall in Britain, xviii. 673, & seq. Expedition thither, 706. Coins, ibid. & 707, n.

— banished for not relieving Syracuse, xvi. 401.

— pope, why invaded by Desiderius, xix. 586. Hatred to the Lombards, 593.

† Adrianople blocked up by the Goths, xvi. 18. The battle of, 20. Betrayed to the

I N D E X to the

the Bulgarians, 411. Taken by the Turks, 539. Made the capital of their empire, ib.
† Adrianople a quarter of Athens so called, vii. 87.
† — in Thrace, built by Adrian, ix. 510.
† Adrumentum submits to Cæsar, xiii. 96. Described, xvi. 580. Whence so called, ib. Besieged by the Carthaginians, xvii. 173, 174.
† — in Cyrenaica, described, xviii. 66.
Advasmanes, defeated by the Romans, xvi. 324.
Adrianople besieged by the Scythians, 476. Preserved by a stratagem, ib.
† Advatici, who, xiii. 17, n. Defeated, by Cæsar, xviii. 559.
† Adulis Emporium, in Ethiopia, xviii. 106, & 169, n.
Adultery, Moses's laws against, iii. 946. Placed by some Greek copies before that against murder, ib. n.
— strangely punished by Hippomenes, v. 659. How by the Athenians, vi. 120. Forbid by the Julian law, xiii. 577, & n.
† Adymachidæ, their way of fighting, customs, xviii. 61.
† Æa, a city in Colchis, ix. 603.
Æaces I. tyrant of Samos, vii. 521.
— II. treachery to the Ionians, vii. 536, & seq.
Æacidas, king of Epirus, driven out, viii. 445, & ix. 542. Slain by the Macedonians, viii. 449. ix. 542.
Æacus, king of Ægina, one of the three judges of hell, vi. 29, & n. vii. 635.
Æbutius Elva made general of the horse, xi. 415. Gallantry at the battle of Regillus, 416.
Ædemon defeated by the Romans, xviii. 43.
† Ædepsum, the hot waters, of vii. 646.
Æetes, king of Colchis, ix. 605.
Ædiles, plebeian, their office, xi. 435. Officiate as consuls during the plague, 488. Chosen from the patricians, 619, & seq. Discharged from the care of public shows, xiii. 388.
† Ædui, who, and where sitèd, xiii. 12. & n. xviii. 493, n. Treachery to Cæsar, xiii. 12. Protected by him, 13. Treachery to him, 30. Revolt against the Romans, 611. Defeated, 612. Aversion to kingly government, xviii. 493. Contest with the Averni, 494. Alliance with Cæsar, 495.

Æetes, king of Colchis, possessor of the golden fleece, vi. 20, & seq. & n. His treatment of the Argonauts, 22, & seq. & n. Fatal end, 23. see ix. 605.
† Ægates island described, vii. 157.
† Ægean sea described, vii. 547, & seq. n. Islands in it, 548, & seq.
Ægeates, whence so called, viii. 44.
Ægeus, king of Athens, the father of Theseus, v. 647. Released from Minos's tribute, 650. Flings himself into the Ægean sea, 651.
Ægialeus gives name to Peloponnesus, v. 615.
Ægidius, the Gaul, marches against Ricimer, xvi. 271. Success against the Visigoths, 272. Murdered, ib. Relieves Arles, xix. 163. Seizes on Childeric's crown, 270.
Ægimarus, island, taken by Marcius, xvii. 528.
† Ægina, island, described, vii. 12. n. 633, & seq. By whom subdued, 637. Taken from the Athenians, xiii. 392.
Ægineans war against Attica, vi. 174. Intercept the Delphic ship, 176. Subdued by the Athenians, 234, 235. Expelled the island, 265. Infest the Athenians, 340. Infested by the Spartans, 340, & seq. Invaded by the Samians, vii. 519. Their revenge on them, 526.
† Ægis, metropolis of Macedonia, plundered by Pyrrhus, viii. 472.
Ægisthus, the murderer of Agamemnon, killed by Orestes, v. 632.
† Ægium, the Greeks rendezvous against Troy, v. 551. The assembly of the Achæan states, vi. 626. Made the metropolis of Achaia, 88.
Ægypt and Ægyptiasn. Vid. Egypt, & c.
Ægyptus, king of Mycene. See Epytus.
† Ægyra, metropolis of Achaia Propr. v. 617. Founded by Ægyrus, ib. Ruined by an earthquake, xiii. 631.
Ælia Petina divorced by Claudius, xiv. 102.
— Capitolina, Jerusalem so named, xiv. 630.
Ælian's writings and character, xiv. 655, n.
Ælianus Papyr. chosen consul, xv. 58.
— L. his revolt and defeat, xv. 246.
— Desider. governor of Britain, xviii. 711, & 712, n.
Ælius, Pons, why so named, xviii. 673. — Pætus's ill success against the Gauls, xii. 296. — Serenian writings, & c. xv. 177, n.

† Æmathia

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Æmathia, Macedonia, why so called, viii. 3. Described, 11.

Æmilia, a vestal, put to death, xii. 428.

— Musa, her estate adjudged to the Æmilian family, xiii. 576, & n.

— with two other vestals, put to death, xiv. 598.

Æmilianus proscribed by the senate, xv. 98. Defeated and put to death, ib. Success against the barbarians, 222.

— Scipio. Vid. Scipio.

Æmilius, Paulus, defeats the Perfes, vi. 646. Hannibal, xvii. 382. His death, 387, & seq. — Joins the Rhodian fleet, vii. 440, & seq. — Success against Antiochus, ix. 33, & 38.

— Scaurus. See Scaurus.

— Mamercinus, expedition against the Volsci, xi. 461.

— Lucius, makes peace with the Hetrurians, xi. 470. Ill used by the senate, ib. Cited by the tribunes, 477.

Æmilius, Mamercus, chosen dictator, xi. 550. Resigns his second dictatorship, 551. Chosen a third time, 554. Success against the Fidenates, ib. & seq. Chosen consul, 619.

— Papus, chosen dictator, xii. 22.

— L. chosen dictator, xii. 30.

— Barbut. restores the senate and priesthood, xii. 37. Defeats the Hetrurians, 38. Sent against the Tarentines, 86. & seq. Against the Sabines, 88. Success in Afric, 129, 130, &c. Shipwrecked, ib.

— Paulus, subdues Illyricum, xii. 180. Tried and acquitted, ib. Falls out with his colleague, 216, & seq. Last message to the great Fabius, 218, 219. Death, ib. & n.

— Paulus's success against the Macedonians, xii. 325. & seq. Death, 328.

— Lepidus's unjust attempt against the Vacci, xii. 369.

— Mamercus, chosen a consul, xii. 591.

— Paulus, bought off by Cæsar, xiii. 35. Condemned by the triumvirate, 221.

— Lepidus, made Cæsar's colleague, xiii. 86.

— Germanicus, his success against the Germans, xiii. 557, & seq.

— Pascensis restored by Otho, xiv. 347. Taken prisoner by Vitellius, 403.

— his court of judicature, xviii. 668.

† Æminium, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 328.

† Æmona abandoned by Maximin, xv. 196. Where sited, ib.

Æmonia, the daughter of Deucalion, vi. 15.

† Æmonia, the ancient name of Thessaly, vi. 15.

Æneas said to have betrayed Troy, v. 556, 557. Whether he retired into Italy, 558, & n. & seq. n.

Ænedestanus, the brave governor of Argos, slain, vi. 672, 673.

† Ænon, where situate, x. 431, n.

† Æoles, from whom descended, 471.

† Æolian islands described, vii. 156.

† Æolians, their original, vii. 122. Government, 125, & seq. Religion, 129.

Trade, &c. 130. First inhabitants of Lesbos, 553. Protected by Cæsar, xii. 74.

† Æolis, part of Asia Proper, v. 485, & seq.

† — in Asia Minor, described, vii. 120. Its twelve cities, ib.

Æolus, first king of the Siculi, vii. 163.

— king of the Hetrusci, xi. 276.

Æon and Protogonus, in Sanchoniatho, the Adam and Eve of Moses, 256, & n.

† Æpytæ, so called from Æpytus king of Mycene, v. 639.

Æonia, the mother of Ausonius, her extract, xvi. 56. n.

Æqui defeated by the Romans, xi. 427. Fall out with the Volsci, 456. Invade the Romans with fire and sword, 464. Suppressed by Furius, ib. By Quinctius, 482, 486. By Lucretius, 489. By Cornelius, 504. Made to pass under the yoke, 507. Defeated by Sicinius, 515. By Valerius, 542. By Posthumius, 552. Defeat the Romans, 559. Defeated by Æmilius, 574. By Camillus, 590, & seq. Subdued, xii. 45.

† Ærenosi, where sited, vii. 10.

† Æria, Egypt, why so called by the Greeks, i. 485.

Æropas, king of Macedonia, xvii. 345.

— guardian of it, viii. 70. His message to Agefilaus, ib.

Æsacus, the son of Priam, v. 549.

Æschines's character of king Philip, viii. 93. Sent to the amphietyons court, 115.

Æsculapius of Egypt, more ancient than the Greek, i. 580.

— practised physic at Pergamos, v. 566, & seq.

— worshipped at Cos, vii. 568. His statue brought to Rome, xii. 73. The story of his birth, &c. ib. n. His temple at Carthage, xvi. 566. Burnt, 63.

† Æsis, river, a boundary of Gaul, xi. 255.

† Æsitæ, who, and where sited, xviii. 187.

the father of Jason, vi. 19. His death, 23.
 † Æthi, when, and where situated, vi. 19. Their amber trade, ib. & seq. Conquest, 584.
 † Æthians, where situate, viii. 14.
 Aeternus's consulship, xi. 516. Tribuneship, 543.
 Ethiopia spreads a dreadful plague over the empire, xv. 222. Embassy to Constantine, 1409.
 Ethiopians pay tribute to the Persians, viii. 9. Their king's noble answer to Cambyses's ambassadors, 88. See Ethiopia, &c.
 Æthlius, the supposed founder of the Elean kingdom, vi. 70.
 † Æthulia, island, where situate, xvi. 587, n.
 † Ætius marries Severus's daughter, xv. 97.
 — governor of Constantinople, his life attempted, xvi. 201. His rise and character, 213. Sides with the usurper John, 214. Submits to Placidia, 216. Success against the Vandals, 217. Against Attila, 246. Repulsed at the battle of Chalons, 248. Undermined by Heraclius, 250. Murdered by Valentinian, 254. See also vol. xix. 73—88.
 — prevents Irene's marriage, xvi. 375. Defeated by the Saracens, 394.
 † Ætna, the burning mount in Sicily, vii. 155.
 † Ætolia, from whom named, vi. 75. Described, ib. & seq. Part of Græcia Prop. v. 604. One of the three Grecian states after the Achæan league, vi. 551. Its government, laws, &c. vii. 3, & seq. Seized by Michael Angel. xvi. 508.
 Ætolians, great robbers, vi. 78, & seq. & 572. Warlike and brutish, vii. 4. Defeat the Spartans, vi. 548, & seq. Massacred by them, 548. Wars against the Mæcians, 572. Oppose the Achæans, vii. 5. Ally with the Romans, 7. Invade Locri, 9. Defeated by Philip, 10, & seq. Success against him, 15. Forced to a peace, 16. Declare for the Romans, 17. Defeated by Philip, 19. Burn some Thessalian towns, ib. & seq. Oppose the confederate peace, 24, & seq. Declare for Antiochus, 26. Take Demetrius by stratagem, 28, 29. And Sparta by treachery, 29, & seq. Driven out by Philopemen, 31. Chase Antiochus their generalissimo, 34, & seq. Routed by the Romans, 42. Sue for peace, 46. Oppressed by the Roman senate, 52. Obtain a truce, 55. Invade king Philip, 56. Gallant defence of Ambracia, 57, & seq. Invaded by the Macedonians, 60. Make peace with Rome, 62, & seq. Their various fates since, 63, 64. Distressed by Antipater, viii. 429. Invade Thessaly, 430. Defeated, 431. Treachery to the Acarnanians, 447. Punished, 449. Invite Antiochus into Europe, xii. 299. Raised new troubles in Greece, 305. Obtain a peace, 307.

 Ætolus, the son of Endymion, vi. 70. Found the Ætolian kingdom, ib. & seq.
 — the son of Oxylus, where buried, vi. 74.
 Afranius defeated and killed, xii. 522.
 — forces Sertorius's camp, xii. 608. Repulsed, ib. & seq.
 — an indolent consul, xii. 645, 646.
 — Pompey's general driven from the Pyrenees, xiii. 47. Repulses Julius Cæsar, 48. Submits to him, 49. Joins Cato at Utica, 90. Defeated and killed, 96.
 — the poet, his incendium acted before Nero, xiv. 222.
 — Quintilianus conspires against Nero, xiv. 236.
 Afer, Sept. Sever. put to death by Caracalla, xv. 129.
 † Africa, whence so called, xviii. 82. Whether ever joined to Europe, ib. Plundered by the Romans, xii. 122, 123. By their privateers, 147. By Scipio, 288. Subdued by Julius Cæsar, xiii. 97. Faithful to Vitellius, xiv. 382. Honoured by Adrian, 630. Revolts against Maximin, xv. 186. Under Celsus, 244. Destroyed by Maxentius, 363. Relieved by Constantius, 452. Sadly harrassed by the Moors, 580. Revolts to Arcadius, xvi. 122. Returns to Honorius, 136. Kept locked up by Heraclian, 178, 181. Over-run by the barbarians, 221. Seized by the Vandals, 285. Subdued by the Saracens, 345, 348. Plundered by Cn. Scipio, xvii. 379. Ravaged by the Vandals, xix. 203, 204. Yielded by the Romans to Genseric, 217.
 † — Propria described, xvi. 571. Made a Roman province, xvii. 604.
 African clergy, privileged by Constantine, xv. 382.
 Africans, their wretched discipline, xvii. 54, n. Abandoned by the Carthaginians, 104, 105. Revolt and march against them, 108. Dispersed for want of a leader, 109. Treachery to their allies, 198. Armed after the Roman manner, xvii. 386. The success of it, 388. Blended with the Libyans, 572.
 Africanus, cruelly used by Constantius, xv. 469.
 Agabus

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Agabus foretels a grievous famine, x. 563.

Agag, the first king of the Amalekites, ii. 175. Taken and spared by Saul, 178. Put to death, ib.

— that name common to all kings, ii. 175.

Agamemnon, king of Mycene, v. 631. Chosen head of the Trojan expedition, 551. Murdered in his return, 632.

Agapenor, king of Arcadia, one of the Trojan chiefs, vi. 12.

† Agari where situate, xvi. 582.

Agareni. See Hagareni, xviii. 184.

Agasthenes, king of Elis, outed by Oxy-lus, vi. 73.

Agathias's history of Persia, vi. 75, n. & seq.

Agathoclea married to Philopater, ix. 220. Her sad catastrophe, 222.

Agathocles, tyrant of Sicily, his extract, rise, &c. vii. 297, & seq. Narrow escape, perjury and cruelties to the Syracusans, ib. & seq. (Vid. & vol. xviii. 150, & seq.) Proclaimed king, 302. Defeated, 303. His success in Africa, ib. & seq. 304, & seq. Treachery to Ophellas, 310. Abandons Africa, 311, & seq. Cruelty in Sicily, 312. Subdues part of Italy, 313. Makes peace with Carthage, xvii. 152. Plunders it, 153, 154. Retaliates their cruelties, 155. Treachery to the Messenians, ib. Shut up in Syracuse, 154. Sails into Afric, 158. Lands and burns his fleet, 162. Ravages the country, 166. Quells a mutiny, 179, 180. Proclaimed king of Afric, 189. Returns into Sicily, 190, & n. 191. Success there, ib. Returns into Afric, 196. Speech to his army, ib. n. Defeated, 197. A dreadful uproar in the camp, 198. Returns into Sicily, 199. Ratifies the peace with Carthage, 201. His death and character, vii. 313. xvii. 202.

Agathocles, the son of Lyfimachus, his success against Demetrius, viii. 414. Poisoned by his father, 465, 466.

† Agathyrna, a city in Sicily, vii. 153.

† Agathyrsian Scythians described, v. 463.

Agatzyrians submit to Attila, xix. 62.

† Agdus, a famous rock, v. 505.

Age, old, highly revered in Sparta, vi. 388, & seq.

Agelas's speech to king Philip at Naupactus, vi. 598.

Agelmond made king of the Gepidæ, xvi. 36.

Agenor, first king of Phœnice, ii. 365, & seq.

Agentes at court reduced by Julian, xix. 532.

Agenor, a great warrior, v. 544.

Agerinus sent by Agrippina, to Nero, xix. 197. Seized and imprisoned, 198.

Agefilaus, king of Sparta, his character, vi. 477. Succeeds Agis, ib. & seq. Sent against the Persians, 481. Sudden fall upon them, v. 177. Commands by sea and land, v. 179. vi. 438. Affronts the Boeotians, vi. 484. Recalled by the ephori, v. 180, & vi. 490, 491. Sent against the confederate army, vi. 492. Offers them a peace, 493, & seq. Invades Boeotia, 499. Chosen dictator, 501. Invades Arcadia, 502. Quells a conspiracy in Sparta, 503. Defeats Epaminondas, 507. Despised by Tachos, and helps to dethrone him, v. 192, 193, & n. vi. 507. His death and character, ib.

— the uncle of Agis, helps him to reform the Spartan luxury, vi. 520. Chosen one of the ephori, 523. Outwits his nephew, ib.

Agefipolis, king of Sparta, succeeds Pausanias, vi. 491. Sent against the Argives, 493. Against the Mantineans, 495. Invades the Olynthians, 497. His death, ib.

— the son of Cleombrotus, chosen king of Sparta, vi. 538.

Agefistrata betrayed and murdered by Amphares, vi. 525, & seq.

Agidæ, the kings of Sparta, whence so called, vi. 52, 64. A list of them, 278, & seq.

Agilmund, first king of the Lombards, xix. 376. Defeated the Vandals, 377.

Agilo succeeds the brave Urfeinus, xv. 495. Sent against the Persians, 508. Promoted by Julian, 530. Treachery to Procopius, 617.

Agilulf chosen king of the Lombards, xix. 517. Turns orthodox, 518. Severity to the revolted dukes, ib. Conquests on the Roman exarchate, 519. Truce with it, 521. Death and character, 525.

Aginacius, unjustly put to death, xv. 604.

Agis, his severe reign, vi. 63.

— invades Attica, vi. 277, & seq. 458, & seq. Offers peace to the Athenians, 286. Defeats the confederates at Mantinea, 293, 294, 463, & seq. Repentment against Alcibiades, 395, & seq. Repulsed before Athens, 317, 468. On a second attempt, 318. Successful in a third, 322, & seq. Invades Argos, 462. Makes a truce with them, ib. & seq. Invades Eli, 465. Concludes a peace, ib. His death, 476.

Agis the son of Archidamus, sent ambassador to Philip, vi. 511. Succeeds his father, ib. His defeat and glorious death, 512.

—— the son of Endamidas, reforms the Spartan luxury, vi. 520, & seq. Forced into a sanctuary, 523. Betrayed and murdered, 524.

—— deposed by Cyneas, xii. 87.

Aglauros, daughter of Cecrops, her fatal curiosity punished, v. 646, n.

Agnan, St. the bishop of, opens Orlea to Attila, xix. 80.

Agnes, St. the church of, built by Constantine, xv. 378.

Agnomen, among the Romans, what, xi. 334, n.

Agnonidas, Phocion's enemy, put to death vi. 370.

† Agræi, who, and where, xviii. 188.

† Agragas. Vid. Agrigentum river, vii. 147.

Agrian law, by whom proposed, xi. 458. Why opposed by the tribunes, ib. Suspended by the consuls, 460, 461. Proves the cause of new broils, 461, 477, & seq. 486, 509. Revived by the military tribunes, 612. By M. P. Flaminius, xii. 166. By Tiber. Gracchus, 377, & seq. Agreed to, 381.

—— new modelled by Jul. Cæsar, xiii. 4. Opposed by the senate, ib. Passed by the people, 5.

Agrestis Jul. begs to view the desolation of Cremona, xiv. 396. His report of it misconstrued, 397. Kills himself, ib.

Agreus, in the Phœnician cosmogony, who, 260.

—— Italicus, inventor of hunting and fishing, ib.

Agricola, the mother of Julius, her singular care of him xiv. 443. Killed, 444.

—— Cneius Jul. his extract, &c. xiv. 443. Sent into Britain, ib. & seq. Serves under Cerealis, 445. Promoted by Vespasian, ib. His swift success in Britain, 446. Singular modesty, 447. Wholesome regulations, ib. & to 460. Supposed to have passed into Scotland, 461. Debauches the Britons, 462. Skill in fortifying, 463. Strict discipline, ib. Further conquests, 464, & seq. His conquests in Britain, xviii. 705.

Agriculture improved by the sons of Cain, i. 243. Instruments of, invented by Noah, 253, n.

—— unknown to the ancient Greeks, v. 607, 608. How encouraged by Numa, i. 317.

Agrigentines, their success against the Carthaginians, xvii. 33. Their piteous, what, ib. & n. Humanity to the fugitive Selinuntines, 51. Preparations against Hannibal, 59. Resolute defence against him, 60, 61. Become infatuated, 62. And mutiny, ib. Abandoned by their mercenaries, 63. Dreadful catastrophe, 64, 65. Take several cities in Sicily, 177, 178. Ally with Carthage, 226. Besieged by, and abandoned to the Romans, 235, 237.

† Agrigentum, in Sicily. described, vii. 147. When and by whom founded, 160. Its famed buildings, 172. Besieged by the Carthaginians, 219. Abandoned to them, 221, & seq. Betrayed to the Romans, 393. Besieged and taken by them, xii. 107, 109, & seq. Destroyed by Carthalo, xvii. 266.

Agrippa's splendid reception in Judæa, x. 313.

—— the son of Aristobulus, x. 323, n.

—— his son Agrippa born, x. 423. Advanced by Caligula, 552, & seq. The rest see under Herod Agrippa.

—— king of Alba, his reign, xi. 283.

—— Menenius's victory over the Sabines, xi. 407. Advice to the senate, 431. & seq. Speech to the revolted, 433. Death and public obsequies, 436.

—— M. Vipsan, accuses Cassius, xiii. 215, 216. His vain genealogy, 215, n. Rescues Salvidienus in Gaul, 305. His success there, 331. Commands the fleet against Pompey, 332. His success against him, 334, & seq. & 337, & seq. Valour and reward, 338. Brave exploits in Greece, 355. Commands Octavianus's fleet, 359. Advises him to resign, 367. His noble buildings at Rome, 378, 398. Receives dying Augustus's ring, 384. Made governor of Syria, 385. Of Rome, 391. Marries Marcellus's widow, ib. Success against the Germans and Cantabrians, 397, & seq. Raised by Augustus, 399. His success in the east, 403, 408. Declines a triumphant entry into Rome, 410, 413. Sent with new honours into Pannonia, ib. His death, character, and offspring, 414, & seq. & 606, n.

—— Posthumus, the son of the former, xiii. 415. Adopted by Augustus, 444. Banished by him, 448. His tender interview with him, 476. Murdered, 484.

—— Vibulenus put to death, xiv. 22.

—— the grandson of Herod, imprisoned, xiv. 29. Released by Caligula, 43. Made tetrarch by him, 46. Buries the dead

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

deed emperor, 96. Persuades Claudius, to accept the empire, 108. Promoted by him, 113, & seq. By Nero, 171. Goes to salute Galba, 302.

— declares for Vaspasian, xiv. 379.

— succeeds against the Dacians, xiv. 410.

— the son of Felix, destroyed by mount Vesuvius, xiv. 460.

† — a city in Apulia, See Argos Hippo, v, 636.

Agrippina, the daughter of Agrippa, married to Germanicus, xiii. 415. Accompanies him into Germany, 522. Sent away for safety, 523. Signal courage at Treves, 544. Carries her husband's ashes to Rome, 592. Her mournful reception, 598, & seq. Carefulness of his two sons, 631. Noble speech to Tiberius, 649, & seq. Accused by him to the senate, 650. Banished, 669. Her death, xiv. 14. Obsequies performed by Caligula, 42.

— Vipfania, married to Afri. Gallus, xiii. 495.

— daughter of Germanicus, betrothed to Domitius, xiii. 665. Highly honoured by Caligula, xiv. 43. Debauched by Lepidus, and banished, 75, & n. Recalled, 113. Murders her husband, 141. Proposed to Claudius, ib. & n. Married to him, 142. Assumes a despotic sway, 102, 143. Cruelties, 144, & seq. Treachery to Stat. Taurus, 161. To Lepida, 163, & seq. Poisons her husband, 165, & n. Hellish policy against Britannicus, 166. Cruelty and ambition, 167. Harshness to Nero, 171. Fawns on him, 174. Cabals against him, 179. Accused by Silana, and acquitted, 180. Unnatural prostitution to her son, 193. Journey to Baize, 195. Escapes being drowned by Anicetus, 197. Hides her resentment, ib. Her last words and death, 199. Funeral, 200.

† — Colonia, Cologne, ancient metropolis of the Ubii, xiii. 520, & n.

† Agrippinæ Thermæ, when built, xiii. 378.

Ahab king of Israel, his miraculous defeat of the Syrians, ii. 310, 311. And in the plain of Aphek, 311, 312. Generosity to Benhadad, 312. Marries Jezebel, and grows idolater, iv. 90. Reproved for saving Benhadad, 95, 96. Murders Naboth, 96. Fatal expedition against Ramoth, 98. His death. ib. His seventy sons killed, 113.

Ahariman, Ahriman, the Persian name of the devil, 139, 181. v. 46. His name why written inverted, v. 46. His origin and war with God, 47.

Ahathuerus, or Astyages, king of Media, iv. 489.

— Artaxerxes. See Artaxerxes, v. 154, & seq. & x. 24. & seq.

Ahaz, king of Judah, invaded by the Philistines, ii. 260. His wicked reign, iv. 137. Invaded by Edom and Israel, 140. His idolatries and death, 141, 142.

Ahaziah succeeds Ahab in Israel, iv. 99. His idolatry and death, ib.

Ahenobarbus, Cai. Domit. His peaceful consulship, xii. 512. Character, xiii. 19. Narrow escape, 20. Betrayed to Jul. Caesar, 39, 41. Letter to Pompey, 42, n. Defends Marseilles, 46. Blames Pompey's ambition, 60. Whimsical quarrel with Spinther, ib. Slain in his flight, 68.

— Brutus's admiral defeats the triumvir's fleet, xiii. 271. Surrenders to Antony, 315. Forgiven by Octavius, 318. Retires to Athens, 348. Abandons Antony, 356. His death, ib.

Ahiman, one of the three sons of Anak, defeated by Caleb, ii. 207, & n.

Ahimelech put to death by Saul's orders, iii. 547.

Ahitophel revolts to Absalom, iv. 39. His hellish advice to him, 37. Hangs himself, 38.

Ahiut, the son of Phineas, supposed to have succeeded him, iii. 525.

Ahl. Al. Tabkith, a Mohammedan sect, i. 88. Their opinion of the origin of things, ib.

Aholi-bamah. See Bashemah.

Aholibama, a curious artist of the tabernacle, ii. 624.

Athyrt, daughter of Sesostris, ii. 36.

Ai, the king of, repulses the Israelites, ii. 200. Defeated and put to death, 201.

† Ajalon, the valley of, where the sun stood still, iii. 79.

Ajax shipwrecked, v. 557. His tomb, 523.

— king of Salmis, vii. 494.

† Aidab, a port near Mecca, xviii. 207.

Alo defeated and killed, xix. 535.

Ajon, king of the Lombards, xix. 376.

† Air mount, where, xviii. 206.

Air worshipped by the Carthaginians, xvi. 632.

† Aix, in Provence, by whom built, xli. 402.

† Al Arakh, where sited, xviii. 213.

Ala, wing, how composed among the Romans, xiii. 527, & n.

† Al-Bahriva, the eastern part of Delta, 489. Its more probable situation, ib.

I N D E X to the † Al Abba's region whence so called, xviii. 207.

† Al Hegh'r, Hejr, Egra, where sited, xviii. 208.

Alachis's revolt and pardon, xix. 546. Treachery and punishment, 547, 548.

Aladin's sham paradise described, iv. 509, & 510, n. His family and empire, xvi. 507.

† Alæsa, a city in Sicily, vii. 153.

Alala, the Macedonian huzza, viii. 40.

Alamundarus defeated by the Romans, xi. 111.

— abortive threats against the Romans, xvi. 204. Commands the Saracens against them, 307. Repulsed in Syria, ib.

† Alani, where situate, xi. 65, & xiv. 440. Irruption into Media, xi. 68. Revolt against Adrian, xiv. 631. Quelled under Antoninus, 669. Defeat Gordian, xv. 204.

† Alans, where situate, xvi. 11. Ally with the Hunns, ib. Enter Gaul, 179. Settle in Spain, 186. Defeated by Vallia, 200. Submit to Gonderic, ib. Settle along the Loire, 227. Defeated in Italy, 272. Submit to Attila, xix. 61, 62. Invaded by him, 92. By Thorismond, ib. Regain their liberty, 95. Where settled, ib. Defeated by Wallia, 155. Assist the Vandals, 196. Enter Spain, 197. Their territories there, 199.

Alaric, a Frank general under Theodosius, xvi. 101. Dreadful havock in Syria, 122. Promoted by Arcadius, 126. Invades Rome 150. His extract and character, ib. Second invasion, 153. Ravages Italy, ib. Defeated, 155. Exorbitant demands on Honorius, 166. Supported by the barbarians, 171. Blocks up Rome, ib. Raises the siege on very hard terms, 172. Second siege of Rome, 174, & seq. Moderate demands on Honorius, 176. On the city of Rome, 177. Proclaims Attalus through Italy, 179. Deposes him, and confirms Honorius, 182. Treachery to him and Attalus, 183. Takes Rome, ib. Dies, 185. Buried in the bottom of a river, ib.

— driven out by the Hunns, xix. 118. Serves under the Romans, 144. Stirred up by Rufinus, ib. His dreadful ravages, 145, 146. Spirited up by Stilicho, 147. Preferred by Arcadius, ib. Chosen king of the Goths, 150. Irruption into Italy, ib. & seq. Peace with Stilicho, 151. Corrupted by him, ib. Enters Noricum, 152. His death, 153, 294.

† Alba, the kingdom of, by whom founded, v. 558, xi. 282. Why called Longa, ib. Where situate, ib. n. The kings of, ib. & seq.

Alba, demolished by the Romans, xi. 330.

† — the lake of, overflows, xi. 569. Cut into canals, 570.

† Albana, a city in Albania, ix. 612.

† Albania, the kingdom of described, ix. 612, & seq. Why so called, xviii. 685, 686, n.

Albanian soldiers, whence so called, xv. 147. Revolt to Heliogabalus, 148. Murder the two Maximins, 198.

Albanians, their simple manners, ix. 613. Government, &c. 613, & seq. Subdued by Trajan, xiv. 580. Refuse to come to Adrian, 622.

Albans, their contests with the Romans, decided, xi. 325, & seq. Treachery punished, 329, & seq.

† Albanus, the river of, ix. 612.

— St. martyred in Great Britain, xv. 311.

Albia Dominica, married to Valens, xv. 614. Brought to bed of Valentinian, 620.

Albinovanus proscribed, xii. 541. Treachery to the consuls, 566.

Albinus Posthum. a friend to Massiva, xii. 543. Ill success in Numidia, 544. Banishment, ib.

— Lucius murdered by the Moors, xiv. 307.

— Clodius opposes Cassius, xv. 31. Consulship, 37. Success in the North, 55. Against the Frisians, 61. Made governor of Britain, 65. His extract and character, 84. Hatred of monarchy, 85. Gluttony, 86. Described by M. Aurelius, ib. n. Tampered by Severus, 91. Created Cæsar, 96. Assumes the purple, 104. Defeated, ib. & 105. His death, 106.

— ill success against Jugurtha, xvii. 589.

— sent ambassador to Attila, xix. 91.

† Albion, the antient name of Great Britain v. 400, n. xviii. 646.

† Albium, Intemelium, plundered by Otho, xiv. 349.

Albosteda, converted, xix. 282. Dies, ib.

Alboinus's cruelty to Cunemundus, xix. 339. Marries his daughter, 340. Reigns in Italy, 376. Valour and reward, 379, 380. Reign and conquests, ib. & seq. (in Italy) death and character, 387, 388.

Albucilia's condemnation and punishment, xiv. 24, 25.

Alcanna, a shrub in Egypt, described, i. 504.

Alcetas,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Alcetas, king of Macedonia, viii. 48.

— brother of Perdiccas, betrays Eumenes, viii. 368. Proscribed, 371. Joins himself to him, 372. Defeated, 374. His death, ib.

— first king of Epirus, driven out, ix. 538.

— second, defeated by Cassander, ix. 542: Murdered, 543.

Alcibiades, the rival of Nicias, his character, vi. 288, & seq. Leagues with the Argives, 290, 291, n. Descent into Melos, 295. Accused of sacrilege, 297. Retires to Sparta, 298. In high esteem there, 299, 465. Sent to invade Ionia, 305. Cabals against the Athenians, ib. & seq. Recalled, 310. Beats the confederates, 316. Takes Byzantium, 318. Stripped of his command, 319. His retirement and death, 327, & n.

— invades Sicily, vii. 189. & seq. Recalled to Athens, 192.

Alcimalus settles democracy in Greece, viii. 163.

Alcimus promoted to the Jewish high priesthood, x. 152. Brings a war in Judea, ib. Perfidy to the Assideans, 153. His dreadful end, 166.

— his writings and character, xv. 512, n.

Alcymus, king of Lydia, v. 579.

Alcyonius generously reprov'd by Phyrhus, viii. 473, 474.

Alectrio, a sacred person among the Syrians, ii. 294.

† Alemans, Alemanni, where seated, xv. 132. First ravage the empire, ib. Why so called, xviii. 572, n. Their origin, xix. 320. Territories, government, &c. 321. Wars, ib. & seq. Ravaged by Maximin, 322. Defeated in Gaul, ib. By Claudius, 322, 323. By Aurelian, ib. Break into Italy, ib. Defeated, 324. Sixty thousand cut off by Chlorus, 325. Defeated by Julian, 326—328. Break into Gaul, 329. Thrice defeated there, 330. Peace with Valentinian, 331, 332. Break it, 333. Defeated by Gratian, ib. Settled in Switzerland, ib. In Alsace, 334. Defeated and dispersed by Clovis, ib.

Aleppo, taken by Hyrcan, x. 198.

Aleria, taken by Scipio, xvii. 245. By the Romans, xii. 117.

Aletes invades Corinth, vi. 45.

— deified for discovering a silver mine, xvii. 457, n.

Aletus sent to view the effects of a dreadful earthquake, xiii. 575.

Aleus's cruelty to his daughter, vi. 11. & n.

Alexamenus sent to assassinate Nabis, vi. 547. vii. 29, & seq. Massacred by the Spartans, vi. 548. vii. 30, 31.

Alexander the son of Priam. Vid. Paris, v. 549.

— son of Amyntas, his noble revenge against the Persians, v. 107.

— stratagem against their ambassadors, viii. 51, & seq. Speech to the Athenians, 56, 57. Warns them against Marodonius, 59. Generosity to the Argives, 60.

— II. succeeds Amyntas II. viii. 73. Outwits the Thessalians, ib. His death, 74.

— the Great, born, viii. 84, & n. Made regent during Philip's absence, 103. Saves his life, 115. His encounter with Attalus, 125. Recalled to court, 127. Whether privy to his father's murder, 134, 135, n. His character, education, &c. 129, 130, n. & 140. Declared general of Greece, 143. Invades the Triballi, &c. 144. & seq. Sudden return into Greece, 147. Takes and sacks Thebes, 149, & seq. Visits Diogenes, 153. Expedition into Asia, 155. Victory at the Granicus, 158. Comes to Ephesus, 163. Why he dismisses his fleet, 164. Invades Caria, 168. Quells a conspiracy, 171, & n. His passage through the ladders, whether miraculous, 172, n. March through Phrygia, 173. Cuts the Gordian knot, 175. Enters Cilicia, 176. Fights Darius, at Issus, 180, & seq. His generosity to his family, 181, n. Invades Cœlosyria, 184. Letter to Darius, 186. Moderation towards the Greek ambassadors, 188. Cruelty to the Tyrians, 194, 195. Answer to Darius, 196. Respect to the Jewish high-priest, 197. Takes Gaza, 198. Journey, and new city, in Egypt, 201, 202. Consults the oracle there, 205. Settles the Egyptian government, 207. Passes the Euphrates and Tigris, 209. Victory at Gagamela, 212, & seq. March to Babylon, 216. To Susa, 222. Destroys Persepolis, 224, & seq. Marches into Media, 227. Pursues Darius's assassins, 231. Vain attempt against luxury, 237. Conspired against for it, 240. Severity to the conspirators, 243. Cruelty to the Branchidæ, 251, n. Ill success against the Scythians, 255. Degenerates, 262, & seq. Kills Clytus, 266, & seq. Conspired against, 277. Re-enters Sogdia, 281. Love to Roxana, 286. March towards Indus, 289, & seq. Cruelty to the Indians, 293, 294. Passes the Indus and Hydaspes, 298, 300. Treatment of king Porus, 304. Penetrates further into India, 305, & seq. Stops at the river Hypasis, 307. His strange vanity, 309, 310, n. Embarks his army, 313. In great danger from the Malli, 316. Sails down the Indus into the ocean, 322. Goes by land to Babylon, 324. Takes two wives, 332. Generosity to his army, 333. Quells a mutiny on the Tigris, 334. Marches into Media, 335. To Babylon, 339, 340, n. Threatened by ill omens, 341, & seq. & n. His death, 344, & seq. & n. Character, 347. Vast designs set aside, 361. Buried in Egypt, 367. Some account of him out of the Oriental writers, v. 358. & seq. Visits the tomb of Achilles, 523. Outwitted by the Lampfacians, 563, & seq. His friendship to the Jews, x. 64. Revenge on the Samaritans, 67. His tomb shut up with all the learned books, xv. 111. Visited by Caracalla, 133.

Alexander, the son of the former, viii. 349. Imprisoned by Cassander, 451. Murdered, ib.

—— the son of Polysperchon, his character, viii. 434. Favoured by Antigonus, 446. Made general of Peloponnesus, 447. Murdered, ib.

—— the son of Cassander, drives his brother out of Macedon, viii. 475. Put to death by Demetrius, ib. 411, & 459.

—— king of Epirus, allies with Philip, ix. 538. Wars with the Brutii, 539. Deceived by an oracle, ib. & seq. Defeated and killed, 540, 541. His character, ib.

—— the son of Pyrrhus, invades Macedon, viii. 474, & ix. 576. Driven out by Demetrius, viii. 475.

—— the son of Perseus, sent prisoner to Rome, viii. 530. Forced to a private life, 533.

—— a sham son of Perseus, invades Macedon, viii. 543.

—— prince of Syria, revolts against Antiochus, viii. 600. His tragical end, 607.

—— Balas, set up against Demetrius, ix. 110. Courts the Jews, 113. Vid. x. 169. His letter to Jonathan, ib. Great honours to that pontif, 171, & 174, & n. Kills Demetrius, ix. 115. Marries Cleopatra, ib. Degenerates, 116. & seq. Abandoned by Philometor, 123. Defeated and killed, ib. 119. His character, 122, & seq. & n. Coin, 169. n.

—— Zebina, set up against Demetrius, ix. 146, & n. His character, 149. Assisted by the Jews, x. 402. Defeated by Physcon, 150. Death, ib. Coin, 171, n.

—— the son of Physcon, set up against his elder brother, ix. 247. Kills his mother, 252. Defeated and killed, 253.

—— the grandson of Physcon, murders Cleopatra, ix. 259, & seq. Banished for his cruelties, 260. Bequeaths Egypt to the Romans, 261.

—— the Pherean, wars against the king of Macedon, viii. 73. Murdered, 87.

—— the son of Eropas, conspires against Alexander the Great, viii. 170, 171, & n.

—— king of Emessa, taken prisoner, ix. 634.

—— the son of Hyrcan, his first education, x. 204, n. Why surnamed Jannæus, ib. Imprisoned by Aristobulus, 208. Mounts the throne, 211. His fratricide, ib. Ill success against Ptolemais, 212. Defeated by Lathyrus, ibid. & seq. By Theodotus, 213. His bloody revenge on the Gazeans, 214. Affronted at the altar, 214, 215, & n. Cruel revenge for it, 215. Defeated by the Syrians, 217, & seq. Cruelty to the rebels, his wars, conquests, 218, 219, 220, & n. Vid. & ix. 158, 248, & seq. Why spared by Cleopatra, 251. His death, x. 220. Last advice to his queen, ib. & seq.

—— the son of Aristobulus, escapes out of Pompey's hands, x. 241, & seq. Wastes Judea, 243. Defeated by the Romans, 244. Besieged by them, ib. Defeated by Gabinius, 246. By Cassius, 248. Beheaded by Pompey, 249.

—— the brave son of Herod, married to Glaphyra, x. 312. Pleads his own cause before Augustus, 314. His desperate confession, 317, 318. Condemned, and put to death, 321.

—— the pretended son of Mariamne, raises a party, x. 407. Discovered by Augustus, ib.

—— Tiberius, made governor of Judea, x. 564.

—— king of Epirus, invades Italy, xi. 654. Allies with Rome, ib.

—— the Epicurean's opinion of the origin of things, i. 87.

—— pretor of Ætolia's speech to the Roman consuls, vii. 21, & seq.

—— the orator, made general of the Rhodians, xiii. 243. Defeated, 244.

—— the son of Cleopatra, made king of Armenia, xiii. 346.

—— the Roman emperor, born, xv. 146. Adopted by Heliogabalus, 154. Hated and degraded by him, ib. Saved by the soldiers, ib. Proclaimed emperor, 155. His extract and excellent education, 156. Character, ib. Respect for the christians, 157. Reforms the state, 158. Marries Sulpitia Memmia, ib. Mildness to Camillus, 159. Expedition into Germany, 160. Retires into Campania, 163. Treatment of Artaxerxes's ambassadors, ib. Noble speech to the revolted legion, 164. Admirable discipline,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

pline, 165. Various accounts of his Persian expedition, 167. Victory over them, ib. Speech to the senate, ib. Triumph, 169. Hastens against the Germans, ib. Murdered there, 171. His excellent character, ib. & seq. Public works, 175. Learning, 176. Cotemporary authors, ib. n.

Alexander bishop of Jerusalem, martyred, xv. 217.

—— bishop of Constantinople, his zeal and death, xv. 412.

—— a cruel governor of Antioch, xv. 540.

—— the brother of Leo, made regent, xvi. 408. His vile character, 409. Death, ib.

Alexandra, queen of the Jews, gains over the Pharisees, x. 221, & seq. Embassy to Tigranes, 225, & ix. 333. Supplanted by Aristobulus, x. 225. Her death, 226. Falsely confounded with Salome, 227, n.

—— daughter of Hyrcan, cabals against Herod, x. 283. Resentment for the death of her sons, 286. Imprisoned, 288. Confined at Massada, 294, 295. Base behaviour to her excellent daughter, 298. Put to death, 299.

—— the temple of, at Amyclæ, vi. 49.

† Alexandria, the metropolis of the lower Egypt, i. 488. When and by whom built, viii. 202. Besieged by Antiochus, ix. 76. Filled with Jews, x. 67. Court- ed by Cleopatra, x. 212. The massacre of, 575.

† —— rebuilt by Adrian, xiv. 633. Enriched by M. Aurelius xv. 38. Ruined by Caracalla, 135. In a dreadful case under Macrianus, 237. Plundered by the Romans, 305. Laid under water, 537.

† —— the museum of, described, xiv. 623.

† —— in Cilicia, by whom built, v. 597.

† —— upon the Sinus Issicus, ii. 263.

Alexandrians, their fidelity to Philometor, ix. 76. Opposed by Physcon, 238. & seq. Massacred, 242. Fifty thousand Jews murdered there, x. 575.

—— raise a tumult against Cæsar, xiii. 78. Base condescension to Caligula, xiv. 60. Flattery to Nero, 224. Ingratitude to Adrian, 623. Massacred for lampooning Caracalla, xv. 135. Acknowledge Æmilianus, 241.

Alexandrian library described, ix. 184. Destroyed by the Saracens, 186.

† —— Alexandrion, the fortress of, described, x. 235. n.

Alexas, Salome's husband, releases the Jewish chiefs, x. 393. Speech to the army, 394.

Alexius the patriarch's base complaisance to Zoe, xvi. 443.

—— Comnenus, founds the empire of Trapezond, xviii. 311. See Comnenus, &c.

Alexon defeats a piece of Roman treachery, xvii. 271.

Alexius. See Alexander the Roman emperor, xv. 155.

Alfius Mar: defeated by the Romans, x. 235.

Alford, father, confuted, xv. 336.

† Algæ, a city in Eubæa described, vii. 647.

Algebra, known among the Egyptians, i. 579.

† Aliacmon, a river in Thessaly, vi. 16. In Macedon, viii. 22.

† Aliphera described, vi. 582, n.

† Aliso, river, its course, xiii. 554, & n.

Allienus left prætor in Sicily, xiii. 92. Brings succours to Cæsar, 95. Made pro- consul of Sicily, 114.

Allies, the war of, xii. 515. A general revolt of them, 518. Their success against the Romans, 520. & seq. Revolt to Cinna, ib. & seq.

† Allobroges ambassadors discover Cati- line's conspiracy, xii. 635.

—— oppressed by Valens, xiv. 357. Where situate, xviii. 556, & n.

† Allon Baccuth, why so called, ii. 455.

Almah, Jewish virgins, whence so called, iii. 354, & n.

Almodad, the son of Joktan, uncertain where he settled, i. 474.

† Almopians, where situate, viii. 14.

† Alopeconnesus, where situate, ix. 511.

Alorus, the same with Adam, 269.

Alphabet, how enlarged by Claudius, xiv. 100, & 101, n. Hebrew and Samari- tan, iii. 444.

Alpharag writes in defence of the Saddu- cees, x. 359.

† Alpheus, the famous river, described, vi. 69, & n.

Alphinus's rise and character, xiii. 441, n.

Alpinus, Jul, put to death by Cæcins, xiv. 339.

† Alps,

† Alps, Apennine hills, whence so called, v. 401. Augustus's monument upon, xiii. 377.

Altars, their structure among the Scythians, v. 451.

Althamenes, why settled in Crete, vii. 403.

Althea, the fable of, vi. 78, 79, n.

—— the city of taken by Hannibal, xii. 179.

Altinius, severely punished by Hannibal, xvii. 426.

Alusianus, undermined at Constantinople, xix. 423. Treachery to Deleanus, ib. Submits to the emperor Michael, ib. & 424.

Alyathes's wars with the Scythians, &c. v. 582. His tomb, 571.

Alynothoe, Priam's wife. Vid. Arisba, v. 549.

Amadocus, king of the Odrysæ, ix. 519.

Amalaric, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, xix. 118.

—— in Spain, his territories restored, xix. 437, 442.

Amalasuntha married to Eutaric, xix. 441. Her excellent administration and character, ib. & seq. Opposed by the Gothic lords, 442. Makes Theodotus her colleague, 448. Imprisoned by him, 450. Put to death, ib.

Amalek, the son of Esau, and father of the Amalekites, ii. 171. One of the dukes of Edom, 172. His genealogy according to the Arabians, 171, 172, n. The tribe of, xviii. 219.

Amalekites, their descent, ii. 171. Why severed from Esau's line, 172. Their first settlement, 173. Use of Circumcision, 175. Their government, arts, &c. ib. & seq. Fall foul on the Israelites, 177. Defeated by Joshua, ib. By Saul, 178. By David, 179. Burn Ziklah, and run away with the plunder, ib. Defeated afresh, 180. Utterly destroyed by the Simeonites, ib. Why laid under a perpetual anathema by Moses, 598, iii. 222. Whether the same with the Greek Shepherds, 290. The Arabians and Egyptians account of them, 172, 176, n. Supposed to have fled into Afric, ib.

Amali, the princely tribe of, xix. 107, 118, 441.

Amalric digged up and burnt for his false doctrine of God, i. 87.

Amalthea, one of Jupiter's nurses, vii. 471.

Amatidus's revolt in Gaul, xv. 294. Defeated, 397.

Amantius conspires against Justin, xvi. 303.

Amasa, treacherously murdered by Joab, iv. 43.

† Amasia, a city in Pontus, described, ix. 372.

Amasiah succeeds his father Joab, iv. 124. Defeats the Edomites, 125. His idolatry, ib. Defeat and death, 126, 128, & seq.

Amasis dethrones Apries, ii. 68. His stratagem to gain respect from the Egyptians, 69. Magnificent portico at Sais, 70. Other stately works, ib. & seq. Visited by Solon, 71. Marries a Greek, ib. A miracle pretended on that occasion, 72. His donatives to Greece, ib. Subdues Cyprus, ib. His latter days, why unhappy, 73. Betrayed by Phanes, 74. Falls out with Polycrates, 75. His letter to him, vii. 522. Breaks his alliance with him, and why, 523. His death, ib. His body dug up and burnt, ii. 76, 78.

Amasis, Ammosis, dethroned by his subjects for his oppressions, ii. 44.

—— his body abused by Cambyfes, v. 87.

—— stratagem against Barca, xviii. 71, 72, & n.

Amestris, murdered by her sons, ix. 587.

† —— the city of, built by her, ix. 587.

† Amatha, the palace of, burnt, x. 403, n.

† Amathus, a city of Cyprus, vii. 487.

—— taken by Janneus, x. 213. Destroyed by him, 215. Made one of the five courts of judicature, 244.

Amazons, mothers of the Sarmatians, v. 439. Their Scythian name, 461, 462. An account of those female warriors, 464, n. Overcome by Hercules and Theseus, 653, n. Some further account of them, ix. 373.

Amathusians, why they sacrifice to Onesilus, ix. 496.

Amber, plenty of, in Prussia, xviii. 582, 583.

Amibiani subdued by Cæsar, xiii. 16.

Ambiganus sends colonies into Italy, xi. 576.

Ambiorix over-reaches the Romans, xiii. 25. Defeated, 29. His account of his regal power, xviii. 496.

† Ambracia, a city in Epirus, ix. 528. Taken by Philip, vi. 578. By the Romans, vii. 57, 61.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Ambracian gulph, where situate, xiii. 355.

Ambraciots drive away the Macedonians, vi. 369.

Ambrones defeated by Marius, xii. 491.

Ambrosian women, their valour, xii. 491.

Ambrose, St. his rise and acquaintance with Probus, xv. 608. Highly esteemed by Gratian, xvi. 35. Noble speech to the usurper Maximus, 54. To Theodosius, 83. Sent to baptize Valentinian, 93. His panegyric on that prince, 95. Letter to Eugenius, 96. Condemns the Thessalonian massacre, 108. Letters to queen Frigil, 131. His death, 133.

Ambrosius, Aurel. succeeds Vortigern, xix. 19. Defeats the Saxons, ib. His progress through England, 20. Victories over the Saxons, 21.

Ambustus, Fab. his untimely complaisance to his daughter, xi. 611. Chosen military tribune, 613. His success against the Tyburtes, 637. Chosen dictator, 640.

Amenophis, supposed by some to be the same with Belus, ii. 555, n. Conjectures about the time of his reigning, ib. n.

† America, how first peopled, &c. i. 299. Whether the Atlantis of Plato, xviii. 83.

Americans speak of a flood, i. 280.

Amelius's writings and character, xv. 372, n.

Amida, the god of the Japanese, i. 145.

† ——— the city of, destroyed by Sapor, xi. 98. Taken and preserved by Cavades, 121. Surrendered to the Romans, 122. Fortified by Constantius, xv. 435. Besieged by Sapor, 493. Its dreadful catastrophe, 494. Restored by the Nisibians, 569. Taken by the Persians, xvi. 298. Restored to the Romans, 299.

† Amiens new peopled by the Franks, xv. 305.

Aminadab, the father-in-law of Aaron, ii. 549.

Aminander, king of Acarnania, joins with the Ætolians, vii. 17. Dethroned, 55, 56. Restored, ib. Intercedes for them, 61.

Aminias, a Rhodian chief, killed, vii. 423.

Amisodarus, king of Lycia, v. 593.

† Amisus, a city in Pontus, described, ix. 372. Surrendered to Lucullus, 427, 428.

Amitta, the father of Jonah, iv. 129, & n.

Amiternum taken by Cervilius, xii. 68.

† Ammer mount, where sited, xviii. 52.

VOL. XX.

† Ammianus Marcellinus, an account of his history, xi. 99, n. Goes with Ursicinus to Rome, xv. 465. Into the east, 493. Joins him at Mitylene, 495. His character of Julian, 551. & seq. A chafin in his history, xvi. 18. His writings and character, 24, n.

Ammihud, king of Geshur, ii. 327.

Ammon, the son of Lot, by his youngest daughter, ii. 116.

——king of Judah's idolatry, iv. 160. Death, ib.

——Jupiter, the temple and oracle of, viii. 204. Its pleasant situation, xviii. 62. Dialogue with Alexander the Great, 63, n.

Ammonites, their origin, ii. 116. Where settled, ib. Their religion, laws, &c. 118. Dispossessed by Sihon the Amorite, 121. Recover it, till driven out by Jephthah, 122. Defeated by Saul, 123. And David, 124. An account of that war, 125, & seq. Destroyed by David's forces, 127. Defeated by Jehosaphat, ib. Brought under tribute to Uzziah, 128. To Jotham, ib. Subdued and carried captives by the Babylonians, 129. Obstruct the rebuilding of the temple, ib. Subdued by Judas Maccabeus, ib. Flourished still in the second century after Christ, ib. Now blended with the Arabians, 130. Excluded from the congregation till the tenth generation, iii. 321. The reason of it, ib. & ii. 103, 104, & 118.

Ammonius, the scholar of Proclus's doctrine of the eternity of the world, i. 81.

——governor of Antioch, his cruelties, ix. 116. Murdered by the Antiochians, 120.

——writes against the Sadducees, x. 358.

Ammon, the son of David's incest with Tamar, iv. 30. Murdered by Absalom, 31.

† Amorites, antient inhabitants of Canaan, ii. 181. Hedge the Danites in the mountains, 208. Reduced by them and the house of Joseph, ib. Subdued and enslaved by Solomon, 214.

Amorium, taken by the Saracens, xvi. 346. Retaken, 347. Why engraven on their shields, 394. Betrayed and razed, ib.

Amosis, king of Diospolis, conjectures about the time of his reign, 607, n. And his abolishing human sacrifices at Heliopolis, 566.

Amphares, the murder of Agis and family, vi. 524, & seq.

Amphæa surprized by the Lacedæmonians, vi. 285.

C

† Amphaxia

I N D E X to the † Amphaxis, the region of, described, viii. 12.

Amphialus settles at Pergamus, ix. 536.

Amphiarus, a famed soothsayer, drawn into the Theban war, v. 634. His temple at Rhamnus, 641.

Amphicrates, wars against Ægina, vii. 519.

Amphyction, the son of Deucalion king of Athens, v. 645.

Amphyctions, the general court of Greece, held at Delphos, vi. 30. Some instances of their high power, ib. & seq. Declare for Alexander the Great, 361. Condemn the Locrians, viii. 116. Chuse Philip their general, ib.

Amphylitus's prophecy to Pisistratus, vi. 158.

Amphimachus's lot after Alexander's death, viii. 372.

Amphion, the usurper of the Theban throne, v. 668.

Amphipolis taken from the Athenians, vi. 285. Rejects the Nicean peace, 288. Taken by king Philip, 348. Vid. viii. 64, 82.

Amphipolus of Syracuse, his office, vii. 294.

Amphitryon conquers Cephalonia, vii. 631.

Amphitryon's wife deflowered by Jupiter, v. 628. His fatal end, ib.

† Amplissa, the metropolis of Ozolea Locria, vi. 82, & 83, n. By whom built, ibid. & n. Destroyed and rebuilt, ib. Besieged by the Romans, vii. 55.

† Anapsaga, river, where, xvii. 550. Described, ib.

Amram, the father of Moses, his extract, ii. 519, 520.

† Amfivari, a tribe of the Franks, xix. 235.

Amulius dethrones his brother, xi. 283. His cruelty to his offspring, ib. & seq. Murdered, 286.

† Amur, a river in Scythia, v. 441.

Amurat's success in Europe, xvi. 539. Severity to his son, 540. His death, ib.

— II, repulsed before Constantinople, xvi. 543. Defeated over and over by John Huniades, 544. Signal victory over him, 545. Haughty demands on the emperor John, ib. & seq. His death, 546.

† Amyclæ, the city of, described, vi. 49. Taken by the Messenians, 421.

Amyclas, king of Lacedemon, vi. 55, & seq.

Amyclean security, a proverb whence, vi. 56.

Amycus, king of the Berbraces, defeated by Pollux, vi. 20, n.

Amyntas invades Egypt, v. 220, & n. Cut off by the Persians, ib. & n.

— his reception of the Persian ambassadors, viii. 48, 50, & seq. Zeal for the Persians, 54, & seq. Cuts off the usurper, 71. Subdues the Olynthians, 72.

— Alexander's governor, murdered, viii. 147.

— his general, suspected of treason, viii. 245. Cleared, ibid.

— a Galatian prince abandons Brutus, xiii. 272. Follows Antony, 353. Leaves him in the lurch, 356. His death, 377.

Amynus and Magus, famed in the Phœnician records, i. 389.

Amyrteus, driven by the Persians into the fens of Egypt, ii. 81. Drives them out of the kingdom, ib. Defeated by them, and dies, ib.

Anac, Anax, the father of the Anakims, xvi. 588, & n. Whence so called, ib. See further in Anak.

Anacharsis, put to death for bringing the Grecian worship into Scythia, v. 447, n. 479.

Anacles, or Dioscuri, at Carthage, xvi. 637, & 638, n.

Anak, one of the seven dukes of Edom, ii. 161. The meaning of his finding the mules in the wood, ib. n. The progenitor of the Anakims, 205, n. His three sons driven out by Caleb, 207, & n.

Anakims invaded and cut off by the Israelites, ii. 205. Their origin, ib. n.

Anameltch, an Assyrian deity, how represented, iv. 204.

† Ananim, who so called, i. 464. Where settled, ib.

Ananael, an obscure priest, made high-priest, x. 283. Deposed, 284.

† Ananes, where settled in Italy, xi. 576.

Ananias, a Jewish time-server, ix. 637. — a famed Jew of Alexandria, x. 212. His advice to Cleopatra, ib.

— the son of Nebedeus, made high-priest, x. 564. Murdered by the Zelots, 576.

Ananus, a proud Sadducee, made high-priest, x. 571. Puts St. James to death, ib. & n. His fatal complaisance to the sicarii, ib. Made governor of Jerusalem, 578. Heads the peaceable party there, 586. Betrayed by Gischala, ib. Put to death, 587.

Anuphas I. and II. kings of Cappadocia, ix. 462, 463.

† Anapus, a river in Sicily, vii. 146.

† An

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Anas, river, in Lusitania, xviii. 332.
 Anastasia, daughter to Constantius, xv. 334. Married to Bassianus, 335. Murdered by the soldiers, 431.
 — daughter of Valens, xvi. 24.
 — wife of Tiberius, created Augusta, xvi. 323. Insulted by her son's ministers, 351.
 Anastasius created emperor, xvi. 292. His rise, extract, &c. ib. & seq. Excellent beginning, 293. Insulted on account of a new tax, 295. Narrowly escapes being massacred, 296. Invaded by the Persians, 297. Makes a long truce with them, 299. His long wall built, ib. Persecutes the orthodox, 300. Treachery to Vitalianus, 301. Death and character, 302. Confirms Theodoric king of Italy, xix. 188.
 — patriarch of Antioch, massacred by the Jews, xvi. 333.
 — Phocas's minister's conspiracy and death, xvi. 334.
 — Artemius proclaimed emperor, xvi. 386. His excellent character, ib. Banished, 357. Resumes his claim, 359. Put to death, 360.
 Anathema, among the Jews, some instances of, vii. 247.
 Anatomy, early cultivated in Egypt, i. 583.
 Anaxagoras, the Ionic philosopher, his doctrine, i. 110. Reforms that sect, 112. His notion of two eternal principles, 126, & seq. Of the origin of the world, 132, 133.
 — Pericles's preceptor, accused of impiety, vi. 258. His philosophy and banishment, ib. n.
 Anaxander, king of Sparta, vi. 418.
 Anaxarchus pounded to death, vii. 478, 479.
 — the sophist's flattering speech to Alexander, viii. 272.
 Anaxidamas, king of Sparta, vi. 418.
 Anaxandrides, king of Sparta's character, vi. 429.
 Anaximander, his origin of things, i. 111. Doctrine and writings, ib. & seq.
 Anaximenes's origin of things, i. 112.
 — saves Lampisachus, viii. 157.
 † Anazarbum, a city in Cilicia Propria, v. 597.
 Ancaeus, one of the pilots of the Argonauts, vi. 21, n.
 Ancharus's singular love for his country, v. 517.
 — massacred by Marius, xii. 550.
 † Anchiale, in Cilicia Propria, by whom Anchises saved from the flames of Troy, v. 542.

 Anchor, why borne by the Seleucidae, viii. 553, & n.
 † Ancona, the port of, built by Trajan, xiv. 588.
 † Ancyra, by whom built, v. 515. Taken by Cosrhoes, xi. 167.
 Ancyrean marble, described, xiii. 473, 478.
 Ancus Mart. chosen king of Rome, xi. 333. His success against the Latins, 334. Against the Sabines, 335, & seq. His death, 337.
 Andate, her temple in Britain, xviii. 656.
 † Anderchester, razed by the Saxons, xix. 21, 22.
 † Andes, mountains of Peru, their height, i. 295, n. Whether the Sephar of Moses, 474.
 Andranodorus, son-in-law to Hiero, vii. 339. Debauches young Hieronymus, 340. Becomes head of a party, 345, & seq. Submits to the senate, 347, 348. Undermines the republic, 349, & seq. Put to death, 350.
 Andrew, called by Christ, x. 423. Made an apostle, 444, n.
 Andrians, their answer to Themistocles, vii. 598.
 Andriscus set up for the son of Perseus, viii. 534. Sent prisoner to Rome, 536. Escapes into Thrace, ib. Invades Macedonia, 538. Beats the Romans, 540. Defeated, 542. Sent prisoner to Rome, 543.
 — refuses to succour the Carthaginians, xvii. 530.
 Androcles, king of Mycene, killed in a fray, vi. 404.
 Androclus leads the Ionians to Ephesus, vii. 114.
 Androestus invades the Romans, xii. 172. Kills himself, 174.
 Androgeus, the son of Minos, killed at Athens, v. 648, 649. vii. 473.
 Andromachus restored by the Rhodians, vii. 430.
 — noble answer to the Carthaginians, xvii. 125.
 — his poem on theriac, xiv. 293, n.
 Andronicus forced to surrender Tyre, viii. 391.
 — Perseus, put to death, viii. 506.
 — the murderer of Onias, put to death, ix. 69. Vid. x. 107, 108.
 — a cruel governor of Samaria, ix. 75.
 — excommunicated and degraded, xvi. 186.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Andronicus Ducas, betrayed by Samonas, xvi. 406. Flees to the Saracens, ib. His death, 407.

— the son of Ducas, left under guardianship, xvi. 459. Treachery to Diog. Romanus, 462.

— revolts against Alexius, xvi. 491. Declared his guardian, 492. His horrid butcheries and impiety, ib. & seq. Defeated by William king of Sicily, 494. His dreadful end, 495. The rest see under Paleologus.

Andronidas unjustly condemned, vi. 675.

† Andros, island, described, vii. 597. Subdued by the Athenians, 598.

† — the metropolis of the island, besieged by Themistocles, vii. 598. Its ruins described, ibid.

Androtheneis defeated by Nicostratus, vi. 616.

Anebo, a famed Egyptian priest, i. 99.

Aneptia put to death by Simplicius, xv. 604.

† Angaucani, where seated, xviii. 4.

Angels, the meaning of that word, i. 175. Their nature, 177. Almost universally acknowledged, 176, & seq. Their several degrees, 179. The fallen angels, and their offence, 180, & seq. Tutelar, believed by Jews and Gentiles, 178. Some absurd opinions confuted, 246, n. Traditions concerning them among the Turks, Persians, &c. 249, n. & seq.

— Worshipped by the Arabs, xviii. 225.

† Angiers, seized on by Childeric, xix. 269.

† Angles, Anglo-Saxons, their coming into England, xvi. 54. Their origin, xix. 9. Settlement, ib. Joined to the Saxons, ib. Why called Angli, 10, 11. Assist the Britons, 14. A tribe of the Suevi, 30.

† Anglesey, taken by the Romans, xiv. 206. xviii. 704, & seq. Some brutish customs among them, xiv. 206, & seq. Retaken by Agricola, 446.

Anglia, whence so called, xix. 9.

† Angrivarii dispossess the Bructerii, xiii. 528, n. Put them to fire and sword, 555. Where fixed, ib. n. Submit, and are pardoned, 560. Their gratitude, 561.

Anicetus invades Pontus, ix. 455. Delivered up to the Romans, 456.

— his contrivance for drowning Nero's mother, xiv. 194. Defeated, 197. Sent to dispatch her, 198. Murders her, 199.

— revolts in Pontus, xiv. 411. Defeated, ib. His death, ib.

Anicius triumphs over Illyricum, viii. 598. xii. 323, 326.

Animals, monstrous, mentioned by Berofus, i. 266. Worshipped by the Egyptians, 551.

Anio, the battle of, xi. 617, 629.

Anna, the daughter of Metinus, ii. 380.

— the prophetess, her testimony of Christ, x. 351.

— the empress, instigated against Cantacusen, xvi. 485. Deceived by his enemies, 486.

— Perenna worshipped at Carthage, xvi. 632.

Annas deposed from the high priesthood, x. 413. Sends Jesus to Caiaphas, 500. Two of his sons succeed in the dignity, 571, n.

Annæus Serenus, a confidant of Nero's amours, xiv. 174. His character, ib. n.

— Cornut. banished by Nero, xiv. 269. His excellent character and writings, ib. & 270, n.

Annian family, xv. 1, & seq. Converted to christianity, xvi. 85.

Annibalianus made king of Pontus, xv. 334. Murdered by the soldiers, 431.

Annius's forged history, how discovered, viii. 581.

— king of Delos, vii. 608.

— L. his embassy rejected by the senate, xi. 654.

— success against Sertorius, xii. 552.

Annonæ præfectus, his office, xv. 595.

Anointing, why used by the ancients, xvii. 363, n.

Anquialum taken by the Goths, xix. 128.

† Ansuarii, Anfinarii, who, and why so called, xix. 237, 238.

Antæus's kingdom, when began, xvii. 571, & seq. His shield worshipped by the Moors, xviii. 26. One of the first kings of Mauritania, 31. Overcome by Hercules, ib. The rest see under Atlas, ibid. & seq.

Antalcidas, the peace of, v. 182. vi. 341. Dishonourable to the Greeks, ib. & 494, n.

† Antandros, island, whence so called, vii. 597.

Antediluvian patriarchs, a chronological table of, i. 218. Their genealogy, 232.

— kings of Chaldea, their history 268.

— world, the state and religion of, 308. The causes of their longevity, 310-312.

† Antemnæ, where sited, xi. 301. Taken by Romulus, 302.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Antenor's embassy into Greece, v. 542. Lands with the Heneti, on the Adriatic shore, 543. His progeny, 544.

Anthakash, the Oriental name of Antiochus, xi. 179, n.

Anthemius's rise, xvi. 159. Excellent government, 172. 186. Extract and character, 173. Resigns to Pulcheria, 195. Beats the Hunns, &c. 270, 273. Reception at Rome, 274. Deposed by Ricimer, 279. See also vol. xix. 213.

† Anthropophagi, who, and where, xviii. 94.

Antiates, defeated by Camillus, xi. 594. Submit to the Romans, xii. 30, & n.

Antigenes's lot after Alexander's death, viii. 372. Treachery to Eumenes, 385. Cruel punishment, 386.

Antigone, buried alive for burying her brother, v. 671.

— daughter of Laomedon, a haughty princess, v. 548.

† Antigonía, razed by Seleucus, viii. 563.

Antigonus, deified by the Athenians, vi. 372. Chosen general by the Achæans, 566. Abandons the Argives, 567, 568. Beats the Lacedemonians, 533, 569. Takes Sparta, 535, 571. Death, 572.

— his lot after Alexander's death, viii. 359, 372. Defeats Alcetas, 374, & seq. Outwitted and defeated by Eumenes, 375. Treachery to him and his friends, 383, & seq. Marches into Babylon, 387. Seizes on Syria and Phenice, 389. Invaded by the confederates, 397. Takes the title of king, 400. His extract, &c. 401, & seq. Ill success in Egypt, 402, & seq. And against the confederates, 405, & seq. Slain at Issus, 408.

— the son of Demetrius, his filial piety, viii. 420. Singular gentleness, 460.

— Gonatus, seizes Macedon, viii. 470. Defeats the Gauls, 471. Success against Pyrrhus, ib. & seq. Deserted by his men, 474. Takes the citadel of Corinth, 476. His death, 477.

— Dofon, regent of Macedon, viii. 479. Friendship to Aratus, 481. Success against Cleomenes, 482, & seq. Kindness to the Spartans, 483. His death, ib.

— seizes on Judæa, x. 78. His cruelties there, 79, & seq.

— Socho, made president of the fanhedrim, x. 81. His doctrine, death, &c. ib. & 90.

— the son of Hyrcan, sent against Samaria, x. 202. Put to death, 208.

— the son of Aristobulus, sent prisoner to Rome, x. 241. His petition to Cæfar rejected, 251. Invades Judæa, 262. Defeated by Herod, 263. His second invasion, 265. Besieged in the temple, 266, & seq. Inthroned, 269. Cruelty to Hyrcan, &c. ib. & seq. Over-reached, and driven from Massada, 271, 272. His charge against the Roman senate, 273. Defeated by Herod, 276. Besieged and taken, 277, 278. Put to death by M. Antony, 279, & 280, n.

† Antiliban, mount, whence so called, i. 258.

Antillus stabbed in the capitol, xii. 412, 413.

Antinous's death, an account of, xiv. 624.

† Antioch, upon the Orontes, a famed city of the Mediterranean Seleucis, ii. 264.

† — the metropolis of Syria, viii. 552. By whom built, 563, 564, n. Described, ib. & seq. Burned by the Jews, ix. 128. Besieged by the Parthians, xi. 39. Taken by Chosrhoes, 134. Declares for Cæsar, xiii. 72. Damaged by an earthquake, xiv. 587. By fire, 671. Rebuilt by Antoninus, ib. Punished for siding with Cassius, xv. 37. Disfranchised and restored by Severus, 101. Plundered by Sapor, 228. Retaken by Valerian, ib. Razed by Sapor, 233. Relieved from a famine by Constantine, 409. Depopulated by a fresh famine, 527. Raises a sedition, xvi. 70. Severely punished for it, 71, & seq. Pardoned by Theodosius, 77. Gratitude to Eudocia, 226. Ruined by an earthquake, 269. Under Justin, 304. Destroyed by the Persians, 310. By an earthquake, 326. Taken by Burzas, 422. By the crusaders, 482.

† — the famous port of, built, xv. 436.

† — its stately portico, built by Rufinus, xvi. 120.

† — the metropolis of Mygdonia, where sited, viii. 604, n.

† Antiochene, whence so called, ii. 264.

† Antiochia ad Taurum, a city in Comagene, ii. 263.

Antiochians, impious mourning for Germanicus, xiii. 589, & seq.

Antiochis, her spurious progeny, ix. 108.

Antiochus, king of Messena's embassy to Sparta, vi. 404, & seq.

— king of Syria, invited into Greece, vii. 27. Lands at Pteleum, 33. Speech to the Ætolians, ib. Advises with Hannibal, 37. Takes Eubœa, 38. Marriage and dotage, dotage, 39. Defeated at Thermopylae, 42 & seq.

Antiochus Soter, his success in Sicily, vii. 436. Retreat into Sardis, 440. Defeated at sea and land, 441. Pretensions to Macedon, viii. 470. Succeeds his father in Syria, 582. Yields Greece to Antigonus, 583. Why surnamed Soter, ib. His defeat and death, ib. & 584. Coin, 166, n.

— Theos, whence so called, viii. 584. Ill success in Egypt, 587. Makes peace with Ptolemy, 588. Poisoned by his wife, 589. His coin, ix. 166, n.

— Hierax, wars with his brother, viii. 594. Expelled Syria, 596. His death, 597.

— the Great, ill success in Egypt, viii. 601. Success against Ptolemy, 610, 612, & 615. Defeated by him, 617. Success against Arsaces, 618. In Bactria, ix. 1. India, 3. Recovers Palestine, 6, 7. Conquests in Asia Minor, &c. ib. & seq. Answer to the Roman ambassadors, 11. Wars against the Romans, 18, & seq. Invades Pisidia, 21, & seq. Conference with the Romans, 23, & seq. Marriage, 28. Defeated, 29, & seq. 38, 39. His ill conduct, 39. Sues to the Romans, 41. His gallant army, 46. Defeated at Magnesia, 49. Peace with Rome, 51, & seq. Death, 55. Reign foretold by Daniel, 564 & seq. n. Coin, 167, n.

— Epiphanes, sent hostage to Rome, ix. 15, 16, & 51. Exchanged, 61. Mounts the Syrian throne, 64. Wars with Egypt, 70. Injustice to the Jews, 72. Conquers Egypt, ib. & seq. Profanes and plunders the temple, 74, & seq. See also vol. x. 104, & seq. His career stopped by the Romans, ix. 81. Wreaks his vengeance on the Jews, 83, & seq. His gambols at Daphne, 84, 85. Repulsed at Elymais, 88. His miserable end, ib. & seq. Coin, 167, n.

— Eupator's reign, ix. 91. Ill success against the Jews, 96, & seq. Treachery to them, 99. Death, 105. Coin, 167, n.

— the son of Balas, set up by Tryphon, ix. 129. Crowned at Antioch, ib. His coin, 170, n.

— Sidetes, why so called, ix. 136, n. Letter to Simon the Maccabee, 137, x. 176, & seq. Treachery to him, ix. 139. x. 188. Beats the Parthians, ix. 140. Grants to the Jewish high-priest, x. 183. Perfidy to him, 188. Encourages Ptolemy against the Jews, 193. Invades Judaea, ib. Reception at Jerusalem, 197. His death, ix. 142, x. 198.

— Gryphus, ix. 151. Success against Cyzicus, 152, 153. Divides the kingdom with him, ib. & seq. Resentment against Hyrcan, x. 202. His death, ix. 154. Coin, 171, n. 172, n.

— Cyzicus, ix. 155. Invades Judaea, x. 203. Defeated and killed, ix. 155.

— Eusebes defeats Seleucus, ix. 155. Wars with Philip, ib. & seq. Driven out, 158, & seq.

— Dionysius supplants his brother Philip, ix. 157. Cut off by the Arabians, ib.

— Asiaticus, sent to Rome, ix. 159. His adventure at Syracuse, ib. & seq. Reigns over part of Syria, 163. Stript of it by Pompey, ib. & seq. His death, 164.

— king of Comagene, restored by Pompey, ix. 644. Put to death, ib.

— II. his son, ix. 645.

— III. assists Vespasian, ix. 645.

— IV. serves under the Romans, ix. 645.

— a Persian, tutor to Theodosius, xi. 107.

— the valley of, seized by Jannæus, x. 219.

Antipas, the son of Herod, by Cleopatra, x. 323, n. Made tetrach of Galilee, 393. Supplants Archelaus, 398. The rest see under Herod Antipas.

Antipater's character, viii. 123. Conduct in Greece, 219. Success against Agis, 220. Whether guilty of Alexander's death, 345, & n. His post after it, 349. Chosen protector to his son, 371. His extract, &c. 422. Ill success against the Greeks, 425. Makes peace with them, 426. Wars with the Ætolians, 429. Chosen protector, ib. His death and successor, 432, 433, & n.

— the son of Cassander, his bloody paricide, viii. 458. Expulsion and death, ib. & 459.

— the son of Philip, chosen king of Macedon, viii. 469.

— the father of Herod, his descent, x. 224, n. Character, 229. Carries Hyrcan into Arabia, 230, &c. Pleads his cause before Pompey, 234. Ingratiates himself with the Romans, 242. Services to Gabinius in Egypt, 246. To Cæsar there, 250, & seq. Amply rewarded, 251. Overawes the Jews, 253. His progeny, 254, n. Sends money to Cassius, 259. Poisoned, ib. & seq.

— the favourite son of Herod, x. 314 & n. Cabals against his two brothers, ib.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

& seq. Plots against his father, 322, & seq. How discovered, 324. Decoyed back to Jerusalem, 382. Condemned for treason, 388. Put to death, 392, & seq.

Antipator, the son of Salome, his bitter speech against Archelaus, x. 398.

—— the sophist, his writings and character, xv. 121, n.

† Antipatris built by Herod, x. 315.

Antiphalus, brother of Leosthenes, defeated, vi. 365.

Antiphon's biting answer to Dionysius, vii. 256.

† Antissa, a city in Lesbos, vii. 550.

Antistius, P. butchered by young Marius, xii. 564.

—— Verus, marches against Bassus, xiii. 115. Friendship to Brutus, 205, & n. Saved by his wife, 226. Success in Cantabria, 375.

—— Labeo, his merry stratagem in the senate, xiii. 401.

—— the prætor, banished for satyrising of Nero, xiv. 215, 216.

—— Lucius, his timely advice rejected by Plautus, xiv. 218.

Antonia married to Ahenobarbus, xiii. 365.

—— her sister, married to Drusus, xiii. 365. Her fidelity to him, 421. Why not at Germanicus's funeral, 599, n. Her cruel death, xiv. 50, 51.

—— timely information against Sejanus, xiii. 670.

—— daughter of Claudius, married to Cn. Pompeius xiv. 102, 112. To Sylla, 127. Refuses to marry Nero, 253. Put to death, ib.

† —— the fortress of, taken by the Zealots, x. 576. By the Romans, 605.

Antoninus Pius, his first consulship, xiv. 617. Adopted by Adrian, 596. Speech to the senate, 642. Why Surnamed Pius, 643, 669. His extract, &c. 648, & seq. Time of his adoption, 661. Made high pontif, 663. Love for learned men, 665. Public buildings, ib. & seq. Why esteemed by all nations, 666, & seq. Letters in favour of the christians, 670. Death, 671. Obsequies, 672.

† —— his wall in Britain, where, and when built, xviii. 673. Why surnamed Britannicus, 707, & n.

—— the son of Petronius, put to death, xv. 64.

Antonius slays Sertorius, xii. 616.

—— the consul, swayed by Cicero, xii. 631. His partiality to Catiline, 640.

—— the younger son of M. Antony, his character and fate, xiii. 365.

Antonius, Julius, chosen consul, xiii. 417. Put to death, 431.

—— Caius, made governor of Macedon, xiii. 175. Ill success against Brutus, 208. Taken prisoner, ib. Put to death for Rebellion, 240.

—— Lucius, his death and character, xiii. 648.

Antony, Mark, acquitted of debauching the vestals, xii. 431. Suppresses the pirates, 488. Chosen consul, 505. Assassinated, 552. His character 553, & seq.

—— the father of the triumvir, defeated by the pirates, xii. 613. Sent against Artium, xiii. 41. Made Cæsar's general, 46. Delays coming to him, 54. Made governor of Italy, 81. Defeats Dolabella, 84. Disobliges Cæsar, 85. Flattery to him, 133. Preserved by Brutus, 149. Artful speech to the senate, 151. To the people, in praise of Cæsar, 156, 157, & n. Outwits the senate, 161, & seq. Contempt of Octavian, 163. Made governor of Gaul, 172. Artful speech to his officers, ib. & seq. Falls out with Octavian, 176, & seq. Marches against Brutus, 180, & seq. Proscribed, 181, 192, 193. Success against the consular troops, 186. Surprises Lepidus, 194. Joins with Octavius, 216. Success against Brutus ib. Interview with Octavius and Lepidus, ib. Execrable resolution, 219. Cruelties. Vid. sub. Triumvirate, 222, & seq. To Cicero, 232. March into Macedon, 239. To Amphipolis, 258. Success against Brutus, 277, & seq. Funeral honours to him, 289. Behaviour to the Asiatics, 294, 297. Captivated by Cleopatra, 299. Shameful life with her, 312, & n. March into Italy, 315. Divides the empire with Octav. 317. Returns to Athens, and fines it, 324, 325. Frighted by omens from joining Octav. 327, & n. Interview with him, 331. Returns into Syria, 332. Shameful profusion to Cleopatra, 344, & seq. Partiality to Herod, x. 263. To the Jews, 264, & n. Gets Herod chosen king of the Jews, 270. Base partiality to him, 287. March against Octav. xiii. 347. Behaviour at Samos, &c. ib. & 348. His will in favour of Cleopatra produced, 350. Accused for it, ib. Degraded, 352. Recriminating letter to Octavius, 353. Narrowly escapes his snare, 358. Order of his fleet, 359, & n. Base flight after Cleopatra, 362. Defeated at sea, ib. & seq. Mad behaviour since, 364. Death and family, 365. Three of his descendants become emperors, ib.

Antony, Primus, banished for forgery, xiv. 214.

Antony,

Antony, Honoratus's noble speech against Nymphidius, xiv. 305, 306.

Antyllas, Antony's son put to death, xiii. 365.

— Primus, declares for Vespasian, xiv.

381. Sends the Illyrians against Vitellius,

383. His success in Italy, 384. Comes to Bedriacum, 388. His bravery against the Vitellians, 389, & seq. At Cremona,

392, & seq. Advances to Fano, 397.

Passes the Appennines, 399. Saves the capitul, 404, 405, & n. Drives the Vitelli-ans into the city, 406, & seq. Takes it,

407. His unmerciful plunder of it, 410.

Envied by Mucianus, 418. Over-reached by him, 430. Retires to Vespasian, 431.

Anubis, an Egyptian deity, i. 553. The son of Osiris, by Nepthe, ii. 9. The temple of, demolished, xiii. 597, n.

Anulius's orders in favour of the christians, xv. 383.

Anytus drives the Moors out of Pentapolis, xvi. 189.

Aon, the son of Neptune, settles in Bœo-tia, v. 661.

† Aones, whether antient Grecians,

v. 607. Admitted by Cadmus to live in Bœotia, 664. Their origin, 661.

† Aorni, the mountains of, described,

xviii. 97.

† Aornus, a city of India, described, viii.

295. The rock of, taken by Alexander, 296.

† Aosta, by whom founded, xiii. 276.

† Apamea, metropolis of Apamene in Syria, ii. 264.

† — of Phrygia major, v. 494, &

n.

† — by whom built, viii. 566. Taken by Triarius, ix. 420. By Cosrhoes, xi.

166. Plundered and burnt by him, xvi.

311, 335. By the Scythians, xv. 228.

Apaturian festival, whence, vii. 127, &

n.

Ape, said to have been born of a woman,

xiv. 145, n.

Apelles's project of enslaving the Achæans, vi. 581, & seq. Opposes Antigonus, 586. Forgiven by him, 590. Tyranny and death, 592, 594, & n.

† — where born, vii. 568.

Apellicon's noble library, ix. 409, n.

Aper murders Numerianus, xv. 289.

Killed by Dioclesian, 292.

† Aphek, a city in Syria, ii. 312.

— the battle of, ib. The walls of, crush 27000 Syrians, ib.

Apheresia's war with the Persians, v. 260. Subdues them, 265. Repulsed by Zalzer, 267, 274, & seq. By Rustan, 286. Driven out of his dominions, 287. Taken and put to death, ib.

Aphobis, king of Egypt, his extract, i. 606. Supposed to be Joseph's Pharaoh, ib. n.

† Aphrodisias, in Cilicia, whence so called, v. 595.

Aphydas, king of Athens, v. 657.

— of Arcadia, vi. 10.

Apicata, divorced by Sejanus, xiii. 626.

Her letter to Tiberius, 680. Poisons her- self, ib.

Apicius, a famed epicure, xiii. 623.

† Apiolæ taken by Tarquin, xi. 340.

Apion, made king of Cyrene, ix. 245.

Bequeaths it to the Romans, 253.

Apis, how worshipped at Memphis, i.

554. Why represented by a bull, 555.

His oracle how consulted, 565. When his worship first began, 602, n.

— killed by Cambyſes, v. 90. Whether the same with Mnevis, xviii. 146, n.

— king of, v. 617. Split into two by chronologers, 616.

— king of Argos, a cruel tyrant, v.

622.

— the city and temple of, xviii. 61.

† Apocalypse, the house of, at Pathmos,

vii. 567.

Apocryphal books trumped up by heretics,

x. 346, n.

Apodemus, an informer, burnt alive, xv.

531.

Apollinæ, the two, banished and murdered, xv. 464.

Apollinarians suppressed by Theodosius,

xvi. 84. By Arcadius, 133.

Apollo, the son of Chronus, supposed the Phut of Moses, i. 396, n. Why set over the Muses, ii. 5. In great repute among the Phœnicians, 347, & n.

— worshipped by the Scythians, v.

450. Trojans, 531. By the Gauls, xviii. 466.

Why surnamed Smynthian, v. 533. Grynæw, vii. 121. Didymus, 129. Bran-chides, ib.

— his temple and statue at Delos, described, vii. 601. Offerings how performed, 603, 604. Oracle, 604, & seq.

— temple of, plundered by Cæpio, xii.

475. The sacrilege punished, 478.

— dedicated by Caligula, xiv. 60.

— at Babylon, plundered, xi. 69. At Carthage, plundered, xvii. 535.

† Apollo promontory, where situate,

xvii. 558.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Apollo's temple at Rome, burnt, xv. 537.
 — temple and golden statue at Carthage, xvi. 569.
 Apollocrates surrenders the citadel of Syracuse, vii. 282.
 Apollodorus's famous bridge, xiv. 571, 572. Other grand works, 597. Mortified by Adrian, 621. Banished and put to death, ib. & seq.
 † Apollonia, where situate, v. 564.
 † — in Macedon, viii. 7, 8. Submits to Claudius, 450. Taken by the Romans, xii. 169.
 — her ambassadors insulted by the Ædiles, xii. 96.
 † Apoloniatis, a province of Assyria, iv. 196.
 Apollonides's speech to the Syracusans, vii. 354.
 Apollonius's bloody expedition against the Jews, ix. 83, & x. 112. Defeated and killed, ix. 118, & n. x. 128. 173, 174.
 — governor of Zenodotia's treachery to Crassus, xi. 18.
 — the Stoic's saucy behaviour to Antoninus, xiv. 660, 661.
 — Dyscoles's writings and character, xv. 50, n.
 — Cæsar's and Cicero's master, xii. 603. Different from Molon, ib. & n. His elegy of Cicero, 604, n.
 — Saturn, taxed nine millions by Caligula, xiv. 67.
 — Tyaneus comes to Rome, xiv. 516. Stirs up Nerva against Domitian, ib. His life, travels, &c. 526, & seq. Ordered to be seized, 538. His defence before Domitian, 539. Disappears, 540. Foresight of his death, ib. Refuses Nerva's invitation, ib. His end uncertain, ib. Pretended miracles and character exploded, ib. & seq. Honoured by several emperors, &c. 543, 544.
 — sent ambassador to Attila, xix. 71. His noble answer to him, ib.
 Apologues, among the Persians, a specimen of, v. 294, & n, & seq. n.
 Aponius's success against the Romans, xii. 521. Defeated by Sylla, 526.
 — one of Nero's informers sad end, xiv. 289.
 — Saturn declares for Vespasian, xiv. 384, & seq.
 Apostates denied to make a will, xvi. 45, 48. Disfranchised, 90.
 Apostles, the twelve chosen by Christ, x. 444, & n. Their instructions and success, 458. Forsake their master, 500. Doubts about his resurrection, 521, & seq. Commission from him, 526, & seq. Meeting at Jerusalem, 531, & seq. & 533, n. Receive the Holy Ghost, 533, & seq. The miraculous effects of it proved, 534, n. Their zeal, miracles, doctrine, &c. 538, & seq. & 540, n.

 † — church at Constantinople, described, xv. 415.
 Appeals at Rome, how regulated, xi. 546.
 † Appenine mountains described, xi. 263.
 Appian's writings and character, xiv. 672, n. & seq.
 Appius, Claud. sent into Sicily, vii. 324, 329. Enters Messina, 330. Marches against Hippocrates, 355. Against Perseus, viii. 505. Sadly distressed, 507. Speech against Pyrrhus, ix. 560.
 — consulship, xi. 419. Jealous of Servilius, 424. Severity against debtors, 425, & seq. Speech against the plebeians, xi. 442. Against the Agrarian law, 459, 460.
 — II. his son. See under Claudius, xi. 481.
 — III. betrays the patricians, xi. 518, 522. Chosen dictator, 518. His tyranny, 523, & seq. Speech to the senate, 526. Outwits them, 528. Treachery to Sicinius, 529. Brutish attempt on Virginia, 530, & seq. Accused by Virginius, 540. Imprisoned, 541.
 — Speech against the tribunes, xi. 616. Chosen dictator, 628. Defeats the Hernici, ib.
 — Crassus, chosen consul, xi. 641. Censor, xii. 35. Debases the senate and priesthood, ib. His noble works, 36.
 — chosen consul, xii. 45. Prætor, 46. Sarcastic against Volumnius, 58. Retained by Fabius, 59, 60. Treachery to the Camerinians, 94. Over-reaches the Carthaginians, 104. Sails into Sicily, ib.
 — Pulcher, chosen consul, xii. 244. Marches against Capua, 246. Wounded before it, 251. Surprised by Hannibal, 255, & seq.
 — Maximus killed by the revolted, xiv. 592. Claudius, Vid. sub. Claudius, xvii. 221.
 — Sabinus defeated by the Daci, xix. 369.
 Apries, the Pharaoh Hophra of scripture, ii. 64. His league with Zedekiah, ib. Treachery to him, ib. Takes Sidon, 65. Victory at sea, ib. Assists the Libyans against the Cyreneans, ib. & 66. Ill success against his rebellious subjects, 68. Strangled, ib.
 D Apronadius's

Apronandius's six years reign in Babylon, iv. 382.
 Apronianus put to death by Severus, xv. 115.
 Apronius's successful severity in Africa, xiii. 606. Defeated by the Frisians, 663.
 Apfinas's writings and character, xv. 216, n.
 † Aplus river in Macedon, described, viii. 21.
 Apteras, king of Crete, vii. 469. n. 471.
 Apuleia, Varil. tried for treason and adultery, xiii. 577. Her punishment, ib. 578, & n.
 Apuleius, L. Saturn. cabals for Marius, xii. 487. For Equitius, 488. Treachery to Nonnius, 501. Revives the Agrarian contest, ib. His conspiracy and death, 507. & seq.
 Apuleius, a proscribed senator, saved by his wife, xiii. 226.
 — Sextus, chosen consul, xiii. 472. A friend to Ovid, ib. Swears allegiance to Tiberius, 493.
 — the philosopher's writings and character, xv. 473, n.
 † Aqueduct, of Appius, described, xii. 36, n.
 — of Agrippa, xiii. 398.
 — of Claudius, xiv. 157.
 Apulians, ally with the Saminites, xii. 16. Defeated by Fabius, 17. By Plautius, 29.
 Aquila, Pontius, his honours after his death, xiii. 191.
 — a lady banished for adultery, xiii. 647.
 † Aquilaria in Tunis, where sited, xvi. 576.
 † Aquileia besieged by Maximin, xv. 197. Taken by Constantine, 372. Brave defence against Julian, 507. Taken and destroyed by Attila, xvi. 250. xix. 89, 90.
 Aquileian women, their signal bravery and reward, xv. 197.
 Aquilia, Sever. a vestal, married to Heliogabalus, xv. 150.
 Aquilian family joins interest with Tarquin, xi. 385. Surprised by Valerius, ib. Condemned, 387.
 Aquilius's inhumanity to the Pergame-nians, ix. 504. Subdues them, ib. His defeat and cruel death, 393, 394.
 — Tuscus, defeats the Hernici, xi. 457.
 — Florus, drives the Carthaginians out Sicily, xii. 118.

— Manl. commands the Romans, xii. 487. Ends the war with the Sicilian slaves, 499. Defeated by Sertorius, 598.
 — sent to murder Severus, xv. 91. Sides with him, ib.
 Aquilonia, the rendezvous of the Sam-nites, xii. 67. Taken by the Romans, 70.
 Aquinas, Corn. the murderer of Capito, xiv. 316.
 Aquitani subdued by Crassus, xiii. 19. Declare for Vitellius, xiv. 342.
 † Aquitania Secunda and Tertia given to Vallia, xvi. 200. Where sited, ib. Invaded by the Vandals, 162.
 † — Gallia, described, xviii. 394. Taken by Clovis, xix. 296.
 Aquilphus revolts from Theodoric, xvi. 263. His treason and death, xix. 229.
 † Ar, Al-Rabbah, metropolis of Moab, ii. 100.
 † Arabriga, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 328.
 † Araducta, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 328.
 † Ara Palladis, island, xviii. 107.
 † Arabia, from whom so called, i. 381.
 † — Felix, unconquered by the Ro-mans, xiii. 383.
 † — Petraea, invaded by Palma, xiv. 575.
 † — Felix, invaded by Trajan, xiv. 588. By Severus, xv. 101. Divided by Valens, 101. Subdued by the Saracens, 626. Whence called Endæmon, xiv. 589. Its other names and etymons, xviii. 174, & seq. Why called Cush, 87, 88. Its extent and limits, 176, 177. How divided, 178. First inhabitants, 179.
 † — Petraea described, xviii. 179. Its nations, towns, &c. 183, 184. Barrenness, ib. Remarkable places, 185.
 † — Deserta, its limits, tribes, &c. xviii. 186. Barrenness, 189. Why called Abafene, ib. Its towns, 191.
 † — Felix described, xviii. 192. Fam-ed places, 199, & seq. How divided by the Orientals, ib. & 215. Its plenty of gold, 260. From whom called Arabia, 264, & n. Whether conquered by Trajan, 300.
 Arabic character, when and by whom in-troduced, xviii. 242. Various alphabets, 244 to 248.
 † Arabs, Arabians, tributary to Persia, v. 29.
 — invaded by Antigonus, viii. 393, & seq.
 — defeated by the Jews, x. 145.

† — Nomades,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† ——— Nomādes, who, x. 145, n. Invaded by Jannæus, 216. Defeated by Herod, 291, 292, & n.

——— revolt against the Romans, xiii. 313. Some of the first inhabitants of Mauritania, xviii. 22. The old and modern class of them, 215, 219.

† ——— modern, their extract, xviii. 219.

† ——— Scenitæ, their kings, laws, &c. xviii. 221. Religion, 223. Deities, ib. to 232. Idols, 232. Hold some Magian tenets, 234. Notion of a future state, 235. Jewish and christian notions held by them, 236. Bishopricks among them, 238. Sects, 239. Language, &c. ib. & seq. Writing, 241. Learning, poetry, &c. 249, & seq. Way of numbering their days, months, and years, 254. Sciences, 255. Arts, 256. Signal hospitality, 257. And character, 258. Trade, 260. Circumcision, 261. Other customs, 264. & seq. History to the birth of Mohammed, 264. A list of their monarchs, 267. Names of their months, by whom, 289, n. Other kingdoms, tribes, &c. ib. Whether subject to the Medes, &c. 293, 294. Wars against the Romans, 294. Whether subdued by the Romans, 297. Heresies after their conversion, 304.

Arach, the modern name of Parthia, xi. 4.

† Arachofia, a province of Persia, described, iv. 510. Surrendered to Alexander, viii. 247.

† Arad, one of the kingdoms of Canaan, subdued by the Israelites, ii. 199.

† Arad, a series of their kings, ii. 365. Their reigns, 392.

——— one of Canaan's sons so called, ii. 199, n.

† ——— Arad, or Aradus, not properly a city of Phœnice, ii. 333. Whether the seat of the Arvadites, ib. n. Its situation, ib. Ruins still extant, ib. & n.

† Aradia Constantina, where sited, xv. 410.

† Aradus conquered by the Saracens, xvi. 345.

Aram, the son of Shem, i. 458. Where settled, 460. His descent according to the Armenians, i. 468, 469.

† ——— the country of, so called by him, i. 468.

† Aram Nabaraim, the same with Syria and Mesopotamia, ii. 262.

Aramean language, a dialect of the Syriac, ii. 298.

Aramites. See Syrians, ii. 284, & seq.

† Ararat, the mount where the ark rested, i. 305. Its situation, 318, & seq. Traditions about it, 319, & seq. Tournefort's and others account of it, 327, & n. & seq. & n. Migrations of Noah's sons from it, 407.

Araric, a Bathian prince, xix. 118.

Aratus, the brave deliverer of Greece, vi. 377, 554, & seq. Restores the Athenians, ib. The Sicyonians, 554. Takes Acrocorinth, ib. Opposes the Spartans, 527. Betrays Acrocorinth to the Macedonians, 532, 566. Defeated by the Ætolians, 574. Oppressed by Apelles, 583, & seq. Cleared by Philip, 585. Chosen prætor of the Achæans, 595. Displeases Philip by his honest answer, 601. Poisoned by his orders, 602. His obsequies and character, ib. & seq. In high favour with Ptolemy, ix. 200. Policy against the Macedonians, viii. 477, & seq. Revenge on the treacherous Athenians, 478. Joins with Antigonus Dofon, 481.

——— his son, poisoned by Philip, vi. 603.

——— revolts to the Romans, xvi. 304.

† Ararena, the province of, where sited, xviii. 212.

† Araxes, a river in Persia, described, iv. 530, & 531, n.

† ——— in Armenia ix. 315, 318, & n. & seq. Whence so called, 323.

Arba, the father of the Anakims, ii. 205, & n.

† ——— the city of. See Hebron, ii. 400, n.

Arbaces, first king of Media, his reign, &c. iv. 470.

Arbal, king of Arad, ii. 392.

† Arbela, the city and battle of, v. 224. & seq. viii. 212, & seq.

——— banditti of, destroyed by Herod, x. 274. The city of, taken by Trajan, xiv. 585.

† Arbelites, a province of Assyria, iv. 196.

Arbianes, king of Media, his reign, &c. iv. 471.

Arbogastes sent to assist Theodosius, xvi. 45. To invest Maximus, 80. To put Victor to death, 81. Murders Valentinian, 93. Arrogance to him, ib. Success against the Franks, 100, & xix. 255. Defeated by Theodosius, xvi. 103. Kills himself, 104.

† Arbora, the bridge of, broken by Julian, xv. 544.

Arboreus, the father of Ausonius, his extract, xvi. 56, n.

I N D E X to the

- † Arborici, who, xix. 284, n.
- † Arcadia, part of antient Greece, v. 604. Whence so named, vi. 3. Its site, soil, &c. 4. Origin, &c. 8. Invaded by the Spartans, 504, & seq.
- † — a city in Crete, described, vii. 462.
- the princess, born to Arcadius, xvi. 150. Her character, buildings, &c. 165. Death, 233.
- Arcadians, antient Greeks, v. 605. Famed for pastorals, vi. 4. For brave warriors, 5. Their religion, 6. When and how civilized, 4, 5. Their government, 7. Kings, 8, & seq. Resentment against their king's perfidy, 14, 425. Defeated by the Spartans, 504. By the Romans, 663.
- women, great warriors, vi. 5.
- Arcadius born, xvii. 35. Proclaimed, 59. Chosen consul, 67. Clemency to the Arians, 82. Has the east assigned to him, 106. Under the care of Rufinus, 116. Proves a weak prince, 119. Marries Eudoxia, 120. Swayed by the villain Eutropius, 126. Against Stilicho, 127. Law against asyla, 130. Journey to Ancyra, 131. Deposes Eutropius, 142. Laws against idolatry, 144. Timorous complaisance to Gainas, 146. Interview with him, ib. Severity to the Goths, 148. Presented with the head of Gainas, 150. His statue and column reared, 154. His death, issue, &c. 164. Fabulous story of his last will, 173.
- Arcas, the supposed founder of the Arcadian kingdom, vi. 3.
- fourth king of it, vi. 10.
- Arces raised to the Persian throne by Bagas, v. 202. Murdered by him, ib.
- Arcefilaus, king of Cyrene, xviii. 70.
- II. his reign, ib.
- III. killed, ib.
- IV. flight and death, xviii. 71.
- Archagathus defeated and killed, vii. 311.
- succeeds in Affric, xvii. 167, 191. Murdered, 199.
- Archeanax, tyrant of Lesbos, vii. 555.
- † Archelais, in Cappadocia, whence so called, ix. 458.
- Archelaus, king of Sparta, vi. 381.
- of Macedon, viii. 68. His death and character, 69, 70.
- of Egypt, defeated by Gabinius, ix. 271. His gallant death, 272.
- succeeds in Asia, ix. 397, & seq. Treachery and defeat, 400, 401, & n. & seq.
- his address to pacify Herod, xi. 318, & n.
- the son of Herod by Martac, x. 323, n. Succeeds him, 393. Speech to the Jews, 395. Goes to Rome, 397. Opposed by his brother, ib. And by the Jews, 405. Obtains part of the kingdom, 406. His revenue, tyranny, and banishment, 408, 409.
- successful embassy to Cassius, xiii. 243. Deposed and banished, 456.
- king of Cappadocia, tried and put to death at Rome, xiii. 571, n. & 572.
- general of Mithridates, success in Greece, vii. 75. Defends Athens, 78, & seq. Betrayed by two slaves, 81.
- the philosopher, his notion of the origin of things, i. 133.
- Archias, founder of Syracuse, vii. 159. Treachery to Ptolemy punished, ix. 235.
- the betrayer of Thebes, vi. 497.
- Archidamia's noble speech to the Spartans, vi. 514. Basely murdered by Amphares, 526.
- Archidamus made general of Peloponnesus, vi. 266, & seq. Waives Attica, 273, 458. His lucky stratagem to save his subjects, 453, 458. Takes Platea, ib. His death, ib.
- the son of Agesilaus, invades Arcadia, vi. 504. Signal victory, 505. Succeeds his father, 508. Dies in Italy, 510.
- king of Sparta, vi. 513.
- IV. his character and reign, vi. 518.
- defeated by Demetrius, viii. 410.
- Archilo, where born, vii. 590.
- commands the Dardanians, v. 544.
- Archimedes's curious ship, built for Hiero, vii. 337. Brave defence of Syracuse, 361. Surprising machines, ib. & seq. Death, 381. And character, 382, & seq. Other wonderful engines, 384, & seq.
- † Archipelago. Vid. Ægean sea, vii. 547, n.
- Archisynagogus, his office among the Jews, x. 57, n.
- Archon, a friend of the Macedonians, vi. 644. Declares for the Romans, ib.
- Archons at Athens, their office, vi. 89. When begun, v. 643, 644. Made decennial, 658. Annual, ib. 659, & vi. 89. Solon's law concerning them, vi. 122. How chosen, 96, 141. Their oath, 141. Office, ib. When abolished, 143. A list of them, vi. 91.
- Archytas the Pythagorean's doctrine of two principles, i. 130.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Archylus's bravery rewarded by Dionysius, xvii. 85.

Ardaburius's success against the Persians, xvi. 203, 205. Sent against John, 214. Shipwrecked, and taken by him, 215. Outwits and takes him, ib. Suspected by Leo, 278. And put to death, ib.

— success against the Persians, xi. 111, 113.

Ardaric, king, serves under Attila, xix. 62, 75, 76. Revolts after his death, 195.

† Ardea besieged by Tarquin, xi. 375. Retaken, 380. Becomes the cause of a civil war, 544, & seq.

Ardeser, king of Persia, murdered, xi. 173.

Ardevan I. II. III. kings of Parthia, according to Oriental writers, xi. 180, 181, n.

Ardshir, king of Persia, his reign, according to Oriental writers, v. 343 to 349. xi. 182, & seq.

† Arduba taken by Germanicus, xiii. 459.

Arduban women, their desperate end, xiii. 459.

Ardyes, king of Lydia, v. 581.

† Areacidæ, who, and where sited, xvii. 490.

Arechis assumes the sovereign power, xix. 603. Peace with Charles, ib.

† Areopagus, the high court of, at Athens, vii. 98, 116, 119. By whom founded, 139. Their power, &c. ib. & seq.

Areta, teaches philosophy at Cyrene, xviii. 75, n.

Aretas king of Demascus, ix. 158. Defeats the Jews, ib. & x. 231. Invades Judæa in favour of Hyrcan, ib. Defeated by Aristobulus, 233.

— wars with Herod Antipas, x. 432, 433.

Arethusa, the fable of, vi. 69.

Areus opposed by his uncle, vi. 513. Drives Pyrrhus out of Sparta, ib. & seq. His death, 517. Letters to the Maccabees, ib. n.

† Arga, a city in Arabia Felix, xviii. 199.

Argæus seizes the crown of Macedon, viii. 47.

Argalus, king of Sparta, vi. 56.

† Argent river, its course, xiii. 195, n.

† Argentaria, where sited, xvi. 27.

— the battle of, xvi. 27.

Argiaspis's reign and death, according to Oriental writers, v. 335 to 338.

Argipæans, their character, v. 444.

† Argis, why honoured by the Delians, vii. 604.

Argives, antient Grecians, v. 604, 622. Their origin, 618, 622. Wars against Thebes, 635, 670. Absent from the Peloponnesian war, 263. League with Athens, 290, & 291, n. Beat by the Spartans, 294. By the Athenians, 346, & seq. By the Spartans, 382, 430, 434, n. 462, 463. At Mantinea, 463, 464. Conquer Macedonia, viii. 25.

Argive women, their bravery, vi. 434, 435, n.

Argo, ship, where built, vi. 30.

Argon, king of Lydia, v. 580.

Argonauts, their expedition into Colchis, vi. 19, & seq. & n. ix. 605.

Argos, king of Argos, by whom begot, v. 622.

† — kingdom, part of antient Greece, v. 604. Its founder, 618, 622. Situation, soil, &c. 619, 620. Kings, 621. How divided, 625. And reunited, ib. & seq. Conquered by the Heraclidæ, 636, & seq. Change of government, 639, & seq.

† — the city of, taken by the Spartans, vi. 532. By Philip, 542, 614. Given to Nabis, ib. Treacherously entered by Pyrrhus, ix. 571. Doubly beset, 570, & seq. Burnt by the Heruli, xv. 247.

† — Hippim, in Apulia, by whom built, v. 636.

† Aria, a province of Persia, iv. 515.

Ariadne, daughter of Minos, married to Theseus, v. 650. Carried off by Bacchus, 652. Her rape and festival, vii. 585, 586.

— princess, married to Zeno, xvi. 277. Suspected of incontinence, &c. 291. Married to Anastasius, 292. Insulted in his company, 295.

Arians defeated by Alexander, viii. 236. By Erigius, 248.

— heretics, their flattery to Jovian, xv. 572. Repulsed, ib. Suppressed by Theodosius, xvi. 44, 45. Commit fresh outrages, 82. Driven from the cities, 92. Suppressed by Justin, 304.

Ariamnes I. and II. kings of Cappadocia, iv. 462, 463.

Arianthes I. king of Scythia, his huge copper, v. 456, 481.

Ariarethes I. king of Cappadocia, ix. 463.

— II. crucified by Perdiccas, viii. 365. ix. 463.

— III. recovers his kingdom, ix. 463.

— IV. defeats Arsaces, ix. 464.

— V. allies with the Romans, ix. 464.

Ariarathes

I N D E X to the Ariarathes his character, ix. 108, 464.

Dethroned, 109, 455.

— VII. poisoned by Mithridates, ix. 467.

— VIII. stabbed by the same hand, ix. 388, 467.

— IX. dethroned by the same, ix. 468.

Arideus appointed Alexander's successor, viii. 353. Put to death by Olympias, 442.

† Arimathæa, where situate, x. 517, n.

† Ariminum surprised by Cæsar, xiii. 39. Taken by Fuscus, xiv. 397.

Arinthus's success in Germany, xv. 469. Bravery, 616. Sent against Sapor, 628.

Ariobarzanes defeated and killed, v. 229.

— put to death by Cassius, xiii. 239.

Ariogeses, chosen king of the Quadi, xix. 350. Defeated and imprisoned, ib.

Arion, the first tragedian, vii. 550.

Ariovald dethrones Adalwald, xix. 528. His death, 529.

Ariovistus invades the Sequani, xiii. 13. Treachery to Cæsar, 14. Defeated ib. See vol. xviii. 558, 638.

Aripert, chosen king of the Lombards, xix. 536. Cruelty to Luitbert, 548. To Asprang and his family, 549. Great donations to the church, ib. & seq. & n. Defeated and drowned, 552.

Arisba, Priam's wife, v. 549.

† — a city in Phrygia, v. 520.

† — in Lesbos, vii. 549.

Aristagoras attempts to corrupt the Spartans, vi. 438, n. & seq. n.

— rebellion against Darius, v. 110, & seq. His death, 114, 115.

Aristarchus, king of Colchis, ix. 607.

Aristeas, where born, vii. 545, n.

— account of the Septuagint version considered, x. 83, n. & 84, n.

Aristenetus destroyed by lightning, xv. 489. His writings, &c. 70, n.

Aristeus first peoples Ceos, vii. 576.

Aristides, general of the Persians, vi. 179, & seq. His character, 192. Banishment, 195. Piety, ib. Moderation on being recalled, 199. Reconciled with Themistocles, 203, 204. Success against the Persians, 210. Made chief commander, 216. Regulator of the tax, 217, 218. His death, &c. 231, n. & seq. n.

— the apologist for the christians, xiv. 647.

— the sophist, meets M. Aurelius, xv. 38. His writings, &c. 46, n.

Aristion, tyrant of Athens, vii. 75. & seq.

Aristippus, his writings and character, xviii. 74, n.

Aristo, king of Sparta, vi. 428. His character, 429.

— discovers a plot against Syracuse, vii. 349.

Aristobulus, a learned Jewish philosopher, ix. 236.

— the son of Hyrcan, success against Cyzicenus, x. 203. Succeeds his father, 208. Parricide and fratricide, ib. 210, & n. Dreadful end, 211. Why nicknamed Philellen, 208, & 211, n.

— the son of Janneus, x. 220. Joins with the Sadducees, 223. Sent into Syria, 225. Secures the crown, 226. Deposes his brother, 228. Defeated, 231. Besieged in the temple, ib. Bribes Pompey, 232, & seq. Leaves him in a huff, 235. Sent prisoner to Rome, 241, & seq. Escapes into Judæa, 245. Taken prisoner, ib. Released by Cæsar, 249. Poisoned, ib.

Aristobulus grandson of Hyrcan's title to the Jewish crown, x. 270, n. Made high priest, 284, & n. Murdered, 286.

— the son of Herod married to Berenice, x. 312. Accused by Salome, 313, & seq. Put to death, 321, 322.

— the son of Agrippa deprived of his succession, x. 564.

— promoted by Nero, xiv. 171.

Aristocles, an account of his writings, &c. xv. 46, n.

Aristocrates I. stoned for sacrilege, vi. 14.

— II. stoned for perfidy, vi. 14, 425.

Aristodemus, chosen general of Sparta, vi. 491. Beats the confederates at Corinth, ib.

— rips open his own daughter, vi. 409. Chosen king of the Messenians, 410. Beats the Spartans, 413, 414. Kills himself, 414.

— speech to Antigonus, vii. 508.

Aristogiton's revenge against Hippas, vi. 165.

— why honoured at Athens, xiii. 204.

Aristomachus defeated at Corinth, v. 636, 637.

Aristomenes, chosen king of Messenia, vi. 418. Defeats the Spartans, 419, 421. Taken prisoner, 422. His wonderful escape, ib. & seq. Death, 426, & n.

Aristomenes

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Aristomenes, sent guardian of Egypt, ix. 5, 225. Put to death for his fidelity, 226.
 Ariobarzanes I. king of Cappadocia, ix. 469. Wars with Mithridates, ib. & seq.
 ——— II. a friend to the Romans, ix. 469. Put to death by Cassius, 470.
 ——— III. killed by M. Antony, ix. 470.

Ariston, arrested by Hannibal at Carthage, 503. Escapes, ib.

Aristonica's prophecy against the Athenians, vi. 197.

Aristonicus seizes on Pergamos, ix. 500. Defeats Crassus, 502. Defeated by Perpena, 503. Sent prisoner to Rome, ib. & seq.

Aristophanes's antient cosmogony, i. 109.

—— cruelly used by Catena, xv. 458.

By Modestus, 492.

Aristotle's doctrine of the world's eternity, i. 78, & seq.

—— his character, v. 358. According to oriental writers, 369, 370, 371.

—— where born, viii. 12. And taught, vii. 551, & seq.

—— whether conversant with the Mosaic writings, viii. 169 & 170 n. His books carried off by Sylla, ix. 409 n. Account of the Carthaginian government, xvi. 590, 604, 605 & n, & seq.

Arius, the last king of Mysia, killed, v. 569.

—— Antonin. excellent character xiv. 653. Unjust death, xv. 63.

—— the heretic banished, xv. 401. Received by the council of Jerusalem, 411. His death, 432.

Ark of Noah, its size, figure, &c. i. 296, & seq. At what time built, 301.

—— the monastery of, i. 321. Armenian fables about it, 326.

—— of Moses described, iii. 300. Whether one or two, ib. Taken by the Philistines, 551. Sent back, ii. 243, & seq. Brought to Jerusalem by David, iv. 18 & seq.

Arkianus's five years reign in Babylon, iv. 382.

† Arles besieged, xvi. 186. By Constantius, 187. Surrendered, 188. Relieved by Ægidius, 271.

—— the council of. See Council, xv. 388.

Armais, brother to Sesostris, ii. 36. Supposed the Danaus of the Greeks, 40.

† Armenia, so named from Aram, i. 469.

† ——— the lesser described, ix. 367, & seq. Kingdom, 313. Soil, 318. Origin and government, 322, 323. Kings, 328, & seq.

† ——— given to Cleopatra's son, ix. 348. Recovered, 349. Becomes tributary to Rome, 366, & seq. Its various fates since, ib. & seq.

† ——— subdued by the Romans, xiv. 579. Allowed to chuse a king, 614. Wars with Parthia, xv. 7. Reduced by the Romans, 9. Restored by Macrinus, 143. Taken by the Persians, 306.

† — Major, wars in defence of christianity, xv. 381. Revolts, 433. The end of that kingdom, xvi. 230. Subdued by the Saracens, 351. Betrayed to them, 353.

Armenian legions refuse to swear to Irene, xvi. 372. Severely punished, 373.

† Armenians, their descent, 468. Ally with the Parthians, xiii. 433. Invaded by them, 442. Plead before Nero, xiv. 171, & seq. Subdued by Corbulo, 191.

Arminius's revolt in Germany, xiii. 461. Treachery to Varus, ib. & seq. Repulsed by Tiberius, 469. Falls out with Segestes, 534. Defeated, 542, 560. Defeats the Romans, 542. Defeated and wounded, 560. Defeats the Marcomans, &c. 574. His death, 598.

† Armorica Gallia described, xviii. 395.

Armorican Britons, of what standing, xix. 37. Their cruelty to the old Gauls, 38. Submit to Clovis, 284.

Armorici, Gauls, who, xvi. 179. Short lived revolt, ib. Subdued, xiii. 33.

† Armofata, where situate, ix. 316.

Arnagiselus, defeated and killed, xvi. 234, 235.

Arne, the daughter of Æolus, v. 660.

† Arnon, the book of, described, iii. 24 & n. The supposed boundary of the Israelites, 102 n.

Aroueris, in Plutarch, who, 261 n.

Arphaxat, the third son of Shem, 371. The supposed father of the Chaldeans, 372 & n. Conjectures relating to him, ib. n. One of the chiefs of the line of Shem, 458. Where settled, 459.

† Arra, the metropolis of the Arraceni, xviii. 212.

† Arraceni, the same with the Saraceni, xviii. 185.

† Arrapachitis, a province of Assyria, iv. 195, 196.

Arria's heroic constancy and death, xiv. 119 & n. Imitated by her daughter, 262.

Arrian, the writer of Trajan's history, xiv. 580. His books lost, 582.

—— surprises the Massagetes, 631. Order of battle, 632. March round the Euxine, ib. Whether the same with the former, mer, 651 n. His writings, &c. xv. 205 n.

Arruntius, Luc. disgraced, xiii. 495, 496. His extract, &c. ib. Betrayed by Macro, xiv. 24. Bleeds himself to death, 25 & seq.

Arfaces, the common name of the Parthian kings, xi. 9.

—— first founder of the Parthian kingdom, xi. 9.

—— II. his wars with Antiochus, xi. 10. Founds the Bactrian kingdom, viii. 587.

—— the son of Artabanus, made king of Armenia, xi. 56. Murdered, 57.

—— impudently summoned by Julian, xv. 540, 543. Abandoned by the Romans, 566. Murdered by Sapor, 626.

—— yields his kingdom to the Persians, xvi. 230.

Arfacidæ, tributary to Persia, xi. 72. Embassy to Chosroes, 133.

Arfanes brought bound to Alexander, viii. 261.

† Arsenarca, where sited, xvii. 576.

† Arsia, river, a boundary of Gaul, xi. 255.

Arfinoe, queen of Egypt, murdered, ix. 220.

—— daughter of Auletes, set up by Ganymede, ix. 282. Taken prisoner, and led in triumph by Cæsar, ix. 288, xiii. 110. Put to death, ib. n.

† —— a city in Cyprus, vii. 486.

† —— in Cyrene, ix. 253, 254.

Artaphernes, Darius's general against the Greeks, v. 115. Defeated by the Athenians, 119.

Artabanus, dissuades Xerxes from a second attempt 126 & seq. Consents to his own disgrace, ib. & seq.

Artabazus, led in triumph by M. Antony, ix. 295.

—— embassy to Germanicus, xiii. 582.

—— betrays the Persians, xv. 627.

—— basely deserted by the Romans. xix. 479, 480.

—— kills a gigantic Goth in single combat, xix. 480. His death, 481.

Artabanus's treason and death, v. 153.

—— bold letter to Tiberius, ix. 352.

—— king of Parthia, killed, xi. 70.

—— of Medja, invades Parthia, xi. 55. Wars with Mithridates, 57. Driven out, ib. & seq. Restored, and dies, 57, 58.

—— II. short reign, xi. 65.

—— III. outwitted by Caracalla, xi. 70, xv. 135. Killed by Artaxerxes, xi. 72.

Artabafus sails towards the Nile, v. 458. Beats the Egyptians, ibid.

Artabazanes invaded by Antiochus, viii. 608.

Artabazes, first king of Pontus, ix. 379. ——— king of Media's wars with the Parthians, ix. 627.

Artabazus's fidelity to Darius, viii. 231. Rewarded by Alexander, 235.

† Artabrum Promontorium, Finisterre, where sited, xviii. 342.

† Artacene, a province of Assyria, iv. 197.

Artæus, king of Media, iv. 471.

Artagera taken and razed by the Romans, ix. 350.

Artaphernes sent against the Athenians, vi. 178.

Artavasdes defeated by the Persians, xi. 51, & seq.

Artaxares's success against the Parthians, xi. 72, & seq. Extract, 75, 76. Haughty embassy to Severus, 78. Defeated by him, ib. His death, 79, 80. See also vol. xv. 158, ——— 167.

† Artaxata, metropolis of Armenia, ix. 314. Taken by Phraasmenes, 352. Raz- ed by Corbulo, 361. By the Romans. xii. 68. By Priscus, xv. 9.

Artaxias, first king of Armenia, revolts against Antiochus, ix. 86, 87 & n. Defeat- ed by him, ib. & 329 & seq. Taken prisoner, ib.

—— II. driven out of Armenia, ix. 348. Recovers it, 349. Strangled, ib.

—— III. crowned by Germanicus ix. 351.

Artaxerxes raised to the throne, v. 153. The Ahashuerus of scripture, 154 & 155 n. Defeated by the Egyptians, 157. Peace with the Greeks, 159. Injustice to the Athenian prisoners, 160. Answer to the Greek embassy, 162. Death and charac- ter, ib.

—— Mnemon succeeds Darius Nothus, 168, & seq. Defeats and kills his revolted brother 172, 173. Peace with the Spar- tans, 183. Conquers Cyprus, 185, & seq. Marches against the Cadusians, 188. Ready to perish with famine, ib. & seq. Saved by Tiribazus, ib. Invades Egypt, 189, & seq. His great army and fleet, 190. Their broils and ill success, 191. Second invasion, twelve years after, 192. Conspired against, 194, & seq. His death and character, 195.

Artaxerxes III. Vid. Ochus, v. 195.

Artayctes impaled for sacrilege, vi. 221.

Arto

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Artemidorus gives Cæsar a list of his conspirators, xiii. 142. His writings and character, xv. 50, n.

— general of Syracuse, xvii. 209.

— promoted at Rome, xix. 183.

Artemisia's advice to Xerxes, and gallant behaviour, v. 142, & seq. Surprises Rhodes, vii. 512.

Artemius the emperor. Vid. Anastasius, xvi. 292.

Artemon, the inventor of battering rams, vii. 541.

Arteus, Artias, Artibarnus, and Artines, kings of Media, iv. 470, 471, 472.

Arthur, king, his fabulous history, xix. 24, & seq. & n. His tomb at Glastenbury, 25, n. Victories over the Saxons, 27. Death, 30.

Arts and sciences their origin after the flood, i. 481. Unknown to the antient Greeks, v. 608, 609. Discouraged by the Spartans, vi. 390.

Arveris, the Egyptian Orus, or Apollo, ii. 4.

† Arverni, where situate, xiii. 13, n. Spared by Cæsar, 31.

— who, xviii. 493, n. Contest against the Ædui, ib.

† Arvernum, Clermont, their capital, xviii. 557, n.

Aruntius, one of the admirals at Actium, xiii. 360, & seq.

— Stella, promoted by Nero, xiv. 181.

† Aryeans, where sited, vii. 13, n.

† Arzacene yielded to the Romans, xv. 308. Where situate, ib.

Aśa, king of Judah, his signal piety, iv. 87. Victory over the Cushites, ib. & 88. Alliance with Benhadad, 88. Death, 89.

Aśander, king of Bosphorus, ix. 624, 625. Starves himself, ib. See vol. xiii. 82, 83.

Asbestos stone, where digged, vii. 644.

† Ascalon, in Palestine, ii. 220. Famed for its wines, &c. 221. By whom founded, v. 574. Taken by the Jews, ix. 118. Given to Salomé, x. 406.

† Ascania, in Lesser Phrygia, or Troas, i. 467. v. 530.

† Ascanian islands described, vii. 548, & seq.

† — lake, so called from Askenaz, v. 530.

Ascanius defeats the Hetruscans, xi. 281, & seq.

† — river and bay, whence so called, i. 467.

Ascaric, antient king of the Franks, xix. 240. When, 241. His sad end, 248.

Ascetic christians, when first instituted, x. 370.

† Aschaganides, the dynasties of, xi. 178.

† Ascitæ, who, and where sited, xviii. 195.

Asclepiadæ, kings of Rhodes, vii. 408.

Asclepius, the son of Sydyç, worshipped in Egypt, i. 395, & n.

Asclepiodotus lands in Britain, and burns his ships, xv. 303. Success there, ib.

Ascolus, bishop, baptizes Theodosius, xvi. 40.

† Asculana taken by Sylla, xii. 525.

Asculum revolts from the Romans, xii. 519. Taken by Pompey, 523. The battle of, ix. 563, & n.

† Ascurum, where sited, xviii. 9.

Asdrubal defeated in Sicily, vii. 294, & seq.

— by Metellus, xii. 134. Crucified, 135.

— succeeds Mago at Carthage, xvii. 21. Killed in Sardinia, ib.

— sent into Sicily, xvii. 135. Defeated by Cæcilius, 268.

— the son of Hamilcar, goes with him into Spain, xvii. 313. Narrowly escapes, 314, n. Succeeds his father there, 316, & n. His quick success, 317. Raises up the Roman jealousy, 318. Treaty with them, ib. Murdered by a Gaul, 319. Left to command in Spain, xvii. 341. Pursues the Romans, 366. Success against them, ib. Ill success, 378. Defeats the Carpesii, 404. Forced to go to Hannibal's assistance, 405. Defeated in his march, 407. Sends word of it to Carthage, 410. Defeated afresh, 425, 453. Consults with the other generals, ib. Goes into Lusitania, 454.

— Calvus shattered by a storm, xvii. 415. Arrives at Sardinia, 417.

— the son of Hamilcar, his success in Spain, xvii. 440. Escapes a snare, 444. Goes to assist Hannibal, 453. Crosses the Pyrenees and Gaul, 457. Repulsed before Placentia, 459. March towards Umbria, ib. Defeated by the consuls, 461. His noble death, 462.

— the son of Gisco, defeated by Scipio, xvii. 468, & seq. Retires to Gades, ib. Defeated at sea, 471. Betrayed by Masinissa, 472. Allies with Syphax, 479. Defeated, 482. Retires to Anda, 483. Horrid cruelties, 489.

— Hædus, sent ambassador to Rome, xvii. 496. His speech to the senate, ib. Severe reproof to Hannibal, ib.

— defeated by Masinissa, xvii. 521. Impeached

I N D E X to the

Impeached, ib. Defends Carthage against the Romans, 528. Fortifies his camp, 532. Goes over to the Romans, 535. His wife's noble behaviour and death, ib. & seq.

Asdrubal Gellusa's nephew accused, and put to death, xvii. 531.

— instigates Syphax against Masinissa, xvii. 575.

Asellio, Aul. Semp. assassinated at Rome, xii. 524.

Asemontium's brave defence against Attila, xix. 68.

Asena taken by the Carpesii, xvii. 404.

Asenath, Joseph's wife, bears him two sons, ii. 467.

† Asgardians, who, xix. 111.

† Ashdod, Azotus, in Palestine, ii. 221. By whom built, ib. Its situation, and temple of Dagon, ib. & seq.

Asher, Jacob's second son by Zilpah, ii. 440. His father's prophecy of him verified, 491, & n. His lot in the promised land, iii. 103.

Ashes, the dreadful punishment of, v. 163, & n.

Ashkenaz, one of Gomer's sons, where seated, i. 467.

Ashmon, supposed the centre of the world, x. 402, n.

Ashmoneans, the beginning of their reign, x. 61, & seq. The end, 279. Duration, ib. n.

† Ashtaroth Kernaim, the residence of Og, ii. 200, & n.

† Ashur, the son of Shem, i. 370. Where settled, ib. & 459. Cities founded by him, 370, & n. & seq. n.

Ashyaf, king of Egypt, his reign, ii. 92.

Asia, the daughter of Teucer, v. 535.

† — the fourth part of the world, whence so called, v. 584, & seq. How divided now, 490. Conquered by the Scythians, 469, & seq.

† — Proconsular, described, v. 487, & seq.

† — Proper, described, v. 484, & seq.

† — Minor, the states of, vii. 99, & seq. The flood of, i. 281, n. Ravaged by the Scythians, xv. 229, 239. Submits to Macrianus, 237.

Asiarchæ of Ephesus, their office, vii. 113.

Asiatic diocese described, v. 488, & seq.

Asiatics, their reception of M. Antony, xiii. 295. Heavily taxed by him, 297.

Asiaticus, Vitellius's base freedman, knighted, xiv. 367. His wealth and power, 376. Put to death, 418.

Asinius Pollio goes over to Antony, xiii. 193. Sent against Salvidienus, 305. Forsook by Plautus, 306. Persuades Ahenobarbus to submit to Antony, 315. Generosity to him, 349. Free answer to Augustus, 443, n. Death, 621, & 622, n.

— Quadratus's writings and character, xv. 216, n.

† Asopus, a river in Attica, v. 641.

Aspar's negotiation in favour of Jugurtha, xii. 470, & seq.

— sent with Placidia into the west, xvi. 214. Success against the rebel John, 215. Taken prisoner, 221. Defeated by Attila, 235. Inthrones Leo, 266. Favourer of the Arians, ib. Fatal jealousy of Leo, 210. Created Cæsar by him, ib. Put to death, ib.

— narrow escape out of Afric, xix. 204.

Aspasia's character, vi. 248, & n. Impiety, vi. 257, & 258, n. Acquitted, 259.

Aspasius's writings and character, xv. 178, n.

Asper conspires against Nero, xiv. 236. His constancy and death, 246, 247.

† Asphaltite lake, whence so called, iii. 121, n. Whence called Dead and Salt sea, ib. Whether owing to the submersion of Siddim, ib. 122, & n. Its waters change colour, 123, n. Length and breadth, 124.

Asprenas ordered to assassinate Sempronius, xiii. 502. Killed, xiv. 105.

† Aspurgians, who, and where, xix. 111.

Affa fætida of Persia described, iv. 535.

Affaceni invaded by Alexander, viii. 292.

Asses of Arabia, very docil and useful, iv. 542.

Assos, of Æolis and Mysia, the same, v. 486.

† Assyria derived from Ashur, iv. 193.

† — Proper, iv. 194.

† — of the Greeks, iv. 194, n. A land of plenty, 199. Now a desert, ib. Described, ib. & seq. The second most antient kingdom, 195. Not founded by Nimrod, ib. Its antiquity, 201, & seq. Reduced by Trajan, xiv. 585.

Assyrian kingdom, when first founded, 370. Vid. iv. 457. Its chronology down to its fall, 205.

Assyrians, their religion, iv. 203. What they worshipped, fishes, 204. And doves, 205, 249, & n. Their antiquity, 199. Government, laws, &c. 201, & seq. Table of their kings according to Eusebius, &c. 210, & seq.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Asta, where sited, xiii. 128, n. Surrendered to Cæsar, ib.

† Astacus in Bithynia, different from Nicomedia, ix. 581.

† Astapa, the siege and sad catastrophe of, xii. 273. xvii. 469.

Astarimus, king of Troy, murdered, ii. 379.

Astarte, daughter of Uranus, i. 394. How named by the Greeks, 398. One of the Phœnician deities, ii. 340, & 341, n, &c. Why figured with horns, 344. Called Aphrodite, 345. Worshipped first at Tyre, ib. & seq. Her priests and prophets, 351. Rites, ib. & seq. At Byblus, 352. Her temple at Aphec, a sink of lewdness, ib. That of Tyre, built by Hiram, ib. Some fresh conjectures concerning her, xvi. 614 n.

Astartus, recovers the Tyrian Throne, ii. 379.

After, a famed archer, the story of viii. 86 n.

Asterius, his gigantic remains, xvi. 589 n.

Astorga massacred by the Goths, xvi. 267, xix. 162.

† Astratic islands, where, xviii. 107.

Astrologers, a remarkable account of, v. 341. n. & seq. n.

— their liberty restrained, xiii. 469. Banished Rome, 566. Why persecuted by Tiberius, 655. Expelled by Claudius, xiv. 156. By Vitellius, 369. Their odd edict against him, ib.

Astronomy begun among the descendants of Seth, i. 243. Ascribed to the Egyptians, 579.

Astulphus chosen king of the Lombards, xix. 574. Takes Ravenna, ib. Invades Rome, 575 & seq. His new edicts, 577. Defeated by Pepin, 579. Besieged in Pavia, 581. Submits to him, ib. Restores his conquests, 582. His death, 584.

† Astura, where sited, xiii. 229 & n.

Astures, subdued by Augustus, xiii. 374, 375. Desperate end, 375. Cruel usage from Lama, 383. Subdued afresh, 390.

† — who, and where sited, xviii. 342, 343 n.

Astyages, whether succeeded by Cyaxares or Cyrus, iv. 500, 501 n. His dreams of his daughter, v. 58. Orders her child to be murdered, ib. Cruelty to Harpagus for not doing it, 62. To the magi, for their wrong advice, 66. Defeat and imprisonment, ib. &c.

Asylas, king of Hetruria, xi. 276.

Atalanta's bravery, in killing the Calydonian boar, vi. 77 & n. Put to death, viii. 371.

Atamnas, king of Cappadocia, ix. 462.

Atamirus, Jupiter, why so called, vii. 403.

Atargatis, the temple of, burnt, ix. 96 & x. 147. Plundered by Crassus, xi. 20.

Atarneus, why given to the Chians, vii. 563.

Ataulphus sent for into Italy, xvi. 1712. Defeated, 175. Joins Alaric ib. Raised by Attalus, 177. Made king of the Goths, 186. Betrays Jovianus to Honorius, 190. Falls out with him, 192. Marries Placidia, 193. Forced to flee into Spain, 194. Stabbed to death, 195. See also vol. xix. 118, 153.

Atec submits to Maximinian, xv. 295. An antient king of the Franks, xix. 240.

† Ateгна besieged by Cæsar, xiii. 120. Its dreadful end, ib.

Atellanæ, first actors at Rome, xi. 6242 n.

Attellius advises against fighting the triumvirs, xiii. 262.

Athaliah's impious reign, iv. 119.

Athanagil, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, xix. 118.

Atharic's apology for aiding Procopius, xv. 620. Defeated by Valens, 623. Makes peace with him, ib. Invaded by the Hunns, xvi. 12. Retires into the rocks, 14. Refuges with Theodosius, 44. His death ib. See also vol. xix. 46. & seq. His famed wall, 47. Declared Theodoric's successor, 442. His letter to the senate, &c. 443. Debauches and death, 448.

Atheas, king of Scythia, outwits the Macedonians, v. 481. & seq.

Athena, daughter of Chronus, queen of Attica, i. 398.

— the Greek name of Minerva, v. 641.

Atheneas, slain by the Arabians, viii. 393 & seq.

— sent to persecute the Jews, x. 1154

Atheneus's writings and character, xv. 71 n.

Athenodorus, one of Longinus's generals, beheaded, xvi. 296.

Athenian citizens, how admitted, vi. 132, & 133 n & seq. n.

Athenians, their government, kings, &c. v. 643 & seq. Punished for Theseus's curse, 654 & n. Governed by archons, 658. Dwindle into democracy, 659.

I N D E X to the

Their state under the archons, vi. 89 & seq. Cylon's insurrection punished, 100 & seq. Driven out of Salamis, 102. Expiated by Epimenides, ib. Recover Salamis, 106. Divided into three parties, 131. Resettled by Solon, 132 & seq. New changes, ib. Their magistrates, 134 & seq. Inferior courts, 144 & seq. Enslaved by Pisistratus, 151 & seq. Vain attempt against him, 156 & seq. Veneration for him, 166. Turned into detestation, 170. Their tribes augmented from four to ten, 171. Invaded by the Spartans, ib. & seq. & 456. Beat the Boeotians, &c. 173. War against the Ægeans, 174, & seq. Assist the Ionians, v. 112. Treatment of Darius's heralds, 117. Distressed by him, 118. vi. 178, & seq. Success against him, 182, 183. Preparations against Xerxes, v. 134. vi. 196. Defeat him at sea, v. 140, & seq. 143, & seq. Forsake their city and country, vi. 199. Assist the Egyptians, &c. 229, & seq. Beat the Ægeans and Corinthians, 234, 235. Defeated in Egypt, v. 158. At Tanagra, vi. 235, & seq. Defeat the Thebans, 237, & seq. Make and break peace with Persia, v. 183, 185. vi. 240. A true poll of their citizens, 245. War with the Samians, 247, 251. Double victory over the Corinthians, 255. Fleet against the Greeks, 264. Visited with pestilence, 266, 269, 277. Assist Leontidas, 277, & seq. Defeated in Boeotia, 285. Peace with Sparta, 287, & seq. League with the Argives, 290, & 291, n. Defeated, 293, & seq. War against Perdiccas, 294. Their fleet destroyed in Sicily, 297—302, & seq. New war with Sparta, 304. Establish an oligarchy, 307, & seq. Opposed by the army, 310, & seq. Beaten at sea, 313. Defeat the Peloponnesians, 314, to 318. Ingratitude to their generals, 319, & seq. Beaten by Lyfander, 321, & seq. Under thirty tyrants, 322. Rescued by Thrasybulus, 325. Peace with Sparta, 326. And Persia, 341. Success against the former, 344. War against the Macedonians, 347, & seq. Assist the Phocians against the holy league, 350. Subdued by Philip, 359, & seq. Rejoicing at his death, 361. War against Macedon after Alexander's death, 364. Submissive peace with Antipater, 365. Ingratitude to Phocion, 369. Reduced by Cassander, 371. Abominable flattery to Antigonus, 372, & seq. Ingratitude to Demetrius Phalereus, ib. & seq. To the son of Antigonus, 374, & seq. To Aratus, 377. Restored by him, 377. Obtain a consular army against Philip, vii. 79. Their tribes from whom named, 71, n. Subdued by Sylla, 85. By Cæsar, 86. Honoured by Germanicus, 87. Their various fates since, ib. & seq.

Athenians invited into Sicily, vii. 186, & seq. Beaten by the Syracusans, 196, & seq. 199. At sea, 202, & seq. Ruined in Sicily, 207, & seq. Their prisoners cruelly treated, 210. Noble carriage towards Dion, 268. War with Rhodes, 409, & seq. With the Mitylenians, 554. Purify Delos, 605. Drive the Pelasgi out of Attica, 616. Ill success in Ægine, 236, n. & seq. n. Fall out with the Persians, viii. 52, & seq. Answer to Alexander, 58. Outwitted by Philip, 83. Assist the Olynthians. 90. Send Phocion against Philip, 113. Defeated at Cheronea, 118. Rank flattery to Philip, 130. To Alexander, 149, 150. Treachery to Demetrius, 408. Punished, 410. Submit to Antipater, 427. Betrayed to Mithridates, ix. 397.

— high honours to Hyrcan, x. 242, & n.

— raise statues to Brutus and Cassius, xiii. 204, & seq. Reception of M. Antony, 294. Amply rewarded, 297. Flattery to Cleopatra, 348. Punished by Augustus, 391. Reception of Germanicus, 579, & n.

— highly favoured by Adrian, xiv. 619, 633. Oppressed by Herodes, xv. 20.

Athenion sent into Judæa, ix. 208. His kindness to Joseph, 209, & seq. See also, x. 91, 92.

— general of Cleopatra, his treachery to Herod, x. 291.

— head of the rebel slaves, xii. 485. Imprisoned by Salvius, ib. & 486. Defeated, 499. Relieves Triocola, ib. Success against the Romans, 500. Killed in single combat, ib.

† Athens, whence so called, v. 641, & n. Described, vi. 127, & seq. Various fates, 131, n. Government after Solon, 134, 135, & seq. Destroyed by Mardonius, 210. Rebuilt by Conon, 337. Fortified, 213, 214. Twice attempted by the Peloponnesians, 317, 318. Taken by the Spartans, 322, & seq. Garrisoned by the Macedonians, 365, & seq. By Cassander, 371. Becomes one of the chief states after the Achæan league, 527. Its history from that time, vii. 64, & seq. Attempted by Philip, 72. By Brutus, 76, 77. Besieged by Sylla, 78, & seq. Blockaded and famished, 83. Taken and put put to the sword, 85. Beautified by Adrian, xiv. 633. How governed under him, 634. The walls of it rebuilt, xiv. 239. Burnt by the Heruli, 247. Resumes its old idolatry under Julian, 529. Plundered by the Goths, xix. 127. By Alaric, 146.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Athens, New, built at Delos, xiv. 634.

† — the aqueduct of, finished, xiv. 667.

† Athesis, river, its spring and course, xi. 264.

Athletæ first introduced at Rome, xii. 314.

† Athos, the mountain of, its height, i. 295, n. The passage through, cut by Xerxes, v. 128, & seq.

Athothis, king of Egypt, who, i. 581, 601, n.

† — palace at Memphis, i. 601, n.

Athrongs, a gigantic fellow, takes up the royalty, x. 403. Defeated, ib.

Atian family, its antiquity, xiii. 163, & n.

Atimos, infamy, a punishment at Athens, vi. 121.

† Atintanes, what people they were, vii. 13, n.

† Atlantic islands. Vid. Fortunate, xii. 593, n. Conquered by the Egyptians, xviii. 22.

† Atlantides, who, and where sited, xviii. 80. Their customs, 81.

† Atlantis of Plato, xviii. 83.

Atlas, the son of Uranus, i. 390. Murdered by Chronus, 393. Gives name to the Atlantii in Afric, 392, n.

— the inventor of astronomy, &c. xviii. 29. First king of Mauritania, 31. Overcome by Hercules, ib. The same with Antæus, ib. & n. The fable of, explained, 32.

— the nephew of Jupiter, whence so named, v. 432, n. Reigned in Mauritania, 539, n.

† — mountains, where situate, xvii. 558. xviii. 2. Described, 15.

Atomic system, its author, i. 113. Principles, 115, & seq. Raised by Epicurus, 117. Received by modern christians, and others, 118.

† Atra besieged by Trajan, xiv. 593. Its situation, ib. Holds out against Severus, xv. 116. Against Artaxerxes, 158.

Atratinus chosen inter-rex, xi. 463.

Atrius, a revolted Roman, beheaded, xii. 274.

† Atropatene, part of Media, described,

iv. 445. Whence so called, ix. 626. Its kings, 627, & seq. By whom conquered, ibid. & seq.

† Atropatia, where situate, viii. 607, n.

† Attacoti different from the Caledonians, xviii. 672. Invade the Romans, 714.

Attalus, king of Pergamus, joins against the Achæans, vi. 604. vii. 6, 7, & seq. Forced to quit Opus, vi. 606. Invaded by Philip, 610. Assists the Athenians against him, vii. 70. The Attalian tribe founded in honour of him, 71. The inventor of tapestry, v. 566.

— defeats the Gauls, ix. 473. His other conquests, 474. Love of learning, and death, 475.

— II. sent to Rome, ix. 476. His cowardice at Pergamos, 478. Generosity at Rome, 488. Succeeds Eumenes, 490. 491. Invaded by Prusias, ib. Aided by the Romans, 493. Aids Nicomedes against his father, 495. His death and character, 497.

— III. his cruelties, ix. 498, & seq. Death, ibid. Bequeaths his kingdom to the Romans, ib. & n. & xii. 383.

— speech to Philip, viii. 125. Ill treatment of Pausanias, 132. Treasonable views, 143. Put to death, 144.

— Claud. put to death by Heliogabalus, xv. 152.

— sent to, and promoted by Honorius, xvi. 174. Narrow escape from Alaric, 175. Made prefect of Rome, ib. And emperor by Alaric, 177. Deposed by him, ib. (Vid. & vol. xix. 153.) Restored and deposed by the same, 183. Advice to the Goths, 190. Resumes the purple, 194. Taken prisoner, 198. His moderate punishment, ib.

— king of the Marcomans, allies with Rome, xix. 348, & seq.

Attic coin described, v. 642.

† Attica, whence so called, v. 642. Part of Græcia Prop. 604. Described, 640, & seq. Government, kings, &c. 642, & seq. Religion, 645. Change of government, 658. Sacked by the Persians, vi. 178. Its pre-eminence at sea, 216. Invaded by Xerxes, v. 136. Left to the mercy of the Persians, v. 145. vi. 199. Invaded by the Peloponnesians, vi. 264, & seq. Ravaged by Philip, vii. 70, 73. Betrayed into Mithridates's interest, 75. Enslaved by Aristion, ib. & seq. & 84. One of the three chief states after the Achæan league, ib.

Attica fides, a proverb, v. 641.

I N D E X to the Atticus's opinion of the origin of the universe, i. 136.

—— Curtius, accompanies Tiberius, xiii. 654, & n.

—— Jul. boasts himself the murderer of Otho, xiv. 327.

—— takes the odium of burning the capitol, xiv. 404.

—— Aulus, his bravery and death, xiv. 485.

—— finds a treasure in his house, xiv. 550. How bid to use it, ib.

—— bishop of Constantinople, his kindness to the refuged christians, xvi. 203.

Attila the Hunn's peace with Rome, xvi. 231. Cruelty to the Hunnish princes, ibid. Northern conquests, ibid. & seq. In Thrace, 232. Proud demands on Theodosius, 233. Dreadful devastations, 234. Falls out with Valentinian, ib. & seq. Conspired against, 236. Powerful army against him, 244. High demands on him, 245. Ravages in Gaul, 246. Repulsed by Ætius, 247. Bravery at the battle of Chalons, 248. Repasses the Rhine, 250. Cruelty to the Aquileians, ib. Odd retaliation for the Roman pictures, ib. Truce with Rome, 251. Defeated by the Visigoths, and dies, ib. & seq. (See also vol. xix. 57—94.)

Artilius's success against the Samnites, xii. 66, & seq.

—— Regulus, subdues the Salentines, xii. 95.

—— A. Collatin. entangled in Sicily, xii. 120. His success there, 121.

—— Marc. Reg. triumphs over the Carthaginians, xii. 120, & seq. Success in Africa, 122 & seq. Destroys the serpent at Bagrada, 123. Conquests in Afric, 124, & seq. Offers peace to the Carthaginians, 125. Taken prisoner, 127, 128. Cruelly used by them, 128. Sent by them to Rome, 135. His noble speech to the senate, 136, & seq. Obstinate return to Carthage, 137. Tortured to death, ib. & n.

—— Catalinus's success in Sicily, xii. 120.

—— Regulus, killed by the Gauls, xii. 212.

—— Batus, his extravagant course, xiii. 576, 577.

—— freeman, his amphitheatre kills twenty thousand Romans, xiii. 657, 658. His banishment, ib.

—— Verus, his valour and death, xiv. 390.

Artis, how begot and preserved, v. 505.

Artis, his fatal wedding, v. 506.

—— daughter to Cranaus, v. 645.

Attius Tullus's reception of Coriolanus, xi. 447. Invades Rome with him, 448, & seq. Treachery to him, 455. Killed by the Romans, 457.

—— Pateras's writings and character, xv. 426, n.

Attræus's bloody revenge, v. 631, n. Killed by Egyptus, ib.

† Attrebatii, where sited, xviii. 659.

Attrog, a fruit worn by the Jews on the feast of tabernacles, x. 214, n.

† Aturia, a province of Assyria, iv. 196.

Atyædæ, a race of Lydian kings, v. 574.

Atys, the son of Cotis, v. 574, 578. Killed by a wild boar, 586.

—— king of the Gauls, defeated and killed, xii. 162.

Atzban, whether he embraced mollemism, xviii. 171.

† Avari, who, xvi. 320. Deprived of their pension, ib. By Tiberius, 324. Invade the Romans, 327. Defeated, 328. Stirred up by Cosrhoes against Heraclius, 339.

Avaricum taken by Cæsar, xviii. 561.

Auctorati, what, and whence so called, xii. 409, n.

† Audus, mount, in Numidia, xvii. 549.

† — river, ib.

† — promontory, where, xvii. 558.

† Aventine mount, burnt, xiv. 21. Why so called, xi. 283. Yielded to the plebeians, 510.

Averroes suspected of holding the eternity of matter, i. 79.

Aufaniæ matres, who, xviii. 599, n.

Aufidus conspires against Sertorius, xii. 614. His miserable end, 617.

Auge, princess of Arcadia, put to death, vi. 11, & n.

Auges, a Bathian prince, xix. 118.

Augeus, king of Elis, his stable cleansed by Hercules, vi. 68. That fable explained, 71. His expulsion and death, 71, 72.

Augurs, whence so named, xi. 297, n. Their office, ib. & 316. Forbid to assist at funerals, xiii. 540, n.

Auguries, how first introduced at the installation of kings, xi. 293. How performed, 297.

August, the month of, whence so named, xiii. 366, 412, 479.

—— a new name given to Octavian, xiii. 370.

† Augusta

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Augusta Vagienorum, where, xi. 255.
 † — Taurinorum, now Turin, xi. 255.
 † — Prætoria, capital of the Salafians, xi. 256.
 † — Vindellicorum, Aufburgh, where, xiii. 405, n.
 † Augustal, the street of Daphne, whence so called, xv. 405.
 † Augustamnica, part of Lower Egypt, i. 488.
 † Augustodunum, capital of the Ædui, xiii. 612. Rebuilt by Constantius, xv. 302.
 Augustus's friendship to Herod, x. 271. Victory at Actium, 292. Accepts Herod's friendship, 294. Reception in Judæa, 295. Displeased with Herod, 320. Decree for taxing the world, 340, & n. Appealed to by Archelaus, 398. Divides the Jewish kingdom, 406. The rest see in Octavius.
 — the son of Orestes, why called Augustulus, xvi. 282. Proclaimed emperor, ib. Deposed and maintained by Odoacer, 284, 285.
 — temple rebuilt by Adrian, xiv. 618.
 Avicenna suspected of holding the eternity of the world, i. 79.
 Avignon, taken by Theodoric, xix. 297.
 Avitus consecrated at Edessa, xv. 146. Peace with the Goths, xvi. 225.
 — made general of the Romans, xvi. 261. Proclaimed emperor, 262. Deposed, 264. His death, 265. See vol. xix. 159, 160.
 Aulea, a famed kind of Pergamean tapestry, v. 566.
 Aulis, in Bœotia, the Greeks sworn at, v. 662.
 Aulus shamefully defeated in Numidia, xvii. 589.
 — Gell. a disciple of Favorinus, xiv. 649, n. Character of Epictetus, 650, n.
 — of Calvisius, xiv. 674, n. His writings, xv. 51, n.
 — Pompon. revolts in Gaul, xv. 294.
 Aurelian's success against the Persians, xi. 83. Severity at Palmyra, 85.
 — proclaimed emperor, xv. 254. His rise and character, ib. Success in the north, 255. See vol. xix. 129. & seq. Inlarges the Roman walls, xv. 257. Success against Zenobia, 259. 261. Receives embassies from the east, 262. Success in Egypt, ib. His triumph at Rome, ib. Kindness to Zenobia, 264.

Reforms the state, 265. His bread-crowns to the people, 266. Success in Gaul, &c. 267. Assassinated, 269. Funeral honours, &c. ib. & seq.
 — family, an account of, xiv. 651, & seq.
 — priests, by whom created, xv. 51
 — the historian, his writings, xv. 274, n.
 Aurelius, Marc. his character of Antoninus, xiv. 664. Created Cæsar, 667. Consul, 668. Succeeds Antoninus, 669, 671. His extract, learning, names, &c. xv. 1, 2. & seq. Takes L. Verus for his colleague, 5. Generosity to the distressed Romans, 6. Mild government, 9. Triumphs over Parthia, 11. Styled Pater patriæ, ib. & seq. Wise orders during the plague and famine, 12. German war, 13. Success against the barbarians, 18. Delivered by the prayers of the christians, 22. Stay in Germany, 25. Two letters concerning Cassius, 28, n, 29. Speech against him 32. Concern for his death, 33. Kindness to his children, 34. Letter to Faustina about them, ib. & seq. March into Egypt, 36. Shameful mourning for Faustina, ib. Visit to Athens, 38. Great skill in philosophy, 39. Success against the Germans, ib. Sudden death, funeral, &c. 40. Meditations, 41.
 Aurelian, Victor, his books imperfect, xiv. 582.
 — Verus, his history lost, xiv. 582.
 — Titus, Fulv. See Antoninus, xiv. 617.
 — Nemesianus, &c. conspire against Caracalla, xv. 137.
 — Philip his writings and character, xv. 177, n.
 — Cotta, his success in Sicily, xii. 132, & seq. Against Lilybæum, 146.
 — Penicula, whipped and degraded, xii. 132.
 Aureolus forced to assume the purple, xv. 238. His rise and success, ib. & seq. Defeated in Italy, 248. Killed, 251.
 — the bridge built to his memory, xv. 251.
 Auritæ, the first race that reigned in Egypt, i. 273, & n.
 Aurum Coronarium, what, xiv. 662.
 Auruntii, driven out of Campania, xi. 268. Their origin, 269. Defeated by the Romans, 424, 425.
 † Aufetani, where fitted, xvii. 345. Invaded by Scipio, ib.
 † Aufones, their origin, xi. 269. xix. 111. Conquered by the Romans, xii. 33.
 Aufonius's

I N D E X to the Ausonius's character and writings, xvi. 36, & 56, n.

Auspices, whence so called, xi. 297, n.

Austin, St. judgment of Vespasian's miracles, xiv. 432. Censure of Porphyry, xv. 324, n. & seq. Panegyric on the Roman consuls, xvi. 67. Zeal for church asyla, 99. Sermon on the deliverance of Constantinople, 130. Character of Olympius, 170. Apology for the destruction of Rome, 185.

† Ausurians, who, xvi. 189. Waste Pentapolis, ib.

Autaritus, betrayed by the Numidians, xvii. 301. Defeated, 302. Seized by Hamilcar, 307.

Autefloking of Thebes runs mad, v. 671.

Autharis chosen king of the Lombards, xix. 512. Success against the Romans, ib. & seq. Conversion, 514. Conquests, 516. Death, 517.

Autochton, what, vi. 3: The second order of Athenian citizens, 132.

† Autolala, metropolis of the Autololes, a tribe of the Getulians, xviii. 45, 46, & n.

Autolychus, the famed statue of, ix. 429, n.

† Automelæ, where situate, xvii. 184, n.

Autonomi subdued by Alexander, ix. 523.

Autronius, sworn enemy to Cicero, xiii. 9, n.

Autun relieved by Constantius, xv. 363. By Julian, 475. Taken by Childebert, xix. 319. Its temple and hot baths, xviii. 467, n.

Auvergne taken by Euric xix. 168.

Auxesius's statue erected by the Epidaurii, vii. 636, & n.

† Auxume, metropolis of Ethiopia, xviii. 84. Its ruins, ib. & seq.

—— Abbassine princes crowned at, xviii. 96.

† Auzales, in Afric, by whom built, ii. 380.

† Auzia, where sited, xvii. 557.

Axan sultan's generosity to Romalius, xvi. 462. Treaty with Cutlumoses, 464, 465.

Axes, borne by the lictors, xi. 294. Set aside by Poplicola, 394. By whom resumed, 414.

Axieros, among the Phœnicians, what, xvi. 637, n.

Axiothea kills herself, and all her daughters, vii. 505.

† Axius, a river in Macedonia, viii. 22.

† Axones, who, and where sited, vi. 126.

Aylsford, the battle of, xix. 16, 17.

Azahel, killed by Abner, iv. 14.

† Azama, where situate, xvii. 546.

Azan, king of Arcadia, vi. 10.

† Azania, the portion of Azan, ib.

Azariah, succeeds Amasiah, iv. 128.

His piety and success, 134. Smitten with leprosy, why, 135. His death, 136.

† Azazene, where sited, xvi. 203. Abandoned to the Romans, 204.

Azelmic, king of Tyre, ii. 386. Spared by Alexander, 391.

Azer of the Asiatica, the same as Terah, i. 385, & n.

Azizus, king of Emessa, turns Jew, ix. 635.

† Azotus taken by Azarhaddon, ii. 61. Retaken by Psammitichus, ib. Taken by Judas Maccabeus, x. 150. Given to Salome, 406.

Azurmi, princess of Persia, raised to the throne, xi. 245, 246. Murdered, ib.

Azyla. See Churches, xvi. 99.

B.

B A A L, one of the Phœnician deities, ii. 340. Its numerous priests, &c. 350.

—— Thalassius worshipped at Sidon, ii. 342. Many deities of that name, 340, n. 342, n. Sometimes a goddess, 343. Conjectures concerning that deity, xvi. 614, & seq. & n. Sometimes meant the true God, 626.

Baal-berith, its etymon, iii. 503.

—— Peor and Phegor, the god of the Moabites, ii. 101, & n. Several opinions concerning him, 102, n.

Baal Zephon, unknown to antient geographers, ii. 580, n.

—— Zebub, how worshipped by the Philistines, ii. 227. Why so called, ib.

—— made king of Tyre, ii. 384.

Baalis, the last king of Ammon, ii. 128. Receives the fleeing Jews, ib. Advice against Ishmael, ib. Carried prisoner into Babylon, 129.

Baana, one of the murderers of Ishboeth, iv. 16. Put to death by David, ib.

—— head of the returning Jews, x. 9.

Baasha succeeds Jeroboam, iv. 87. His death, 89.

Baau, the first woman according to the Phenicians, i. 170, & n.

Babai defeated by the Ostrogoths, xix. 176.

Babas, the sons of, put to death, x. 299, & n.

† Babel, by whom built, i. 354, 364, & n. 410, 411, & 436, n. When begun gun, 378, 410. The design of that work, ib. & seq. Opinions concerning it, ib. & seq. Its description, 414, & n. Its ruins, 418, & n. Traditions about them, ib. & seq. Why called the tower of Nimrod, 421, n.

Babia, one of the Syrian deities, ii. 286, & n. Children called Babyas from her, ib.

Babilus's bloody advice to Nero, xiv. 235.

Babylas forces the emperor to do penance, xv. 212. Martyred under Decius, 214.

† Babylon, how, and by whom built, i. 411, n. Whether by Semiramis, iv. 239. The fable of its speedy building, ib.

† — the kingdom of, whence so called, iv. 302. Its proper boundaries, ib. Extent, situation, &c. ib. & seq. Rivers, canals, &c. 306. Natural and artificial rarities, 310. Antiquity, government, &c. 311. Princes, &c. 315. Laws, 316. Kingdom, when founded, 365. Metropolis, described, 406, & seq. Temple of Belus, 412. Two famed palaces, 416. Hanging gardens, ib. Canals, lakes, &c. ib. Ruins, i. 418, & seq. & n.

— the fall of, according to Herodotus and others, iv. 435, & seq. According to Daniel, 436, & seq.

† — when, and by whom taken, iv. 490, & seq. v. 91, & seq. 227. A further description of its ruins, viii. 569, n.

† Babylonia conquered by Mithridates, xi. 11. By Trajan, 66.—xiv. 585. Entered by him, 586. Taken by Cassius, xv. 10. By Severus, 108.

Babylonian antediluvian history, i. 265.

Babylonians ascribed the order, &c. of the world to their Belus, i. 103. Their religion and deities, iv. 317. First authors of human sacrifices, 343. Their customs, 346. Sale of their virgins, ib. Prostitution of their women, 347. Burials, 348. Character, ib. Dress, 349. Arts, 356. Sciences, &c. ib. & seq. Trade, commerce, &c. 359. Chronology, 360. Might and riches, 359, & n. Table of kings from Ptolemy and Eusebius, 361. Of the successors of Nimrod, 364. Babylonians and Assyrians, two branches of one empire, 371, 372. The former in subjection to the latter, 373. Revolt from the Persians, v. 103, & seq. Streightly besieged by Darius, ib. Bloody expedient to stop all useless mouths, 104. Surrender, ib. To Alexander, 227, & viii. 218. Forced to abandon their city, 395, & seq. Freed by Demetrius, ix. 106.

VOL. XX.

Bacchidæ, kings of Corinth, whence so named, vi. 39. Seize on the government, ib. & seq.

Bacchides defeated by Judas Maccab. x. 131. Sent to invade Judæa, 154, 161. Success against Judas, 162. Cruelties to the Jews, ib. & 166. Returns to Antioch, ib. & n. Defeated by Jonathan, 167. Makes peace, 168.

Bacchus worshipped in Egypt. i. 557. Its bscene rites, ib.

— worshipped by the Phrygians, v. 511. Why supposed the grandson of Cadmus, 665, n. How worshipped at Elis, vi. 67, & n.

— defeats the Titans, vii. 469, Worshipped at Naxos, 584.

— its famous temple there, vii. 588. At Andros, 598. Worshipped by the Mauritanians, xviii. 25.

† Bactra besieged and taken by Ninus, iv. 235, & seq. By a pretended stratagem of Semiramis, ib. Taken by Alexander, viii. 252.

† Bactria, a province of Persia, described, iv. 513.

† — the kingdom of, ix. 628, & seq. When and by whom founded, viii. 587. Invaded by Alexander, 251, & seq. By the Scythians, ix. 631.

Bactrians, their character and brutish customs, ix. 629. Ally with Adrian, xiv. 622. Embassy to Antoninus, 666.

Bacurius serves under Valens, xv. 622. Under Theodosius, xvi. 101. His gallant character, 102.

† Badanatha, capital of the Thamydeni, xviii. 198.

† Badeo, a city in Arab. Felix, xviii. 199.

Badezor, Bazor, king of Tyre, ii. 380.

Badon, the battle of, xix. 29. When, ibid.

Ræbius, basely corrupted by Jugurtha, xii. 442.

— Marcellus, put to death by Severus, xv. 115.

† Bætica, province, described, xviii. 333. Its Roman colonies, 334. Cities, 335. Bays and sea-ports, 338. Mountains, soil, &c. 339, 340. Minerals, &c. ib.

Bætilæ of the heathens their origin, xvi. 634, 635, & n. Worshipped by the Phœnicians, i. 394, 395, n.

† Bætis, river in Bætica, xvii. 337, & n. Its two mouths, ib. Its spring and course, 339.

† Bætula, the silver mines of, xvii. 457.

F

† Bæturia

I N D E X to the † Bæturia. See Bætica, xviii. 333.

 Bagaudæ defeated by Maximin, xv. 294.
 xix. 226. Give a passage to Sarus, xvi. 164.
 † Bagdad, where situate, viii. 569, n. & seq. n.
 Bagoas, general of Ochus, v. 200. Strives to save the Egyptian temples, 202, & seq. Redeems their records, ib. Poisons Ochus, ib. His other treasons and punishment, 203, & seq.
 — revenge on Orsines, viii. 331, n.
 † Bagraða, a river described, xvi. 585.
 Bahaman, king of Persia, according to Oriental writers, v. 342. Vid. Ardshir, ib.
 Barharam, king of Persia; according to Oriental writers, xi. 179, n. Flays Manes alive, 192.
 — II. his reign and character, xi. 193.
 — III. his obscure reign, xi. 194.
 — IV. shot to death, xi. 200.
 — V. his education, xi. 202, & seq. Magnanimity, 203. Success against the Turks, 204, 205. Travels into India, ib. & seq. Feats and conquests, 206. Death uncertain, 207.
 — Tchoubin, his advice to Hermouz, xi. 231. Success against the Turks, 232. Rebels, ib. His character, 233. Death, 235, & seq.
 † Bahrein province described, xviii. 210.
 † Baiaæ, the famed bridge of, built by Caligula, xiv. 64, & seq.
 Bajazet's swift conquests, xvi. 540. Arrogance to the Greek emperor's, ib. Defeats one hundred and thirty thousand christians, 541. Defeated by Tamerlan, 543. His death, ib.
 Bail, when first taken in capital cases, xi. 495.
 Baithus, an Epicurean Jew, x. 90.
 Balaam, who, ii. 104, n. Sent to curse Israel, ib. Whether his ass truly spoke, 106, n. Blesses instead of cursing, ib. & seq. His death, 109, & iii. 30. Some obscurities in his prophecies explained, 27, 28, n. The place of his birth, x. 344, n.
 Balak, king of Moab, sends for Balaam, ii. 103, 104.
 Balamir. See Valamir, xix. 44.
 Balas, first, second, third kings of Parthia, according to original writers, xi. 179, n. & seq. n.
 — Alexander. Vid. sub Alexander Balas, ix. 111. & seq.

Balash, king of Persia, according to original writers, xi. 213.
 Balator, king of Tyre, ii. 384.
 † Balbec, the wonder of Syria, described, ii. 269. Its temple, 270. Palace, 274. By whom built, 276, n.
 Balbilius made governor of Egypt, xiv. 181. His writings and character, 293, n.
 Balbus sent to succour Rome, xii. 568.
 — the historian, his character, &c. xiii. 87.
 — Corn. triumphs over the Garamantes, xiii. 399.
 — Læli. a senator, degraded, xiv. 26.
 Balbinus, Dec. made Caracalla's colleague, xv. 131.
 — Dec. Cæsar, chosen emperor, xv. 193. His extract, &c. 194. Wounded in an uproar, 196. Great joy at Maximin's death, 199. Jealousy of Maximus, 200, & seq. Killed by the Prætorian guards, 201.
 † Balch made the feat of the Persian, empire, v. 287, 294. Taken by the king of Touran, 336.
 Baldwin saves Edeffa, xvi. 482. Disappears, ib.
 — crowned emperor, xvi. 506. His defeat and dismal end, ib. & xix. 424.
 — II. crowned Latin emperor, xvi. 510, 512. Driven out of Constantinople, 515.
 Balearic islands, subdued, xii. 402.
 — slingers, very dexterous, xvii. 157, n.
 † — islands described, xviii. 351. Ravaged by the Vandals, xix. 200.
 Baleazer, the son of Hiram, king of Tyre, ii. 379.
 Balista's success against the Persians, xv. 233. Goes over to Macrianus, 236. Take the purple, 240. Murdered, 243.
 Balistæ of Archimedes, described, vii. 362 n. xii. 88.
 † Balkis, queen of Sheba, who, and where sited, i. 476.
 Ballonymus, how created king of Sidor, ii. 373, & seq.
 † Balm of Gilead, a plantation of, ne Asphaltites lake, viii. 394.
 — the plant of described, x. 289, n.
 Balthi, the princely tribe of, xix. 10118.
 † Bambyce, Hierapolis in Syria, 264.
 † Bamoth Arnon, a station of the raelites, iii. 24.
 † Banasa, where sited, xviii. 10.
 Banditi of Palestine, destroyed by Irod, x. 254, & 274, & seq. Their obstinacy, 275, n.
 † Banju

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Banjuræ, a tribe of Getulians, where sited, xviii. 4, & 45.

Bankers at Rome, their office, xi. 639.

Barabanes kills Siroes, and mounts the throne, xvi. 342.

Barak defeats Siserah, iii. 495.

Barames dethrones Hotmisdos, xvi. 327.

† Barami, where sited, xix. 122.

Barat anac, the supposed etymon of Britain, xviii. 648.

Barbara Wastu, the Supreme Being, at Malabar, i. 143.

† Barbarium Promontorium, in Lusitania, xviii. 331.

Barbas's treachery to Theoctistus, xvi. 396. Tyranny under Michael, 398. Murdered, 399.

Barbatio, a bitter enemy to Gallus, xv. 467.

Barbers, suppressed by Julian, xv. 532.

Barca, king of Tyre, ii. 380, & seq. Goes with Dido into Afric, ib. & xvii. 4.

† — the city of, where, and by whom built, xviii. 67. Betrayed to the Persians, 71, & n. Its fate and punishment, 72.

† Barcai, who, and whence, xviii. 68.

Barcan family, or Barchinæ, at Carthage, xvi. 664, n. xvii. 276, n.

Barcokebas, a false Messiah, stirs up the Jews, xiv. 626. Defeated and taken, 628.

Bardanes's unsuccessful war against Gotarzes, xi. 59, 60, & seq.

— revolt and punishment, xvi. 377, 378.

Bardas defeated by the Saracens, xvi. 415.

— Phocas's revolt and banishment, xvi. 424. Proclaimed emperor, 425. Treachery to Sclerus, 434. Death, ib.

— Sclerus's success against the Rossi, xvi. 424. Revolt, 429. Outwitted by Manuel, 431. Defeats Phocas, ib. Defeated and imprisoned, 432. Submits to Basiliscus, 435.

Bardians, Marius's troops, why so called, xii. 550. Their butcheries, &c. at Rome, ib. All cut off by Cinna, 551.

Bards in Gaul, their office inferior to the Druids, xviii. 487.

Bargus the infamous betrayer of Timæus, xvi. 128. Put to death, 129.

Baris, worshipped by the Armenians, ix. 325.

† — the city of, by whom built, x. 207.

† Barrady, Chrysorrhoeas, a river in Syria, ii. 380.

† Barrows, or burying-places, on Salisbury plain, xviii. 437.

Barsina married to Alexander, viii. 332. Her issue by him, 349. Murdered by Polypercon, 452, 453.

Bartholomew called by Christ, and made an apostle, x. 444, n.

Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe, iv. 173.

Barzaentes murders Darius, viii. 232. Put to death by Alexander, 236.

Barzanes, by whom conquered, ix. 323.

Barzaphernes's treachery to Phasaël, x. 267.

Bas, king of Bathynia, ix. 593.

† Bascana, where situate, ix. 133, & 131, n.

† Bashan, the hill of, ii. 199. Conquered by Moses, 200.

Bashemah, Esau's second wife, her extract, ii. 439, n.

Basic the Hunn lifts in the Roman service, xix. 56, 57.

Basil, St. with Julian at Athens, xv. 524. Refuses his invitation to court, ib. Studies under Proereses, 557, n. Strives in vain to convert Valens, 625.

† — the episcopal see of, ix. 458.

Basileus, the second magistrate of Athens, vi. 90. His office, 142.

† Basilica Pauli, by whom built, xiii. 352. Rebuilt, 620.

Basilicæ, or Basilus's laws so called, xvi. 403. Of Leo, 408.

† Basilics at Rome, described, xiii. 620, n.

Basilides's prediction of Vespasian's grandeur, xiv. 415, n. Appears to him at Alexandria, 432.

† Basilipotamos, or Royal river. See Euxrotas, vi. 46, 48, & 142.

Basiliscus made admiral of Leo's fleet, xvi. 275. Treachery and defeat, 276. (See also vol. xix. 214, & seq.) Proclaimed, 283. His extortions and heresy, 286. Resigns, 287. Dies, ib.

— created Cæsar, and deposed, xvi. 287. Made bishop of Cyzicus, ib.

— Tiberius declared emperor, xvi. 539. Put to death, ib.

Basilissa, who, vi. 142.

Basilitzas, an infamous tool of Alexander, xvi. 409.

Basilus sent to treat with Alaric, xvi. 172.

— created Cæsar, xvi. 399. His extract, &c. ib. &c. Kills the emperor.

I N D E X to the 400. Makes his two sons Cæsars, ib. Defeats the Manichees, ib. The Saracens, 401. Builds a vast number of churches, ib. Dies, 402. Instructions to his sons, ib.

—— an impostor's treason and death, xvi. 413, 414. An extortioning eunuch poisons the emperor, xvi. 428. Defeated, 430.

—— the son of Romanus, made Zemisces's colleague, xvi. 423. Defeated by Sclerus, 430. Ill success against the Bulgarians, 432. Defeats Phocas, 434. Cruelty to the Bulgarians, 436. Wars against the Saracens, 438. Death, 439.

Bafina's reception of Childeric, xix. 270, n. Runs away with, and married to him, 274, & n.

Bassi, the family of, converted, xvi. 85.

Bassus, Cæcil. revolts against Cæsar, xiii. 114, & seq. Joins Cassius in Syria, 210.

Bassus, Cœl. a lyric poet, destroyed by mount Vesuvius, xiv. 293, n.

—— Pompon. put to death by Heliogabalus, xv. 153.

Bastards, &c. excluded from the congregation of God, iii. 321.

† Bastarnæ, who, and where sited, xviii. 578, & seq. Invited into Macedon, viii. 489. Fall out with the Thracians, 495. Settled in Thrace, xv. 282. Transplanted, 309. One hundred thousand settled in Thrace, xix. 195.

† Batavia cleared of the Franks, xv. 305.

† Batavian islands described, xiii. 552, n.

—— cohorts sent into Britain, xiv. 370. Dismissed, 372.

Batavians surprised by the Germans, xiii. 557. Revolt against the Romans, xiv. 418, & seq. Defeated, 421. And left in statu quo, 429. Bravery against the Caledonians, 483.

† Bataw, island, where sited, xiv. 419. Ravaged by the Frisians, ib.

Batelnim, among the Jews, what, x. 58, n.

Bath-col of the Jews, what, x. 488, n.

† Bath, in Somersetshire, why called Aquæ Calidæ, xviii. 659.

† Bathancester Bath, taken by the Saxons, xix. 34.

† Bathmæ, the fair of kept for Indian goods, xv. 459.

Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, married to David, iv. 26, 27.

Batia, the daughter of Teucer. See Asia, v. 535.

Battos, the two revolt against the Romans, xiii. 450, 451. One submits, and murders the other, 454, & seq.

Battus, the third king of the Cyreneans, ii. 65.

—— cured of his stammering, vi. 19, n. xviii. 69, 70.

—— III. why surnamed the happy, xviii. 70.

—— IV. invites Demonax, xviii. 70.

† Bauti, the villa of, described, xiv. 195, n.

Bazab, king of Persia. Vid. Zab. v. 267.

† Bazrah, Bozrah, Bozor, a city of Edom, ii. 154.

Bean, the children of, who, x. 138, & n. Defeated, ib.

Beans, how used in voting, vi. 136.

—— a wonderful kind sprung out of a lake, ix. 577.

Bear, king of Sodom, defeated, ii. 192.

† Beauvois peopled by the Franks, xv. 305.

† Bebamburg, Bamborough, by whom built, xix. 30, 31.

† Bebrices, their origin, ix. 492.

Beda's account of the Roman wall in Britain, xv. 117.

† Bedriacum, where situate, xiv. 356. The battle of, 357.

Beelsamen, in the Phœnician, what, i. 258. Meant of the sun, ii. 340.

† Beer, a famed station of the Israelites, iii. 25.

† Beersheba, the well and city of whence so called, ii. 415, n.

Beetle, why worshipped by the Egyptians, i. 563.

Begdeg made king of Westphalia, xix. 111.

Beggars suppressed by Gratian, xvi. 46.

Beheading, not used in Judea before the captivity, iii. 340.

Beifar, king of Egypt, built the city of Mefer, ii. 89.

Bela, the son of Beor, king of the Horites, ii. 159.

† —— a city in the valley of Siddim, ii. 192.

Belatucardus Apollo, so called in Britain, xviii. 656.

† Belerium, promontory, in Danmonia, xviii. 659.

Belesis stirs up Arbaces to rebel, iv. 255, 256, & seq. His history, 366.

† Belgæ,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Belgæ, who, xiii. 16, & n. Settle in Gaul, 33, xviii. 634. Subdued by Cæsar, 558, 640.

† — in Britain, where situate, xviii. 659.

† Belgia, whether conquered by Pharamond, xix. 259.

Belibus king of Babylon's reign, iv. 382.

Belisarius defeated by the Persians, xi. 125, 126. Before Nisibis, 138. By the Persians, xvi. 304. Fortifies their frontiers, 306. Forced to abandon them, ib. Defeats the Persians, 306, 407. Quells a revolt at Constantinople, 309. Sent into Afric, 310. Recalled against the Persians, 312. Drives out the Hunns, 316. Success in Italy, xix. 452. & seq. Haughty answer to the Ostrogoths, 456. Complaint to the emperor, 460, & n. Defence of Rome, 462. Raises the siege of it, 465. Fresh success, ib. & seq. Conquests, 470. Proclaimed emperor by the Goths, 475. Recalled, 476. Sent back against Totila, 485. Dissuades him from destroying Rome, 489. Retakes and rebuilds it, 490. Recalled, 492. His conduct censured, ib. Vid. & vol. xvi. 316. Cleared and restored, ib.

Bellerophon, why so called, vi. 42. Falsely accused, v. 625. Subdues the Solimi, vi. 43. Succeeds Jobates in Lycia, ib. His fatal end, ib. Whence said to kill the chimæra, v. 592, vi. 43, & n.

† Bellona, the temple of, at Comana, ix. 458, 461.

† Bellovaci subdued by Cæsar, xii. 16. xiii. 33. Their extract, and alliance with the Ædui, xviii. 484, n.

Bellovesus settles in Piedmont, xi. 576. xviii. 543.

Belshazzar of Daniel, probably Evilmerodach, iv. 426, & seq. Nabonadius, 439. His vision interpreted by Daniel, 438.

— Daniel, sentiments of the learned about him, iv. 493, n. & seq. n.

Belus, the chief god of the Babylonians, i. 103.

— the son of Neptune, reigns in Egypt, ii. 365:

† — the same with Pul, his temple at Babylon, iv. 323. His tower described, ib. & seq. Said to have been the inventor of astronomy, 325.

Belus, king of Lydia, v. 580.

† — the temple of, seized by Antiochus, ix. 55.

† — a river, whose sand gave the first hint for making of glass, iii. 136.

Belzebub, Satan, &c. prince of the fallen angels, i. 181.

Benaiah succeeds Joab as general, iv. 54.

Ben-hadad, first king of Damascus, bribed by Afa, to war against Baasha, ii. 309. Conquests, ib.

— II. marches against the king of Israel, ii. 309 & seq. Defeated 311. His army crushed under the wall of Aphec, 312 & n. Spared by Ahab, 312, 313. Wars with him and Jehoshaphat, 314. Vain attempt to seize Elisha, 317, 318. Repulsed before Samaria, ib. & seq. Murdered by Hazael, 320. Worshipped by the Syrians under the name of Adad, Ader, &c. ib. n.

— III. thrice defeated by Jehoahaz, ii. 322, 323. Becomes tributary to the kings of Israel, ib. &c.

— the common name of the Syrian kings, ii. 323 n.

Beneventum plundered by Hannibal, xviii. 372. xix. 482.

† — the highway of, made by Trajan, xiv. 583.

— first duke of, xix. 516.

— relieved by Grimoald, xix. 540. The dukes of, 553. Territories, 594. Made a principality, 603. Given to Rodolphus, 604.

Benjamin, the son of Jacob, born, ii. 455. Sent into Egypt, 468. Carested by Joseph, 471. Jacob's blessing to him, how verified, 494 & n. His lot in the promised land, iii. 103.

Benjamites, or tribe of Benjamin, defeat that of Judah, iii. 491. Defeated, with the loss of twenty-five thousand men, ib. The whole tribe destroyed, except five hundred men, 492. How restored, ib. & seq.

Benignus, Orphid. defeated and killed, xiv. 358. His burial, 359.

Benoth, a deity, worshipped under both sexes, iv. 327 & seq. The same with the Ascalonian Derceto, 331.

† Beracha, the vale of, where and whence so called, iii. 116 & n.

Berean christians just reproof to Julian, xv. 541.

Berenice's intrigues at the Egyptian court, viii. 465.

— princess of Lydia, assassinated Demetrius, viii. 586.

— daughter of Ptolemy, married to Antiochus, viii. 588.

— of Auletes, set upon the throne, ix. 264. Murders her husband, 265. Put to death, 272.

Berenice

I N D E X to the Berenice daughter of Salome, married to Aristobulus, x. 312. Her offspring, 323 n.

— of Herod Agrippa, born, x. 423. Married to the king of Chalcis, 562. Her incontinence, 567 n. Pity to the persecuted Jews, 576. Discarded by Titus, 623.

— coma made a Constellation, ix. 206, 207.

† a city in Cyrenaica, xviii. 65.

Bericus flirts up Claudius to invade Britain, xiv. 122. xviii. 699, 700.

Berig invades the Almerugians, &c. xix. 107.

† — Bernica, a province in Northumberland, xix. 31.

Berosus's account of the Chaldean and Babylonian cosmogony, i. 101. Collection of Babylonish antiquities, 265. His character, writings, &c. viii. 584.

Berothai, in Syria, plundered by David, ii. 307.

Berry taken by the Visigoths, xix. 166.

Beryllus, Nero's Greek secretary, xiv. 170.

† Berytus, an antient city of Phenice, ii. 334. Described, ib. & 335 n.

— whether in the isle of Cyprus, vii. 488.

— ruined by an earthquake, xv. 438.

† Besbicus, island, separated from the continent, vii. 546.

† Bessi, a people of Thrace, ix. 515. Subdued by the Romans, ib. & seq.

Bessus's treachery to Darius, v. 231 & seq. Invades Bactria, 232, 236. His treason, viii. 235, 253. Delivered up to Alexander, 254 & seq. His punishment and death, 261.

— Fulvius, his poems, xiv. 453 n.

Bestia, L. Calpurn. his sordid character, xii. 438. Bought off by Jugurtha, ib. & seq. Shameful peace with him, 440. Tried and banished, 445.

† Beth-abara, where sited, iii. 69 n. Whence so called, x. 422 & n.

† Bethagil, a village, where no uncircumcised lived above three days, iii. 139 & n.

† Bethany, where situate, x. 477.

† Bethel Shechem, a city in Canaan. ii. 185. Cut off by Joshua, 200, 201. Seized by the house of Joseph, 207. Whence so called, 437, 438. Fortified by the Syrians, x. 176.

† Bethesda, the pool of, described, x. 448 & n.

† Bethlehem, the waters of, wished for by David, iv. 17.

— Christ born at, x. 340. The children of, massacred, 383. The prophecy of it explained, 384, n. & seq. n.

† Bethmeon, a city of Arabia Petraea, xviii. 183.

† Bethoron, where sited, x. 128 n. Fortified by Bacchides, 166.

† Bethphage, where situate, x. 484.

† Bethsan, ix. 131 n.

† Bethsheam, a city in Canaan, ii. 185. Taken by the Scythians, iv. 480, 481. v. 472.

Bethshemeshites smitten for looking into the ark, iii. 526.

Bethuel, whether the father of Rebecca, or her brother, ii. 417 n. & 422 n.

† Bethzura described, x. 132 & n.

— the battle of examined, x. 132 n. & seq. n. Fortified by Judas, 137. Where situate, ib. n. Taken by Bacchides, 166. By Simon, 177.

† Bætica reduced by the Hunns, xvi. 233. Described, xviii. 333.

Bætis's brave defence of Gaza, v. 219. Cruelly murdered by Alexander, ib.

Betylus, the son of Uranus, i. 390 & 392 n.

Beza's notion of the Herodians confuted, x. 361.

Bezaleel, the famous artificer of the tabernacle, ii. 624.

† Bezancon besieged by the Gauls, xiv. 281. Relieved by the Romans, ib.

† Bezek taken by the Israelites, ii. 206.

† Bezetha, by whom built, x. 560.

Bezoar, Persic, described, iv. 547.

Bias obtains part of Argos, v. 625. Brings Iphiclus's oxen out of Thessaly, vi. 18 n.

† Biblos surrendered to Alexander, v. 217.

Bibulus's sons murdered in Egypt, ix. 275.

— his strange defence, xi. 40 & seq.

— the consul, xiii. 3, 4. Opposes the Agrarian law, 5.

— Pompey's admiral's cruelty to Cæsar's seamen, xiii. 53.

— Caius's law against luxury rejected, xiii. 615.

Bigati, a coin, why so called, xvii. 398 n.

Bilhah, Leah's maid, given to Jacob, ii. 440.

Bilimer defeated by Ricimer, xvi. 279.

Binder

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Bindos's treason and cruelty to Cosrhoes, xi. 155 & seq. Imprisoned by Varamus, 158. Heads the nobles against him, ib.

Bion, where born, vii. 545 n. 547 n.

Birds, whence used in auguries, xi. 297 n. & seq. n.

Births, how celebrated in Thrace, ix. 511.

— two strange ones under Theodosius, xvi. 86.

† Bisaltæ, where situate, viii. 13.

Bishops, their immunities under Constantius, xv. 436.

— orthodox, restored, xv. 437. How to be tried, 468. Why recalled by Julian, 532. Privileged by Theodosius, xvi. 45.

Bissextile year, whence so called, xiii. 117 n.

Bistones in Thrace, subdued by the Romans, ix. 516.

Bithias assists the Carthaginians, xvii. 530.

† Bithynia described, ix. 580 & seq. Its origin, government, &c. 584, 592 & seq. Invaded by Mithridates, 390. Reduced into a Roman province, 601. Adorned and restored by Adrian, xiv. 619. Declares for Cassius, xv. 31. Ravaged by the Scythians, 238. Submits to Licinius, 386.

— ravaged by the Goths, xix. 124.

Bithynian embassy, a proverb, whence, ix. 496.

Bithynians, their origin, ix. 592. Kings, &c. 593. Set up Nicomedes against Prusias, 496. Oppressed by Cilo, xiv. 159.

Bitultic's whimsical embassy to Domitian, xii. 419. Betrayed by him, 420. Led in triumph, 421.

Bituriges subdued by Cæsar, xiii. 33.

Bizaras's Persian history animadverted, xi. 74 n.

Blacks, their origin, 355 n. Not the progeny of Ham, 353. Their blackness accounted for, 173.

Blæsi, the two, put to death, xiv. 22.

Blæsus, Jun. general in Pannonia, xiii. 504. Brave speech to the mutineers, 508. Insulted by them, ib. & seq.

— sent into Afric, 610. Success against Tacfarinas, 621. Styled imperator, ib. & n. His death, 678.

— Jun. declares for Vitellius, xiv. 336. Furnishes him with proper equipage, 368. Hated by him for it, ib.

† Blatobulgium, the antiquities of, xviii. 670.

Bleda succeeds Rouas, xix. 57. Advantageous peace with Rome, 58. Fresh conquests, ib. & seq. The rest see under Attila.

† Blemmyes, where situated, xv. 281. Defeated by Probus, ib. Pliny's fabulous account of them, ib. War with the Moors, 297. Inroads into Egypt, 306. Embassy to Constantine, 409.

† Bletisa, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 329.

† Bnizomenæ, who, and where sited, xviii. 198.

Bo, king of Riisland, xix. 111.

Boadicea ill used by the Romans, xiv. 207. Heads the Britons against them, 209. Success against them, ib. Speech to her army, 211. Defeat and death, 212.

Boanas defeated by the Saracens, xvi. 243.

Boanerges, whence derived, x. 444 n. Their furious zeal rebuked by Christ, 473.

Boar, Erymanthian, brought alive by Hercules, v. 629 n.

— Caledonian, hunted, vi. 77 & n.

Boarex, queen, defeats Styrax, xix. 98.

Boat, a dreadful punishment among the Persians, v. 12.

Bocchus allies with Jugurtha, xii. 461. Defeated, 468 & seq. Makes peace with the Romans, 470 & seq. Answer to Sylla, 471. Double treachery, 473. Gratitude to Sylla, 512. (See & vol. xvii. 596. & seq.)

Bocchus assists the two Pompeys in Spain, xiii. 121.

Bochoris, king of Egypt, surnamed the wife, ii. 54.

Boethus a stoic's doctrine of the world's eternity, 89.

† Bœtica, the battle of, xii. 172. The province of, enlarged by Otho, xiv. 343.

Bœotarchi, the chief magistrates of Bœotia, vii. 88.

† Bœtica, part of Grecia Prop. v. 604. Two of that name, 660. By whom founded, ib. & 661. Famed for dunces, ib. Since called Thebes, 662. Its kings, &c. vid. sub Thebes, 662 & seq. Plundered by the Athenians, vi. 237 & seq. By the Spartans, 499.

Bœotian war, vi. 499 & seq.

Bœotians expelled by the Thessalians, v. 660. Their feats before Tory, ib. Refuse the Nicean peace, vi. 287. Invite Philip into Greece, 356. Join the Athenians against him, 359. Form a republic, vii. 88. Their government, ib. & seq. Displease the Romans, 90 & seq. Subdued by Flaminius, 92 & seq.

— forced to build Heraclea, ix. 583.

Boetius's consulship and character, xix. 298, 438. Put to death by Theodoric, ib. & seq.

† Bog,

I N D E X to the † Bog, river in Scythia, v. 443.

 † Bogasi, the two streights of, vii. 513, 514.

Bogud's war with Juba, xiii. 106. Gains Cæsar the victory of Munda, 123. Cuckolded by him, xviii. 38 n.

— king of Mauritania, accompanies Antony, xiii. 353. Slain at Methona, 356.

† Bohemia, where and whence so called, xi. 576.

Bohemond's success against Alexius, xvi. 472. Narrow escape, 481. Made prince of Antioch, 482. Wars with Alexius, 483. Raises new forces in Italy, 484. Makes peace with him, ib. His death, 485.

† Boii invade Rome, xi. 632. Defeated by Domitius, xii. 160. By Val. Falto, 183. Revolt, 185, 296. Defeated by Merula, 304. Subdued by Sc. Nasica, 306. Settle in Gaul, xiii. 13. Driven out of it by the Marcomani, 405 n. xix. 345: Invite Hannibal, xvii. 352. Treachery to Scipio, 360.

Bojocalus's brave speech to Avitus, xiv. 190.

Bojorix's challenge and defeat, xii. 496. Death, 497.

† Bojohemia, Bohemia, where situate, xiii. 405.

Bolanus, Vett. sent into Britain, xiv. 370.

† Bolissus, Homer's house shewn at, vii. 559.

Bomilcar chosen general against Agathocles, xii. 307. His treachery, ib. See also vol. xvii. 166 & seq. Sent into Sicily, vii. 366. Returns with a larger fleet, 376. Forced back, ib.

— assassinates Massiva, xii. 443. Made Jugurtha's general, and defeated, 450. Betrays him to Metellus, 453. Discovered, 457. Put to death, 458.

— fatal ambition and treachery, xvii. 168, 169 & seq. Assumes the sovereignty at Carthage, 187, 188. Defeated and crucified, 188.

† Bona, in Numidia, where sited, xvii. 547.

† Bona fides, the temple of, at Rome, xi. 317.

Bonduca defeated by Suetonius, xviii. 704.

Bonifacius, count, repulses Ataulphus from Marseilles, xvi. 192. Highly rewarded by Placidia, 217. Undermined by Ætius, ib. Success against Sinex, 218. Invites the barbarians into Afric, ib. Returns into Italy, 221. Sent against Ætius, and killed, ib. See vol. xix. 501.

— made king of Thessaly, xvi. 505.

† Bononia taken by Octavian, xiii. 184. Relieved by Nero, xiv. 160.

† — in Illyricum, where sited, xv. 394.

Bonofus's rise, revolt, and death, xv. 283. & xix. 112. Sent against the revolted Jews, xvi. 333.

Books, an hundred and twenty thousand, burnt at Constantinople, xvi. 287.

Borani revolt in Gaul, xv. 222. Success against the Romans, 228.

† Borysthenes, Nieper, river in Scythia, v. 443 & 445 n.

Bos in lingua, a proverb, v. 642.

Bosporans revolt from Mithridates, ix. 623.

† Bosporus, the kingdom of, ix. 617 & seq. Government, &c. 620 & seq. Given to Pharnaces, 624.

† Bostora taken and burnt by Judas, x. 140.

Bostar joined to Hanno against the Romans, xvii. 253. Defeated before Adda, 255. His miserable end, xii. 138: xvii. 263 n.

Boterus, king of Bithynia, ix. 593.

† Botrys, in Phœnice, built by Ithobal, ii. 380.

† Bovianum taken from the Samnites, xii. 38.

Bous, Boys, Eusebius's mistake about that word, v. 645.

† Bozrah, Bozor, a city of Edom, ii. 154.

† Brachata Gallia, xviii. 395.

Brachmanes of India, who, i. 141. Their opinion of the creation, ib. Put to death by Alexander, viii. 320 & 321 n.

Brachyllas assassinated by the Romans, vii. 91.

† Braga plundered by Theodoric, xix. 229.

Brama, a secondary god among the Bramins, i. 147 & 307.

Bramins. See above, Brachmanes, i. 141 & seq.

† Brama, a deity of the Malabarians, i. 143.

Branas's revolt, xvi. 496. Defeated and killed, 497.

Branchidæ, the oracle of, vii. 129, & n.

— the priests of, massacred by Alexander, vii. 130. viii. 251, n.

Brasen gate at Rome, why so called, xii. 160, n.

Brasidas sent to assist Megara, vi. 284. And Macedon, 285, viii. 64. His success and

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

and moderation, vi. 285, & viii. 64. In Attica, vi. 459. Killed, ib. & viii. 67. His character, vi. 459.

Brass, the invention of, ascribed to Cadmus, v. 666.

— Corinthian, described, vi. 669, & n.

† Brathys, mount in Phænice, why so called, i. 285.

Breastplate of the high-priest described, iii. 261.

† Brecknock inhabited in the time of the Romans, xviii. 665.

Brennus, general of the Celtes, answer to the Roman ambassadors, xi. 577, xviii. 500, & n. Defeats them, xi. 579. Enters and sacks Rome, 580, & seq. Totally defeated by Camillus, 586. xviii. 545.

† Bretania Armorica, three different colonies sent into, xvi. 54.

† Bretagne, whence so called, xvi. 273.

Bribery become necessary at Rome, xiii. 4. Vainly opposed by Cato, 26. Prevented by Augustus, 401. A new law against it, 422. Punished by Valentinian, xv 592.

Brides, Solon's laws concerning, vi. 118.

Bridges, a long causeway made with, by Domitius, xiii. 541, n.

Brienne, John de, made guardian to Baldwin, xvi. 510. Defeats Azem and Ducas, 511. His death, ib.

† Brigantes, in Britain, who, xiv. 151. Subdued, ib. xviii. 667, 703, 705, 707.

† Brigians, whether the same with Phrygians, v. 500.

Brinio's mockery of Caligula's expedition, xiv. 73. Heads the Frisians against the Romans, 419.

† Britain, its etymon, v. 399, 400, n. The isles of, inhabited by the Gomerians, ib. Invaded by Cæsar, xiii. 21. & seq. By Claudius, xiv. 121, 122, n. Greatly oppressed by publicans, 447. Eased by Agricola, ib. How discovered to be an island, 476. Totally conquered by Agricola, 477. Visited by Adrian, xiv. 618. The walls of, built by him, ib. Reduced by Constantius, xv. 304. How divided by Constantine, 421. Invaded by the Picts, 558. Defended by Stilicho, xvi. 137. Abandoned by the Romans, 285. Described, xviii. 646. Whence so called, ib. & seq. Its situation, &c. 649. First inhabitants, 650. How divided, 658. Its walls, 673, 674. New division, 676. Pentarchy, 677. Roman government, ib. & seq. Military, 678, & seq. Fabulous history, 684, & n. & seq. Reduced by the Romans, 701, & seq. Governed by tribunes, 704. Quelled under several emperors, 705, & seq. Divided by Severus, 709. Submits to Aurelian, 712. Given to Carausius, ib. Reunited, 713. Fresh division under Constantine, ib. Secured against the Picts, 716. Invaded by them, and the Scots, 717. Abandoned by the Romans, 719. Invaded by the Picts, xix. 3.

Britannicus born, xiv. 102. Ill used by Agrippina and Nero, 146. Hated by him, 166. Poisoned, 177, 178. Honoured by Titus, 454.

† Britenburgh castle, built by the fugitive Britons, xix. 16.

Britons different from the Celtes and Gomerians, v. 400, n. Brave opposition against Cæsar, xiii. 22. Peace with him, 23. Submit to him, 24. Whether conquered by him, 25, n. Defeated by Ostorius, xiv. 150, & seq. General revolt, 207, &c. Encouraged by some prodigies, 209. Eighty thousand killed by Paulinus, 212. Subdued by Agricola, 446, & seq. Debauched by the Roman luxury, 462. Totally subdued, 477. Punished for their human sacrifices, xiv. 598. Settle in Vennes, 273. Their manners, &c. xviii. 652. Way of fighting, 655. Trade, shipping, &c. ib. & seq. Government, 656, 658. Religion, 656. Called their fortified woods, towns, 672. Incorporated into the Roman army, 683. Embassy to Cæsar, 687. Noble defence against him, 688, 689. Submit to him, 689, & seq. Break the peace, 690. Fresh submission, 691. Defeated, 692, 694. Many submit afresh, 695, & n. Whether conquered by him, 697. Pay tribute to Augustus, 698. Subdued by Claudius, 700. Defeated by Geta, Suetonius, &c. 701, & 704. By Agricola, 705. Romanized by him, ib. Allowed to plant vines, 712. Bereaved of their youth, 715. Repulse the Picts and Scots, 718. Build a stone wall, 719. Make and murder their kings, xix. 4. Dismal state, and letter to Ætius, ib. & seq. Degeneracy, 5. Destroyed by pestilence, 6. Invite the Saxons, ib. & n. Driven out by them, 15. Out of Kent, 18. Worsted by Ella, 20. Under Naza-leod, 23. Defeat the Saxons, 29. Grow more debauched, 31. Lose several battles, 34. And three kings, ib. & seq. Retire into Wales, 35. And Cornwall, ib. And South Scotland, ib. And Bretany, 37. The wretched state of those in Wales, 38, & seq.

† — in Gaul, defeated by Euric, xix. 166.

I N D E X to the

- † Bog, river in Scythia, v. 443.
 † Bogasi, the two streights of, vii. 513, 514.
 Bogud's war with Juba, xiii. 106. Gains Cæsar the victory of Munda, 123. Cuckolded by him, xviii. 38 n.
 — king of Mauritania, accompanies Antony, xii. 353. Slain at Methona, 356.
 † Bohemia, where and whence so called, xi. 576.
 Bohemond's success against Alexius, xvi. 472. Narrow escape, 481. Made prince of Antioch, 482. Wars with Alexius, 483. Raises new forces in Italy, 484. Makes peace with him, ib. His death, 485.
 † Boii invade Rome, xi. 632. Defeated by Domitius, xii. 160. By Val. Falto, 183. Revolt, 185, 296. Defeated by Merula, 304. Subdued by Sc. Nasica, 306. Settle in Gaul, xiii. 13. Driven out of it by the Marcomani, 405 n. xix. 345. Invite Hannibal, xvii. 352. Treachery to Scipio, 360.
 Bojocalus's brave speech to Avitus, xiv. 190.
 Bojorix's challenge and defeat, xii. 496. Death, 497.
 † Bojohemia, Bohemia, where situate, xiii. 405.
 Bolanus, Vett. sent into Britain, xiv. 370.
 † Bolissus, Homer's house shewn at, vii. 559.
 Bomilcar chosen general against Agathocles, xii. 307. His treachery, ib. See also vol. xvii. 166 & seq. Sent into Sicily, vii. 366. Returns with a larger fleet, 376. Forced back, ib.
 — assassinates Massiva, xii. 443. Made Jugurtha's general, and defeated, 450. Betrays him to Metellus, 453. Discovered, 457. Put to death, 458.
 — fatal ambition and treachery, xvii. 168, 169 & seq. Assumes the sovereignty at Carthage, 187, 188. Defeated and crucified, 188.
 † Bona, in Numidia, where sited, xvii. 547.
 † Bona fides, the temple of, at Rome, xi. 317.
 Bonduca defeated by Suetonius, xviii. 704.
 Bonifacius, count, repulses Ataulphus from Marseilles, xvi. 192. Highly rewarded by Placidia, 217. Undermined by Ætius, ib. Success against Sinex, 218. Invites the barbarians into Afric, ib. Returns into Italy, 221. Sent against Ætius, and killed, ib. See vol. xix. 501.
 — made king of Theffaly, xvi. 505.
 † Bononia taken by Octavian, xiii. 184. Relieved by Nero, xiv. 160.
 † — in Illyricum, where sited, xv. 394.
 Bonosus's rise, revolt, and death, xv. 283. & xix. 112. Sent against the revolted Jews, xvi. 333.
 Books, an hundred and twenty thousand, burnt at Constantinople, xvi. 287.
 Borani revolt in Gaul, xv. 222. Success against the Romans, 228.
 † Borysthenes, Nieper, river in Scythia, v. 443 & 445 n.
 Bos in lingua, a proverb, v. 642.
 Bosporans revolt from Mithridates, ix. 623.
 † Bosporus, the kingdom of, ix. 617 & seq. Government, &c. 620 & seq. Given to Pharnaces, 624.
 † Boffora taken and burnt by Judas, x. 140.
 Bostar joined to Hanno against the Romans, xvii. 253. Defeated before Adda, 255. His miserable end, xii. 138: xvii. 263 n.
 Boterus, king of Bithynia, ix. 593.
 † Botrys, in Phœnice, built by Ithobal, ii. 380.
 † Bovianum taken from the Samnites, xii. 38.
 Bous, Bovs, Eusebius's mistake about that word, v. 645.
 † Bozrah, Bozor, a city of Edom, ii. 154.
 † Brachata Gallia, xviii. 395.
 Brachmanes of India, who, i. 141. Their opinion of the creation, ib. Put to death by Alexander, viii. 320 & 321 n.
 Brachyllas assassinated by the Romans, vii. 91.
 † Braga plundered by Theodoric, xix. 229.
 Brama, a secondary god among the Bramins, i. 147 & 307.
 Bramins. See above, Brachmanes, i. 141 & seq.
 † Bramma, a deity of the Malabarians, i. 143.
 Branas's revolt, xvi. 496. Defeated and killed, 497.
 Branchidæ, the oracle of, vii. 129, & n.
 — the priests of, massacred by Alexander, vii. 130. viii. 251, n.
 Brasen gate at Rome, why so called, xii. 160, n.
 Brasidas sent to assist Megara, vi. 284. And Macedon, 285, viii. 64. His success and

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

and moderation, vi. 285, & viii. 64. In Attica, vi. 459. Killed, ib. & viii. 67. His character, vi. 459.

Brass, the invention of, ascribed to Cadmus, v. 666.

— Corinthian, described, vi. 669, & n.

† Brathys, mount in Phænice, why so called, i. 285.

Breastplate of the high-priest described, iii. 261.

† Brecknock inhabited in the time of the Romans, xviii. 665.

Brennus, general of the Celtes, answer to the Roman ambassadors, xi. 577, xviii. 500, & n. Defeats them, xi. 579. Enters and sacks Rome, 580, & seq. Totally defeated by Camillus, 586. xviii. 545.

† Bretania Armorica, three different colonies sent into, xvi. 54.

† Bretagne, whence so called, xvi. 273. Bribery become necessary at Rome, xiii. 4. Vainly opposed by Cato, 26. Prevented by Augustus, 401. A new law against it, 422. Punished by Valentinian, xv 592.

Brides, Solon's laws concerning, vi. 118.

Bridges, a long causeway made with, by Domitius, xiii. 541, n.

Brienne, John de, made guardian to Baldwin, xvi. 510. Defeats Azem and Ducas, 511. His death, ib.

† Brigantes, in Britain, who, xiv. 151. Subdued, ib. xviii. 667, 703, 705, 707.

† Brigians, whether the same with Phrygians, v. 500.

Brinio's mockery of Caligula's expedition, xiv. 73. Heads the Frisians against the Romans, 419.

† Britain, its etymon, v. 399, 400, n. The isles of, inhabited by the Gomerians, ib. Invaded by Cæsar, xiii. 21. & seq. By Claudius, xiv. 121, 122, n. Greatly oppressed by publicans, 447. Eased by Agricola, ib. How discovered to be an island, 476. Totally conquered by Agricola, 477. Visited by Adrian, xiv. 618. The walls of, built by him, ib. Reduced by Constantius, xv. 304. How divided by Constantine, 421. Invaded by the Picts, 558. Defended by Stilicho, xvi. 137. Abandoned by the Romans, 285. Described, xviii. 646. Whence so called, ib. & seq. Its situation, &c. 649. First inhabitants, 650. How divided, 658. Its walls, 673, 674. New division, 676. Pentarchy, 677. Roman government, ib. & seq. Military, 678, & seq. Fabulous history, 684, & n. & seq. Reduced by the Romans, 701, & seq. Governed by tribunes, 704. Quelled under several emperors, 705, & seq. Divided by Severus, 709. Submits to Aurelian, 712. Given to Carausius, ib. Reunited, 713. Fresh division under Constantine, ib. Secured against the Picts, 716. Invaded by them, and the Scots, 717. Abandoned by the Romans, 719. Invaded by the Picts, xix. 3.

Britannicus born, xiv. 102. Ill used by Agrippina and Nero, 146. Hated by him, 166. Poisoned, 177, 178. Honoured by Titus, 454.

† Britenburgh castle, built by the fugitive Britons, xix. 16.

Britons different from the Celtes and Gomerians, v. 400, n. Brave opposition against Cæsar, xiii. 22. Peace with him, 23. Submit to him, 24. Whether conquered by him, 25, n. Defeated by Ostorius, xiv. 150, & seq. General revolt, 207, &c. Encouraged by some prodigies, 209. Eighty thousand killed by Paulinus, 212. Subdued by Agricola, 446, & seq. Debauched by the Roman luxury, 462. Totally subdued, 477. Punished for their human sacrifices, xiv. 598. Settle in Venues, 273. Their manners, &c. xviii. 652. Way of fighting, 655. Trade, shipping, &c. ib. & seq. Government, 656, 658. Religion, 656. Called their fortified woods, towns, 672. Incorporated into the Roman army, 683. Embassy to Cæsar, 687. Noble defence against him, 688, 689. Submit to him, 689, & seq. Break the peace, 690. Fresh submission, 691. Defeated, 692, 694. Many submit afresh, 695, & n. Whether conquered by him, 697. Pay tribute to Augustus, 698. Subdued by Claudius, 700. Defeated by Geta, Suetonius, &c. 701, & 704. By Agricola, 705. Romanized by him, ib. Allowed to plant vines, 712. Bereaved of their youth, 715. Repulse the Picts and Scots, 718. Build a stone wall, 719. Make and murder their kings, xix. 4. Dismal state, and letter to Ætius, ib. & seq. Degeneracy, 5. Destroyed by pestilence, 6. Invite the Saxons, ib. & n. Driven out by them, 15. Out of Kent, 18. Worstled by Ella, 20. Under Nazeleod, 23. Defeat the Saxons, 29. Grow more debauched, 31. Lose several battles, 34. And three kings, ib. & seq. Retire into Wales, 36. And Cornwall, ib. And South Scotland, ib. And Bretany, 37. The wretched state of those in Wales, 38, & seq.

† — in Gaul, defeated by Euric, xix. 166.

I N D E X to the Britons follow Maximus into Gaul, xvi. 54. Settle in Bretagne, ib.

† Bruchium, the famed library of, burnt, ix. 186. The siege of, xv. 242. Destroyed by Zenobia, 253.

† Bructeri, where sited, xiii. 528, n. A tribe of the Franks, xix. 235. Subdued by Tiberius, xiii. 446. By Germanicus, 529, 539. Defeated in Germany, xiv. 560. By Constantine, xv. 349, 360. Invaded by Eugenius, xvi. 100. Their dreadful punishment, xix. 249.

† Brundisium taken by Cæsar, xiii. 43, & seq. Declares for Octavius, 166, & seq. Besieged by Antony, 316.

† Brutii, where sited, xi. 264. Subdued by the Romans, xii. 91. (See vol. xvii. 395, & seq.) Massacred by Hannibal, xii. 287.

Brutus, not the first who peopled Britain, v. 399, 400, n. His fabulous conquest of it, xviii. 684.

— Luc. Jun. counterfeits madness, xi. 367, 374. Presents the Delphic oracle, ib. & seq. Pulls off the mask, 376. Advice to the Romans, 377, & seq. Consulship, 380. Severity to his two sons, 386. Speech against his colleague, 389. Death and character, 392, & 393, n.

— head of the revolted légions, his answer to the senate, xi. 432, 433. Tribuneship, 434. Speech to the consuls, 438.

— D. Jun. chosen consul, xii. 12. Defeats the Samnites, 39.

— Scæva triumphs over the Hetrurians, xii. 71, 76. Defeats the Lusitanians, 169.

— the prætor, affronted by Sylla's soldiers, xii. 530. Defeated by Pompey, 562.

— Jun. butchers all Sylla's friends, xii. 564. Taken and beheaded, 570.

— his son, surrenders to Cæsar, xiii. 68, & n.

— M. Jun. made proconsul of Gaul, xiii. 114. His extract, 134, & n. Conspiracy against Cæsar, 135. Great presence of mind under it, 139. Stabs him, 145. His behaviour after it, 146, & seq. Speech to the people, 154. Withdraws to Antium, 159. Supplanted by Antony, 175, 176. Promoted by the senate, 183. Proscribed, 215, & seq. Receives the proscribed citizens, 226. Sends for Cassius, 239. Passes into Asia, 240. Mildness to the revolters, 241. Coin, ibid. Success in Lycia, 246. Against Xanthus, 248, & seq. Instances of his invincible meekness, 251, & seq. Falls out with Cassius, 252.

Visited by a spectre, 254. Returns into Europe, 256. Advises fighting against the triumvirs, 260. Counsel to Cassius, 263. Letter to Atticus, ib. Success against the triumvirs, 264. Funeral honours to Cassius, 267. Forced to fight by his soldiers, 273. His severity to the captives vindicated, 274, & seq. Second apparition, and threatening prodigies, 275, & seq. & n. Speech to his army, 276. Defeat and bravery, 277. Distress, 280. Death, 282. Character, ib. & seq. & n. His stabbing of Cæsar vindicated, 288, & n. Funeral honours, 289.

— Decim. Albin. one of Cæsar's conspirators, xiii. 136. Persuades him to go to the senate, 142. Goes into Gaul, 150. Nominated Octavius's heir by Cæsar, 154. Supplanted by Antony, 173. Besieged by him in Mutina, 180. Successful sally against him, 188. Mortifying answer to Octavius, 189. Honoured by the senate, 191. Retires into the east, 202, & seq. His powerful army, 205, & seq. Made proconsul, 207. Letters to Cicero, &c. 209. Made general of Greece, 214. Driven out by Antony, 217. Betrayed by Camillus, 218. Murdered, ib. Character, ib. & seq.

Bryennius recalled, xvi. 455. Falls out with Opsaras, ib. His eyes put out by him, 456.

Bryges, in Thrace, destroy part of Darius's army, v. 116. Defeat the Persians, viii. 53.

Eubaris, how reconciled to the Macedonians, viii. 52.

Bubastis, or Egyptian Diana, ii. 4.

Bucephalus taken and restored by the Mardi, viii. 334.

† — a city built by Alexander, viii. 304.

Buchanan's account of the Roman wall in Britain, xv. 118.

† Budini, who, and where sited, xix. 354.

† Budocus, a river in Eubæa, vii. 643.

† Bulgaria, part of Thrace, xv. 390. Whence so called, xvi. 349.

Bulgarians defeat Arisius, xvi. 297. Invade the empire with an hundred thousand men, 349. Success against Justinian, 350. Ravage quite to Constantinople, 356. Assist Anastasius, 359. Irruptions into the east, 367. Cut off, ib. Defeated by Constantine, 374. Success against Nicephorus, 379. Against Michael, 380. Against Constantine, 412, & seq. Defeated, 436, & seq. Submit to Basilus, 437. Revolt, and defeat the Latins, 506. Defeated

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

feated by Andronicus III. 531. Make peace with him, ib. Defeated by Theodoric, xix. 161. Their origin, &c. 391. Wars, conquests, &c. 392, & seq. Subdued by the Ruffi, 412. Revolt under four kings, ib. Revolt from Basilus, 421. Set up Deleanus, ib. Submit to Michael, 424. Subdued by the Turks, 425.

Bull, how worshipped by the Egyptians, i. 554.

—— the blood of a sure poison, v. 519.

Bulla, a Sabine ornament, what, xi. 307, n.

† Bullæum Silurum, where sited, xviii. 665, 666.

† Burgundi, where sited, xix. 122. Harassed by the Hunns, 55. Are baptized, and overcome them; 55, 56. Defeated by the Goths, 131. Their territories in Gaul, 168. Assist the ravaging Vandals, 196. War with the Franks; 285. Defeated by Clovis, 287. Ally with him, 295. Defeated by Theodoric, 296. Their origin, xv. 594, xix. 305. Religion, kings, &c. 306. Various revolts and defeats in Gaul, xv. 222. xix. 307. Their kingdom how founded there, xv. 192, (xvi. 192.) Conversion and conquests, xix. 309, & seq. Wars with the Franks, 316. Subdued by them, 319.

—— transplanted into Cambridgeshire, xv. 281. Twenty thousand killed by the Hunns, xvi. 222. Settle in Savoy, 227. Seize on part of Gaul, 265.

† Burii, who, and where seated, xviii. 579.

Burnet, Dr. his theory of the earth, i. 149. Account of the change of the air, &c. after the fall, 212. Theory after the flood, 289, & seq. Account of the changes it caused, 313.

Burning, a punishment among the Jews before Moses, ii. 462, & n. iii. 339, 340.

Burrhus, Afr. advanced by Agrippina, xiv. 149. Promotes Nero's election, 166. Made his military governor, 168. Blamed for his remissness to him, 173, 179. Acquitted of treason, 181. His advice about Agrippina, 198. Condescension to Nero, 200, 203, & seq. His death, 216. Whether natural, ib.

—— Antistius, betrayed to death by Cleander, xv. 69.

Bursavolis put to the sword by Cæsar, xiii. 120.

Busan surrendered to Sapor, xv. 493.

Busris's cruelty to strangers; the rise of his fable, i. 566.

—— the founder of Thebes, ii. 8.

† —— the city of, destroyed by Dioclesian, xv. 305.

Butes burns himself, and the city of Ejon, vi. 225.

—— king of the Siculi, vii. 163.

—— the son of Boreas, settles in Naxus, vii. 585.

† Buthrotum, taken by Guiscard, xvi. 470.

† Buzara, mount, in Numidia, xvii. 549.

Buzes defeated by the Romans, xvi. 306. Abandons Syria to the Persians, 310.

† Byblus, by whom founded, i. 393. Said to have been the first city founded in Phenice, ii. 334. Two of that name, ibid.

† Byrsa, the citadel of Carthage, described, xvi. 566. Whence so called, 568. Taken, xii. 533, & seq.

Byssus, superfine linen of Egypt, i. 504.

† Byzacene yielded to the Vandals, xix. 205.

Byzantines fined by the Athenians, vi. 314. Confederate against them, 348. Besieged by Philip, 357. Relieved by Phocion, ib. War with the Rhodians, vii. 429. Forced to a peace, 431.

† Byzantium betrayed to the Athenians, vi. 318. Made a Roman province, xiv. 441. Holds out against Severus, xv. 91. Garrisoned by Niger, 98. Besieged by Severus, ib. Its strength described, 102, & seq. Surrendered and burnt, 103. Rebuilt and called Antonina, ib. Put to the sword by Gallienus, 241. Taken by Maximin, 384. Beautified by Constantine, 406. The rest see under Constantinople, ib. & seq.

Byzas, Bifus, the supposed founder of Byzantium, ix. 509.

† Byzatium, described, xvi. 579, & seq. Whence called Libyphenice, 590, & n.

Byzurge Mihir, the wise tutor to Hormouz, xi. 227. His character, 229, n. Put to death for being a christian, ib. n. & 230, n.

C

CAbades invades Armenia, xvi. 297. Succeeds against the Romans, 298. Twenty years truce, 299. Embassy to Justin, 303. Wars with him, 306. Death, 308.

I N D E X to the Cabala, or oral tradition of Jews exploded, iii. 168. A second kind maintained by some-moderns, ib. & seq.

† Cabetra, a city in Cappadocia, ix. 458.

† Cabira, a city in Pontus, ix. 372. Surrendered to the Romans, 425.

Cabiri, who, v. 511. vii. 622, n. & seq. n. Their worship at Carthage, xvi. 636.

† Caboul, a famed city of Persia, iv. 511, n.

Cacanus's horrid ravages in Italy, xix. 522.

† Caccabe, Carthage whence so called, xvi. 565.

† Cadesh Barneah, the fifteenth encampment of the Israelites, iii. 11.

† — Shur, the names of two deserts, ii. 412, & n.

† Cadmea, the citadel of Thebes, v. 665.

— Victoria, a proverb, v. 666, n.

Cadmeis, one of the old names of Bœotia, v. 660, 661.

Cadmus, the son of Agenor, ii. 365. Lands in Thrace, 366. Goes into Bœotia, and founds his kingdom there, ib. & v. 660, 661. The fable of him, 664, 665, n. Introduces learning into Greece, 666. Retires into Illyria, ib. & c.

Cadmus, Lord of Cos, his fidelity to Gelon, vii. 169, n.

— arrival at Samothrace, vii. 626.

— expedition to Carthage, xvi. 558.

† Cadusians, a barbarous people, iv. 446. Revolt from the Medes, 471. Invaded by the Persians, v. 188. Betrayed by a stratagem, ib.

Cæcilianus Mag. falsely accused of treason, xiii. 610.

— sent to, and promoted by Honorius, xvi. 174.

Cæcilius, bishop, highly honoured by Constantine, xv. 383, 384.

— the consul's success against the Carthaginians, xvii. 268.

Cæcina's cowardice in Germany, xiii. 518, & seq. Severity to the mutineers, 525. Defeats the Marfi, 535. Ill success against Arminius, 542. Narrow escape, 544.

— Severus's motion against wives following the camp, opposed, xiii. 603, & n.

— Alienus sent against Otho, xiv. 336. Dreadful havock in Helvetia, 338, & seq. Success in Italy, 350. Defeated before Placentia, 351. At Castores, 352. Defeats Otho, 358. Sent against Vespa-fian, 385. Declares for him, 386. Clapped in irons, ib. Released, 387. Conspires against Vespasian, 449. His death, ibid.

Cælius, consul, whence surnamed Cal-dus, xii. 514.

† — mount, all on fire, xiii. 658.

Cæpio, Q. Serv. success in Gaul, xii. 475. Fatal avarice, ib. And rupture with Mallius, 476. Punishment, 478.

— heads the discontented knights, xii. 516. Defeated and killed, 521.

— Faun. his conspiracy and death, xiii. 389.

Cæranus the philosopher, tortured to death, xvi. 4.

† Caervoran, its antiquities, xviii. 670.

Cæsar, Jul. studies oratory at Rhodes, ix. 412. Compounds with Auletes, 262. Lands in Egypt, 277. Arbitrates between Ptolemy and his sister, 278. Besieged in Alexandria, 280. Burns Ptolemy's ships, 281. Defeats Ganymede, 283. Swims for his life, 284. Victory at Canopus, 285. On the Nile, 287. Settles the crown on Cleopatra, ib. & seq. Defeats Pharnaces, 453, & seq. Releases Aristobulus, x. 249. Assisted by the Jews in Egypt, 250, & seq. Gratitude to them, 251, 257. When born, xii. 507. Chosen consul, 518. Defeated by Vettius, 521. Marries Cornelia, 559. Opposes Sylla, 585. Oration against Dolabella, 602. Adventure with the pirates, 603. Saves Bithynia, 613. Manilian law, 626. Profuse popularity, 628, & seq. Oration in favour of Catiline, & c. 637. Deposed and restored, 639. Accused of joining with Catiline, 641. Chosen pontifex max. ib. Divorces Pompeia, 643. Unmeasurable ambition, 647. Politic master-piece, ib. & seq. Second consulship, xiii. 3. Quinquennial generalship, 6. Success against the Gauls, & c. 11, & seq. Germans, 14. Belgæ, 16. Nervii, 17. Swift expedition against the Germans, 20, 21. Into Britain, 21, & seq. Confirmed by the Trebonian law, 23. His success in Britain, whether real, 25, n. And in Gaul, 29, 31, 33. (See also vol. xviii. 556, & seq.) Total of his Gaulish conquests, xiii. 34. Hor contests with Pompey, 35. Letters to the senate, 37, & seq. Deprived of his government, 38. Passes the Rubicon, 40, & n. Takes several cities, 41. Summons the senate, 44. Visit to Cicero, ib. & n. Forces the treasury, 46. Goes into Spain, 47, & seq. Returns, 50. Chosen dictator, & c. ibid. & seq. Offers of

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

of peace, 53. Gets to sea in a boat, 54 & n. Joins M. Antony, 55 & seq. Defeated by Pompey, 58. Retires into Macedon, 59 & seq. Speech to his army at Pharsalia, 62 & n. Defeats and pursues Pompey, 67 & 69. Hears of his death, 77. Orders his head to be interred, 78. Passion for Cleopatra, 79. Ends the Egyptian war, 80. Highly honoured at Rome, 81 & seq. Swift victory over Pharnacês, 82. Universal clemency at Rome, 84. Quells the tenth legion, 90 & seq. Success in Afric, 92. Against Pompey's party, 96. Behaviour at Utica, 104 & n. Success in Numidia, 105. Pompous arrival at Rome, 107. Speech to the senate, ib. His four triumphs described, 109, 110. Their immense value, 111. His regulations and census, 113, & n. Sumptuary laws, ibid. Reformation of the calendar, 117 & n. Success in Spain, 120 & seq. Against the Pompeii, 122. The Lusitanians, 126. Ends the Spanish war, 129. His triumph and new titles, ib. Ambition, 132, 133. Conspired against, ib. & seq. Vast projects, 137. Threatened by prodigies, 138. Stabbed in the senate, 144. His character, 148. Last will publicly read, 154. Funeral obsequies, 158. Temple reared to his memory, 159. By the Lugdunenses, xviii. 453.

—— Sextus's friendship to Herod, x. 254 & seq. Murdered by Bassus, 258.

† Cæsarea by whom built, x. 301 n. Described, 302 n. Finished, 315. Taken by Cosrhoes II. xi. 166. Rebuilt by Adrian, xiv. 620. Its terrible fate under Sapor, xv. 233. Taken by Firmus, 606. Razed by Basilus, xvi. 401.

†—— Philippi, x. 414. † Germanica, xiv. 46.

Cæsarion, the son of Cæsar by Cleopatra, ix. 296. Made king of Egypt by M. Antony, ib. & seq. Put to death by Octavian, 311.

Cæsarius sent to judge the Antiochans, xvi. 72. His severity to them, 73. Softened, 74, 76. Chosen consul, 131.

† Cæsan forest, where, and whence so called, xiii. 527 & n.

Cæso, Fab. outwits the tribunes, xi. 460. Ill success against the Veientes, 464. Betrayed by his men, ib. Chosen consul, 468. Proconsul, 469.

—— Quinctius. Vid. Quinctius, xi. 491.

Cæsonia suspected of turning Caligula's Brain, xiv. 48. Made priestess to him, 60. Married to him, 78 & n. Murdered by Chærea, 95 & seq.

Cæsonius Max. banished by Nero, xiv. 249.

† Cæthius's mount, where situate, xiii. 405 n.

† Caffa, metropolis of Little Tartary, ix. 619.

Caii at Rome, who, xiii. 163.

Cain, when probably born, 224. The import of his name, 225 & 227 n. His offering, why rejected, 227 n. Fratricide, ib. Punishment, 229. Builds a city, 230. Traditions about him, 233 & n. Descent, 232 & 233 & seq. Wicked posterity, 235. Their intentions and improvements, 243. Their pedigree, according to Sanchoniatho, compared 256.

† —— the city, built by him, i. 257 n.

Cainan, one of Seth's descendants, i. 236.

† Cainon, the Athenian court, its office, &c. vi. 145.

Caiphas, Caiaphas, made high-priest, x. 413 & n. Prophetic sentence against Christ, 483. Condemns him to death, 501.

Caius sent to oppose the Parthians, ix. 349. Wounded, ib. Dies, 351.

—— made judge of Archelaus's title, x. 398. Contempt of the Jewish religion, 409.

—— Caligula persecutes the Jews, x. 552, 553. Friendship to Agrippa, ib. & seq. The rest see under Caligula, xiii. 365.

—— Cæsar born to Agrippa, xiii. 394. Adopted by Augustus, 402. Follows him to Aquileia, 414. New honours, 426, 430. Sent against the Armenians, 433. Interview with Tiberius, 435. With Phraohates, 436. Makes peace with him, ibid. Chosen consul, 439 & n. Expedition into Armenia, 442. Death, 443 & n.

—— Gracchus acquitted, xiii. 613 & n.

—— Comin, a lampooner, pardoned, xiii. 639.

† Calabria, its territories, &c. xix. 596.

† Calacine, a province of Assyria, iv. 196.

† Calah, city, where situate, i. 370.

† Calamintha, where sited, xviii. 11.

Calanus burns himself alive, viii. 332.

Calasirian, the name of the Egyptian soldiery, 540.

Calaxais,

I N D E X to the

Calaxais, a king of the Scythians, v. 481 n. & seq.

† Calcedon, a city of Bithynia, ix. 581. Why called the city of the blind, ib. Taken by the Persians, xi. 166. By the Scythians, xv. 228, 240. By the Romans, 619. Dismantled, ib.

Caleb, one of Moses's twelve spies, iii. 8, 9. Takes and burns Jerusalem, 486.

† Caledonians, who, and where seated, xviii. 671. Transplanted 705. Invaded by Agrippa, xiv. 474 & seq. Brave defence, 478. Routed, 482 & seq. Desperate state, 486. Recover their liberty, ib. Defeated by the Romans, xv. 56. Peace with Severus, 117.

Calf, golden, made by Aaron, ii. 618 n.

Caligula, his extract, xiii. 365. Early policy and rise, 673 & seq. Marriage to Claudia, xiv. 16. Whether named Tiberius's successor, 29 & seq. Saved by Macro, 30. Reception at Rome, 39, 40. When and where born, 39 n. Whence surnamed Caligula, ib. &c. Declared emperor, 40. Mild and pious beginning, 44. Speech to the senate, 45. Sadly altered after his illness, 48 & seq. Strange titles, 49. Cruelty to Tiberius, ib. To Antonia, 50. To all, 52. Grief for his incestuous sister. 56. Marriages and divorces 57. Assumes divine honours, 58. Signal impiety, 59. Ridiculed by a Gaul, ib. n. Inhuman wish, 61, 62. Mad respect to his horse, 62. Biting speech to the senate, 63. Stupendous bridge, 64. Horrid extortions, 66. Deposits two consuls, 70. Mock invasion of Gaul, 72. Boasting letter to the senate, 74. Cruelty to the Gauls, ib. Turns broker, 76. Extravagance and luxury, ib. n. Defeats the Germans, 78. Splendid shews at Lyons, 80. Cruelty to Ptolemy, 82. Mock expedition against Britain, ib. & seq. Horrid butcheries at Rome, 83. Cruelty to Proculus, &c. 85. Fickleness, 86 & n. Affronts to Chæreas, 88. Conspired against, 87 & seq. Fondness for dancing, &c. 91 & n. Assassinated, 95 & n. Burial and dishonours, 96.

Calippus's murder of Dion punished, vii. 284.

—— the cycle of, what, x. 156, n.

Chalisters's speech against adoring Alexander, viii. 272, & seq. His character, 276, 277. Death, 280.

—— burnt, x. 131, 132.

Calisto deflowered by Jupiter, vi. 10. & seq. The fable of her, ib. n.

Calixenus starved to death at Athens, vi.

Callias, Callas, branded for his cruel avarice, vi. 186, 187.

—— the Athenian, slain before Potidea, vi. 256.

—— success against Polysperchon, viii. 442, & seq.

—— tyrant of Eubœa, wars with the Athenians, vii. 651 † —— river in Eubœa, vii. 643.

Callicrates's success against the Athenians, vi. 469, & seq. Slain, ib.

—— the Achæan deputy's treachery, vi. 640. Chosen prætor, 642. A slave to the Romans, ib. &c. Informs against all his rivals, 648. Detested by all his country-men, 650. Prevents the Achæans succouring Egypt, ix. 59, n. & seq. n.

—— his writings and character, xv. 273, n.

Callimachus killed at Marathon, vi. 183.

—— favoured by Ptol. Philadelphus, ix. 207. His poems still extant, ib. His writings and character, xviii. 75, n.

—— a famed engineer, ix. 342; 427. Put to death, ib.

Callines's speech to Alexander, viii. 335.

Callinicus, Sutor, his writings and character, xiv. 673, n.

—— of Heliopolis, his invention of sea-fire, xvi. 348.

—— patriarch of Constantinople, causes Justinian to be deposed, xvi. 351, 352. His punishment, ib.

† Callipolis, the metropolis of Naxos, vii. 583.

† —— the freights of, in Thrace, ix. 511.

Callirrhoe, the wife of Tros, her offspring, v. 541.

Callistratus, the Athenian general, his character, vi. 343.

—— his writings and character, xv. 178, n.

† Callycadnus promontory, where sited, ix. 54, n.

Calocerus proclaimed emperor in Cyprus, xv. 411, 412.

† Calpe, a sea-port in Bætica, xviii. 338. And colony, ib.

Calpurnius Flamma's noble exploit, xii. 118. Rewarded, ib.

—— Piso killed by the Lusitanians, xii. 331.

—— ill success in Afric, xii. 347. Defeats the rebels in Sicily, 390. Why surnamed Frugi, 391, n.

Calpurnius

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

- Calpurnius Piso, killed in Gaul, xii. 459.
 — his account of Carus's death, xv. 288.
- † Calvary, mount, x. 508.
- Calvifia, Pliny's generosity to, xiv. 605, n.
- Calvifius, C. defeated, xiii. 329. Disgraced, 333. Accusation against Antony, 350.
- Taurus, his writings and character, xiv. 673, n.
- Flavius, sides with Cassius, xv. 31. Banished, 34.
- † Calydon, the city and forest of, in Ætolia, vi. 77, 78.
- † Calydna one of the antient names of Bœotia, v. 661.
- Camels of Persia, described, iv. 542.
- Cambletes, king of Lydia, v. 579.
- † Cambray, taken by Clodio, xix. 261. & n.
- † Cambria, by whom so called, xviii. 685, n.
- † Cambridge built on the ruins of Camboritum, xviii. 664.
- Cambyfes married to Mandane, v. 58.
- the son of Cyrus, succeeds him, v. 85. The Ahashuerus of scripture, ib. Conquers Egypt, 87. Expedition into Ethiopia, 88. Kills the Egyptian Apis, 90. Instances of his cruelty and madness, 91, & seq. His death, as foretold by the oracle, 94.
- Camden's censure of Stonehenge confuted, xviii. 435.
- Camæra, a kind of ships built by the Romans, xiii. 552, n.
- † Camerinæ, a city in Sicily, vii. 146. By whom built, 160. Destroyed, 167. Abandoned, 229.
- Camillus, Fur. triumphs over Tacfarinas, xiii. 578.
- plots against Claudius, xiv. 495. Assassinated, ib.
- † Camirus, a city of Rhodes, described, vii. 397.
- † Campania, over-run by the confederates, xii. 521. Ruined by an earthquake, xiv. 222.
- Campanians, their treachery to the Eutellines, vii. 233. Assist Hannibal, xvii. 42. Discharged and displeased, 56. Left to guard Sicily, 73.
- knights, honoured by the Romans, xi. 661.
- † Campona, where situate, xv. 394.
- Camps, how formed among the Macedonians, viii. 41.
- Camulus, one of the Gaulish names of Mars, xviii. 464, & n.
- † Cana in Galilee, the marriage of, x. 423, 424, & n.
- Canaan, the fourth son of Ham, i. 357. His birth, crime, curse, &c. 358, & seq.
- † — the land of, its extent, &c. iii. 97, n. Its fertility, &c. 413, n.
- † Canaanites, their extract, ii. 181. Seven chief nations, ib. Country, 183. Its division, 184. Religion till Abraham, 188. Idolatry and human sacrifices since, 189. Government, ib. By whom peopled, 190. Excursions into Egypt, &c. ib. & seq. Join the Amalekites against the Israelites, 198. Subdued by Joshua, 205. Whither they fled from him, ib. & seq. The remainder invaded by the twelve tribes, 206. Their defence and fate, ib. & seq. Reduced under David, 209. Into a state of slavery by Solomon, 214. Whether blended with the Jews, 215, n. The coasters remained independent under the name of Phœnicians, ib. Retire to Carthage, xvi. 558.
- † Canal still extant, cut from the Euphrates to the Tigris, i. 191.
- † Canaria, island, why so called, xviii. 21.
- Candaces's success against the Romans, xiii. 382.
- Candaules dethroned for his folly, v. 580. & seq.
- Candax and his subjects settle in Scythia minor, xvi. 253.
- † Candia, by whom built, xvi. 387.
- Candidi, candidates, whence so called, xi. 551. A law passed against, 552.
- Candidianus put to death by Maximin, xv. 361, 362.
- command in the west, xvi. 214.
- Candidius's writings and character, xvi. 291, n.
- Candlestick of the sanctuary, described, iii. 304. Whether it burnt all night, 305, n. How fed, 306, n.
- † Cangî, in Britain, subdued, xiv. 151.
- Caninus put to death by Caligula, xiv. 53. His admirable intrepidity, ib.
- Cannabaud slain by Aurelian, xix. 129.
- † Cannæ, taken by Hannibal, xvii. 382. The battle of, 383.
- Canopus, an Egyptian deity, how represented, 553.
- † Cantabri, who, and where sited, xviii. 341, 342. Overcome by Augustus, xiii. 374. Their desperate end, 375. Severely punished by Lama, 383. Totally destroyed by, 398, & seq.
- † Cantabrian

† Cantabrian sea, where, xviii. 341.

Cantacufenus, a wicked tool of Andronicus III. xvi. 525, 534. Made guardian to young John, ib. Under-mined by John the patriarch, ib. Proscribed, 535. Assumes the purple, ib. Marches towards Constantinople, ib. Over-reached, 536. Enters that metropolis, 537. Crowned, 538. Resigns, and turns monk, 539.

† Canthele, where sited, xvi. 577.

† Cantii, where sited, xviii. 660.

Cantons, what, and whence, xviii. 403.

† Canucius, where seated, xvii. 555.

† Capernaum, often frequented by Christ, x. 424, & seq. Where sited, 438, n.

† Caphtor, where situate, i. 466.

† Caphtorim, from whom descended, i. 465. The progenitors of the Philistines, ii. 216.

Capito's flattery to Tiberius, xiii. 618, 619. His character, writings, &c. 619, & n. Death, 621.

—— Titin. his writings and character, xiv. 605, n.

—— Ignatius put to death by Commodus, xv. 58.

† Capitol, where sited, xi. 302. Whence so called, 373, & n. Described, ib. & seq. & n. Seized by the Sabines, 499. & seq. Besieged by the Gauls, 581. Famished, ib. Relieved, 586, & seq. Re-fortified, 591. Seized by the conspirators, xii. 506. Destroyed, xiv. 402, 403. Re-built, 435. Forsaken, and left to ruin, xvi. 85.

Capitoline games exhibited, xiv. 576.

Capitolinus, Jupitur, the temple of, built by Tarquin, xi. 350. Consecrated, 403.

—— the historian's account of Antoninus, xiv. 663. Writings and character, xv. 320, n.

Caponius, governor of Judea, x. 410.

† Cappadocia, in Asia minor, i. 465, & seq.

—— the kingdom of, described, ix. 457, & seq. Its origin, government, &c. 459, & seq. Kings, 462, & seq. Subdued by Tigranes, 331. Invaded by Mithridates, 387. Made a Roman province, 471. Wasted by Cosrhoes, xi. 165.

† Capraria, island, where situate, xviii. 21, 353.

† Caprea, island, described, xiv. 659.

† Capros, a river in Assyria, iv. 197, & n. viii. 605, n.

† Capsa, where situate, xvi. 583. Razed, xvii. 595.

† Capua, surrendered to Hannibal, xvii. 391. Begs his assistance, 421. Surrendered to the consuls, 441, 443.

Capuans give themselves up to Rome, xi. 647. Reduced by them, 661. Friendship to their routed army, xii. 21. Conspirators kill themselves, 25. The rest submit, 29. To Hannibal, 226. Kill the Roman garrison, ib. Besieged by the Romans, 250. Surrender, 256. Severely used, ib.

Caracalla born to Severus, xv. 90. Created Cæsar, 104. Colleague, 109. Triumphs over the Jews, 112. Attempts his father's life, 118. And crown, 119. Succeeds him, 122. Attempts Geta's life, 125. Cruel reign, ib. & seq. Fratricide, 126. Stratagem to gain the soldiery, 127. Speech to the senate, ib. Massacre of Geta's friends, 128. Horrid butcheries, 129, & seq. Extortions, 130. False coin, ib. Cruelties in Gaul, 131. Whence called Caracalla, 132. Success in Germany, ib. At Pergamos, 133. Changes his habit, &c. every-where, ib. Mimics Alexander the great, ib. Goes to Antioch, 134. Treachery to the Armenians, ib. Massacre at Alexandria, 135. Cruelty to the Parthians, ib. Takes the title of Parthicus, 136. Conspired against, 137. Stabbed, ib. Funeral honours, 141. Deified, 142. Defeat of the Alemans, xix. 321.

Caractacus's bravery against the Romans, xiv. 152. Defeat 153. Noble speech to Claudius, ib. Just reflections on the Romans, 154.

Caraites. See Karaites, iii. 168, & x. 372, & n.

† Caramania. See Cilicia, v. 595.

Caranus conquers Macedon, viii. 25. First king of it, 43.

Carbani, their office, vii. 588.

Carbo, Papyr. See Papyrius, xii. 423.

† Carbonaria Sylva, where, xix. 262, n.

† Carchemish, a famed city in Mesopotamia, iv. 388. Taken by Nabopalsar, 391.

† Cardia, in Chersonesus, where situate, ix. 511.

† Cardu mountains, where some relics of Noah's ark are said to have been seen, i. 321.

Cardueni, subdued by Trajan, xiv. 586.

Carfuleius's sharp engagement, with Antony, xiii. 185. Killed at the battle of Mutina, 186. His burial, 191.

† Caria, part of Asia proper, v. 485. Where sited, 487, n. Invaded by the Rhodians, vii. 437, & seq. Taken from the Rhodians, 451.

† Cariani,

- † Carians, whence so called, vii. 515. First inhabitants of Samos, 517. Dreadful revenge on Phanes, v. 86.
- Carina defeated by Metel. Pius, xii. 564. Beheaded, 570.
- Carinus created Cæsar, xv. 287. His lewd character, ib. &c. Defeated and killed, 292, 293.
- † Carlisle, old, where sited, xviii. 669.
- † Carmania, a province of Persia, described, iv. 507, 508.
- † Carmel, mount, its situation and fertility, iii. 107, 108. Frequented by Elias and Pythagoras, ib. By devout Christians, ib, n. Famed for its melons, &c. 135.
- † — the town of, iii. 135.
- Carmelite monks, so called from M. Carmel, iii. 108, & n.
- † Carmenatis, the gate of, why so called, xi. 303. And since Scelerata, 473, & 474, n.
- † Carnion, where situate, x. 146. Taken and burnt by the Maccabees, ix. 96, & x. 147.
- Carnus, a soothsayer, killed by the Heraclidæ, v. 637.
- † Carpatia, in Cyprus, by whom built, ii. 382. Taken by Demetrius, vii. 506.
- † Carpathus's island, described, vii. 570.
- † Carpi, where sited, xix. 120, 122. Ravage Mœsia, xv. 200. Defeated, 212, 219. Revolt, 302. Transplanted into Pannonia, ib. Baffled and repulsed by Menophilus, xix. 358. Fresh ravages, 359.
- † Carpis, where situate, xvi. 576.
- Carpesii revolt; xvii. 404. Submit to Asdrubal, 405.
- † Carræ, the famed battle of, xi. 38.
- † — retaken from the Persians, xv. 204.
- † Cars, a city in Armenia, described, ix. 316, 317, & n.
- † Carteia, whether the same with Calpe, xviii. 338.
- † Cartena, where sited, xvii. 555. By whom built, ib.
- † Cartenus, river, in Numidia, xvii. 559.
- † Carthage, founded by Dido, ii. 380. xvi. 556, 560. Its various names and etymons, 561. Described, 566. Its extent 569. Ruins, 570. Division, 572. Situation, ib. Government, 590. Senate, 594, & n. Centumvirate & quinquevirate, 597. Other magistrates, &c. 599. Laws, 602. Their defects, 604.
- Antient state very powerful, xvii. 12. Burnt by Maxentius, xv. 363. Submits to Arcadius, 132. Taken by Sigisvult, xvi. 218. By Genseric, 226. By Machæus, xvii. 16. Threatened by the mercenaries, 304. Relieved by Hannibal, 306, 307.
- † — besieged and taken, xvii. 528. Destroyed, 535. Rebuilt, 539. By whom, ib. & seq. Destroyed by the Saracens, ib. Taken by the Vandals, xix. 205.
- † — its square restored by Antoninus, xiv. 671.
- † — new, described, xvii. 317, 346. Taken by Scipio, xii. 260, 346.
- † Carthagina seized by the Alans, xvi. 180. By the Hunns, 233. By the Suevians, 263. By whom built, xvii. 317. Destroyed by the Vandals, xix. 200.
- † Carthaginians, their origin, xvi. 558. Various names, 565. Populousness, 569. Extensive, 570, & 571, n. Antient Canaanites, 588. Sacrifice noble children to Saturn, 602. Forbid to learn Greek, ib. Their religion and deities, 607, 608. Portable temples, 635. Language, 643. Writing and coins, 654. Arts and sciences, 658, & seq. Customs, ib. Hospitality, 660. Character, 661, & seq. Genealogy of their noble families, 663, & seq. Commerce and military discipline, 663. Learned men, 667. Expert artists, ib. n. Writers, ib. Trade and navigation, 671. & seq. Chronology, 674, & seq. Wars with the Etruscans, &c. xvii. 13. Sicinns, ib. & seq. (Vid. & vii. 168.) First treaty with Rome, xvii. 19, 20. Vid. & xi. 643, 644. Presents to the capitol, 651. Tributary to the Africans, xvii. 21. Ill success in Sicily, 22. League with Xerxes, 23. First footing in Spain, ib. Expedition against Sicily, 28, & seq. Defeated by Gelon, 30, & seq. (vii. 171. & seq.) Sue for peace, 35. Shake off the African tribute, 39. Quarrel with the Romans, ib. & seq. (xii. 100, & seq.) Succour the Egestines, 41. Barbarity to the Selinuntines, 50, & seq. How repulsed before Himera, 53. Take Agrigentum, 65, & seq. Way of encamping, 67, n. Destroyed by a grievous plague, 73. Ravaged by Dionysius, 80, 86. Defeated at sea, 88, 98. A plague in their army, 99. Described, 100, & seq. Defeated, 102, 110. Ill success in Sicily, 111. Under a new pestilence, 116. Peace with Dionysius II. 119. Undermined by the Syracusans, 120, n. Baffled by Timoleon, 123, & seq. Let into Syracuse, 130. Fresh preparations against Sicily, 135. De-

† Cantabrian sea, where, xviii. 341.

Cantacufenus, a wicked tool of Andronicus III. xvi. 525, 534. Made guardian to young John, ib. Under-mined by John the patriarch, ib. Proscribed, 535. Assumes the purple, ib. Marches towards Constantinople, ib. Over-reached, 536. Enters that metropolis, 537. Crowned, 538. Resigns, and turns monk, 539.

† Canthele, where sited, xvi. 577.

† Cantii, where sited, xviii. 660.

Cantons, what, and whence, xviii. 403.

† Canucius, where seated, xvii. 555.

† Capernaum, often frequented by Christ, x. 424, & seq. Where sited, 438, n.

† Caphtor, where situate, i. 466.

† Caphtorim, from whom descended, i. 465. The progenitors of the Philistines, ii. 216.

Capito's flattery to Tiberius, xiii. 618, 619. His character, writings, &c. 619, & n. Death, 621.

—— Titin. his writings and character, xiv. 605, n.

—— Ignatius put to death by Commodus, xv. 58.

† Capitol, where sited, xi. 302. Whence so called, 373, & n. Described, ib. & seq. & n. Seized by the Sabines, 499. & seq. Besieged by the Gauls, 581. Famished, ib. Relieved, 586, & seq. Re-fortified, 591. Seized by the conspirators, xii. 506. Destroyed, xiv. 402, 403. Re-built, 435. Forsaken, and left to ruin, xvi. 85.

Capitoline games exhibited, xiv. 576.

Capitolinus, Jupitur, the temple of, built by Tarquin, xi. 350. Consecrated, 403.

—— the historian's account of Antoninus, xiv. 663. Writings and character, xv. 320, n.

Caponius, governor of Judea, x. 410.

† Cappadocia, in Asia minor, i. 465, & seq.

—— the kingdom of, described, ix. 457, & seq. Its origin, government, &c. 459, & seq. Kings, 462, & seq. Subdued by Tigranes, 331. Invaded by Mithridates, 387. Made a Roman province, 471. Wasted by Cosrhoes, xi. 165.

† Capraria, island, where situate, xviii. 21, 353.

† Caprea, island, described, xiv. 659.

† Capros, a river in Assyria, iv. 197, & n. viii. 605, n.

† Capsa, where situate, xvi. 583. Razed, xvii. 595.

† Capua, surrendered to Hannibal, xvii. 391. Begs his assistance, 421. Surrendered to the consuls, 441, 443.

Capuans give themselves up to Rome, xi. 647. Reduced by them, 661. Friendship to their routed army, xii. 21. Conspirators kill themselves, 25. The rest submit, 29. To Hannibal, 226. Kill the Roman garrison, ib. Besieged by the Romans, 250. Surrender, 256. Severely used, ib.

Caracalla born to Severus, xv. 90. Created Cæsar, 104. Colleague, 109. Triumphs over the Jews, 112. Attempts his father's life, 118. And crown, 119. Succeeds him, 122. Attempts Geta's life, 125. Cruel reign, ib. & seq. Fratricide, 126. Stratagem to gain the soldiery, 127. Speech to the senate, ib. Massacre of Geta's friends, 128. Horrid butcheries, 129, & seq. Extortions, 130. False coin, ib. Cruelties in Gaul, 131. Whence called Caracalla, 132. Success in Germany, ib. At Pergamos, 133. Changes his habit, &c. every-where, ib. Mimics Alexander the great, ib. Goes to Antioch, 134. Treachery to the Armenians, ib. Massacre at Alexandria, 135. Cruelty to the Parthians, ib. Takes the title of Parthicus, 136. Conspired against, 137. Stabbed, ib. Funeral honours, 141. Deified, 142. Defeat of the Alemans, xix. 321.

Caractacus's bravery against the Romans, xiv. 152. Defeat 153. Noble speech to Claudius, ib. Just reflections on the Romans, 154.

Caraites. See Karaites, iii. 168, & x. 372, & n.

† Caramania. See Cilicia, v. 595.

Caranus conquers Macedon, viii. 25. First king of it, 43.

Carbani, their office, vii. 588.

Carbo, Papyr. See Papyrius, xii. 423.

† Carbonaria Sylva, where, xix. 262, n.

† Carchemish, a famed city in Mesopotamia, iv. 388. Taken by Nabopalassar, 391.

† Cardia, in Chersonesus, where situate, ix. 511.

† Cardu mountains, where some relics of Noah's ark are said to have been seen, i. 321.

Cardueni, subdued by Trajan, xiv. 586.

Carfuleius's sharp engagement, with Antony, xiii. 185. Killed at the battle of Mutina, 186. His burial, 191.

† Caria, part of Asia proper, v. 485. Where sited, 487, n. Invaded by the Rhodians, vii. 437, & seq. Taken from the Rhodians, 451.

† Carians

† Carians, whence so called, vii. 515. First inhabitants of Samos, 517. Dreadful revenge on Phanes, v. 86.

Carina defeated by Metel. Pius, xii. 564. Beheaded, 570.

Carinus created Cæsar, xv. 287. His lewd character, ib. &c. Defeated and killed, 292, 293.

† Carlisle, old, where sited, xviii. 669.

† Carmania, a province of Persia, described, iv. 507, 508.

† Carmel, mount, its situation and fertility, iii. 107, 108. Frequented by Elias and Pythagoras, ib. By devout Christians, ib, n. Famed for its melons, &c. 135.

† — the town of, iii. 135.

Carmelite monks, so called from M. Carmel, iii. 108, & n.

† Carmenatlis, the gate of, why so called, xi. 303. And since Scelerata, 473, & 474, n.

† Carnion, where situate, x. 146. Taken and burnt by the Maccabees, ix. 96, & x. 147.

Carnus, a soothsayer, killed by the Heraclidæ, v. 637.

† Carpatia, in Cyprus, by whom built, ii. 382. Taken by Demetrius, vii. 506.

† Carpathus's island, described, vii. 570.

† Carpi, where sited, xix. 120, 122. Ravage Mœsia, xv. 200. Defeated, 212, 219. Revolt, 302. Transplanted into Pannonia, ib. Baffled and repulsed by Menophilus, xix. 358. Fresh ravages, 359.

† Carpis, where situate, xvi. 576. Carpesii revolt, xvii. 404. Submit to Asdrubal, 405.

† Carræ, the famed battle of, xi. 38.

† — retaken from the Persians, xv. 204.

† Cars, a city in Armenia, described, ix. 316, 317, & n.

† Carteia, whether the same with Calpe, xviii. 338.

† Cartena, where sited, xvii. 555. By whom built, ib.

† Cartenus, river, in Numidia, xvii. 559.

† Carthage, founded by Dido, ii. 380. xvi. 556, 560. Its various names and etymons, 561. Described, 566. Its extent 569. Ruins, 570. Division, 572. Situation, ib. Government, 590. Senate, 594, & n. Centumvirate & quinquevirate, 597. Other magistrates, &c. 599. Laws, 602. Their defects, 604.

Antient state very powerful, xvii. 12. Burnt by Maxentius, xv. 363. Submits to Arcadius, 132. Taken by Sigisvult, xvi. 218. By Genferic, 226. By Machæus, xvii. 16. Threatened by the mercenaries, 304. Relieved by Hannibal, 306, 307.

† — besieged and taken, xvii. 528. Destroyed, 535. Rebuilt, 539. By whom, ib. & seq. Destroyed by the Saracens, ib. Taken by the Vandals, xix. 205.

† — its square restored by Antoninus, xiv. 671.

† — new, described, xvii. 317, 346. Taken by Scipio, xii. 260, 346.

† Carthagena seized by the Alans, xvi. 180. By the Hunns, 233. By the Suevians, 263. By whom built, xvii. 317. Destroyed by the Vandals, xix. 200.

† Carthaginians, their origin, xvi. 558. Various names, 565. Populousness, 569. Extensive, 570, & 571, n. Antient Canaanites, 588. Sacrifice noble children to Saturn, 602. Forbid to learn Greek, ib. Their religion and deities, 607, 608. Portable temples, 635. Language, 643. Writing and coins, 654. Arts and sciences, 658, & seq. Customs, ib. Hospitality, 660. Character, 661, & seq. Genealogy of their noble families, 663, & seq. Commerce and military discipline, 663. Learned men, 667. Expert artists, ib. n. Writers, ib. Trade and navigation, 671. & seq. Chronology, 674, & seq. Wars with the Etruscans, &c. xvii. 13. Sicinns, ib. & seq. (Vid. & vii. 168.) First treaty with Rome, xvii. 19, 20. Vid. & xi. 643, 644. Presents to the capitol, 651. Tributary to the Africans, xvii. 21. Ill success in Sicily, 22. League with Xerxes, 23. First footing in Spain, ib. Expedition against Sicily, 28, & seq. Defeated by Gelon, 30, & seq. (vii. 171. & seq.) Sue for peace, 35. Shake off the African tribute, 39. Quarrel with the Romans, ib. & seq. (xii. 100, & seq.) Succour the Egestines, 41. Barbarity to the Selinuntines, 50, & seq. How repulsed before Himera, 53. Take Agrigentum, 65, & seq. Way of encamping, 67, n. Destroyed by a grievous plague, 73. Ravaged by Dionysius, 80, 86. Defeated at sea, 88, 98. A plague in their army, 99. Described, 100, & seq. Defeated, 102, 110. Ill success in Sicily, 111. Under a new pestilence, 116. Peace with Dionysius II. 119. Undermined by the Syracusans, 120, n. Baffled by Timoleon, 123, & seq. Let into Syracuse, 130. Fresh preparations against Sicily, 135. De-

135. Defeated by Timoleon, 137, 138. Their terrible loss, 142. Peace with him, 145. Dread of Alexander, 148. War with Agathocles, 153. Invaded by him, 164, & seq. Ravaged and defeated by him, 168. Their horrid superstition, 170, 197. Camp set on fire, 197. End of the Sicilian war, 199. Renewed, 202, & seq. Defensive treaty with Rome, 204, & seq. Drive Pyrrhus out of Italy, 207. War with the Romans, 214, 215. Their reasons, 219, & seq. Driven out of Sicily, Sardinia, &c. 249. Sea preparations against the Romans, 250, 251. Totally defeated, 251. Anew, 255. Saved by Xantippus, 258, & seq. Ingratitude, to him, 261. Fall into fresh disasters, 265, & seq. Defeated by Lutatius, 280. Peace with him, 281. War with the mercenaries, 283, 284. Causes of that war, ib. Preparations against them, 292. Success in Spain, 321. Answer to the Romans, 335. Success against them, 359. Defeated in Spain, 365. Great joy at Hannibal's success, 396. Treaty with king Philip, 411. Their ambassadors sent prisoners to Rome, 414. Second treaty with him, 416. Driven out of Sardinia, 417. Defeated in Spain, 419. Before Illiturgi, 424. Before Munda, ib. & seq. In Sicily, 450. In Spain, 452. Exasperate king Philip, 457. Defeated by the consuls, 461. In Spain by Scipio, 465. Their decline there, ib. Bad state, ib. Buy king Philip's assistance, 474. Their terror at Scipio's landing, 479. Defeated in Italy, 480. Defeated by Scipio, 483. Sue for peace to him, 486. Their ambassadors suspected at Rome, 489. Treachery to the Romans, ib. Defeated by Scipio, 493. Sue for peace, 494. Obtain a hard one, ib. & seq. Sends the first sum to Rome, 498. Discover Hannibal's designs to the Romans, 502. Offer them corn and ships, 506. Proscribe Hannibal, 515. Falls out with Masinissa, ib. & seq. Abject appeal to the Romans, 517. Sue for peace to Masinissa, 521. Betrayed by the Romans, 523. Forced to send three hundred hostages, ib. And to deliver up their arms, 524. To abandon the city, ib. & seq. Make some fresh efforts, 530. Defeated at sea, 534, & seq. Overcome and destroyed, 535.

Carthalo sent admiral against the Romans, xii. 144. Recalled for indiscretion, 146. Repulsed by the senate, 165. See xvii. 275.

— crucified for disobeying his father, xvii. 16.

— success against the Romans, xvii. 275. Recalled for his indiscretion, ib. — slain at Tarentum, xvii. 452.

† Carthea, a city in Coos, described, vii. 577.

Cartismandua's treachery to Caractacus, xiv. 153. To her own husband, 155. 156.

Carts, why worshipped by the Phrygians, v. 514.

Carvilius, Spur. subdues the Sardinians, xii. 164.

— Ruga, forced to divorce his barren wife, xii. 164.

Carus proclaimed emperor, xv. 286. His rise and character, ib. Success in Sarmatia, 287. Against the Persians, 288. Death, ib. Funeral honours, ib.

† Carystians worshipped Briareus, vii. 644.

Casca, one of the conspirators against Cæsar, xiii. 136. Gives him the first stab, 144.

† Casilinum taken by Hamilcar, xii. 130, & 132. & seq. Retaken by Fabius, 241. xvii. 422. Besieged by Hannibal, 400. Its dreadful famine and surrender, 402, 403. Put to fire and sword by Marcellus, 422.

† Casiotis, part of lower Egypt, i. 488. And of Seleucia, in Syria, ii. 263.

† Casiphia, where sited, x. 26, & n.

† Casis island described, vii. 570.

† Casluhim, who, and where settled, i. 465. ii. 216, & 228, n.

† Caspian sea described, iv. 451, & seq. & n.

† — streights, where sited, iv. 449.

† Caspis taken by Judas Maccabæus, x. 146.

Cassander opposed by Polysperchon, vii. 369. Subdues the Athenians, 370, & seq. Defeated by Demetrius, 373.

— whether he poisoned Alexander, viii. 344, 345, n. His post after his death, 372. Leagues against Antigonus, 389. Murders Roxana, and her son, 397, 451. Invades Peloponnesus, viii. 453. His death, 455. Hatred to Alexander, 457, n.

— the son of Antipater, why he did not succeed him, viii. 432, 433, n. Attempt against Polysperchon, 436. Outwits Antigonus, 447. Wars with the Ætolians, ib. & seq. Ill success in Asia, 450.

† Cassandra, by whom built, viii. 445.

† Cassandria, Potidea, why so called, viii. 13.

— destroyed by the Hunns, xvi. 310. xix. 99.

† Cassian

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Cassian mountains divide Scythia from Seres, v. 440.

Cassianus, killed by the crusaders, xvi. 482.

Cassibelan's treason, xviii. 686, n.
Heads all the Britons against Cæsar, 693.
Defeated, ib. Defence against him, ib. & seq. Makes peace with him, 696.

Cassiodorus publishes the Historia tripartita, xvi. 239, n.

— sent ambassador to Attila, xix. 75.

† Cassiope, a city in Epirus, ix. 528.

† Cassir, the ruins of, xvii. 560.

† Cassiterides, islands, where situate, xviii. 351, 648. Why so called by the Greeks, 648.

Cassius's success against the Rhodians, vii. 456, & seq. Against Mithridates, ix. 392, & seq.

— success against Alexander, x. 248, 249, & n. Seizes on Syria, 258. Defeated by M. Antony, 263.

— gives Crassus the slip in Parthia, xi. 34. Defeats the Parthians, 39. And Vollogeses, 68. Reduces the Sabines, 408. Chosen magister equitum, 413.

— Spur. defeats the Hernici, xi. 457. Condemned to death for his ambition, ib. & 461.

— sent to fetch Jugurtha, xii. 442.

— Longinus, left to command in pain, xiii. 50.

— Scæva's valiant defence rewarded, xiii. 56. Submits to Cæsar, 73. Conspires against him, 133. Stabs him in the senate, 144. Sharp answer to Antony, 153. Made governor of Syria, 163. Supplanted by Dolabella, 175. Sent by the senate against him, 176. Retires into the east, 202. Joins Brutus at Athens, 204. Goes into Syria, ib. Success in Asia, 209, & seq. In Syria, 210. Takes Laodicea, 213. Confirmed governor of Syria, 214. Proscribed, 215. Recalled from Egypt, 239. Meets Brutus at Smyrna, 241. Generosity to him, 242. Answer to the Rhodians, 243. Success against them, 244. In Asia, 245, & seq. Reconciled to Brutus, 253. Epicurean notion about Spirits, 255, & n. Passes into Europe, 256. Speech and largesse to the army, 257. Against fighting the triumvirs, 260, & 261, n. Last words to Messala, 262. To Brutus, 263. Defeated by Antony, 265. His death, 267. Character, ib. & seq. Why an enemy to Cæsar, 268, & n.

— Parmenf. opposes the triumvirs in Asia, xiii. 292. His character and writings, ib. & 293, n.

Cassius Chæreas's bravery against the mutineers, xiii. 518. Conspires against Caligula, xiv. 87. Singular intrepidity, 91, & seq. Murders him, 95, & n. Conceals himself, 105. Put to death by Claudius, 111, & n.

— Longinus, chosen consul, xiii. 630. Marries Drusilla, ib. n. Banished by Nero, xiv. 253, & seq.

— Dion's judgment about Adrian's adoption, xiv. 596.

— Avidius, success against the Parthians, xv. 8, 10. Barbarity to the Seleucians, 10. Success in Egypt, 19. Revolt and character, 26, & seq. Cruel severity, 27. Reforms the army in Syria, 28, n. Hatred of monarchy, 29. His character drawn by Verus, ib. Assumes the purple, 31. Proscribed, 32. His death, ib.

† — Jupiter, the temple of, ix. 528.

— † mount, whence so called, i. 258.

Cassius's success and rashness in Spain, xvi. 206. Stirs up John to revolt, 213. Banished, 216. Ill success against the Goths, xix. 200.

Castor and Pollux, their fabulous original, vi. 58, n. Arm for the recovery of their sister, v. 654. Bring her out of Aphidne, vi. 59. Their other exploits and death, ib. & seq. & n. Their temple consecrated at Rome, xi. 462.

† Castra Alata, supposed Edinburgh, xviii. 671.

Castration forbid by Nerva, xiv. 550.

† Castrum altum described, xvii. 424.

Castulo revolts from the Carthaginians, xvii. 404. Betrayed to Scipio, 469.

† Catabani, who, and where sited, xviii. 195.

† Catada, a river, described, xvi. 585.

Catalans hired by the Greeks, xvi. 520. Ravage their dominions ib. Invite the Turks to them, 521.

† Catana, in Sicily, described, vii. 142. How destroyed, ib. Taken by the Athenians 192. By Dionysius, 234. Delivered up to the Romans, vii. 331.

† Catanius Apollo, his temple at Dastacum, ix. 461.

† Cathei defeated by Alexander, viii. 305, & seq.

† Catans, who, and where sited, xiv. 418. Invaded by Domitian, 477.

Catapultæ described, xvi. 68, n, 82.

Cathim, the last Amalekitish king in Egypt, ii. 91.

Catigern slain, xix. 16. — His monument, ib.

I N D E X to the

Cataline, L. S. a tool of Sylla's, his cruelties, xii. 572. His impiety, 573, n. Vile character, 627. Conspiracy, 628, & seq. The names of his associates, 630. Accused by Cicero, 633. Retires to Fæsulæ, 634. & seq. Proscribed, 635. Defeated and killed, 641.

Cato's pleasant speech in favour of the Achæans, vi. 652. Drives the Ætolians out of Oeta, vii. 42. Sent against his will to take Cyprus, 511. Speech in favour of the Rhodians, 450, & seq. Sent questor into Sardinia, xii. 297, 298. Against the repeal of the Oppian law, 301, & seq. Success in Spain, 302. Frugality, 301. Serves as legionary tribune, 306. A secret enemy to Scipio Afric. 310, & seq. Plays the rigid censor, 315. His true character, 316. Partiality against the Carthaginians, 330, & seq. Irreconcilable hatred against them, xix. 519, & seq. His death, xii. 345.

—— Portius, expounds the Sibylline oracles, ix. 267.

—— M. Port. dies in Numidia, xii. 426.

—— C. Port. ill success in Macedon, xii. 428. Banished ib.

—— L. Port. chosen consul, xii. 428. Killed by Marius, 525.

—— Uticensis, his noble speech against Sylla, xii. 574, 575. Against Cæsar and his accomplices, 637. Imprisoned, xiii. 4. Speech against the Agrarian law, ib. & seq. Sent into Cyprus, 11. Wounded at the comitia, 20. Imprisoned, 23. Expedient against Pompey, 28. Sent proprætor of Sicily, 39. Forced out of it, 44. Goes into Afric, 69. Saves Cicero, 86. Heads Pompey's party, 87. March through the African deserts, 88, & n. His demeanour at Utica, 89. Resigns the command to Scipio, ib. Severely repents of it, 95. Speech to the senate, 97. Care for his friends, 99. Prepares for death, 101, & 102, n. Stabs himself, 103. His effigy carried in Cæsar's triumph, 111.

—— his son, a debauched youth, xiii. 105. Death, 279.

—— Portius, a base senator, the betrayer of Sabinus, xiii. 661.

Cats, why had in veneration in Egypt, i. 599, & seq. 563, & seq.

† Catti, who, and where sited, xiii. 523, & n. Defeated by Drusus, 417. By Germanicus, 534.

† Cattieuchlani, who, and where sited, xviii. 662.

Catualda, driven from his kingdom, xiii. 583, xix. 222.

Catullus's treachery to the Jews punished, x. 621, & n.

Catulus, Q. Lut. his consulship and character, xii. 487, & n. Success against the Cimbri, 494. Triumph and temple, ib. & seq.

—— chosen consul, xii. 487. Falls out with his colleague, 590, 591. Artful speech against Pompey, 624. Strenuousness against the Manilian law, 626. Bold accusation of Cæsar, 629.

Cavalry not used in Persia till after Cyrus, v. 70, n.

Cavades, king of Persia, subdues Euthalites, xi. 117. Deposed, 118. His punishment, ib. Released by his queen, 119, & seq. Wars with the Romans, 120. Behaviour to the Amidians, 121. Invaded by the Hunns, 122, & seq. Peace with Rome, 123. Success against them, 125. Death, 127.

† Caucasus, mount, in Scythia, v. 441. Called by the Arabians Raf, i. 469, & n. Its height, 295, n.

Caudex, Appius, why so called, xii. 104.

† Caudine forks, the Romans entrapped in, xii. 18.

† Cayster, a river in Phrygia, v. 497, n. 573.

Cayu Marras, said to have been the son of Shem, i. 370.

† Cea, Ceos, island, described, vii. 576. A barbarous custom in it, ib.

Ceaulin's success against the Britons, xix. 34. Driven out, ib.

Ceballinus discovers a plot against Alexander, viii. 241.

† Cecropia, Athens antiently so called, v. 641, vii. 77. Taken by the Romans, 85.

† Cecropes, the first order of Athenian citizens, vi. 132.

Cecrops introduces religion into Greece, v. 642, 644, & seq. The fable of his naming Athens, 641, n. The founder of that monarchy, 644. His reign, &c. ib.

—— bishop of Carthage, killed by an earthquake, xv. 489.

† Cedars of Libanus described, ii. 266, & seq.

† Cydnus, river, in Cilicia, v. 598.

† Celene, where situate, v. 493.

Celeres, Roman guards, why so called, xi. 295. Dismissed by Numa, 315.

—— priests so called, their office, xi. 316.

Celers, A. R. a tribune, put to death, x. 565.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Celer Publ. the murderer of Silanus, acquitted by Nero, xiv. 184.

— one of that monarch's architects, xiv. 230. His projected canal, 231.

— Verien. his bloody orders against the Mæfians, xv. 230.

† Celetæ, a people of Thrace, ix. 525.

Celibacy, how punished by the Spartans, vi. 385. Condemned by Octavius, xiv. 454, 455.

Celsus, Junius's death, xiv. 10.

— Mar. repulsed at a revolt against Galba, xiv. 326. Saved by Otho, 331. Raised by him, 348. Sent against Vitellius, 352. Success against Cæcina, 353. Wholesome advice to Otho, 354, 356.

Celsus, L. Publ. whether put to death, xiv. 616.

— his writings and character, xv. 42, n.

— Cornel. declared emperor, xv. 244. His death, ib. & seq.

† Celtes. See Gomerians, v. 383, & seq. Sue to Alexander, viii. 146. Answer to him, ib. Settle in Italy, xi. 575, & seq. Raise a drunken uproar in Asdrubal's camp, xvii. 270. Defeated in Spain, 314, n. How far spread through Europe, xviii. 396.

† Celtiberia, Spain, antiently so called, v. 387, n. 389, 390, n. Described, xviii. 341.

† Celtiberians, their treachery to Scipio, xii. 214, 247, xvii. 471. Defeated by Fulvius, xii. 303, 318. Their signal bravery, 514. Outwitted by Didius, ib. Their religion, xviii. 410. Where seated, 342.

† Celtic Gauls, defeated by Cæsar, xiii. 31.

† Cenchrea, one of the two parts of Corinth, vi. 36, & n.

Censors, first created, xi. 546. Confined to eighteen months, 551. Suspended, 606. Revived, 608. When first chosen out of the plebeians, 639, 640. Restored by Decius, xv. 219. Its nature, &c. ib. & seq.

— at Carthage, xvi. 601.

Cenforinus beheaded, xii. 570.

— his writings and character, xv. 208, n.

— besieged, and taken prisoner, xvi. 227. Sent against Carthage, xvii. 522. Repulsed before it, 529.

— sent ambassador to Emeric, xix. 226.

Census, how regulated by Servius, xi. 361. Taken at Rome. Vid. sub Rome, 651, & seq.

Centaur's, the fable of, whence, vi. 18, & n. Lustful attempt, ib. Killed by Hercules, v. 629, n.

Centonius, defeated, xvii. 370.

† Centum portæ, by whom built, xiv. 570.

† — columnæ, a Roman building burnt, xv. 213.

Centumvirs, when first instituted, xii. 166.

† — at Carthage, xvi. 597.

Centuries, how regulated by Servius, xi. 361.

Centurion, in Judœa, his singular humility, x. 447.

† Centuripe, taken by the Romans, xviii. 230. A city in Sicily, vii. 154.

† Cephalonia. Vid. Samos, vii. 513. Described, 630. Taken by the Athenians, vi. 265. By the Romans, 627. Given to the Athenians, xiv. 633.

† Cephissus, river, in Phocis, vi. 29. The bridge over, built by Adrian, xiv. 619.

† Cephren. Cephrenes, &c. king of Egypt, ii. 52. His pyramids there, i. 507, & ii. 52.

† Ceraftis, Cyprus, why so called of old, vi. 485, & seq.

† Cerasus in Pontus, why so called, ix. 374.

† Ceraunian mountains in Epirus, ix. 530.

† Ceraunus, where sited, vii. 571.

Cerberus fetched out of hell by Hercules, v. 630, n. vi. 48, n.

† Cercina, island, where sited, xii. 541, xviii. 79.

Cerdic's success in Britain, xix. 22. Sends for more Saxons, 27. Defeats the Britons, ib. Founds the West Saxon kingdom, 28.

Cerealis's expedition against the Samaritans, x. 583. Against the Idumeans, 594.

— Petilius, defeated by the Britains, xiv. 209.

— endeavours to save the capitol, xiv. 404. Success against the revolted Germans, 426. Bravery against the Treverians, 427. Narrow escape and revenge, 428. Vainly tampered by Domitian, 469.

— Civicus put to death, xiv. 257.

Ceremonial law instituted, ii. 608. Whether any borrowed from Egypt, 609, n. Its distinctions, ib. & seq. & n.

Ceremony, whence that word derived, xi. 580.

Ceres civilizes the Athenians, vi. 96. vii. 65, n, & seq. n.

I N D E X to the

- Ceres her feasts and mysteries, vii. 65, n. & seq. n. Why and how performed, ib. & seq.
- her worship at Carthage, xvi. 602, 627. Temple plundered, xvii. 97.
- statue in Arcadia burnt, vi. 13.
- Cerethites, the Egyptian name of the Philistines, ii. 226, n.
- † Cerinthus, in Eubœa, by whom built, vii. 647.
- Certus, a senator, indicted by Pliny, xiv. 551. Dies of grief, ib.
- Cestius Gallus numbers the inhabitants of Jerusalem, x. 574. Defeated by the Zelots, 577, 578.
- Maced. burns Perusia, xiii. 309.
- Cethegus's success against the Gauls, xii. 299.
- a senator, put to death, xv. 596.
- conspiracy and death, xii. 630, — 638.
- Cetheroupa, the first woman after the flood according to the Indians, i. 307.
- † Cetii, a people mentioned by Homer, 472.
- † Ceuta, its situation, xviii. 2.
- Chabdanus's revenge on Leo, xvi. 415. Defeated, 418.
- Chabrias, the Athenian, his character, vi. 343. Success against the Spartans, ib. Slain, ib.
- success against the Persians, vii. 501.
- killed in the social war, vii. 409.
- † Chadaca, metropolis of Albania, ix. 612.
- Chagan, king of the Ayari, invades the Romans, xvi. 324. Breaks the truce with them, 327. Destroyed by a pestilence, 328. Cruelty to his prisoners, ib. Peace with Heraclius, 336. Kindness to Justinian, 353. Bought off by Tiberius, ib. &c.
- Chaïses, poet, by whom invented, xiv. 597.
- † Chalcaspidæ, whence so called, vi. 578.
- † Chalce, where sited, xviii. 11.
- Chalcedon destroyed by the Goths, xix. 123.
- † Chalcedon. See Calcedon, ix. 581.
- † Chalcidene, the kingdom of, described, ix. 645, & seq. Vid. vol. ii. 264.
- Chalcidians come into Sicily, vii. 159.
- † Chalcidica, where situate, viii. 13.
- Chalcidius's account of the star at Christ's birth, x. 348, n.
- † Chalcis, the capitol of Chalcidene, ii. 264.
- taken by Antigonus, vii. 38. Ruined by Cenchus, 72.
- Chalcis capital of Eubœa, vii. 640. Described, 645. Plundered by Cosrhoes, xvi. 311.
- the kingdom of, united to the empire, xiv. 506.
- Chalcodon subdues the Thebans, vii. 649.
- † Chaldea, whence so named, iv. 302. Its division, &c. ib. & seq. Product, &c. 305, 306, & 310, 311.
- the antediluvian kings of, i. 268, iv. 364.
- Chaldean cosmogony, according to Diodorus, i. 101. Berofus, ib.
- account of the flood, i. 271.
- Chaldeans, famed for owning one deity, i. 101. By whom founded, 372. Their language Syriac, ii. 298.
- Chaldees, or Babylonian priests, iv. 317. Authors of the Sabeian religion, ib. Their learning not from Egypt, 349, &c. Their institutions, 352. Cosmogony, 353. Astrology, ib. Condemned, 355. Great valour, 430. Subdued by Cyrus, ib.
- character, when, and by whom brought into Judæa, x. 31, n. & seq. n.
- paraphrase, why first brought into use, x. 59.
- † Chalonitis, where sited, viii. 607, n. A province of Assyria, iv. 197.
- † Chalons, the famed battle of, xvi. 247. Number of the slain, 248. Authors reconciled about it, xix. 80, 81, & n. & seq.
- † Chalybon and Chalybonitis in Syria, ii. 264.
- † Chamavi, who, xix. 235. Defeated, xv. 360. By Julian, 488. Invaded by Eugenius, xvi. 100.
- † Chaonia, a province in Epirus, described, ix. 526.
- Chaos, absurd opinions about it confuted, i. 94, & seq. & 136, & seq.
- † Capphenatha, part of Jerusalem, why so called, x. 179.
- † Characa, where sited, x. 146, & n. Taken by the Jews, ib.
- Chararic, king of the Franks, xix. 275. Dethroned and murdered by Clovis, 302.
- † Characene, described, ix. 643, & seq. By whom founded, ib.
- † Charcorychii, mountains, where, xvii. 558.
- Chares's expedition against Chios, vi. 348. Repulsed by the Byzantines, 357. His noble death and character, 348, & seq.
- the maker of the Colossus, vii. 400, n. Mad expedition against Persia, vii. 410.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

- Charidemus, put to death, viii. 174.
Charidemus, the promontory of, where, xviii. 338.
Charilaus, king of Sparta, his birth, vi. 379, 380. Defeated by the Tegean women, 14, 401, 402. His reign and character, 381, & seq.
Charilus, the Samian, his character, vii. 532, n.
Chariots, armed, when first introduced, xii. 62. Vid. vol. v. 18, n, & 74.
† Charistus, a river in Colchis, ix. 603.
Charlemagne falls out with Desiderius, xix. 587. Invited against him by the pope, ib. Success in Italy, 588. Grand reception at Rome, 589. Large donatives to the pope, 591. Conquests, ib. Crowned king of the Lombards, 598. Second reception at Rome, 599. Form of government, 600, & seq.
Charms, &c. severely punished, xvi. 3.
† Charon, lake Meris, why so called, i. 532.
Charonites, Antony's magistrates, why so called, xiii. 162.
† Charybdis, the famed rock of, vii. 140.
Chasleu, a Jewish month, iii. 206, n.
† Chasmena, when, and by whom built, vii. 160.
† Chauci, where sited, xiii. 447, n. 521. n. Subdued by Tiberius, 447. By Drusus, 417. By Corbulo, xiv. 132. By the Romans, xv. 6. See vol. xviii. 575, xix. 235.
† Chazari, who, xvi. 339. Forty thousand men join Heraclius, ib.
Chedorlaomer's wars, ii. 121. Pillages Sodom, &c. 193.
Cheiromocrates, architect of the temple at Ephesus, vii. 112.
† Chel, of Solomon's temple, what, x. 99, n.
Checias, a famed Jew of Alexandria, x. 212.
Chelonis, her filial and conjugal piety, vi. 522, 523.
† Chemia, Egypt, why so called, i. 484.
Cheminis. Vide Cheops, ii. 51.
Chemosh, Baalpeor, idol of the Moabites, ii. 100, 102 & n. Whence so called, ib. n.
Cheops, king of Egypt, ii. 51. Forbids all sacrifices, ib. His tyranny, ib. &c.
† Stately pyramids, i. 507, 508 & seq. Prostitution of his daughter, i. 508 ii. 52. By which she also built a pyramid, ib.
Chereas defeated and killed by the Jews, x. 139.
Cherethites and Pelethites, who, iv. 24, n.
Cherries, whence called cerasa, ix. 374.
Cherfis, king of Salamis, vii. 494.
† Cherson, the ruins of, ix. 619.
† Chersonesus invaded by Demetrius, viii. 408.
† ——— Thracian, described, ix. 510, & seq. Kings of, 525.
——— Taurica, described, ix. 619 & seq. Bequeathed by Agrippa, xiii. 415.
Chersonians butchered by Justinian, xv. 355. Submit to Philippicus, ib.
Cherubim placed in paradise, i. 208. Of gold, over the mercy-seat, iii. 297. n. Their form, &c. ib. n. Whence so called, 298 n.
Cherusci subdued by Drusus, xiii. 41. Stirred up by Arminius, 538. Defeated by Germanicus. 539, 559. Oppressed by Italicus, xiv. 132. Defeated by Constantine, xv. 360.
Chesnuts eaten for want of corn, xvi. 181.
Chian slaves, signal faithfulness, vii. 565.
† Chians, their government, kings, &c. vii. 562 & seq. Fidelity to the Ionians, 536. Subdued by the Persians, 563. Revolt, and reduced, ib. Join in the common confederacy, ib. & seq. Subject to the Athenians, 565. Their various fates since, ib. & seq.
Chichaster built by Cissa, xix. 28.
Childebert's success against the Burgundis, xix. 318, 319.
Childeric taken prisoner by Attila, xvi. 245. xix. 76. Restored, 267, 268. His reign and conquests, 269. Death, ib. Tomb and character, ib. Dethroning and restoration, 270 n. King of the Franks, 240.
Chilperic made magister militiæ, xix. 306. His conquests in Gaul, 310 & seq. Extract, 311. Death, 312.
† Chinaalph, river in Numidia, xvii. 559.
Chindasuinthus, king of the Visigoths, xix. 118.
† Chintila, king of the Visigoths, xix. 118.
Children, how educated among the Jews, iii. 462 & seq. Solon's laws concerning them, vi. 123.
——— at Rome, slaves to their parents, xi. 311.
——— poor, how provided for by Constantine, xv. 390. Four eaten by their mothers, xvi. 181.
† Chil-

† Chilminar, in Persia, by whom adorned, v. 270.

Chilo, Vett. put to death by Galba, xiv. 304.

— L. Fab. doomed to death by Caracalla, xv. 14, 15, Rescued and spared, 15.

— accused of witchcraft, xv. 595.

Chilon stabs Marcellus and himself, xiii. 108.

† Chimæra, mountain in Lycia, v. 591. The fable of, explained, ib. & seq. vi. 43. n. The hot baths of, ix. 528.

† Chinese, a sect of philosophers among them, 121 & seq. Their notion of a god, &c. ib. & 144.

— historians, mention the flood, i. 280. Whether their language be the primitive, 422, 423.

Chinzirus, king of Babylon, iv. 380.

† Chios kingdom, by whom founded, v. 639. Revolts from Athens, vi. 305. Confederates against it, 348.

† — island, described, vii. 558. Famed for its wines, &c. ib. By whom peopled, 560.

† — the city of, described, vii. 559. Destroyed by the Persians, 564. Taken by the Turks, xvi. 474.

Chloneric's parricide, xix. 299. Punished, ibid.

Chlothildis's character, xix. 277. Married to Clovis, ib. & seq. Strives to convert him, 270, 282. Her retirement and death, 304. Extract, 312. Revenge on Sigismond, 315, 316.

† Choaspes, whether the same with the Euleas, v. 8, 9 n.

† Choas in Phrygia. See Colossus, v. 496.

Choaspian subdued by Alexander, viii. 290.

† Chomer, capital of Bactria, v. 293. n.

Chorax stops the overflowing of the Tigris, ix. 643.

† Chorfa, a city in Armenia, ix. 316 n. & seq.

Chose, an Idumæan deity, whence so named, x. 299 n.

Chosrhoes. See Cosrhoes, xi. 124, & seq.

Chreocopidæ, what, vi. 114.

Chrencriis, the supposed Pharaoh at the Exod. ii. 555 n.

† Christ, Jesus, his birth foretold, x. 331, & seq. & n. Born at Bethlehem, 339. Year of his birth computed, x. 342 n. Manifested to the magi, 343, & seq.

Presented at the temple, 350, 351. Not of the Essenian sect, 369. Conveyed into Egypt, 383, & seq. Whence called a Nazarite, 385. Stay at Jerusalem, 411. First entrance into his ministry, 420. Baptism, 422. First miracle, 424. Answer to his mother explained, 423, 424, n. Fresh miracles, 425 & seq. Sublime discourse to Nicodemus, 427, & seq. Miraculous cures in Gallilee, 434, & seq. Vindicates his doing them on the sabbath, 439, 442 & n. Chuses his twelve apostles, 444 & n. Sermon on the mount, 446. Raises the widow's son, 447. Absolves the sinful woman, 449. Condemns infidelity, 450, & n. Why he spake in parables, 453. Other miracles, 454, & seq. Why he ordered them to be concealed, 456 n. Multiplies the loaves, 459. Walks on the sea, ib. Reproves the Pharisees, 463. Goes to Tyre and Sidon, ib. The Jews opinion concerning him, 466. Foretels his own death, ib. & 469. Transfigured, 467. Acquits the adulteress, 476. Raises Lazarus, 481. Circumstances of the miracle examined, 482, n. Entry into Jerusalem, 484, & seq. Foretels its ruin with tears, 485 & n. Silences the Sadducees, &c. 491, 492. Washes his disciples feet, 495. Describes the last day, 496. Celebrates the passover, 497, 498, & n. Agony in the garden, 499, & n. Condemned by the sanhedrim, 501. Brought before Pilate, 504. Herod, 505. Scourged, 507. Crucified, 508. (xiv. 231.) The hour when, ib. n. His promise to the penitent thief, x. 512, & n. Last prayer, 513. Expires, 514. Why pierced in the side, 517. And buried apart, 518. His tomb sealed and guarded, ib. & n. His resurrection, 519. Appears to his disciples, 522, 523, & n. Commission to them, 524, & seq. Taken up into heaven, 528, 529, & n. Testimony of profane authors concerning him, 530.

Christians, primitive, their admirable lives, x. 538, & seq. Persecuted in Judea, 543. Leave Jerusalem before its siege, 578 & 579 n. Persecuted by Nero, xiv. 232, & seq. Confounded with the Jews by Tacitus, ib. n. By Domitian, 494, 518. Tolerated by Nerva, xiv. 549. Persecuted by Trajan, 598. By the Jews, 626. Parted and delivered from them, 630. Persecuted by Adrian, 646. Favoured by Antoninus, 670. Their prayers obtain a miraculous victory, xv. 22, 23. Favoured by M. Aurelius, 24. Why favoured by Alexander, 157. Grievously persecuted by Decius,

NINETEEN VOLUMES:

Decius, 217. By Gallus, 222. By Valerian, 226. By Dioclesian, 236. By Maximin, 380. Constantine's edicts in their favour, 377, 383. Forbid to turn Jews, 485. Joy at Julian's death, 554. Encouraged by Jovian, 571. Massacred by Geronicus, xvi. 186. By the Alexandrian Jews, 196. Barbarity to Hypatia, 197. Persecuted in Persia, 203. Restored, 325. Massacred by the Jews, 333, 336. By the Mohammedans, 359. By the Saracens, 369.

Christian women, exempted from stage-plays, xvi. 40.

Chronology of the patriarchs, according to the Hebrew, i. 219. Septuagint, 220. Samaritan pentateuch, 221.

— from the creation to the flood, stated, i. 217. From thence to Abraham's departure, 332.

— of the Egyptians, i. 272, & seq.

— from the time of Alexander the Great, i. 600.

— of the Jews, iii. 476, 480 & seq.

Chrysol, the same with Vulcan, &c. i. 260. Inventor of iron weapons, &c. ib. First sailor, according to Sanchoniatho, ib. Worshipped, ib. &c.

Chryse, the wife of Dardanus, her dowry, v. 537.

Chrysanthus refuses Julian's invitation, xv. 533. Made pontif, ib. His writings, &c. 562, n.

Chrysaphus's treachery to Attila forgiven, xvi. 236. xix. 70.

Chrysargyrum, falsely ascribed to Constantine, xv. 418. What tax it was, ib. Abolished by Anastasius, xvi. 293. Various sorts of it, 294.

Chrysippus put to death for treason, ix. 195.

— witty sarcasm on Cæsar's triumph, xiii. 129.

† Chrysorrhœas, a river in Lydia, v. 573. In Syria, ii. 265.

Chrysostom, saint, his narrow escape, xvi. 4. Excellent homilies to the Antiochians, 71. Dreadful account of their trial and punishment, 72. Intercedes for them, 74. Piety to the prisoners, 76. Joyful speech on their being pardoned, 78. Panegyric on Eudoxia, 121. Banished by her, 130. Letters to Pentadia, ib. Zeal for the church's asyla, 143. Saves three considerable lives, 146. Intrepidity against the Arians, 147. Banishment, 157. Manuscripts burnt, 372.

Chrysotelia, a new tax raised by Anastasius, xvi. 295.

† Chuni, who, xix. 45.

VOL. XX.

Churches, when first made asyla, xvi. 99. Suppressed by Eutropius, 130. Restored ib. Respected by Alaric, 184. By the Goths, ib. By Honorius, 195. Enlarged fifty paces round, 200.

Chymical books, in Egypt, burnt by Dioclesian, xv. 305.

Chyniladan, supposed the Nabuchadnezzar of Scripture, iv. 282, & n. & 284. Calls in all his Assyrian subjects against the Medes, 284. Defeats them, and destroys their capital, 285. His 120 days banquet, 286. See also under Nebuchadonezor.

Ciacconius's description of Trajan's column, xiv. 597.

Ciaxares, his character and exploits, iv. 478. Driven out by the Scythians, 479. Treachery to them, 481. War with the Lydians, 482. Resumes the siege of Nineveh, 484. Other conquests with the king of Babylon, ib. & seq.

— II. wars with Neriglissar, iv. 490. The Darius of Daniel, 491. Destroys Babylon, ib. & seq. Divides the empire into 120 provinces, 492.

Cicero's injustice to Archimedes, vii. 382. Discovers his tomb, 386. Letter to Lentulus, ix. 269. Success against the Parthians, xi. 39. Character of Opimius, xii. 445. Birth, 476. First campaign, 525. Retires to Athens, 586. Speech in favour of Pompey, 626. Judgment of Jul. Cæsar, 629. Consulship, 631. Unravels Catiline's plot, ib. & seq. Accuses him, 633, & seq. Styled father of his country, 636. Partiality to Cæsar, 641. Speech against Clodius, 642 n. Fatal satires against the triumvirs, xiii. 5 & n. Outwitted by Cæsar, 7. By Clodius, 8. Leaves Rome, 9. Restored 15. Bravery in Cilicia, 32. Guards the Italian coasts, 39. Rejects Cæsar's proposal, 44 & n. Goes over to Pompey, 48. Repents of it, ib. & n. Forgiven by Cæsar, 83. Intercedes for Marcellus, 108. Ill-timed jest on Cæsar's calendar, 118. And consulship of Caninius, 131. Speech on Cæsar's death, 153. Joins with Octavian, 167, & n. Severely reprov'd by Brutus, 177. Bitter speech against Antony, 180. Narrow escape from Ventidius, 184. Untimely zeal against Antony, 193. Vanity mortified, 196, 197. By Octavian, 200. His character of Dec. Brutus, 218. Condemned by the triumvirs, 221. His flight, 229. Perplexities, 230, 231, & seq. Death, 232, & n. Character, 233, & n. Wrong character of the Gaulish religion, xviii. 447, & n.

I N D E X to the Cicero, his son, returns to Rome, xiii. 323.

—Q. bravery against the Gauls, xiii. 25. In Cilicia, 32. Forgiven by Cæsar, 84.

—Tullius, the son of Cicero. See Tullius, xiii. 204 & seq.

† Cicones, a people of Thrace, ix. 516.

Cidaric, a Persian diadem, described, v. 5, 6.

† Cilicia, whence so called, v. 594. Described, 595, & seq. Government, and various fates, 599, & seq. Kings, 600, & seq. Invaded by Alexander, 209, & seq. By Demetrius, viii. 409. Made a Roman province, xiv. 441.

Cilician treachery and cruelty, a proverb, ii. 599, & n.

Cilix, the pretended founder of Cilicia, ii. 367, 368.

† Cimbri. Vid. Cimmerians, i. 467. & seq. Their origin, names, and territories, xviii. 513, xix. 114, & seq. Ill success in Italy, 635, 636, & n.

—women, their signal valour, xviii. 509, 637, & n.

† —Chersonesus described, xix. 106. When and by whom inhabited, ib.

† Ciminian forest penetrated by the Romans, xii. 39.

† Cimmerians, the descendants of Gomer, i. 467. The same with the Gauls of Asia Minor, ib. Their invasion of it, v. 581. Take Sardis, 582. Their character, ix. 618. A colony of them in Italy, ib.

† —where seated in Europe, xii. 429. Invade Italy, ib. Defeat the Romans, 477. March towards Rome, 489. Inject a panic through Italy, 494. Totally defeated, 497.

—women, their desperate valour, xii. 497, xix. 509 n.

† Cimolis, island, described, vii. 582. Its earth, 583.

Cimon, admiral of Athens, vi. 224. His character, ib. & seq. Conquests in Cyprus, v. 159, vi. 226, & seq. In Chersonesus, &c. 227, & seq. Success against the Persians, v. 160. Aids the Lacedæmonians, vi. 229, 454. Tried for treason, vi. 233, & seq. Banished into Cyprus, v. 176. vi. 234. Repulsed by the Athenian general, 236. Made admiral of Persia, v. 176. Recalled, vi. 239. Descent into Cyprus, ib. Death and character, vi. 240, 241, n. Carries Theseus's bones to Athens, vii. 610.

Cinados's conspiracy discovered, vi. 482, & n., & seq. n.

Cincian law, what, xiv. 130, & 131, n.

† Cinetii, who, and where sited, xviii. 77.

Cingetorix taken prisoner, xviii. 696.

Cinna, L. Corn. chosen consul, xii. 533. His sad character, ib. Faithful to Sylla, &c. 542, & seq. Heads the allies, 543. Treachery to Pompey, 547. Enters Rome, 549. Seizes on the consulship, 554. Opposes Sylla's return, 555. Third consulship and tyranny, 556, & seq. Allies with Cæsar, 559. Marches against Sylla, ib. Stabbed to death, ib.

—Cæsar's brother-in-law, joins with his murderers, xiii. 148. Lays down his dignities, 149.

—another, mistaken for him, torn in pieces, xiii. 158, 159, & n.

—Cornel. conspires against Augustus, xiii. 444 & seq. Pardoned by him, 445.

† Cinype, district and city, xviii. 77.

† —river, xviii. 79.

Cinyras, first king of Cyprus, vii. 492. His vast wealth, ib.

Cipus, M. general, sent against the Boii, xii. 159. The fable of his two horns, 160 n.

† Circassian Tartary, part of Scythia, v. 441.

Circæi revolt from the Romans, xi. 602.

† Circæus, a river in Eubœa, vii. 643.

† Circensian games instituted by Augustus, xi. 54. Why exhibited by Totila, xix. 495.

Circumcision, very antient in Egypt, i. 570. By whom first introduced, ii. 407, & n. Why discontinued in the desert, iii. 51. Renewed after the passage of Jordan, 70. How performed, 380, 381, & n. Superstitious additions of the Jews, 381 n. Used in Ethiopia, xviii. 131, & n.

Circumvallation-lines, when introduced xi. 565.

† Circus, Roman, built by Tarquin, xi. 341 & n.

† Cirencester built by the Saxons, xix. 28.

† Cirta described, xvii. 543, & seq. When and by whom built, 544. Surrendered to Jugurtha, 587.

† Cisalpine Gaul described, xi. 254.

† Cissa, river in Colchis, ix. 603.

—second king of the Saxons, xix. 28. Cissidas, the Gaul, assists the Spartans, vi. 504.

Citherea given to the Lacedæmonians, xiii. 391.

† Citherean

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Citherean mount described, v. 635.
Cities of refuge. See Refuge.
—how dedicated by the Hetrurians, xi. 288, & 289, n.

† Citium in Cyprus, whence so called, i. 472. By whom built, ib. & vii. 487.

Citizens, Solon's laws about them, vi. 122. Few at Athens, 131. How admitted, 132.

—of Sparta, their number, &c. vi. 384. Of Rome, their privileges, xi. 606, n.

† City, the great, razed by Agathocles, vii. 306.

† Cius, in Bithynia, by whom built, ix. 580.

† Civic crown, on whom bestowed, xi. 601.

Civis Maro, the Gaul, slain in Spain, xvii. 425.

Clælia's surprising flight across the Tiber, xi. 401, n.

Classes, how regulated by Servius, xi. 359.

Classicus heads the revolted Gauls, xiv. 423. Success against the Romans, 424. Total defeat, 428.

—accused of extortion, xiv. 564. Kills himself, ib.

† Clastidium betrayed to Hannibal, xii. 197. xvii. 362.

Claudebald. See Clodebald.

Claudia fined by the Ædiles, xii. 148.

— the vestal, saves her father, xii. 359.

— a miracle related of her, xiii. 441, 498, n.

— Pulchra, accused of treason, xiii. 649.

— married to Caligula, xiv. 16.

— daughter of Claudius, disowned by him, xiv. 102.

Claudian family, its origin, &c. xiii. 497 n.

Claudian's poem against Eutropius, xvi. 127, n. On Honorius's marriage, 137. On Stilicho's exploits, ib. On Manlius's consulship, 138. Other writings, and character, 207, n.

Claudius's speech to the Mamertines, vii. 325, & seq. Takes Messina, 327. Besieged in it, 328. See also xii. 101, & seq. Ravages Syracuse, 105.

— Appius, comes over to the Romans, xi. 404, & seq. Chosen consul, 419.

— his son, opposes Valero, xi. 480. Affronted by the tribunes, 482. Betrayed by his troops, 484. Severity to them, ib. Cited by the tribunes, 485. Kills himself, ib.

Claudius Caius, chosen consul, xi. 495. Noble speech against the tribunes, 498. Opposes his nephew's tyranny, 525, 527.

— the hellish tool of Appius, xi. 531. Stratagem against Virginia, ib. & seq. Put to death, 542.

— Marcellus, divested of his dictatorship, xii. 9.

— Pulcher, his attempt on Drepanum, xii. 142. Defeated, 143. Deposed and tried, ib. & seq.

— Glycias, chosen dictator in derision, xii. 143. Shameful peace with Corsica, 162. His punishment, ib. & n.

— M. Marcel. chosen consul, xii. 177. Kills the Gaulish king in single combat, ib. Sent against Hannibal, 223. Defends Nola, 230. Abdicates his second consulship, 234. Defeats Hannibal, 240. Third consulship, 238. Success in Sicily, 242. In Apulia, 258. Second defeat of Hannibal, 259. Defeated by him, 263. Defeats him, 264. Surprised and killed, 267.

— Pulcher, triumphs over the Salassi in spite of the senate, xii. 359. Exhibits games, 507.

— Appius, betrays the Janiculum, xii. 547, 548. A brave young patrician, killed, 567.

— the emperor, his extract, xiii. 365, 421. Why neglected at first, 605, n. Chosen consul by Caligula, xiv. 45. Despised by him, 50. Affronted by him in Gaul, 77. His character, pedigree, &c. 96, & seq. Why universally despised, 97. His learning and writings, 100, & n. Proclaimed by the soldiers, senate, &c. 107, 109. His new haven at Ostia, 116, & n. Cowardice, 112, 117, & n. Successful expedition against Britain, 121, & seq. Triumph, 124, & n. Wholesome laws, ib. Apprised of his wife's lewdness, 135. Resolves to marry another, 140, & 141, n. Marries Agrippina, 142. Inlarges the city, 145. Kindness to Caracacus, 154. Aqueduct, canal, and sea fight, 157, & seq. Omens before his death, 162, & n. Poisoned, 165. His character vindicated against Seneca, ib. & seq. Funeral honours, 167. Apotheosis, 171. His edict against the Druids, xviii. 450, n. & 451. Colony and temple in Essex, 663. Destroyed, ib. Expedition into Britain, 699. Success there, 701. Honours done to him for it, 702.

— Civilis revolts in Batavia, xiv. 418. Joined by the Caninefates, &c. 419. Dissimulation to Vespasian, ib. Resolves to shake off the Roman yoke, 421. Surprises their camp, 422, 427. Totally defeated, 428. Submits to Cerealis, and forgiven, ib.

I N D E X to the

Claudius enlarges Alexander's museum, xiv. 623.

—— Maximus, his writings and character, xiv. 674, n.

—— Pompeianus marries L. Verus's widow, xv. 17. Plots against Commodus, 56. Refuses the empire from Pertinax, 72. From Julianus, 92.

—— the emperor's cautious letter to Regillianus, xv. 231. Funeral of Gallienus, 249, 250. Proclaimed emperor, 250. His extract and rise, 251. Success against Aureolus, ib. Against the Germans, &c. 252. Letters on his signal victory, ib. Death and character, 253.

—— Appius, sent into Sicily, xvii. 221. Message to Hiero, 227. Stratagem to get to land, 228, & n. Success, 229. Defeat at sea, 274.

—— Caius, sent into Sicily, xvii. 221. Gains over the Mamertines, 222. Strengthens Messana, 225. Treachery to Hanno, ib.

—— the consul defeats Hannibal, xvii. 458. Removes his colleague, ib. Defeats Asdrubal, 461. Signal bravery against him, 462. Throws his head into Hannibal's camp, 463.

Clavi, among the Romans, what, xi. 344, n.

† Clazomene, by whom founded, v. 659. The state of, vii. 107.

Clazomenians driven out of Abdera, ix. 508.

Cleander chosen prime minister, xv. 59. His wicked administration, 60. Put to death with all his family, 63.

Cleanness, Moses's laws for it, iii. 375.

Clearchus tyrant of Heraclea's parricide and death, ix. 587.

—— rise and character, xvi. 60.

Clematius put to death for his continence, xv. 460.

Cleo, a famous robber, v. 496, & n.

Cleobulina, princess of Rhodes, her great learning, vii. 407.

Cleobulus, one of the seven wise men, vii. 407, & seq.

—— king of Sparta's contempt of Meandrus's riches, vii. 407. Success against the Achæans, viii. 480, & seq. Defeated by Antig. Dofon, 481, 482. Kind reception from Euergetes, ix. 212. Ill treated by Philopator, 214. His sad catastrophe, 215, 216.

Cleodimir's baptism and recovery, xix. 282.

Cleombrotus invades Bœotia, vi. 500, & seq. Slain, 501.

—— II. deposes and succeeds Leonidas, vi. 522. Banished, 523.

Cleomenes, king of Sparta, invades Athens, vi. 171.

—— wars with the Argives, vi. 430. Interview with Aristagoras, 432, & 437, n. & seq. n. Runs mad, 433. Kills himself, 176, 433, &c.

—— the son of Leonidas, restores the Spartan glory, vi. 527, & seq. Kills the ephori, 528. Invades Achaia, 534. Takes Argos, &c. 532. Defeated by Antigonus, 533. His sad end, 534.

—— descent into Attica, vi. 274.

Cleomenic war, the causes of, vi. 562, & n. The success of, ib. & seq.

Cleomestra, daughter of Tros, v. 542.

Cleon, the orator, sent to Sphacteria, vi. 280. Descent into Thrace, 287. Defeated and killed, ib. & 459.

Cleopatra, the common name of the Egyptian princesses, ix. 258.

—— put to death by Antigonus, viii. 398.

—— married to Ptolemy, ix. 20. Wife of Demetrius, marries Sidetes, 136. Shares Syria with Zebina, 147. Murders her own son, 149. Her death and character, 151.

—— wife of Physcon, invites Demetrius against him, & seq. ix. 145.

—— daughter of Physcon, marries Cyzicenus, ix. 152, & seq. Murdered by her sister, 153. Her coin, 171, n.

—— wife of Philometor, left regent, ix. 237. Cruelly used by Physcon, 241, & seq. Divorced, ib. Takes refuge in Syria, 244, & seq.

—— the wife of Physcon, left regent, ix. 245. Her ambition and partiality, 246, & seq. Treachery to Lathyrus, 247. Drives him out of Phœnice, 251. Murdered by her son, 252. Falsely confounded with the former, 257, n. & seq. n.

—— daughter of Lathyrus, succeeds him, ix. 257, & seq. Marries Alexander II. 259. Assassinated by him, 260.

—— daughter of Auletes, married to her brother, ix. 275. Driven out by her ministers, ib. Privately carried to Cæsar, and reenthroned by him, 279, 287, & seq. Goes to Mark Antony at Tarsus, 289. Her magnificence and profuseness, ib. & seq. Cruelty and avarice, 293, & seq. Takes the name of Isis, 296. Fatal council

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

counsel to M. Antony, 299. Treachery to him, 301, & seq. Surprized by Pro-culeius, 307. Buries M. Antony, 308. Outwits Octavian, 309, & seq. Kills herself, 310. Her character and funeral, 311, & seq. (See also vol. xiii. 79, & seq.)

Cleopatra the wife of Antiochus Pius, put to death by Tigranes, ix. 333.

——— mother of Lathyrus, opposes him in Judea, x. 212. Friendship to the Jews, 211, & seq. Caresses to Herod, 269. Intrigues against him, 284, & seq. Reception in Judea, 289. Her character, ib. & seq. Hellish plot against Herod, 290.

——— one of Herod's wives, x. 323, n. Supplants Archelaus, 398.

——— Selene married to Juba, xiii. 110, 365.

——— joins with the Triumvirs, xiii. 239. Shipwrecked, 246. Summoned by Antony, 298. Her learning, wit, &c. 299. Captivates him, 345. Goes with him into Europe, 346, & seq. Treachery to him, 357. At Actium, 351. Carried in triumph in effigy, 366.

——— her daughter made queen of Libya, xiii. 346.

Cleophes, queen of India, subdued by Alexander, viii. 292, & seq.

Cleophon assassinated at Athens, vi. 320.

Clephis chosen king, and murdered, xix. 389.

Clergy, their immunities under Constantine, xv. 377, 382, 383. Under Constantius, 435, 439, 485. Renewed by Jovian, 570. Curtailed by Valentinian, 597. Inlarged by Gratian, xvi. 17. By Honorius, 133. By Marcian, 259.

——— British, their horrid degeneracy, xix. 6, 33.

Clients, at Rome, what, xi. 294, 295.

Clinias, king of Sicyon, killed, vi. 554, n.

Clitander put to death for oppression, viii. 328, & seq.

Clitomachus's writings and character, xvi. 669.

Clitor, king of Arcadia, vi. 10.

Clodebald, the supposed elder brother of Meroue, xix. 265. Deprived by him of the crown, ib.

Clodia, married to Octavian, xii. 222, n. Divorced, 303.

Clodio, king of the Franks, xix. 239. Settles afresh in Gaul, 240. His character and reign, 259. Founds the French monarchy, ib. Why surnamed Long-haired, 260. His conquests and death, 263, & seq.

Clodius, Pub. his revenge against the king of Cyprus, vii. 509, & seq. Unjust decree against that kingdom, ix. 263. Raises a mutiny against Lucullus, 343. Lewdness and sacrilege, xii. 642, & seq. Courted by Pompey, 646. Chosen tribune, xiii. 6. Cabals against Cicero, ib. & seq. Banishes him, 10. Opposes his recall, 15, & seq. How killed by Milo, 27, & seq.

Clodomir's success against Sigismond, xix. 316. Defeated and killed, 317.

Clondicus, who, viii. 509. Outwitted by Perseus, ib. & seq.

Clothildis. See Chlothildis, xix. 277.

Clovis, Clodoveus, king of the Franks, xix. 240. Fixes his seat at Paris, ib. His birth, 275. Dominions and conquests, 276. Stratagems to gain Chlothildis, 277. Defeats the Alemans, 279. His conversion and baptism, 281. When, 282. The first christian king, ib. Wars with the Burgundi, 285. Defeats them, 287, & seq. Falls out with Alaric, 289. Interview with him, 293. Defeats and kills him, 294. Zeal for the catholics, 295. Conquests, ib. & seq. Peace with Theodoric, 297. Made consul by Anastasius, ib. Treachery to Sigebert, and his son, 299. Proclaimed king, 300. Seizes on their dominions, 301. Dethrones and murders Chararic, and his son, 302. And some other princes, 303. His death and progeny, 304. Division of his kingdom, ibid.

——— success against Theodoric, xvi. 300.

Cluentius defeated and killed by Sylla, xii. 526.

Cluilius, king of Alba, outwitted by Tullus, xi. 322. His sudden death, 323.

† Clupea, taken and evacuated by the Romans, xii. 122, 129. Where sited, xvi. 577. xvii. 253.

† Clypsedra, the foundation of, at Athens, xiii. 325, n.

Clyppeii, at Rome, what, xiii. 595, n.

Clysthenes, head of the Acmonian faction, banished, vi. 171.

Clytemnestra, her fabulous birth, v. 58, n. Agamemnon's wife, v. 632. Killed by Orestes, ib.

Clytus, killed by Alexander, viii. 267, & seq. & n.

I N D E X to the

- Cneii, at Rome, who; xiii. 163.
 Cneius, Pompey's son, hindred from killing Cicero, xiii. 86. Joins Cato at Utica, 90.
 Cneph, the architect of the world, according to the Egyptians, i. 100. How represented, ibid.
 Cnidians, enfranchised by Cæsar, xiii. 74.
 † Cnidus, whether in Cyprus or no, vii. 488, & seq.
 Cniva, a Bathian prince, xix. 48. Success and ravages in Thrace, 121, 122. The murderer of Decius, ibid.
 Cnixus, a Gaulish slave defeated and killed, xii. 617.
 † Coa's stuffs described, vii. 568.
 Coans, their government, kings, wars, &c. vii. 569.
 Cocab, the Cavades of the Persians, his treason, reign, and death, xi. 213, & seq.
 Cocalus, king of Sicily, murders Minos, vii. 162, 163.
 † Cocas, the famed mountain of, ix. 616.
 Cocceius, Nerva, accompanies Tiberius, xiii. 654. Starves himself to death, xiv. 35, 16.
 Code of Justinian, xvi. 224, 317. Of Theodosius, ib. Gives way to a second, 318.
 † Codropolis, where situate, xiii. 370, n.
 Codrus sacrifices his life for his country, v. 657, 658.
 — funeral of Pompey the great, xiii. 76, & n.
 † Cælo-Syria, the same with Syria Caya, ii. 264. Reduced by Alexander, viii. 184, & seq.
 † Cælius, mount, whence so called, xi. 302.
 † Cœnacula, at Rome, described, xi. 296.
 † Cœnina, where situate, xi. 301, n.
 — taken by Romulus, ib.
 † Cœnomanes settle in Italy, xi. 576, & xviii. 544.
 Cœnus, king of Macedon, viii. 45.
 — wounded at Guagamela, viii. 214, & seq. Made commander of Bactria, 282. Defeats the rebels there, 283. Speech in behalf of the soldiers, 308, & seq. His death, 313, n.
 Coes, why made king of Lesbos, vii. 556. And stoned, ib.
 Cognomen, among the Romans, what, xi. 334, n.
 Cohorts, their division and office, xiii. 373. How regulated by Adrian, xiv. 644.
 Their different stations in Britain, xviii. 679.
 † Coimbra, taken and plundered by the Suevi, xix. 165, 232, 233.
 Coin, first invented by the Lydians, v. 576. And of iron by the Spartans, v. 392. Where first made, vi. 635.
 — of Macedon, viii. 35. Of Syria, ix. 165, n. & seq. n. When first coined at Rome, xi. 361. How ordered, xiii. 494, & n. False coiners severely punished, xv. 267.
 Colæus's fortunate voyage to Thessaly, vii. 518.
 † Colchi, whether the Cassluhim of Moses, ii. 228, n. Tributary to Persia, v. 29.
 Colchian war begun, xi. 137, & seq. Ended, 144.
 † Colchis, an Egyptian colony, ii. 39. Part of Scythia, v. 441. Described, ix. 602. Its origin, kings, &c. 604. Gold mines, 605. Subdued by Mithridates, 606. Submits to Trajan, xiv. 580.
 † Collatia, taken by Tarquin, xi. 340. Collatinus, whence so called, xi. 340. Defeated, 343.
 — chosen consul, 343. Partiality to the conspirators, 387, 390, 391, & n. Deposed, ib.
 † Collipo, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 328.
 † Collops magnus, its ruins, xvii. 546.
 † — parvus, ditto, xvii. 546.
 † Colonia, the strongest city in Armenia, ix. 316.
 — whence called Agrippina, xiv. 147. Declares for Viteilius, 335. Taken by the Franks, xv. 473. Retrieved by Julian, 475.
 † — Cologn, the metropolis of the Ubii, xviii. 576.
 — taken by the Franks, xix. 251. By Julian, 252. By Clodio, 264. Destroyed by the Alemans, 326.
 † Colophon, by whom founded, v. 659. The state of, vii. 109. Described, ix. 37.
 † Colosse, a city in Phrygia, v. 496. Colossus of Rhodes described, vii. 400, & seq. Overturned, 401. Its weight, ib. Destroyed by the Saracens, xvi. 345.
 Colour of white and black men, how accounted for, i. 173, & seq.
 † Colpas, a river in Bithynia, ix. 591.
 Colpias, a wind, and his wife Beau, the parents of the first men, i. 170, & n.
 † Colpitis, Phœnice, whence so named, ii. 328, & n.
 † Colu-

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Colubraria, island, described, xviii. 352.
 † Columns of Hermes, in Egypt, i. 589.
 † Comana, a city in Pontus, ix. 372, 373. In Cappadocia, 458.
 Combabus, the founder of the priests of the Syrian goddess; his story, ii. 292.
 Combats, single, an antient way of deciding, v. 638.
 Comes domesticorum, his office, xv. 224.
 Comet, the traject of one supposed to have caused the flood, i. 292, & n.
 — two large ones at the birth of Mithridates, ix. 385, & n.
 — one in Nero's reign, xiv. 204.
 Under Theodosius, xvi. 86.
 — under Constantine, xvi. 367.
 Under Ducas, 459.
 † Cominium, taken by the Romans, xii. 70.
 Cominus defeats the Volsci, xi. 435.
 Generosity to Cai. Coriol. 436.
 — Pontius, swims down the Tiber to the capitol, xi. 582.
 Comites, their office, xv. 423.
 — Britanniarum, ditto, xviii. 678.
 Extensive power, 681.
 Comitium, whence so called, xi. 306, & n.
 Comitus, made king of the Atrebates, xviii. 687. Imprisoned, 689.
 † Commagene, part of Syria, ii. 263. The kingdom of, described, ix. 644, & seq. Subdued by the Romans, 645. Restored to Antiochus, xiv. 46.
 Commandments. See Decalogue, ii. 615, 616, & n.
 Commentariensis, a goaler, his office, xviii. 677.
 Commentiolus's success against the Persians, xvi. 326. Put to death by Phocas, 330, 333. See also vol. xi. 153, 161.
 Commerce, the origin of, after the flood, i. 482, & seq.
 † Commodiana Colonia, Rome whence so called, xv. 66.
 Commodianus's writings and character, xv. 430, n.
 Commodus, L. Ver. See under Verus, xiv. 638, & seq.
 — the emperor born, xv. 4. Created Cæsar, 11. Takes the manly robe, 72. Tribuneship, 35. Legitimacy doubtful, 36, 52. Consulship, 38. Marries Crispina, 39. His character and bloody reign, 52. Herculean feats, 53. Rapines, 54. Peace with the Marcomani, &c. 55. Triumph, ibid. Takes the name of Pius, ib.

Britannicus, 56. Escapes being murdered, 57. His cruel prosecutions, 58. Retires to Laurentum, 61. Assaulted in his palace, 63. New butcheries, 64. Mad exploits, 65. Changes the names of the months, 66. Conspired against, 67. Strangled, 68. Burial, ib. His good deeds, 69. Catamites sold to Pertinax, 76. Letter to Albinus in Britain, 85, n. Deified by Severus, 108.
 Comneni, their residence at Trapezus, ix. 375. Their family, xviii. 311, & 312, n. Emperors of Trapezond, 315. Butchered by Mohammed II. 322.
 Comnenus, Isaac, chosen emperor, xvi. 455. Defeats Stratonicus, 456. Crowned, 457. Resigns, 458.
 — Alexius's success against Rufetius, xvi. 465. Stratagem against Bryennius, 466. Against Basilicus, 467. Crowned emperor, 469. Doth penance, ib. Peace with the Turks, 470. Defeated by Guiscard, 471. By the Scythians, 474. Signal victory over them, ib. Peace with them, 477. Jealousy of the crusaders, 479. Treachery to them, 482. Success against the Turks, 483. Quarrel with Bohemond, ib. Peace with them, 484. Death and character, 485.
 — John, his son, proclaimed, xvi. 485. His singular character: ib. Victory and peace with the Turks, ib. Success against sundry barbarians, 486. Reduces some provinces, 487. Impious attempt upon Antioch, ib. Death and character, ib. & seq.
 — Alexius II. See Alexius, xvi. 491.
 Companies, Roman, erected by Numa, xi. 318.
 Compitales Dii, who, xi. 357.
 Compositus's revolt and death, xix. 525, n.
 Compfa surrenders to Hannibal, xvii. 391.
 † Comum taken by the Romans, xii. 178. The place of Pliny's birth, xiv. 604, n. His benefactions to it, ib.
 Conacorex betrays Heraclea to the Romans, ix. 426.
 † Concord, the temple of, why, and where built, xi. 619. A monument of Opimius's cruelty, xii. 418. Repaired by Tiberius, xiii. 426.
 Concositanus invades Rome, xii. 172, &c. Taken prisoner, 174.
 Concubines suppressed by Constantine, xv. 393.
 Confidius repulses Cæsar from Adrumentum, xiii. 92.

Confidius Proculus put to death, xiv. 12.
 Confusion of Tongues. Vid. Tongues, i. 412.
 Congiaria, among the Romans, what, xi. 338.
 † Conimbrica, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 328.
 Conon succeeds Alcibiades, vi. 319. His success again the Spartans, v. 181. vi. 320. Engages Persia on the side of the Athenians, 336. Rebuilds Athens, 337. Defeated by Lysander, 470. Accused before Artaxerxes, v. 183. Condemned, ibid.
 — the Samian, his character, vii. 532.
 — the inventor of Berenices coma, ix. 606, 607.
 — Meridoc, comes into Britany, xvi. 55.
 — bishop, his bravery against the Romans, xvi. 296. Slain ib.
 Cononeus, the betrayer of Tarentum, xvii. 428.
 † Conovium, Conway, the antient ruins of, xviii. 667.
 Constantia, the daughter of Constantius, xv. 334. Married to Licinius, 335, 382.
 — the daughter of Constantine, born, xv. 351. When converted, 370.
 — daughter of Constantius, born, xv. 507. Her narrow escape, 605.
 Constantianus's rise and death, xv. 587.
 Constantina, the widow of Annibalianus, xv. 445. Married to Gallus, 447. Instigates him by her pride and cruelty, 460, 464. Dies in her way to Italy, 465.
 — the widow of Mauritius, racked, and executed, xvi. 332, & seq.
 — the city of, converted, xv. 410.
 † — Numidia, where sited, xvii. 545. Described, ib.
 Constantine, the family of, xv. 251, 234.
 — the emperor, when and where born, xv. 334. Speech on Dioclesian's abdication, 314. Censure of Porphyry, 329, n. Excellent character, 341. Why hated by Galerius, 343. Outwits him, 345. Joins his father in Gaul, ib. Proclaimed emperor, 346. Severity to the Franks, 348. Bridge over the Rhine, 349. Allies with Maximian, 350. Betrayed by him, 356. Forced to put him to death, 358. Whence surnamed Maximus, 360. Marches against Maxentius, 366, 370. Miraculous conversion, 367, &c. Instructed in the christian religion, 369. Success against Maxentius, 372. Singular dream and victory, 373. Mildness to the Maxentians, 374. Triumphal arch and honours, 376.

Stops the persecution, ib. Cycle called indication, 378. Whence intitled Franciscus, ib. Rescript in favour of the clergy 383. Against schismatics, 384. Defeats Licinius, 389. Makes peace with him, ib. His laws in Greece, 390, 392. Success against the Sarmatians, 394. Against Licinius, 396. Grants him a new peace in Asia, 397. Defeats and puts him to death, 398. Edict in favour of the christians, 399. Against idolatry, 400. Heretics, 401. At Nicomedia, ib. & seq. Insulted at Rome, 402. Severity to Crispus and others, ib. & 403. Fatal to his whole family, 404. Bridge over the Danube, 405. Favours the Arians, ib. Largesses to Constantinople, ib. & seq. Defeats the Goths, &c. 404, 408. Generosity to Antioch, &c. ib. Translation of the holy Scriptures, 410. Partiality to the Arians, 411. Division of the empire, ib. Wars with the Persians, 413. Last sickness, ib. By whom baptized, ib. Death, 414. Last will put into bad hands, ib. Stately mausoleum, 416. And high encomiums, 417. Vindicated, ib. & seq. Wholesome regulations, 420, & seq. Writings, 425, n. The end of his family, 432, & seq.

Constantine II. born, xv. 351. Created Cæsar, 391. Share of the empire, 411. Proclaimed, 431. Title of Augustus, ib. Invades Constans, 433. Defeated and killed, 434.

— III. chosen emperor in Britain, xvi. 63. Success in Gaul, 164. In Spain, 165. Repulsed out of Italy, 186, Besieged in Arles, 188. Surrenders, and beheaded, 189.

— IV. the son of Heraclius, made Cæsar, xvi. 336. Meets his father's triumph, 341. Crowned and poisoned, 344.

— V. the son of Constans, proclaimed, xvi. 347. Why surnamed Pogonatus, 348. Jealous of his two brothers, ib. & seq. Makes peace with Mahuvias, 349. With the Bulgarians, ib. Calls a council, ib. Dies, 350.

— VI. Cropronymus, born, xvi. 359. Why so called, ib. Proclaimed, 360. Marries Irene, 364. Deposed, ib. His revenge, 365. Success against the Saracens, ib. & seq. Stopped by public calamities, 366. Invaded by the Bulgarians, ib. Persecutes image-worshippers and friars, 367. Outwitted by the Bulgarian king, ib. His death, &c. 368.

— VII. the son of Leo by Irene, made his colleague, xvi. 369. Crowned, 370. Conspired

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Conspired against, 370. Confined by his mother, 372. Restored, and deposes her, ib. Cruelty to Nicephorus, and his friends, 373. To the mutinous Armenians, ib. Divorces Mary to marry Theodota, ib. Noble answer to Cordanes, 374. Flight and death, ib. & seq.

Constantine VIII. the son of Michael, his Cæsarship and death, xvi. 400, 401.

IX. the son of Leo, born, xvi. 404. Kept under by Romanus, 408, 413. Resumes his power, 415. Severity to him and his family, ib. Death, 417.

X. the brother of Basilus, made his colleague, xvi. 423. Sole emperor after his death, 439. His wicked reign, ib. & seq. Death, 440.

XI. Monomachus, marries Zoe, xvi. 448. Crowned, ib. Success against the Saracens, ib. Against the Turks, 452. Death, 454.

XII. Ducas, chosen emperor, xvi. 458. His fatal avarice and death, 459.

XIII. Paleologus. See Paleologus, xvi. 546.

Atilius's general, cut off in Afric, xvi. 177.

the son of Andronicus, his narrow escape, xvi. 407. Timely warned by Leo, ib. His treason and death, 410.

Leo's high chamberlain, xvi. 407. Swears the Romans before the holy cross, 411. Poisoned by Romanus, 417. His character, ib. & seq.

the son of Andronic. Paleol. sent against his rebellious grandson, xvi. 527. Kept prisoner by him, 528.

the son of king Arthuf, xix. 30. His wicked reign, 32.

† Constantine's square burnt, xvi. 297.

† Constantinople, when begun, xv. 405. Dedicated ib. Why built by Constantine, ib. & seq. How adorned, 406, 407. Consecrated, ib. Governed ib. & 491. Beautified by Constantius, 510. By Julian, 535. In danger from the Goths, xvi. 122. Threatened with a fiery sky, 130. Shattered by an earthquake, 150. The great church of it, burnt, 158. In a tumult for want of corn, 181. Surrounded with new walls, 193. Burnt by a three days fire, 222. Damaged by an earthquake, 234. By a six days fire, 273. The city and library burnt, 287. In a tumult through various factions, 308. Thirty thousand persons killed in it, 309. Laid waste by pestilence and the Hunns, 315. Besieged by the Saracens, 348. Surprised by Justinian, 354. Taken by Theodosius, 357. Noble defence against the Saracens, 358. Damaged by an earthquake, 365. Taken and plundered, ib. Both seas of it frozen, 367. Damaged by a great fire, 372. And earthquake, ib. Plundered and ravaged, 468. Besieged by Alexius, 501. Set on fire, 502. Besieged by the Latins, 504. Taken and plundered, ib. Retaken by the Greeks, 515. Rebuilt, 517. Besieged by Bajazet, 541, & seq. Relieved, 542. Blockaded by Mohammed II. 547. Besieged, 548. Taken, and put to the sword, 554. Made the capital of the Turkish empire, 555.

Constans I. the son of Constantine, born, xv. 351. Made Cæsar, 399, 408. His share of the empire, 411. Proclaimed, 431. Styled Augustus, ib. Defeats and kills his brother, 433, 434. Marches against the Franks, ib. And Scots, 435. His zeal for orthodoxy, 437. Murdered, 441. His character vindicated, 442, & seq.

II. the son of the British Constantine, made Cæsar, xvi. 165. Conquers Spain, 166. Driven out of it, 180. Chosen consul, 193. Married to Placidia, 199.

III. the grandson of Heraclius, crowned, xvi. 165. Great disasters during his reign, ib. Promotes Monethelism, ib. Defeated at sea, 346. Wars against the Sclavi, ib. & seq. Peace with the Saracens, ib. Fratricide, ib. Dismal condition since, ib. Extortions and death, 347.

why he invaded Italy, xix. 539. Repulsed before Benevento, 540. Other defeats, 541. Enters Rome, 542.

Constantius Chlorus made Cæsar by Maximian, xv. 298. His share of the empire, ib. Success in Gaul, 301. Buildings and works there, 302. Sails into Britain, 303. Up the Thames, 304. Success against the Alemans, 309. Declared emperor, 315. His extract, 330. Rise and character, 331, 332. Generous way of raising money, ib. Protects the christians, 333. Discards the apostates, 334. New share of the empire, 343. Success against the Britains, 345. Death and obsequies, 346.

the son of Constantine, xv. 351, 392. His share of the empire, 411. Marries his uncle's daughter, 412. Made executor to his father, 414. Performs his obsequies, 416. Proclaimed, 431. Whether the murderer of his relations, ib. Wars with the Armenians, 433. Yields Constantine's share to Constans, 434. Triumphs over the Persians, 435. Marches against Maxentius, 445. Artful speech to his army, 446. Success, 449. Pity and clemency to the Maxentians, 451. Enters Italy, ib. Affection for Eusebia, 453. Success against Magnentius, 455. Clemency to the revolted, 457. Contradicted by other authors, ib. Hates the orthodox, 459. Success against the Alemans, 461. Enters Italy, 462. Design against Gallus frustrated, 463. Puts him to death, 467. His abominable pride, 468. Success against the Germans, 469. Directions to Julian, when made Cæsar, 474. Success in Rhetia, 475. Grand entry into Rome, 478. Takes the honour of Julian's victories, 483. Answer to Sapor's haughty letter, 485. Success and cruelties in Sarmatia, 486. Marches against Sapor, 496. Policy and menaces against Julian, 497. Stirs up the Germans against him, 505. Marries Faustina, 507. His death, baptism, &c. 508. Library at Constantinople, 510.

I N D E X to the

Constantius Julius, the son of Chlorus, his death, xv. 334.

—— the brother of Constantine, xv. 412. Made a patrician, 423. Murdered by the foldiers, 431.

—— Theodosius's general, his character and success against Constantine, xvi. 187. Succeeds him, ib. & 188. Chosen consul, 193. Baffles Atulphius, 194. Raised to the purple, 201. His death, ib.

—— the Gaul, crucified by Attila, xix. 61.

Consulars, among the Romans, their office, xv. 421.

Consulate shortened to three months, xiv. 563.

Consuls, when first chosen at Rome, xi. 379. Their office, dress, &c. ib. & 380, n. Oath against the Tarquins, 383. Suppressed by the decemvirs, 521, & seq. Restored, 540, 574. When first chosen from the plebeians, 619.

—— in Italy, their office, &c. xix. 595, & n.

Consulships, reckoning by, abolished, xvi. 310. Restored by Justin II. ib.

Contracts, how made among the Scythians, v. 453.

Cooks, at Rome, reduced by Julian, xv. 532.

Coon, the son of Antenor, killed, v. 544.

Coos confederates against Athens, vi. 348.

† Copais, the spring-head of the Asopus, v. 641. Described, 661. vii. 92, n.

Coptic letters, whether the modern be the same with the old Egyptian, i. 593, 594, & n. The Coptic alphabet, 596. Tongue, how compounded, 597. Different from all other known ones, ib.

† Coptos, an antient city of Thebais, i. 488. The residence of the antient Egyptians, ib. Destroyed, xv. 305.

† Corax, a river in Colchis, ix. 603.

Corban, the offerings of living creatures, why so called, iii. 232, n.

Corbulo sent to quiet Armenia, ix. 357. His severe discipline, 358, & seq. Success against Tiridates, 360, & seq. Interview with him, 364.

—— Domitius, his success against Volgeses, xi. 63, & seq.

† Corcyra island described, vii. 627, & seq. Invaded by the Corinthians, vi. 254. The dreadful sedition of, 275, 281, & seq.

† —— the metropolis of the island, vii. 627. Betrayed to the Romans, xii. 168. Taken by Manuel, xvi. 489.

† Corcyreans, a colony of Corinth, vi. 253. War with the Epidamnians, ib. & seq. Treachery to the Spartans, &c. ib. Their government, navigation, &c. vii. 628. Treachery to the Greeks, ib. Protected by the Samians, 520. War with the Corinthians, viii. 61.

† Corduba, a city in antient Spain, xviii. 336.

† Corfinium made the capital of the Marsi, xii. 519. Of the Peligni, xiii. 41. Surrendered to Cæsar, 43.

† Corinth, the kingdom of, part of antient Greece, v. 604. Described, vi. 34. When and by whom founded, 39. Subdued by the Heraclidæ, ib. The whole duration of it, 41, & seq.

† —— the city of, by whom built, vi. 34. Why so called, ib. And Heliopolis, 35. Described, 36. Its situation, opulence, and buildings, ib. & seq. Besieged by Agésilas, 493. Surprised by Aratus, 555. Accedes to the Achæan league, ib. & seq. Taken and burnt by the Romans, 669, & seq. Burnt by the Heruli, xv. 247. Damaged by an earthquake, xvi. 304. In great joy at Timoleon's victory, xvii. 143.

† —— the citadel of taken by Gonatus, viii. 476. By Aratus, 477. See also Acrocorinth.

Corinthian order, whence, vi. 37.

—— metal, what, vi. 669, & n.

† Corinthians given to traffick, vi. 36, 38. Their character, antiquity, and government, ib. & seq. Kings, ib. & seq. Subdued by the Doræ, 45. Invade Corcyra, 254. Engage them at sea, 255. Their politic treatment of their prisoners, 276, & seq. Reject the Nicean peace, 287. Joins with the Achæans, 555, & seq. Affront the Roman deputies, 661. Subdued and sold for slaves, 669, & seq.

Corinthians

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Corinthians restore liberty to Syracuse, vii. 293. War with the Samians, why, 520. With the Corcyreans, viii. 61. Their noble defence of Syracuse, xvii. 121. And of its citadel, 129. Take Acradina, 130. Corinthus, whose son he was, vi. 35, & n.

Coriolanus's bravery, xi. 435, 436. Defeats the Antiates, 436. Falls out with the tribunes, 439. Speech to the Curiae, 440. Condemned to death, ib. & 441. His noble defence, 444. Banished, 445, & seq. Goes to the Volsci, 446. Stratagem and revenge, 447. Answer to the deputies, 450. To the priests, 451. To his mother, 454. Accused by Attius, 455. His death, ib. & seq.

Corioli defeated by the Romans, xi. 436.

† Coritani, who, and where sited, xviii. 664.

Coritus, king of Samothrace, v. 537, 538, n.

—— his offspring, xi. 276.

† Cornavii, who, and where sited, xviii. 664.

Cornelia refuses Physcon's offers, ix. 232.

—— a poisoner, put to death, xii. 5.

—— the mother of Gracchus, incites him to sedition, xii. 376. Her two letters to Caius, 398, 399, n.

—— Julia Paula, married to Heliogabalus, xv. 150. Her excellent character, ibid.

Cornelius Cethegus cabals against Marcellus, vii. 390. Subdues the rest of Sicily, 392.

—— a centurion, converted by St. Peter, x. 549.

—— Malagin. defeats the Æqui, xi. 504.

—— Arvina, chosen consul, xi. 646. Hemmed in by the Samnites, 649. Defeats them, 650. Second consulship, xii. 46. Kills thirty thousand Samnites, 47.

—— Barbatus, chosen dictator, xii. 48.

—— Scipio. See under Scipio, xii. 54, & seq.

—— Lentulus triumphs over the Lusitanians, xii. 90. Over the Gauls, 161.

—— Asina, his success in Sicily, xii. 130. Triumph, 132.

—— prætor of Sardinia, dies of the plague, xii. 164.

—— Tiber. Coruncian. a plebeian, chosen consul, xii. 88. And pontifex maximus, 133. Degrades thirteen lewd senators, ibid.

Cornicularii, in Britain, their office, xviii. 677.

† Corniculum taken by Tarquin, xi. 340.

† Cornwall, made part of the West-Saxon kingdom, xix. 28.

† Coromæa plundered by the Romans, vii. 43, 93.

Coronas Silicius stands alone in Brutus's defence, xiii. 216. Assassinated by Octavian, ib.

Correctors, at Rome, their office, xv. 421.

† Corfica conquered by the Romans, xii. 117. Revolts, 162. Reduced by Varus, ib. Made a Roman province, 167.

—— when invaded by the Carthaginians, xvii. 27. Described, ib. Reduced by Scipio, 245, 246.

† Cortona, and other leucumones, make truce with Rome, xii. 41.

† Cortuosa taken and demolished, xi. 591.

Corvilius's success against Samnium, xii. 67.

—— Maxim. quite subdues it, xii. 91.

Corvus, a warlike engine, by whom invented, xii. 112. Described, ib. &c. See also xvii. 240, & n. Whether different from the manus ferreæ, ib.

† Corybantes, whence sprung, v. 507, 508, n. Among the Phœnicians, who, xvi. 636.

Corybas, the son of Cybele by Jasius, 508, n. Goes into Phrygia, vii. 626.

Corycus, the naval fight of, ix. 30.

† Cos, island, described, vii. 568. Taken by Nicander, 553. Subdued by Mithridates, 570. By the Romans, ib.

† —— metropolis, described, vii. 568. Overthrown, vi. 569. Repaired by Antoninus, ib. xiv. 671.

† Consentia surrenders to Hannibal, xvii. 408. Revolts to the Romans, 428.

Cosis, prince of Albania, killed by Pompey, ix. 614.

Cosmi, in Crete, their office, vii. 480.

Cosmogony of the Phœnicians, Egyptians, &c. See under their respective names.

Cosrhoes, king of Parthia, his success in Armenia, xi. 65. Driven out by Trajan, 66, & seq. Recalled by the Parthians, 67.

—— a great favourer of the Caraites, x. 378, n.

—— invaded by Trajan, xiv. 577. Submits, 582. Gives him the slip, 586. His golden throne seized by him, ib. Recalled by Adrian, 614.

I N D E X to the Cosphoes, invades Syria, xvi. 310. Destroys Antioch, ib. Makes peace with Justinian, 311. Treachery to him, ib. Repulsed by Belisarius, 312. Before Edeffa, ib. Truce with Rome, 314. Sues for peace, 315. Renews the war, 321. New truce made and broken, 322, & seq. Defeated, and breaks his heart, ib. & 323.

—— the son of Hormisdas, forced to depose him, xvi. 327. Driven from the kingdom, ib. Restored by Mauritius, ib. Wars against Phocas, 331. Devastations in Syria, 333. In Cappadocia, &c. 335. In Egypt, Palestine, &c. 336. Blasphemous answer to Heraclius, ib. Defeated by him, 338. Bloody revenge on the Christians, 339. Deposed and murdered, 340.

† Cossa, why forsaken by its inhabitants, xvi. 209, n.

Cossians, why subdued by Alexander, viii. 338.

Cossus, Cornel. kills Tolumnius, xi. 550. Chosen consul, 553. General of horse, ib. Consul, 554. Dictator, 561. Defeats the Volsci, 596.

—— his singular secrecy, xiv. 16.

† Cossyra, island, described, xvi. 586, n.

† Cossyrus taken by Servilius, xvii. 379.

Costobares put to death by Herod, x. 299.

† Cotes, promontory, where, xviii. 35.

† —— port, xviii. 16.

† Cothon, one of the three parts of Carthage, xvi. 567. Its etymon, 568.

Cotta's ill success against Mithridates, ix. 413, & seq. (xii. 613.) Against Heraclea, ix. 426. Returns to Rome, 427. Successful consulate, xii. 423. Pleads for Dolabella, 602. Law in favour of the tribunes, 606. Made proprætor of Sardinia, xiii. 39. Driven out by the Caralitani, 44. Proposes making Cæsar king, 137.

—— Messalinus's trial, xiv. 5, & n. Pardoned by Tiberius, ib.

† Cotta, mount, in Mauritania, xviii. 25.

† Cottius, the kingdom of, where situate, xi. 255.

—— M. Jul. advanced by Claudius, xiv. 124.

Cotys, second king of Lydia, v. 578.

—— I. king of the Odryssæ, assassinated, ix. 519.

Cotys II. joins the Persians against Macedon, ix. 520. viii. 500.

—— III. allies with the Romans, ix. 521.

—— IV. made king by Brutus, ix. 521.

—— V. murdered by his brother, ix. 522.

—— king of the Sapæi, ix. 524. Murdered, 525.

—— king of Thrace, made king of Arabia, xiv. 71.

† Coviast castle, its noble defence against the Goths, xix. 162.

Council of Arles, xv. 388. Of Nice, 401. Of Tyre, 411. Of Jerusalem, ib. Of Sardica, 436. Second of Arles, 459. Of Milan, 469. Of Constantinople, xvi. 45. Of Ephesus, 220. Of Chalcedon, 252. Of Constantinople, 349. Second of Nice, 377. Of Clermont, decrees the holy war, 396. Of Lyons, 518. Of Florence, unites the Greek and Latin churches, 545.

Counts, whence derived, xv. 224. Of Africa, their origin, xiv. 71.

—— In Italy, their origin, &c. xix. 595.

Cousin Germans forbid to intermarry, xvi. 63. That law, when put into the code, ib.

† Coway stakes, whence so called, xviii. 660.

Cowardice, how punished by the Athenians, vi. 122.

Cozbi, a Midianitish princess, killed by Phineas, ii. 140.

Cranaus, king of Athens dethroned, 645.

Crassus defeated and killed in Pergamus, ix. 501, 502.

—— succeeds Gabinius in Judea, x. 246. Plunders the temple, 248. Sent into Syria, xi. 15, 17. His motley character, ib. & seq. Invades Parthia, 18. Extortions and sacrilege in Syria, 20, & seq. Answer to the Parthian ambassadors, 21. March through Mesopotamia, 24. Betrayed by Abgarus, 25. Becomes infatuated, 26. Defeated by the Parthians, 27, & seq. Retires into Carrhæ, 33. Betrayed to Surenas, ib. & seq. His death, 36.

—— his son accompanies him into Parthia, xi. 19. Defeated and killed, 28, 29.

—— Licinius impeaches Papyr. Carbo xii. 423, & seq. A severe judge, 429. See the rest under Licinius, 512, & seq.

Crassus

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Craffus Pub. Marc. murdered, xii. 551.
 — M. defeats the Samnites, and saves Rome, xii. 569.

—— Licin, sent against the Spartans, xii. 618. Kills twenty-two thousand rebels, ib. Defeats and kills Spartacus, and forty thousand rebels, 619. Falls out with Pompey, ib. & seq. Disbands his army, 621. His profuse popularity, ib. &c. Favours Catiline's conspiracy, 630. Strives to clear himself, 633, n. Accused by L. Tarquin, 636. His immense riches, 645. Security for Cæsar, 647. Reconciled to Pompey, 648. Chosen consul with him, xiii. 19, 20. Passes into Asia, 23. Defeated and killed, 26.

—— the son of the triumvir, his friendship to Cicero, xiii. 7. Success against the Veneti, &c. 18, & n.

—— Frugi put to death by Messalina, xiv. 127.

—— his conspiracy against Nerva, xiv. 552. Banished, ib.

—— against Trajan, xiv. 576. Banished, and put to death, xv. 64.

Craffinus's bravery at Pharsalia, xiii. 65. Honourable funeral, 68.

Carterus, protector after Alexander's death, viii. 358. Sent against Eumenes, 368. Defeated and killed, 369.

—— assists Antipater, viii. 426. His death, 430.

—— treason against Archelaus, viii. 70. Defeats the Massagetes, 282. And other rebels, 289. Made governor of Andaca, 281.

—— defeated in Crete, xvi. 388. Crucified, ib.

Crates's kind reception of Cantacusen, xvi. 536. Falls out with him, 538.

Cratesiclea queen of Sparta's signal love to her country, vi. 528, 532, & seq.

Cratesipolis, her conduct and bravery, viii. 447.

Cratippus's interview with routed Pompey, xiii. 72.

Cratimandua's treachery to Caractacus, xviii. 704. Dethroned, ib.

Creation, the true notion of, i. 75. Moses's account of, explained, 160. Of man, 165, & seq. The time and season, 174. Whether complete in six days, ib. &c.

† Crecaanford, the battle of, xix. 18.

Creditors, their power on their debtors clipped, xii. 11. Hard laws against, revived, 78, & seq.

† Cremona, given to the disbanded Romans, xiii. 301. Set on fire by Primus, 392. Surrendered to him, ib. Plundered and burnt, 393. When founded, ib. n. Rebuilt, 394.

Cremona the battle of, xiv. 389.

Creon, prince of Thebes, his cruelty to his niece, v. 671. The same with Glaucus, vi. 42, & n.

—— the first annual archon at Athens, vi. 90.

Cres, one of the Curetes, vii. 468, n. King of Crete, 470.

Cresphontes, made king of Mycene, v. 638. Murdered by his nobles, 639.

Cret, the son of Jupiter, from whom Crete, v. 432.

—— Cretan historian's account of him, v. 432.

—— laws and polity, vi. 380.

† Cretan sea, the isles of, vii. 571.

† Cretans, whence, vii. 464, & seq. Their colonies, 467. Government, kings, &c. ib. & seq. Come into Sicily, 160, 474. Their laws, 475, & seq. Degeneracy, 477. Reduced into a commonwealth, 480. Their civil war, ib. Enslaved by the Romans, 481, & seq.

† Crete island, described, vii. 438, & seq. By whom first inhabited, 464. The kings of, 468, & seq. & n. Subdued by the Romans, 481, & seq. Whence called Candia, xvi. 387. Recovered by the Romans, 418.

Cretes, king of Crete, vii. 467.

Creteus, king of Crete, vii. 468. Killed, ib.

Criasus, king of Argos, v. 622.

Criminals executed out of Jerusalem, x. 509, n. How buried, 518. A terrible fight of them exhibited at Berytus, 559, n.

—— at Rome condemned to the mines, xv. 402. Released at the feast of Easter, xvi. 43. Condemned to death, respited for thirty days, 46.

Crispina married to Commodus, xv. 39. Banished and murdered, 57.

Crispinilla, one of Nero's bawds, xiv. 315. Her plot to furnish Rome, ib.

Crispinus, Ruf. turned out by Agrippina, xiv. 148. Put to death by Nero, 257.

—— a centurion murders Capito, xiv. 316. Put to death, 336.

—— Varius, the innocent cause of a sedition, xiv. 344. And of his own death, ib.

Crispinus, Tullius, made prætor of the guards, xv. 82. Sent to assassinate Severus, 92. Cut in pieces, ib.

—— noble defence of Aquileia, xv. 197. Crispinus,

I N D E X to the Crispinus, Quinct. diverted from besieging Locri, xvii. 455. Defeat and escape, 456.

Crispus, Marc. joins Cassius in Syria, xiii. 210.

—— the father of Claudia, xv. 251.

—— the son of Constantine, born, xv. 342. Made Cæsar, 391. His character, ib. Defeats the Franks, 393. And Licinius at sea, 397. Falsely accused by Fausta, 397. Put to death, 402.

Critias, one of the thirty tyrants of Athens, vi. 323. His treachery to Teramantes, ib. To Alcibiades, 328, n.

Critolaus inflames the Achæans against Rome, vi. 659, & seq. Declares war against it, 663. Defeated and killed, ib.

† Crobosi, a people of Thrace, ix. 523.

Crocodiles described, i. 500, 501. Where found, ib. Why worshipped by the Egyptians, 562, 563. How taken, 500.

—— of India lead Alexander into a wild notion about the Nile, viii. 312, n.

—— a large one mistaken for a monstrous serpent, xii. 123. First fought on the Roman Circus, xiii. 432.

Cræsus, king of Lydia's conquests and wealth, v. 584. Interview with Solon, 585, & n. Allied with the king of Babylon, 74, 586, & seq. Commands his army against Cyrus, ib. & seq. Taken prisoner at Sardis, 74, 587. Restored, 78, 588.

—— his ambiguous threats to the Lampfacians, ix. 513. His treasure found and carried off by Heraclius, xvi. 338.

Crones's writings and character, xv. 26, n.

Cronus supposed the same with Ham, 357, & 391, n.

—— son of Uranus, dethrones his father, i. 393. Founds Byblus, ib.

—— the younger, sacrifices his only son, i. 398, 399. Consecrated to the planet Saturn, 399. Circumcised with his auxiliaries, 400.

—— Baal, likely the Baal-berith of Berytus, ii. 340.

Cross of Christ, carried off by Cosrhoes, xi. 176. Restored by his son, 173. See also xvi. 336, 340. Brought to Jerusalem, 341.

—— several kinds of crosses used by the Jews, xvii. 16, & 17, n.

Crosses, two rich ones presented by Cosrhoes, xi. 162, & n.

† Croton, surrendered to Hannibal, xvii. 408. The citadel of, abandoned to the Locri, 420.

Crotoniates enter into the Achæan league, vi. 552.

Crown, first used by Nimrod, i. 362. Formerly not peculiar to princes, iii. 329, 330. A mark of distinction in eastern courts, ibid.

Crucifixion, not a Jewish punishment, iii. 342, n. Forbid by Constantine, xv. 390. An account of that punishment, xvii. 16, n. Inflicted at Carthage on the noblest persons, ib.

Crumus's success and indignities to Nicephorus, xvi. 379. Defeated by Leo, 382.

Crusade, or holy-war, the beginning of, xvi. 478.

† Crustumium, where situate, xi. 301, n.

Cryptia, a barbarous Spartan custom, vi. 396, & n.

Ctesias of Cnidos, his character, iv. 213, 214, &c. Assyrian history, a fable, 214. An abridgment of it, 223, & seq. See also, v. 377, n. & seq. n.

† Ctesiphon, where situate, xi. 3, 4. Taken by Trajan, 66. Destroyed by Cassius, 68. See xiv. 586.—xv. 10. By Severus, 108. Its dreadful fate, ib. Closely besieged by Odenatus, 235. By Carus, 288.

Cuma, the Sibyl, her tomb, vii. 150. Her books brought to Tarquin, xi. 372.

† Cumæ, by whom built, xii. 7. Damaged by an earthquake, xiv. 459. Noble defence against Hannibal, xvii. 415. Ravaged by him, 421. Besieged by the Romans, xix. 504. Surrendered, 507. Retaken by the Lombards, 553. Sold to the pope, ib.

Cumanus, Ventid. sent governor of Judea, x. 564. Sent to Rome, 565. Banished, ib.

† Cumberland, the coasts of, fortified by the Romans, xviii. 669.

Cumei, noted for their stupidity, xiii. 133, n.

Cumulatus's treachery to Brutus, xiii. 277.

† Cunaxa, the famed battle of, v. 179.

Cuneglatus's wicked reign, xix. 32.

Cunipert dethroned by Alachis, xix. 546. Restored, 547. Defeats and kills him, 548. Dies, ib.

—— seized on by Grimoald, xix. 537. Made colleague with his father, 545. Driven out by Alachis, 546. Defeats and kills him, 548. Dies, ib.

Cunobeline, tributary to Augustus, xviii. 698. His coin, 699, n.

† Cupid, the famed statue of, at Parium, v. 563.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Curatores vicorum, their office, xiii. 426.

† Curdestan, the same as Ashur and Assyria, i. 459.

† Curdistan, a province of Persia described, iv. 526, & seq.

† Cures, antient metropolis of the Sabini, xi. 260.

Curetes, their office among the Celtes, v. 405, & 406, n. Pluronians called Curetes, v. 78. Antient Cretans, vii. 464. Their origin, ib. The same with the Abantes, 648. Why called Curetes, ib. n.

Curia first appointed by Romulus, xi. 294. Their privileges, 296.

Curatii killed by Horatius, xi. 325.

Curatius's dramatic works, xiv. 453, n.

Curio, Caius, his noble speech to the Comitia, xii. 601.

—— Scribon, a young spendthrift, chosen tribune, xiii. 34. Bought over by Cæsar, 35, & seq. Speeches to the comitia and senate, 36. Withdraws to Cæsar's camp, 37. Sent into Sicily, 44. Defeated and killed, 87.

—— outwitted and killed by Juba, xvii. 601.

Curiones, their office, xi. 315.

Curiosi, at court, who, xv. 532. Reduced, ib.

Curius, one of Catiline's accomplices, betrayed, xii. 630.

Curtius, attacks the Persians, xi. 149.

—— Metius, head of the Sabines, xi. 306.

—— Lacus, why so called, xi. 306, n.

—— M. leaps into the gulph, xi. 627.

—— M. Dentat. ends the Samnian war, xi. 76. Noble triumph over Pyrrhus, 89.

—— Rufus, advanced by Claudius, xiv. 132. Whether the same with Quintus the historian, 133, n.

† Curubis, where situate, xvi. 577.

Curule chairs, how and whom bestowed, xiii. 592, & 593, n.

Curules ædiles, their office, xi. 620.

† Cush, wrongly supposed the land of the Cossians, i. 189.

—— Ham's eldest son, where fixed, i. 462.

—— the father of Nimrod, whether a king, i. 364, & n.

—— what land it means in scripture, xviii. 87, 88, 109, & n. & 138.

† Cusam-rishataim defeated by the Israelites, iii. 493.

† Cushites defeated by the king of Judah, iv. 87, 88. Their extract, xviii, 91. 111, 132. Their kingdom in Arabia, 211.

† Cusuhim, the progenitors of the Philistines, ii. 216. Whether the same with the Colchi, ib. n. & 228, n.

Cutha slain, xix. 34, 35.

† Cutheans, the new Samaritans, why so called, iv. 147.

Cuthwolfe's success against the Britons, xix. 34. Death, ib.

Cutlumoses's ill success against the Arabians, xvi. 450. Revolt against Tangrolipix, 464. Makes peace with his son Azan, 465. Wars against the Romans, ib. & seq.

† Cutyrgurian Hunns, why so called, xix. 41. Fall out with the Uturgurians, 99. Defeated by Belisarius, &c. 101.

Cyadas, the famous painter, where born, vii. 579.

† Cyane, the fountain of, its spring, vii. 154.

† Cyaneas, a river in Colchis, ix. 603.

† Cybele, the chief deity of the Phrygians, v. 504, & seq. How worshipped, 509, & seq. Different genealogies, 507, & seq. Worshipped by the Trojans, 531. Her temple burnt at Smerdis, 113.

—— the statue of, carried to the temple of Eleogabalus, xv. 153.

—— temple of, enriched by Julian, xv. 535. Worshipped by the Gauls, xviii. 476.

Cyberniscus, king of Lycia, v. 593.

† Cyclades islands, whence so called, vii. 548. Described, 575, & seq. Invaded by Demetrius, xii. 179.

† ——— the province of, what, xiv. 441.

† Cycle, a new one introduced in Judea, x. 155, 156, n.

Cyclopes, the fable of, vii. 155. Who they were, 157.

Cycnus, king of Colone in Troas, v. 527.

Cytreus, Cychreus, first king of Salamis, vii. 639.

Cydon reigns in Crete, vii. 471.

† Cydonia, a city in Crete, described, vii. 460. By whom founded, 526.

† Cyllene, a mount in Arcadia, vi. 10.

Cylon's insurrection at Athens, vi. 100. & seq.

† Cyme, Cuma, metropolis of Æolis, vii. 121.

† Cymen-

I N D E X to the

- † Cymenifore, the battle of, xix. 20.
 Cyname put to death by Perdiccas, viii. 566.
 Cyneas's excellent character, ix. 547.
 Advice to Pyrrhus, 548, & seq. Sent to Tarentum, 549. Just judgment of the Romans, 553, 554, n. Sent ambassador to Rome, 559. Ill success there, 560, 561. Second embassy, 565.
 Cynegirus the Athenian, his signal bravery, vi. 183.
 Cynegeus ordered to suppress idolatry, xvi. 58, 59. His death and character, ib.
 Cynics, whence so called, vi. 130.
 ——— philosopher, his speech to Commodus, xv. 58. Burnt alive for it, 59.
 † Cynocephalus, a large king of ape in Egypt, i. 501.
 Cynomolgi, why so called, xviii. 94.
 Cynorta, king of Lacedemon, vi. 56.
 Cynofarges, at Athens, their office, vi. 130.
 † Cynofureans, a colony of the Argives, vi. 64.
 † Cynthus, a mountain in Delos, described, vii. 607.
 Cyprian women, prostitute themselves for a dowry, xvii. 5.
 ——— Jews, two hundred and fifty thousand revolt, xiv. 591. All destroyed, ib. & 592.
 ——— ambassadors, over-reached by the Philæni, xvii. 40.
 Cypriots oppressed by the Persians, vii. 495. Make peace with them, 498. Subdued by Evagoras, 500. Invaded by Ochus, 504, & seq. By Ptolemy, 505. By Demetrius, 506. Subdued, 508. Restored by Ptolemy, 509. Enslaved by the Romans, ib. Assist Alexander against the Tyrians, viii. 190, & seq.
 Cypris, the wife of Antipater, her progeny, x. 254, n.
 † Cyprius vicus, whence so called, xi. 366, & n. Why called Sceleratus, ib.
 † Cypron built by Herod, x. 315.
 † Cyprus the seat of the Kettim, according to Josephus, i. 472. First conquered by Amasis, ii. 72. The island, described, vii. 484. How divided, 490. Its soil, government, &c. ib. & seq. Kings and petty kingdoms, 492. Taken by Cyrus, 493. By Ptolemy, viii. 397. Antiochus, ix. 80, & seq. Sold by Archias to Demetrius, 235. Given to a bastard of Lathyrus, 262. Seized by the Romans, ib. & seq. & xiii. 10, 11. Given by Cæsar to young Ptolemy, ib. & seq.
 † ——— the mines of, given to Herod, x. 315, n.
 † Cyprus the castle of taken by the Zelots, x. 577.
 Cypsellus, kills the tyrant of Mycenæ, vi. 13.
 ——— a Lapitha, becomes king of Corinth, vi. 40, & seq. & 41, n.
 Cyrbes, what, vi. 126.
 † Cyre, the fountain of, xviii. 65. & n.
 † Cyrenaica described, xviii. 64. Its soil, fruits, &c. 66. Various nations, 67. Transactions and wars, 69. Invaded by Thymbrio, 72. Delivered to Ptolemy, 73. Bequeathed to Rome, ib. Under the Turks, ibid.
 Cyrene ravished by Jupiter, vi. 19, & n.
 † ——— the fountain of, ib.
 † ——— the kingdom of, by whom founded, vi. 573. Described, ix. 253. Yielded to Phylcon, 231. Revolts from him, 233, & seq. Given to Apion, 245.
 † ——— a colony of the Greeks, ii. 65. Drive out the Lydians, ib. Defeat the Egyptians, ib.
 ——— Jews, whence, x. 69, n. Relieved by Augustus, 315.
 † ——— metropolis of Cyrenaica, xviii. 65. Described, ib. By whom built, 69. Seized by Ariston, 72.
 † Cyrenians, their customs, &c. xviii. 65.
 Cyrenius sent to tax the Jews, x. 409. See also Quirinus, xiii. 453.
 Cyriades assumes the purple in the east, xv. 227.
 Cyril, St. falls out with Orestes, xvi. 197.
 Cyrillus Statius, his writings and character, xv. 323.
 Cyrenus the Greek name of Corsica, xvii. 27.
 † Cyropolis taken by Alexander, viii. 257.
 † Cyrrha, the sea-port of Delphos, vi. 33. Its famed arsenal, 110. Invaded by the Phocians, 30, & seq.
 Cyrrheans, their attempt on Delphos punished, vi. 109.
 † Cyrrhus, the metropolis of it, ii. 264.
 Cyrus subdues the Chaldæans, iv. 430. Defeats Neriglissar, 431. And Nabonadius, 436. Takes Babylon, ib.
 ——— his exploits under his grandfather, iv. 490, & seq. Fabulous birth and deeds, v. 58. Brought up by the king's herdsman, 59. Discovered, and sent to his parents, 63. Stratagem against the Persians, 64, & seq. Conquers the Medes, 66. Imprisons

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Imprisons his grandfather, 64. Killed by the Scythian queen, 67. The more authentic account of him out of Xenophon, 68, & seq. Assists Cyaxares against the king of Babylon, 70. Kills him, 72, & seq. Wars against Cræsus, 74. Takes him in Sardis, 78. Behaviour towards him, ib. & n. & 79, n. Takes Babylon by stratagem, 80, 81. Ascends the throne, 81. Favours the Jews, ib. Death, 83. Edict in favour of the Jews, x. 7. Confined by Darius, 21.

—— the son of Dar. Nothus, his cruel government in Asia Minor, v. 166. Conspires against his brother, 168. Sentenced to death, ib. Raises a revolt, 170, & seq. His fleet and army, 171. Slain, 173. Prophecies concerning him, 311, n. & seq. n.

—— his rise and character, xvi. 229.

—— bishop of Constantinople, saves Egypt by a tribute, xvi. 343.

† —— camp abandoned to Alexander, viii. 177.

† —— tomb, described, viii. 330.

† —— a river of Armenia, ix. 318. Of Albania, 612.

† Cytherea, island, described, vii. 632. Whether in Cyprus, 488. Taken by the Athenians, vi. 282, & seq.

† Cythereon, mount, in Phocis, vi. 29.

† Cythnus island described, vii. 579.

† Cyzicæus disfranchised, xiii. 642, & n.

† Cyzicum, island, described, vii. 545, & n.

† —— city of Myfia, v. 561.

—— besieged by Mithridates, ix. 415, & seq. Relieved by Lucullus, 418, & seq. Plundered by the Heruli, xv. 247. Taken by Procopius, 616. Part of, overturned by earthquake, xvi. 270.

Cyzicus, king of Myfia, killed by the Argonauts, v. 561.

D

† DACI, where situate, xii. 541, n. Defeated by the Romans, ib. Subdued by Tiberius, xiii. 419.

† Dacia seized by the Goths, xv. 244. Rejoined to the empire, 293. Wasted by Attila, xix. 66. Subdued by the Goths, 124. Yielded to Theodoric III. 181. Described, 367, & seq. Made a Roman province, 372.

† —— New, by whom founded, xv. 268. Part of, yielded to Theodoric, 289. Where sit, xix. 374.

VOL. XX,

† Dacians. See Getae, v. 442. Their revolt suppressed by Mucianus, xiv. 410. Character, 496. Where sit, ib. Invade the Romans, 497. Force them to make peace, 500. War with Trajan, xiv. 566. Ravaged by him, 567, 572. Subdued, 573. By M. Aurelius, xv. 13. By Decius, 218. Ravaged by the Quadi, &c. 219. Their origin, xix. 366, & seq. Customs, &c. 367. Wars, victories, and defeats, 369. Peace with Domitian, 370. Subdued by Trajan, 371. Submission and dispersion, 372, 373.

† Daçtyli, why so called, v. 508, & n.

† Dadaflana, where situate, xv. 573.

Daduchi, their dignity, vi. 186, n.

Dædalus's treachery to Minos, vii. 474.

Dæmons, two kinds of, i. 246, n.

Dagalaiphas promotes Valentinian's election, xv. 575. Noble answer to him, 579. Success against the Germans, 582. Treachery, 583, 584. Remissness to the Alemans, xix. 329, 330.

Dagobert's embassy to Heraclius, xvi. 342.

Dagon, Siton, the son of Uranus, i. 390. Worshipped in Canaan, 392, n. At Azotus, ii. 226. Learned conjectures about him, ib. n. His temple burnt by Jonathian, ix. 118. & x. 174.

Daharians, a sect of philosophers among the Turks, i. 79.

† Dalmanutha, where situate, x. 465, & n.

† Dalmatia subdued by Cotta, xii. 423. Revolts, xiii. 450. Reduced, 454. Anew, 458, & seq. Destroyed by the Quadi, xvi. 29. By the Goths, 122. Made a new empire, 271.

Dalmatius, the son of Constantius, xv. 334. His death, ib.

—— his son, born, xv. 334. Created Cæsar, 411. Murdered by the soldiers, 431.

Daluka, a famed queen of Egypt, and great magician, ii. 91.

Damagetus, king of Rhodes, vii. 406.

Damaratus deposed by his colleague, vi. 430. Retires into Persia, 431.

Damaretia, a Sicilian coin so called, xvii. 36, & n.

† Damascus, metropolis of Syria, ii. 264. By whom built, i. 460. A republic in David's time, ii. 285. Its origin, 286. Famous altar, 298. Chronology, kings, &c. 304, & seq.

—— when founded by Rezin, ii. 395. The end of that kingdom, according to the prophets, 325.

L

† Damascus,

I N D E X to the † Damascus, the city, betrayed to Parmenio, v. 215, & seq. Taken by Cofrhoes, xi. 166. By the Saracens, xvi. 343.

Damafichton, king of Thebes, v. 671.

Damatetis, a Rhodian magistrate, killed, vii. 425.

Damocritus suspends the Ætolians resolutions, vii. 17, & seq. Sent to engage Nabis, 25. Besieged and taken at Heraclea, 45.

† Dambea, river, falls into the Nile, xviii. 100.

Damianus defeated and killed, xvi. 387.

Damias, who, vii. 636, & n.

Damides's stratagem against Polysperchon, viii. 459.

† Damii, who, and where sited, xviii. 671.

Damocles's surprising chastity, vi. 373, 374.

—— made sensible of a tyrant's happiness, vii. 261, n.

Damophilus's cruelty to his slaves, xii. 387. His punishment, 388, & seq.

—— his writings and character, xv. 48, n.

Dan, the son of Jacob, born, ii. 440. Jacob's prophecy to him and his tribe, 489. How verified, ib. n. Why likened to a viper, ib. n. His lot in the promised land, iii. 103.

† ——— the city of, iii. 489. The idol set up there, ibid.

Danae debauched by Jupiter, v. 625, 626.

Danaus, his severity against his daughter, v. 624.

Dances used by the Phrygians in their worship, v. 512.

Dandalo, Henry's signal bravery, xvi. 501.

† Dandera, Tentyra, a city in Egypt, i. 534.

† ——— the stately temple of, i. 534.

Daniel, sent captive into Babylon, iv. 375. Interpret's Nebuchadnezzar's dream, 392, & seq. Raised by him, 394. Expounds Belshazzar's vision, 438. His writings depreciated by the Jews, iii. 475, n. Promoted under Cyaxares, iv. 492. Delivered from the lions, 493. Sundry of his prophecies fulfilled, viii. 590, 591, 592, n. ix. 56, n. & seq. n. 62, 64, 86, 91, n. & seq. n. A further account of them, x. 18, 19, n. Shewn to Alexander the Great, 64. A signal one explained, 116, n. His weeks, how computed, 326, n. & seq. n.

† Danes, their origin, xix. 106.

† Dania, Denmark, by whom first peopled, xix. 106.

† Danmonii, in Britain, who, and where, xviii. 658.

† Danube separates the Celtes from the Scythians, v. 397.

† ——— the famous bridge over, xiv. 571. See vol. xviii. 590.

† Daphne's temple at Rome burnt, xv. 537.

† ——— an infamous suburb of Antioch, xv. 14. Heavily taxed by Proculus, xvi. 60.

Daphneus's success against the Carthaginians, xvii. 61, & seq. (Vid. & vii. 220. Put to death, 228.)

† Daphnine island in Ethiopia, xviii. 107.

Daphnomelus's desperate attempt on Ibatzes, xvi. 437.

Dara, princess of Persia, married to a rich Jew, xi. 251.

† ——— Daras, where sited, xvi. 300.

† ——— a city, proof against Cofrhoes, xi. 135, 136. Reduced, 147. Restored to the Romans, 161. Retaken by Cofrhoes, 161. (See xvi. 321.)

Darab I. prince of Persia, according to oriental writers, exposed in a wooden ark, v. 349. Owned by his mother, 350. His reign and wars, 353.

—— II. his wars with the king of Macedon, v. 354, & seq. Murdered by his own subjects, 357, & seq.

† Darab-gerd, a city, built by Darab, v. 353.

† Dardana, built by Dardanus, v. 537.

† Dardanel, why so called, v. 521, n. & 522.

† Dardania. Vid. Troas, v. 519, & seq.

Dardanians invade Macedon, vi. 605. Expelled by the Bastarnæ, viii. 496.

Dardanus, who, v. 522. Marries Teucer's daughter, 535. His descent and reign, 537, & vii. 626. Founds the Trojan kingdom, ib. & seq. See also xi. 276.

—— Prefect of Gaul, his motley character, xvi. 190, & n.

Daric, an antient gold coin, v. 14.

Darius, the Mede, most likely Neriglissar, king of Babylon, iv. 431. And not Nabonadius, 439. See before Cyaxares II. iv. 490, & seq. Various sentiments about him, 493, n. & seq. n.

—— one of Cambyfes's guard, his revenge on Syloson, vii. 533, &c. Defeats the confederates, 536.

NINETEEN VOLUMES. /

Darius, of the Persian nobles, chosen king, v. 101. His revenue, ib. Takes Babylon, 104. Unsuccessful expedition against Scythia, 105, & seq. Fleet and conquests in India, 108. First attempt against Greece unfortunate, 116. Second attempt, 117. Numerous army, 118. Defeated by the Athenians, 119. His loss at sea and land, 120, n. Design against Greece and Egypt, 121. His death and character, 123, & seq.

—— the son of Xerxes, unjustly murdered, v. 153.

—— Nothus, mounts the throne, v. 164. His severe and uneasy reign, ib. Loss of Egypt, 166, & seq. Too much swayed by his queen, 167. His death, and last words to his son, 168.

—— Codomanus, raised to the throne, v. 203. His extract, &c. ib. & seq. Invaded by the Greeks, 204. Defeated at Granicus, 205, & seq. Loses several provinces, 207, & seq. And his best general Memnon, ib. Goes to succour Cilicia, 212. Defeated near Issus, 213, & seq. Haughty letter to Alexander, 216. Offers for the ransom of his family, 218. New army, 223. New offers of peace rejected, ib. Defeated near Arbela, 225, & seq. Flees into Armenia, 227. Into Media, 231. Seized by his treacherous generals, ib. & seq. Dying message to Alexander, 234. Death, character, and burial, ib. & 235. See also vol. viii. 178, & seq. An instance of his signal goodness, 218, 219, n. His treasure at Susa, 220, & n. & seq.

—— the son of Pharnaces, made king of Bosphorus, ix. 454.

—— king of Acrobatene, ix. 627.

Darkness, during three days in Egypt, ii. 569. At Christ's crucifixion, x. 513, n. Over the Roman empire, xvi. 106. A dreadful one under Constantine, 366.

† Darodt, river, where, xviii. 13, n.

† Darræ, a tribe of Getulians, xviii. 45.

† Dascara, the heretic Manes's retreat, xi. 190.

† Dascylus, a city in Bithynia, ix. 580.

† Daffaretæ, where situate, viii. 211.

Datames, king of Cappadocia, ix. 463.

Dates, Persian, their syrup preferable to honey, iv. 437.

Dathan's conspiracy against Moses, &c. iii. 14. Dreadful punishment, 15, 17.

† Dathema, where sited, x. 140. Relieved by Judas Maccabeus, ib.

Datis, general of Darius, his expedition against Greece, v. 117, & seq. Shameful defeat, 119.

—— high respect for Diana's temple, vii. 602. Defeated by Miltiades, viii. 53.

Daughters, Roman, punishable by their parents, xiii. 532.

David, sent to play before king Saul, iii. 540. Kills Goliath, 542. Friendship with Jonathan, 543. Flees to the land of Nod, 546. To Gath, ib. To Adullam, ib. Generosity to Saul, 549. Anointed by Samuel, 540. Covenant with Jonathan, 548. Marries Saul's second daughter, 544. Grief at the news of Saul's death, iv. 12. Anointed king over Judah, at Hebron, 13. Marries the daughter of Tolmai, ib. & seq. Puts to death the murderer of Ishbosheth, 16. Reigns over the twelve tribes, ib. Takes Jerusalem, and makes Sion his residence, ib. Removes the ark thither, iv. 18, 19. Defeats Hadadezer, ii. 307, &c. Brings Syria under tribute, ib. & seq. Four victories over the Philistines, 255. Narrow escape from a gigantic Philistine, ii. 257, 258. Brings them under tribute, 258. Allies with the king of Tyre, iv. 17. Forbid to build the temple, 21, 22. His œconomy, policy, &c. 22, & seq. Kindness to Jonathan's sons, 25. Revenge on the Ammonites, ib. Adultery and murder, 26, 27. Punishment pronounced by Nathan, 28, &c. Ill-timed tenderness to the rebellious Absalom, 40, & seq. Forgiveness to Shimei, ib. A fresh revolt against him, 42. Numbers the people, 45. Punished with a pestilence, 47. Causes Solomon to be proclaimed, 49. His last instructions to him, 51, 52. Death, ib. Vast riches, and burial, &c. ib. &c.

—— in what sense Christ is called his son, x. 494, & n.

—— the last emperor of Trapezond, xviii. 320.

Daulian womens unnatural repast, vi. 33, n.

† Daulis, a city in Phocis, vi. 33.

† Daunia, where situate, xi. 263.

Daunus, king of Apulia, succours Diomedes, v. 636.

Days of the week, from whom named in England, xix. 12.

Deacons, the first seven chosen by the apostles, x. 541.

† Dead-sea, whence so called, iii. 121, n. & seq. Its various names, v. 440. Measured by Demetrius, viii. 394.

I N D E X to the Debir, king of Eglon, joins against the Gibeonites, ii. 203. Defeated by Joshua, ibid.

† — the city of, retaken by the Canaanites, ii. 207.

Deborah's success against Jabin, king of Canaan, iii. 495.

Debtors at Rome, cruel laws against, xi. 428, n. Mitigated, 422, & seq. Eluded by Appius, 425.

Debts, the payment of, regulated, xi. 638, & xii. 79, & seq.

Decalogue, delivered, ii. 602. Explained, 603, n.

† Decapolis, whence so called, x. 464, & n.

Decebalus, made king of the Dacians, xiv. 497. Proud answer to Domitian, 498, 499. Outwits him, ib. Forced to a shameful peace, 500.

— ill success against the Romans, xiv. 566, 567. Revolt and treachery, 570. Subdued, and kills himself, 573. His vast treasures discovered, ib. & 574. See vol. xix. 368, 371.

Decemvirs, first instituted, xi. 460, &c. A new set chosen, 519. Speech to the people, 520. A third set of them, 522. Their tyranny, 523, & seq. Abandoned by the army, 537, & seq. Deposed by the senate, 539. Trial and punishment, 540, & seq.

— their number augmented, xii. 579.

Decentius created Cæsar, xv. 443. Defeated by the Franks, 448. Chosen consul, 451. Foiled before Treves, 452. Hangs himself, 456.

— sent to fetch Julian's forces, xv. 497. His fatal imprudence, 498.

Decianus, C. Plaut. banished, xii. 511.

— Catus's extortions in Britain, xiv. 208. Cowardly flight, 209.

Deciarchæ, at Samos, their office, vii. 500.

Decimus succeeds Ulpianus, xv. 159.

Decius's answer to Pyrrhus, ix. 561. Killed, 562.

— rescued by Philopator, ix. 219.

— speech against Coriolanus, xi. 442. Accusation against him, 445.

— L. Mus, noble exploits against the Samnites, xi. 648, 649. Consulship, 650. Expeditions against the Latins, 654. Devotes himself to the manes, 659, & seq. The ceremony of it described, ib. His death, 600.

— success in Hetruria, xii. 44, 45. Made pontifex, 51. Success in Apulia, 56. In Samnium, ib & seq. In Hetruria, 59. Devotes himself to death, 62.

Decius's Trec, succeeds the brave Castinus, xv. 145. Put to death by Heliogabalus, 152.

— the emperor, sent governor of Mœsia, xv. 214. Forced to accept the empire, ib. Acknowledged, 216. A grievous persecutor of the christians, ib. His death and character, 220.

— his son defeats the Goths, xv. 218. Cut off by them, ib. When surnamed Augustus, ib. Bravery and death, 220.

— treachery to the Rhegians, xvii. 211, & seq. Punishment, 217.

— killed by Tacfarinas, xviii. 41.

Decuriae appointed by Romulus, xi. 294.

Dedalus polishes the antient Greeks, v. 612.

† Dedan, where seated, 462, 463.

† — the city of, in Edom, ii. 154.

Dedication of the temple by Judas Maccab. x. 135. The feast of, ib. & 136, & n.

Dehoc, sixth king of Persia, his cruel reign, &c. v. 251.

Deianira debauched by Achilles, vi. 25.

— daughter of Oeneus, married to Hercules, vi. 77. Fatal jealousy and death, 57, 58, n.

Deidanica, queen of Epirus, whether murdered, ix. 578.

Dejoces, the founder of Ecbatan, iv. 446, 474, & n. His reign, 464, 474. Policy to get the kingdom, 473. Tyranny, 474, & seq. Forbids his subjects to approach him, 475.

Deiotarus I. made king of Armenia minor, ix. 368. Fidelity to the Romans, 369, & seq.

— II. his reign and successors, ix. 370.

— accompanies Pompey in his flight, xiii. 70. Forgiven by Cæsar, 82. Joins Brutus, 240. And Antony, 353. Abandons him, 356.

† Deira, the province of, by whom founded, xix. 31.

Delassenus, Const. sent into banishment, xvi. 444.

Deleanus, chief of the revolted Bulgarians, xvi. 445. Treachery to Teichomerus, 446. His reward, ibid. & xix. 421.

† Delians,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Delians, their government, kings, &c. vii. 608. Conquered by the Athenians, ibid.

Delias & Deliaſti, what, vii. 606.

Delilah, Samſon's miſtreſs, ii. 239.

Treachery to him, ibid.

Delium, the battle of, vi. 285.

Dellius, Q. ſent to Cleopatra, xiii. 298. His character, ibid. n.

— narrowly eſcapes her reſentment, ibid. & ſeq.

† Delos, iſland, deſcribed, vii. 548, 599. Why ſo called, ibid. & ſeq. Its temples, 601. Reverenced, 602. Purified, 605. Taken, 76.

— temple plundered by Archelaus, vii. 76.

— treasure ſeized by Pericles, vi. 272, n.

— metropolis of the iſland deſcribed, vii. 607.

† Delphi, Delphos, the city of, deſcribed, vi. 29, & ſeq. Its immense riches, 30.

— the oracle of, how diſcovered, vi. 30.

— temple, deſcribed, vi. 29, & ſeq.

— beſieged by the Cyrrheans, vi. 109. Defended by all the Greeks, ibid. &c. Plundered by Xerxes, v. 140. By Sylla, vii. 79.

Delphic oracle corrupted by king Philip, viii. 118.

— answer to the two Tarquins, xi. 375.

Delphidius's writings and character, xv. 512, n.

Delphinus defeated by Baſilius, xvi. 434.

† Delphinium, a criminal court at Athens, vi. 144.

† Delta, part of lower Egypt, i. 488. Formerly a bay of the ſea, ibid. & 489. How divided by the Arabs, ibid. The moſt fruitful part of Egypt, 490.

Deluge, the changes it cauſed on the earth, i. 313.

Demades's ſpeech to Philip, viii. 150, & ſeq. Succeſſleſs embaſſy to Antipater, 427. His character, 432. Severe puniſhment, 434. See alſo vi. 360. & ſeq.

Demarata, the ambitious daughter of Hiero, vii. 338, & ſeq. Aspires to the throne, 347, & ſeq. Put to death, 351.

Demaratus the baniſhed king of Sparta's gallant behaviour, v. 135, & n. vi. 176.

— ſharp answer to Philip, viii. 127.

— valour againſt the Carthaginians, xvii. 135, 137.

Demarchi of Athens, their office, vi. 368, 369.

Demaretia, a Sicilian coin, whence ſo called, vii. 173.

† Demetæ, who, and where ſited, xviii. 666.

† Demetria, by whom built, viii. 420.

† Demetrius in Theſſaly, vi. 17. Taken by Diocles, vii. 28, 29.

Demetrius Phalereus, the kind governor of Athens, vi. 371. Ungratefully put to death, 372, & ſeq.

— Polyorctes invades Athens, vi. 371. Deified there, 372, & ſeq. Initiated in the myſteries of Ceres, 374. Repulſed by the Athenians, ib. Generoſity to them, 375. Attempt againſt Sparta, 519.

— prætor of Achaia's attempt againſt Sparta, vii. 655.

— inveſts Rhodes, vii. 415. & ſeq. Invents the helopolis, 419. Forced to raiſe the ſiege, 436. Inſtances of his clemency, 427. Invades Cyprus, 506, & ſeq. Takes Salamis, 508, & ſeq. Loſes it, 509.

— the ſon of Antigonus, left governor of Syria, viii. 390. Defeated by Ptolemy, 391. Gallantry to him, 392. Sent againſt Petra, 394. Measures the lake Asphaltes, ibid. Marches into Babylon, 395, & ſeq. Recovers Sicily, 397. His conqueſts in Cyprus, 398, & ſeq. Saluted king by his father, 400. Ill ſucceſs againſt Rhodes, 404. Degeneracy, 405, 462. Defeated at Iſſus, 407. Becomes king of Macedon, 410, 460. Prepares for the conqueſt of Aſia, 412. Driven out of Macedon, 413, & ſeq. Ill ſucceſs againſt Lyſimachus, &c. 414. Againſt Pyrrhus, 462, & ſeq. Retires to Caſſandria, 463. Surrenders himſelf to Seleucus, 417, & ſeq. His laſt letter to his ſon, 419. Death, ibid. & ſeq. Wives and offſpring, 420. Coin, ix. 172, n.

— king of Cyrene, viii. 420.

— the ſon of Gonatus, his early valour, viii. 475. Troubleſome reign, 477, & ſeq.

— the ſon of Philip, viii. 486. Pleads for his father before the Roman ſenate 488. Envied by his baſtard brother, 490, & ſeq. Suspected by his father, 492. Put to death, 493.

— prince of Macedon, marries Apame, viii. 586. Murdered by her daughter, ibid.

— the ſon of Antiochus, ſent to Rome, viii. 536.

— the ſon of Seleucus, ſues to the Roman ſenate, ix. 94, & ſeq. Repulſed, 95. Second ſuit, 101. Eſcapes into Syria, ria, 163, & seq. Letter to the senate, 104. Wars against Ariarethes, 107. Degenerates, 109. Courts the friendship of the Jews, 112, 113. Defeated and killed, 114, & seq. See also x. 152, & seq. & 171.

Demetrius Nicator, x. 121. Dethroned by Alex. Balas, ib. Allies with Philometor, 120. Restored, 121. Degenerates, 127, & seq. Saved by the Jews, 128. His treachery to them, ib. Taken, and kept prisoner in Parthia, 135, 140, & seq. Restored, 145. Invaded by Zebina, 146, & seq. His death, 147. Coin, 169 n.

—Eucherus, crowned at Damascus, ix. 156. Defeated and killed, ibid. & seq.

—Phalereus, his character and office, ix. 188. Persuades Ptol. Soter to build a library, 189. His great integrity, 194. (Promotes the septuagint version, x. 83, n. & seq.) His death, ix. 194.

—king of Bactria, his character, &c. ix. 630, 631.

—Poliorectes, his present to the Rhodians, vii. 400, 401.

—Nicanor, a friend to the Jews, x. 175, & n. Perfidy to them, 176. Dethroned by Antiochus, ib. & seq.

—the Pharian, betrays Corcyra to the Romans, xii. 168. Made regent of Illyricum, 170. Revolts, 179. Defeated, ib.

—a philosopher, with Cato, at Utica, xiii. 99.

—a servant of Cassius, brings the news of his death to the triumvirs, xiii. 270.

—a cynic, mortified by Vespasian, xiv. 436.

—Alex. a disciple of Favorinus, xiv. 650, n. Beloved by Adrian, ib. n.

—Cythras tortured for idolatry, xv. 492.

† Demiat, Damietta, in Egypt, i. 466.

Demigods, said to have reigned in Egypt before the flood, i. 273. A table of them, 274.

Demochares defeated and drowned, xiii. 229.

Democrates's brave death at Tarentum, xvii. 452.

Democritus, the supposed author of the atonic system, i. 113, & seq. And of fatal necessity, 116. Said to have had his principles from a Babylonish pillar, 589. Where born, ix. 508.

Demoi, at Athens, their office, vi. 132.

Demon, or genius, of Carthage, worshipped there, xvi. 635.

Demonax, a cynic philosopher, his excellent character, xv. 43. Noble answer to the Athenians, 44. To M. Aurelius, ib.

Demoniacs healed by Christ, xi. 436. What they were, ib. n.

Demosthenes chosen admiral of Athens, vi. 278, & seq. Defeated at Delium, 285. Taken by the Syracusans, 302. Put to death, ib. —The orator, his character, Philippics, &c. 351, 353, & seq.

—admiral. See also vol. vii. 199, to 210.

—cowardly flight at Cheronea, vi. 359. Delivered up to Alexander, 362. Fined and imprisoned for bribery, 363. Poisons himself, 366. His character and writings, ib. &c. See also viii. 86, n. & seq.

† Demus, the temple of, what, x. 243, n.

† Denaba, the supposed city of Job, where sited, ii. 530.

Dengesic, the son of Attila, slain, xix. 65.

—wars with the Romans, xix. 97.

Denmark, kings, why called Skioldungar, xix. 112.

† Densetæ, a people of Thrace, ix. 514, & seq.

Dentatus, Sicinius's speech for the Agrarian law, vii. 511. Bravery against the Æqui, 514, & seq. Friendship to Romulus, 517. Betrayed by Appius, 529. Murdered, 529, 530.

—the tribune's project for re-peopling the Volsci, xi. 572, 574.

Derceto, the goddess of the Philistines, ii. 226. Also an Assyrian deity, iv. 404. Whether the same with Dagon, ib.

Dercyllidas's success against the Persians, v. 176. & seq. vi. 481. Noble speech to Pyrrhus, 513.

Descartes, his hypothesis, i. 147, & seq.

Desiderius created Cæsar by his brother, xv. 443. Murdered by him, 456. Said to have submitted to Constantius, 457.

—king of the Lombards, xix. 584. Falls out with the pope, 585. Allies with Charles of France, ib. & seq. Falls out with him, ib. Falls out with, and invades Adrian, 586. Invaded by Charlemagne, 588. Sent prisoner into France, 492. Heard no more of, 593, & seq.

Deucalion, king of Phthia, i. 279, n. & seq. vi. 15. Saved from the flood on Parnassus, 29.

—king of Crete, vii. 477.

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Devil, the tempter of Eve, i. 199. Why in the shape of a serpent, ib. & seq.

Devils, whether they really possessed men, x. 436, 437, n.

— scutt; a Gaulish altar, described, xviii. 425.

Devoting, the custom of, in Spain, &c. xi. 559, & n.

† Denfona, the treacherous fight of, xv. 594.

Dexippus's victory over the Heruli, xv. 247.

— writings and character, xv. 274, n.

— brave defence of Agrigentum, xvii. 59. Justly censured, 62.

† Dhafar, a sea port in the Arabian coasts, i. 474.

Dhalka, Zalka, queen of Egypt, ii. 90.

† Dia, a city in Eubœa, by whom built, vii. 647.

Diacrii, one of the three contending parties at Athens, vi. 111.

Diad of Pythagoras, what, i. 126.

Diadem first worn by Aurelian, xv. 270.

Diadumenus created Cæsar, xv. 137, 141. Why surnamed Antoninus, 142. His mild character, 144. Pretended letter to his father, ib. & 145, & n. Chosen colleague, 147. His flight and death, 148.

Didæus, Achæan prætor, raises new troubles in Achaia, 654, & seq. Inflames them against Rome, 659, & seq. His edict to the Achæan cities, 663. Cruelties, 665. Rash confidence, 666, 667. Defeat, ib. & seq. Desperate end, 667.

Diagoras I. king of Rhodes, vii. 406. Head of the Diagoridæ, 407.

— II. his reign and progeny, vii. 407. Dies of joy, ib.

— the first atheist, where born, vii. 581.

— tyrant of Eretria, vii. 652.

Dial of Ahaz, what, iv. 142, n.

— the first at Rome, xii. 71, n.

Diana, how worshipped at Bubastis, i. 557, & seq. By the Lydians, v. 576.

† — at Syracuse, vii. 371, & n.

— at Icaria, vii. 566, & seq.

— Persica, worshipped in Cappadocia, ix. 461.

— at Carthage, xvi. 619.

— her statue taken and restored by Philadelphus, ix. 201.

— Triclaris, the feast and inhuman sacrifice of, vii. 130.

— her medal, vii. 567.

— temple built by Servius, xi.

Diana adjudged to the Messenians, xiii. 647.

— at Ephesus, described, vii. 111, & seq. Statue, 113. Plundered by the Scythians, xv. 240.

— A strange one near Rome, xviii. 503.

Diaphanes invades Messenia, vi. 625. Recalled, ib.

Diasia, a feast of the Athenians, vi. 101.

† Diblathaim, a city of Arabia Petrea, xviii. 183.

† Dibo, a City of Arabia Petrea, xviii. 183.

Dictators at Rome, when first chosen, xi. 412. Their power and office, ib. & 413. n. xiii. 161.

† Dicte, a mountain in Crete, described, vii. 463.

Dictys, prince of Seriphus, brings up Perseus as his own, v. 626. Raised to the throne by him, 627.

— Cretensis, an account of, vii. 478, 479.

† Dictynna, the temple of, by whom built, vii. 522.

Didius, T. his success against the Scordisci, xii. 428. Consulship, 509. Butcheries in Spain, ib. & seq. Defeated, 596.

— Caius, sent by Cæsar into Spain, xiii. 119. Defeats Pompey's fleet, 125. Puts him to death, 126. Slain by the Lusitanians, 128.

— Au. success against the Brigantes, xviii. 704.

Dido. See Eliza, xvi. 558.

Didymus driven out of Spain, xvi. 165. Put to death, 166.

† Die, in Dauphine, subject to the Burgundi, xvi. 265.

Diegylis, king of the Odryssæ, ix. 521, & seq.

Diet, among the Jews, very plain, iii. 390.

Digesta of Justinian, when and by whom compiled, xvi. 318.

† Diklah, the son of Joktan, where seated, i. 475.

† Dimas, the son of Dardanus, his colonies in Asia, v. 539.

† Dimelia, whence so called, xviii. 666, 667.

Dinah born, ii. 442. Ravished by Shechem, 453. Cruelly revenged, ib. & 454.

Dinarchus put to death, viii. 437.

† Dindymus mount, v. 504, & 505, n.

Dinocrates, the Sicilian, defeated, vii. 312.

Dinocrates, Macedonian, defeated by the Rhodians, vii. 435.

— head of the Messenian rebels, vi. 634. Beats the Achæans, ib. Kills himself, 637.

Dinomades's treachery to Hieronymus, vii. 345. Chosen magistrate, 348.

† Diocæsarea, where situate, ix. 458. Burnt by Gallus, xv. 453.

Dioclea, the mother of Dioclesian, xv. 290.

Diocles's barbarity against the Athenian prisoners, vii. 207, & seq. Causes Hermocrates to be banished, 217, 218.

— put to death by Valentinian, xv. 589.

— noble defence of Himera and Syracuse, xvii. 53, 55.

Dioclesian proclaimed, xv. 289. His extract, rise, &c. 290, & seq. Kills Aper, 292. Success against Carinus, 293. In Gaul, ib. Against the Persians, 294. In Germany, 296. Against the Sarmatians, &c. ib. Interview with Maximian, ib. Fatal division of the empire, 298. Goes into Thrace, 302. Success and cruelties in Egypt, 305. Allies with the Nubians, 306. Contempt of Galerius, 307. Castles on the Persian frontiers, 309. Causes a famine by his avarice, 310. Persecutes the christians, 311. His terrors from that time, ib. Cruelties to Antioch, &c. 312. Triumphs with his three colleagues, 313. Long illness, ib. Resigns to Galerius, ib. Speech to the people upon it, 315. Retired life, ib. Palace at Spalatho, ib. &c. Death, 316, 381. Character, ib. Baths and other buildings, ib. Cruelty and vanity, 318. His history very imperfect, 319. The first wearer of pearls, 417. His success against the Goths exaggerated, xix. 130.

— æra, what, xv. 292.

Diodatus. See Tryphon, ix. 127.

Diodorus's doctrine of indivisible bodies, i. 114.

— Siculus, how far preferable to Plutarch, viii. 395, 396, n.

— a Syrian, facilitates Demetrius's escape, ix. 102.

— put to death by Valentinian, xv. 589.

— bishop of Tarsus, his confutation of Porphyry, xv. 328.

Diogenes, Apoll. his notion of the air being endued with reason, i. 112, 113.

— treachery to the Macedonians, viii. 480.

— surliness to Alexander, viii. 153.

— Sadyce put to death, x. 222.

Diogenes Laertius, his writings and character, xv. 122, n.

— governor of Bithynia, put to death, xvi. 2.

— Anastasius's general, closely besieged in Isauria, xvi. 296. Relieved by crook-back John, ib.

— Romanus, raised to the empire, xvi. 460. Success against the Turks, 461. Defeated and taken by them, 462. Kindly used and released by the sultan, ib. Defeated by Andronicus, 463. His miserable end, ibid.

— noble defence of Rome, xix. 494. Of Circumcellæ, 496.

Diogenet's writings and character, xiv. 655, n.

Diomedes's writings and character, xvi. 212, n.

Diomedon unjustly put to death, vi. 320, & seq. Speech to the Athenians, ib.

Dion, his character, &c. vii. 262, & n. Brave speech to Dionysius, 263, n. Falsely accused to his son, 266, & seq. Banished, 267. Returns to Syracuse, 271. Seizes on it, ib. Defeats Dionysius, 273, & seq. Noble answer to him, 274. Forced to flee to the Leontini, 277, & seq. Recalled, 279. Speech to his soldiers, ib. Relieves the city, 281. Takes the citadel, 282. Why he put Heraclides to death, 283. Basely murdered by Calipus, ib.

— the philosopher assassinated by Pompey, ix. 266.

— Cassius's account of Arrian, xiv. 648, n. Life of Antonius lost, 663. Made governor of Smyrna, xv. 144. Consulship and honours under Alexander, 160. Retirement, 161. His account of the then Roman legions, ib. His other writings, 179, n.

Dionysian festival, what, xiii. 124, n.

Dionysius I. the tyrant of Syracuse, vii. 224, & seq. Chosen their generalissimo, 227. Obtains a guard, ib. Declares himself king, 228. Makes peace with Imilcar, 230. Disarms the Syracusans, 233, & seq. Wars against Carthage, 234, & seq. His army and fleet, 235. Takes Motya, 237. Defeated at sea, 240, & seq. Besieged in Syracuse, 241. Defeats the Carthaginians, 246, & seq. And Rhegians, 248. Success in Italy, 251, & seq. Takes Rhegium, 254. Barbarity to Phyto, ib. Affectation of poetry, ib. & seq. Ill success at the Olympic games, 256. Against the Carthaginians, 258. Makes peace with them, ib. His death and character, 259, & seq.

& seq. Offspring 263, & seq. See also vol. xvii. 67, & 70, & seq.

Dionysius II. succeeds his father, vii. 263. Sends three times for Plato, ib. & seq. Treatment of him, 266. Gives a loose to all vices, 269. Defeated by Dion, 273. Forced to flee into Italy, 276. Recovers Syracuse after ten years absence, 285. Surrenders himself to Timoleon, 290. Keeps a school at Corinth, ib. See also vol. xvii. 119, 123.

—— tyrant of Heraclea, ix. 586. His death and character, ib.

—— of Halicarnassus, his opinion of the Aborigines, xi. 267. A famed geographer, xiii. 434. When he flourished, xiv. 36, n.

—— the first created count, xv. 423.

† Diopetes's oracle at Sparta, vi. 478, & n.

Diophanes's brave attempt against Seleucus, ix. 34, 35, n. 477.

† Dioscorias, a city in Colchis, ix. 602, & n.

Dioscorides, where born, v. 597.

—— Murdered by Achilles, ix. 281.

Dioscorinthus, the month of, explained, x. 143, n.

Dioscuri, Cabiri, their extract, &c, i. 390. Build the first complete ship, ib. &c. The first sailors after the flood, 393, & n. Build the first temple, ib. & n. Substituted to Bacchus, viii. 270, 271. Their worship at Carthage, xvi. 636.

† Diospolis, a city in Lesser Thebais, i. 488.

—— burnt by Gallus, xv. 453.

Dis, or Pluto, a prince of Celtic race, v. 419, 433, & n.

Disciples, seventy appointed by Christ, x. 473, & n. Their office and joyful return, 477.

Dispersion of mankind after the flood, i. 444. The time of it, 446. A double one supposed by some, ib. The number of mankind at that time, 447, & seq.

Distagerda, the Roman prisoners and standards of, released by Heraclius, xvi. 340.

Diversions used among the Jews, iii. 390.

Divinations various kinds of, used by the Jews, iii. 387, & n. Among the Celtes, v. 408.

Divitiacus gets footing in Britain, xviii. 686. Resistance against the Romans, 497.

Divorce permitted to the Jews, iii. 360. Unknown to the patriarchs, ib. In what cases, allowed, 361, & seq. The form of the bill, &c. 363. Whether women might divorce husbands, ib. n.

VOL. XX.

Divorces become frequent among the Romans, xii. 164.

† Dividurum, now Metz, plundered by Vitellius, xiv. 337.

Dobbius, the murderer of Ataulphus, xvi. 196.

† Dobuni, where sited, xviii. 662. Wars, ibid.

† ——— in Britain, where sited, xviii. 662. At war with their neighbours, ib.

Dodecatheon, one of Octavius's feasts, why so called, xi. 353, n.

† Dodanim, the son of Javan, where seated, i. 472.

—— the first peoplers of Epirus, ix. 432.

† Dodona, the city of, described, ix. 528, 529. The temple, grove, and oracle, ib. & n. The temple plundered and burnt, vi. 578.

Dodwell's sentiment of Adrian's adoption confused, xiv. 596, & 641, n.

Doeas, a Celtic prince, v. 418. Places that bear his name, ib.

Doeg, an Edomite, puts to death the priests of Najoth, iii. 547.

Dogs, why worshipped by the Egyptians, i. 559, 562, & seq. Why hated by the Romans, xi. 584. Eaten by the Carthaginians, xvi. 658.

Dolabella, Cornel. triumphs over the Lufitanians, xii. 511. Chosen consul, 578. Accused and acquitted, 602. Made Cæsar's admiral, xiii. 46. Raises a tumult in favour of debtors, 84. Supplants Cassius, 175. Cruel treachery to Trebonius, 182. Proscribed, 183. Ill success against Cassius, 211. Defeated at sea, 213. His death, ib.

—— rank flattery to Tiberius, xiii. 613.

—— Pub. success in Afric, xiii. 636. Turns informer, 659.

—— Cornel. confined at Aquitanium, xiv. 347. Accused of treason, 369. Massacred by Vitellius, ib.

Dolichenius, Apollo, why so called, xviii. 467.

† Dolonci, who and whence, ix. 512, & seq.

† Dolopes, where seated, vi. 16. Reduced by Perseus, viii. 496.

Dolphins, a battle between them and crocodiles, xiv. 293, n.

Domestics forbid to inform against their masters, xvi. 134.

Domitia Longina married to Domitian, xiv. 468.

—— to priscus, xvi. 332.

Domitian, the son of Vespasian, xiv. 413. His narrow escape out of the capitol,

M

403, & n

403, & n. Saluted Cæsar, 409. First indices of his debauchery, 410. Takes the prætorship upon him, 429. First appearance in the senate, 430. Suspected of poisoning his brother, 465. Proclaimed emperor, 466. His private character, 467. Gallic expedition diverted, 468. Studies poetry, &c. 469. Public buildings, 471. Repairs the libraries, 472. Diversion in catching of flies, ibid. Wholesome laws, ibid. Cruelty to Sabinus, 473. Sham triumph over the Cattians, 477. Treachery to Agricola, 488. Sham victories in Sarmatia, 490. Cruelties, 491. Universal jealousy, 492. Extortions and rapines, 494. Assumes divine honours, 495. Loses his armies in several provinces, 497. Marches against the Dacians, ib. Treachery to the Quadi, &c. 500. Shameful flight, ibid. And peace with the Dacians, ibid. Mock triumph at Rome, 501. Butcheries there, 502, 503. Naval and land shews, 505. Ghastly entertainment to the senators, ibid. & seq. Edict against the growth of vines, 506. Of what duration, ib. Expedition against the Sarmatians, 511. Horrid cruelties, ib. & seq. Jealousy of Nerva, xiv. 547. Death ib.
 — prefect of the east, ill conduct and miserable end, xv. 463, 464.
 Domitilla, the mother and sister of Domitian, xiv. 413.
 Domitius, Cn. Calvin's success against the Senones, xii. 84.
 — against the Gauls, xii. 419, & seq. Treachery to the Avernian king, 420.
 — L. butchered by young Marius, xii. 564.
 — Cn. Ahenobarb. defeated and killed, xii. 582.
 — Luc. defeated in Lusitania, xii. 596.
 — Ahenobarbus. Vid. sub Ahenobarbus xiii. 19, & seq.
 — Calvinus defeated by Pharnaces, xiii. 82.
 — Pub. Corn. chosen consul, xiii. 148. Approves of Cæsar's murder, ib.
 — treachery to Caius, xiii. 442, n.
 — Lucius's death, and character, xiii. 648.
 — Afer, the accuser of Claudia, xiii. 649. Of Q. Varus, 659.
 — Cnei. betrothed to Agrippina, 665. His sad character, ib. & seq. n.
 — Corbulo kills Afer, and succeeds him, xiv. 61, n. His politic escape, 68, n. Made consul, 71. His success against the Chauci, 132. Stopped by Claudius, ib. His long canal in Flanders, ib. &c.

 Domitius Corbulo, his excellent character, xiv. 268. Put to death by Nero, ib.
 — the son of Agrippina, marries Octavia, xiv. 144. Adopted by Claudius, 145, & n. Takes the name of Nero, 146. The rest see under Nero, 263.
 † Don, Tanais, river, v. 439.
 Donades, an Athenian prisoner, his bold speech to Philip, vi. 360.
 Donatists suppressed by Constantine xv. 384. By the council of Arles, 388. In Africa, 437. Court the revolted Firmus, 600. Suppressed by Gratian, xvi. 11. Favoured by Honorius, 176.
 Donatus, his writings and character, xv. 513, n.
 † Dones, or little Tanais, river, v. 443.
 † Dorians, where seated, vi. 83, & seq. Invade Peloponnesus, 84. Their original, vii. 122. Government, 125. Settlements in Asia, ib. & seq. Religion, 129. Settle in Rhodes, 404. In Crete, 466.
 Dorias, the solemnity of, vii. 606.
 † Doric dialect and order, vi. 84, & n.
 — faction in Sicily, vi. 277.
 Doridas, king of Corinth, invaded by the Doreans, vi. 45.
 Doreus I. king of Rhodes, vii. 406. — II. his victories, 407, & seq.
 Dorilaus defeated by Sylla, ix. 401.
 Dorimachus, an infamous Ætolian robber, vi. 572. Invades Epirus, 578. Thessaly, 588.
 † Doris, part of antient Greece, v. 604. Its situation, names, &c. vi. 83. Chief cities, vii. 121. Invaded by the Phocians, 454.
 † — the metropolis of the Dorians, by whom built, vi. 84.
 — Antipater's mother, conspires against Herod, x. 324. Banished, 325.
 Dorodeus, one of the compilers of the pandects, xvi. 318.
 Doryphorus poisoned by Nero, xiv. 221.
 Doryssus, king of Sparta, vi. 65.
 Dositheus's success against the Syrians, x. 146, & seq. In Idumea, 148. The betrayer of Hyrcan, 293, n.
 Dove sent out of the ark by Noah, i. 305, n. Why chosen, ib. Why worshipped by the Assyrians, iv. 232, & n.
 Doxareas's presents and submission to Alexander, viii. 298.
 Drachm of gold, its value, x. 13, n.
 Dracho, archon of Athens, his body of laws, vi. 97. Abrogated by Solon, 115.
 † Dracontia,

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

† Dracontia, island, xvi. 588, n.
 † Dracanon, a city in Icaria, vii. 566.
 † Drangiana, a province of Persia, described, iv. 509.
 † Drepane, a city in Bithynia, ix. 581.
 Drepanius Pacat's panegyric on Theodosius, xvi. 84.
 † Drepanum, a city in Sicily, xvii. 130. The siege of xii. 147. Raised, 150. Refused, 151. Whence called Helenopolis, xv. 404. Relieved by Carthalo, xvii. 266. Besieged by Fabius, 278.
 Dress, laws concerning that of the Jews, iii. 374. How regulated by Lycurgus, vi. 387.
 † Drilli, a fierce northern people, xiv. 632.
 Droctus's treachery and promotion, xix. 511. Narrow escape, 512.
 Drogo heads the Bulgarians into Mæsia, xix. 393.
 Druids held the dissolution of the world by fire and water, i. 139. Encourage the Gauls to revolt, — Gaulish, whence they had their religion, xviii. 408, 479, & n. & seq. Veneration for oaks, 415. For the mistletoe of it, 416, 417, & n. Under a grand druid, 419. Offer up human victims, 422. Officiate in white, 423, & n. Threatened into polytheism, and forced to it, 426, & seq. Their overgrown power in Gaul, 449, n. 480. How long it lasted, 451. Suppressed by the Romans, 352, 454. Take the name of Senani, 459. Whether they had any oracles, 456. Their antiquity, doctrines, &c. 477. & seq. Preside at councils, elections, &c. 480. Celibacy, 481. Three grand doctrines, ibid. & seq. Skill in physic, astronomy, &c. 483. Believed a general dissolution by fire, &c. 485. Contempt of writing, 522. Did not believe transmigration, 541, & n.
 — in Germany their power, doctrines, &c. xviii. 596, 608.
 — in Britain, whence so called, xviii. 656. Their office, power, &c. ibid. & seq. Arch or grand druid resided in Britain, 479. How chosen, 481.
 Druidesses in Gaul, believed inspired, xviii. 485. Three orders of them, 486. Inhuman auguries, ibid. & 487. n.
 Drums, how used by the Parthians, xi. 7.
 Drunkennes, abhorred by the Scythians, v. 460. By the Lacedæmonians, vi. 387.
 † Druria river, whence it springs, xi. 264.

† Drusian weapons, whence so called, xiii. 630, n.
 † Drusiana fossa, by whom made, xiii. 630, n. Described, 554, n.
 Drusilla, daughter of Herod Agrippa, x. 562. Married to Azizus, 567. To Felix, ib.
 — married to L. Cassius, xiii. 670, n. xiv. 11. Privileged by Caligula, 43. Her death, and incest with him, 56. Apotheosis, ib. & seq.
 — the pretended daughter of Caligula, born, xiv. 79. Presented by him to the gods, ib.
 Drusus, M. ends the war with the Scordisci, xii. 431. The innocent cause of the social war, 515. His noble scheme to quell the public discontent, 516, & seq. Stabbed to death, 517. His character, ib. & 518.
 — the father of Livia, kills himself, xiii. 391.
 — her son's bravery against the Germans, xiii. 417. In Gaul, 416. Chosen consul, 419. Subdues the Germans, ib. Stopped by prodigies and death, ib. Funeral honours, 421. Altar destroyed, 553, n.
 — Germanicus. See under Germanicus, xiii. 421, & seq.
 — the son of Tiberius, advanced by Augustus, xiii. 460. Made questor, 469. Insulted by the revolted legions, 514, & seq. Punishes them, 515. Second consulship, 532. Success in Illyricum, 574. In Germany, 583. Meets the ashes of Germanicus, 599. Returns to Illyricum, 600. Behaviour to Piso, ib. Third consulship, 608. Government during Tiberius's absence, 610. Tribuneship, 616. Just complaints against Sejanus, 626, & n. Poisoned by him, 627. His funeral, 629. Character, offspring, &c. ib. & 630, & n.
 — nephew of Germanicus, choaked with a pear, xiii. 608.
 — son of Germanicus, takes the toga, xiii. 627. Recommended to the senate, 629. Made governor of Rome, 641. Supplanted by Sejanus, 656, & seq. Accused to the senate, 669. Imprisoned, 670. His singular precaution, 675. Cruel death, xiv. 13, & seq.
 — an impostor, detected, xiv. 18.
 † Dryopes, where seated, vi. 84, & n.
 Drypetis married to Hephæstion, viii. 332. Murdered by Roxana, 362.
 † Dryphis, the temple of, in Eubœa, vii. 643.
 Duælius driven out by the Syracusans, vii. 163, & seq.
 M 2. † Dubia

I N D E X to the † Dubris, Dover, port, xviii. 661.

 Ducas, John sets his nephew upon the throne, xvi. 563. Governs him, ib. Taken prisoner, 464. Inveteracy against Voloniatas, 469.
 ——— success against the Turks, xvi. 474, 475. Makes peace with Tzachas, 475. Defeats him, ib.
 ——— Murtzuphius's treachery to Alexius, xvi. 503. Proclaimed emperor, ib. Wars with the Latin emperor, 508. & seq.
 ——— Vataces, succeeds Lascaris, xvi. 509. Success against the Latins, ib. Allies with Azem, ib. Ravages Thrace, 512. Dies, ib.
 ——— his account of the taking of Constantinople, xvi. 553, & seq.
 Duces, their office, xv. 422.
 Duels among the Gauls, the dernier resort, xviii. 502. Reflections on them, ib. & seq. Brought thither by the Burgundi, xix. 306, 307. Edict to enforce the use of them, ib.
 Duilius, Caius, commands the Roman army, xii. 111. The fleet, 112. Defeats the Carthaginians, 113. His triumph, 115.
 ——— his columna rostrata, explained, xvi. 502, n.
 ——— the consul, repulsed before Mytilstratum, xvii. 227. Forced to command the fleet, 240. Defeats the Carthaginians, ib. & seq.
 Dukes in Lombardy, their rise, xix. 508, & seq. Their power curtailed, 513. Succession suppressed, 518, & 523, n.
 † Dulichium, the island of, vi. 73, & n. One of the Echinades, vii. 630.
 † Duma, a city of Arabia Petræa, xviii. 183.
 Dumnorix's treachery to the Romans, xiii. 12. Defeated and killed, 24.
 † Duncala, metropolis of Nubia, xviii. 96.
 † Dunhavad, a remarkable mountain in Persia, v. 340.
 † Dura, where situate, viii. 606, n.
 Duras resigns his crown to Decebalus, xix. 368.
 ——— resigns the Dacian Crown, xiv. 497.
 † ——— the city, overturned by an earthquake, xv. 436. Taken by the Ostrogoths, xvi. 288. Abandoned by them, ib. See vol. xix. 180.
 Duration, an essential distinction between God and his creatures, i. 82, & seq.

† Durdus mount, where sited, xvii. 558. xviii. 14, n.
 † Durus, river, in Lusitania, xviii. 332.
 † Durnium, Dorchester, xviii. 659
 † Durocorvinum, where situate, xviii. 662.
 † Durotriges, who and where sited, xviii. 659.
 Duumviri, their office, xi. 372, & n.
 ——— navales, xii. 38.
 † Duus, and other rivers in Tangitania, unknown, xviii. 13.
 Dux Britannorum, his office, xviii. 678.
 † Dwarfs, their fights on the Roman stage, described, xii. 410. — The region of, in Lybia, xviii. 81, & n.
 † Dwina, river, in Scythia, v. 443.
 Dymnus conspires against Alexander, viii. 240. Dies, 242.
 Dynames's treachery to Sylvanus, xv. 470. To Malaricus, 471.
 Dynamis forced to marry Scribonius, xiii. 408. And Polemon, ib.
 Dynasties of Egypt, i. 272. Tables of them, 601, & seq.
 ——— the third and fourth of the Persians discussed, xi. 177, 178.
 † Dyrrhachium, whether the same with Epidamnus, viii. 7, 8, n. Revolts, xvi. 446. Taken by Guiscard, 471, 472. Abandoned by his son, 473. Opens her gates to young Alexius, 501. Taken by the Romans, xix. 415. By the Bulgarians, 422.
 Dysæ, inferior goddesses of the Saxons, their office, xix. 12.
 † Dyspargum, where situate, xix. 237.
 Dyscoles. See Apollonius, xv. 50, n.

E

EAGLE, a golden, set up by Herod, pulled down, x. 390.
 Eagles, Roman, a sanctuary, x. 287, 288, n. By whom first borne, xi. 288.
 Earth and water, demand in token of subjection, v. 19, & 20, n. vi. 175.
 Earthquakes in Greece suspend the Peloponnesian war, vi. 277, 278.
 ——— a dreadful one in Judea, x. 291. At Christ's crucifixion, 515, & seq.
 ——— twelve cities destroyed by another, xiii. 574.
 ——— In Asia, xiv. 572. In Galatia, 584. At Antioch, 587. In Gallienus's time, xv. 239. A dreadful one under Constant

NINETEEN VOLUMES.

Constans, 434. Another in Pontus, Campania, &c. 436.

Earthquakes destroys one hundred and fifty cities, xv. 489. Under Julian, 537. Under Valens, 614, 623. Under Theodosius, xvi. 106. In the east under Arcadius, 130. Under Theodosius II. 234. At Antioch, 269. At Cyzicus, 270. At Neocæsarea, &c. 297. At Antioch, &c. 304. Under Justinian, 315. At Antioch, 326. Constantinople, 364. Dreadful ones under Constantine, IV. 366. Under Michael Balbus, 388. Under Romanus II. 442, 445. Under Ducas, 459.

Easter, Jewish. See Passover, ii. 570. & seq.

—— Christian, settled by Gratian, xvi. 47. Criminals released at the solemnity, 70. Whence so called, xix. 12.

Eating regulated by Lycurgus, vi. 386.

† Ebal, mount, iii. 115. The curses and blessings set upon it and Garizzim, iii. 40, 41.

† Ebar, who, i. 349, n. From whom descended, 458. Where settled, 460. The etymon of that name, 375, n. Whether concerned in the building of Babel, 378, n. Hebrews believed to derive their name from him, 376, & seq.

† Ebefus, a Carthaginian colony, where situate, xvii. 24.

Eblis, prince of the fallen angels, among the Turks, i. 181.

† Eboræ, a city in Lusitania, xviii. 330.

† Eboracum, York, the metropolis, of the Brigantes, xviii. 668. Its court, ib. Whence styled Legio Sexta, 681.

† Eburodunum, Brin, } cities of the † Eburum, Olmuz, } Quadi, xix. 349.

† Ebusus, island and city, xviii. 352.

† Ecbatan, the metropolis of Persia, described, iv. 446. By whom built, ib. & 447, n. Razed by Nebuchodonosor, 477.

† Ecclesia, the grand court of Athens, its power, &c. vi. 134, 185.

Ecclesiastics, their immunities. See Clergy, xv. 377, & seq.

† Ecdipon, where situate, x. 267, n.

Echemus assists the Athenians against the Heraclidæ, vi. 11.

Echmis, king of Arcadia, vi. 14.

Echinades islands described, vii. 630.

Eclectus doomed to death by Commodus, xv. 57, 67. Conspires against him, ib. Dies in defence of Pertinax, 78.

Eclipses, first foretold by Thales, i. 580, iv. 483.

Eclipses, of the moon, scares the Macedonians, v. 221. How interpreted by the soothsayers, 222.

—— foretold by Sulpit. Gallus, viii. 514. Throws the Gauls into a panic, ix. 474. Dreadful to the Sicilians, xvii. 160.

Ecphantas, the Syracusan, his principles of a vacuum, &c. i. 114.

† Ecron razed by Judas Maccabeus, ix. 87.

Eclice's treachery and punishment, xvi. 188.

Edecon sent ambassador to Constantinople, xix. 68. Discovers Theodosius's treachery to Attila, 69, 70.

Edemon's revolt in Mauritania, xiv. 82.

† Eden, its situation, i. 184. Extravagant notions about it, whence, ib. A local paradise, 186. Ill placed in Syria and Armenia, 188. And Chaldea, 189, 190. A new scheme proposed, 191, 192. The Mosaic account of it imperfect, 192.

† Edinburgh's frith fortified, xviii. 671.

† Edessa, the kingdom of, described, ix. 631, & seq. Made a Roman province, 633.

† ——— metropolis of that kingdom, ix. 633. Taken by Saphores, xi. 82. Besieged by Cosrhoes I. 140, & 141, n. Taken by Cosrhoes II. 166. (See also xvi. 335.) Burnt by the Romans, xiv. 592. Taken by Cassius, xv. 10. Made a Roman colony, 134. Sells a dear passage to the Persians, 235. Forgiven by Constantius, 511. Narrow escape from the Saracens, xvi. 445.

Edeffans, their singular prayer against Alaric, xvi. 154.

Edictum perpetuum, when first published, xiv. 622.

Edobic, general of the Franks, xviii. 257.

† Edom, whence so called, ii. 151. By whom first inhabited, ib. Described, 152, & seq. Transferred into Judea, 169.

† Edomites, whence so called, ii. 144. Their country, cities, &c. 154, & seq. Government, &c. 156. Arts and sciences, 158. Religion, ib. Grant a passage to the Israelites, 163, 164. Their trade, navigation, &c. 164. Defeated by David, 164, 165. Massacred by Joab six successive months, 165, & seq. Retire to Azotus, and the Persian gulf, 165, 166. Subjection to Judah till the reign of Jehoshaphat, phat, 167, &c. Make themselves a king, 168. Defeated by Amaziah, ib. War with the Moabites, ib. Subdued by the Babylonians, 169. Revenge on the Jews, ib. Whence called Nabatæans, ib. Oppressed by the Jews, 170. Fall under the Seleucidæ, ib. War with the Maccabees, ib. Subdued by Hyrcan, and forced to be circumcised, ib. & seq. When admitted into the congregation, iii. 321.

† Edoni, a people of Thrace ix. 516. Their kings, 517.

† Edonia, where sited, viii. 13.

† Edri, the residence of the king of Bathan, ii. 200.

Eetion killed by Achilles, v. 600, & seq.

† Ege, taken by Pyrrhus, ix. 568.

Egeria the nymph's fabulous intercourse with Numa, xi. 314, & n.

Egerius Collatinus, why so called, xi. 340. See Collatinus, ib.

† Egesta, Segesta, a city in Sicily, vii. 351.

† Egestines invite the Athenians to them, vii. 188, & seq. And the Carthaginians, 311, & seq. Massacred by Agathocles, 312. Invite the Carthaginians, against the Selinuntæ, xvii. 41. Their bravery against the Syracusans, 87.

Egg, in the Egyptian cosmogony, the symbol of the world, i. 100. Worshipped by the Phœnicians, 107. Image of the world among the Chaldeans, Chinese, &c. ib. First egg laid in the bosom of Erebus, 109. Serpentine egg among the Gauls explained, xviii. 383; 384, & n.

Eglon, king of Moab, stabbed by Ehud, ii. 110. iii. 494.

Egregori, watching angels, i. 247, n. Their love to the daughters of men, ibid.

† Egypt, whence named Chemia, i. 484. Its other names, ib. Origin, situation, &c. 485, & seq. Division, ib. & seq. Climate, soil, &c. 490. Fertility from the Nile, 496. Different appearance in two seasons, 497. Its animals, 499. Chief cities, 487, & seq. Vegetables, 503. Artificial rarities, 505, & seq. Ruins near the cataracts, 533, & seq. At Dandera, 534. Divided into twelve kingdoms, ii. 58, & seq. United under Psameticus, 59. Becomes a Persian province, 78. Submits to Alexander, ib. Invaded by Cosrhoes, 86, 87. How became habitable, xi. 186. xviii. 115.

Egyptians, their extract, i. 536. Warlike genius, 542. Their government,

